The ninetieth Letter is from an Heathen, one Nectarius, who interceded with St. Auguſtine for his Fellow-Citizens that dwelt at Calama, who had ſacrificed to Idols, contrary to the Emperor's Inhibitions, and offered Violence to ſome Chriſtians. The Reaſon that this Pagan uſes to prevail with St. Auguſtine, is, That it is the Duty of a Biſhop to do nothing but Good to Mankind: Not to meddle with their Affairs, unleſs it be to make them better, and to intercede with God to pardon their Faults. Baronius is of Opinion, that this Letter was written immediately after the Laws of 399. In the laſt Edition it is placed in the year 408. and what is ſaid there of the Laws newly publiſhed, is apply'd to the Law of the 24th. of November, 407. directed to Curtius; which is the 19*th*. of the 10*th*. Title of the 16*th*. Book of the Theodoſian Code.

The

St. Auguſtine. Tome II.

The next Letter is St. Auguſtine's Anſwer to Nectarius; whereby he exhorts him to turn Chriſtian; promiſing, that though the Violences of thoſe at Calama had proceeded very far, yet he would contribute, as much as the Intereſt of publick Security would permit, to have them treated gently. He owns and approves the Maxim which he alledged concerning Epiſcopal Meekneſs; yet he aſſerts, that there muſt be Examples: The moſt guilty cannot be ſpared: That Chriſtians do not deſire to ſee them puniſhed out of Revenge, but Charity obligeth them to provide for the future; yet however, they do not deſire the Death of thoſe that abuſed them, they deſire only their Converſion: And they are but little concerned for the Loſſes which they ſuſtained, but they ſeek after their Souls. This is (ſaith he in the Concluſion of his Letter) what we are ſeeking with the Price of our Blood: This is that Harveſt which we would make plentiful at Calama; or at leaſt, that what happened in that place, might not hinder us to make it any where elſe.

In the ninety ſecond, to Italica, a Lady, he comforts her upon the Death of her Husband; telling her, that God cannot be ſeen, either in this World or in the next, with bodily Eyes. This Letter is before the ninety ninth, directed to the ſame Lady, which is written in 408.

The ninety third, to Vincentius, a Donatiſt Biſhop, containeth ſeveral Reaſons to ſhew that Secular Authority, and the Severity of the Laws, may be uſed againſt Schiſmaticks, to oblige them to return into the Church. One of the chiefeſt, is, the Uſefulneſs and the good Effects which the terror of the Imperial Laws had produced, ſince they cauſed the Converſion of ſeveral whole Cities.

St. Auguſtine confeſſes, that this Reaſon affected him moſt; That by ſuch Examples his Colleagues brought him to their Opinions: That it was his Opinion formerly, That no Man ought to be forced: That Words only were to be uſed; for otherwiſe they could make none but counterfeit Catholicks: But that having withſtood all Reaſon, he finally yielded to Experience. That the Laws had brought back thoſe that continued in the Schiſm, only by Intereſt, Fear, Negligence, or other Conſiderations of the ſame Nature. Afterwards, he exhorts Vincentius to return to the Church; ſhewing, the true Church is that which is ſpread throughout the Earth. He Anſwers what the Donatiſts objected, to prove that it might be comprehended within a ſmall number of Righteous Men; He ſhews, that it muſt neceſſarily be mix'd with both bad and good; and at laſt, declares againſt Re-baptizing. This Letter was written about the Year 408.

The 94*th.* Letter, is written by St. Paulinus Biſhop of Nola; and the 95*th.* is St. Auguſtine's Anſwer to that of Paulinus. He diſcourſeth of the Nature of Bodies after the Reſurrection; and of that of Angels. It is uncertain whether they have Bodies: or whether they are pure Spirits. Theſe Letters are of the Year 408.

The 96*th.* Letter, is an Excellent Example; ſhewing, how little Biſhops in St. Auguſtine's time, were given to Intereſt. Paulus Biſhop of Catagnæ, had bought an Eſtate in the Church's Name, with a Summ which he recovered; though he had ſurrendred his own Eſtate for what he owed to the Royal Treaſure. Boniface his Succeſſor, not willing to benefit himſelf by that Fraud, declared the thing as it was; chuſing either to have nothing, or to receive the whole from the Emperor's Liberality, rather than keep a thing gotten by Fraud. St. Auguſtine writeth this Letter to Olympius, Surveyor of the Buildings, to obtain by his means this Gratification from the Emperor, in the behalf of Boniface. Olympius not being in that Employment before the Death of Stilico, which happen'd in Auguſt 408, this Letter cannot have been written till towards the latter end of that year. To the ſame Magiſtrate, and at the ſame time, was the following written; whereby he prayeth him to ſee the Laws maintained that were Publiſhed in Africa, in the time of Stilico his Predeceſſor; and to let the Church's Enemies know, that theſe Laws having been Enacted Freely by the Emperor himſelf, they were in full Force after Stilico's Death.

In the 98*th.* to Boniface, St. Auguſtine reſolves a Queſtion that was made to him by that Biſhop, namely, How the Faith of Parents can ſerve for their Children that are admitted to Baptiſm, though the incredulity of Parents can be no Prejudice to their Children, when they offer them to Dæmons. St. Auguſtine anſwers, that it is moſt certain, that after a Child is born, he partakes no longer of other Men's Sins; but before, he is a Partaker of Adam's Sin, from which he is delivered by the Operation of the Holy Ghoſt in the Sacrament of Baptiſm. That Water repreſents outwardly, both the Myſtery and Grace, but the Holy Spirit produces the Effect. That neither the Faith of Parents, nor yet of Godfathers is the Cauſe of this Grace; but the Prayer of the whole Church, that begets Chriſt in each Member. In which Senſe, the Godfathers anſwer for the Child, that he believes, and reſolves to live Chriſtianly, becauſe he receiveth the Sacrament of Faith, and of Converſion to God. He explains this laſt Notion by ſeveral Examples, and among the reſt he alledgeth that of the Euchariſt, ſaying, 'That as the Sacrament of Chriſt's Body, 'is in ſome ſort the Body of Chriſt; ſo the Sacrament of 'Faith, is Faith it ſelf; and in this Senſe it is ſaid, that who- 'ſoever hath the Sacrament of Faith, hath Faith it ſelf.' This Compariſon would not be very Juſt, if St. Auguſtine did not conſider ſomething elſe in the Euchariſt, beſides the external and ſenſible part. St. Auguſtine. Tome II.

The 99*th.* is written to the Lady Italica, on the occaſion of the firſt Siege of Rome, by Alaricus in 408.

In the 100*dth.* Letter, St. Auguſtine intreateth Donatus, Proconſul of Africa to reſtrain the Donatiſts; but not to puniſh them with Death. And having expreſſed himſelf with the moſt Pathetical Terms that can be uſed to oblige him to Meekneſs, he concludes with theſe curious Words: It is a more troubleſome than profitable Labour, to compel Men to forſake a great Evil, rather by Force, that by Inſtruction This Letter was written at the time when they publiſhed new Edicts againſt the Donatiſts in 408.

The 101*ſt.* Letter to Memorius a Biſhop, was joyn'd to the Sixth Book of his Treatiſe of Muſick, which St. Auguſtine ſent by it ſelf to that Biſhop, becauſe he could not find his other Books upon the ſame Subject, that Memorius deſired. This Memorius was Father to Julianus, who writ afterwards againſt St. Auguſtine, who was now a Deacon. St. Auguſtine gives him great Commendations in that Letter.

The 102*d.* is placed in the Retractations, amongſt the Books compoſed before the Year 411. There St. Auguſtine anſwereth Six Queſtions propoſed by an Heathen to a Prieſt called Deogratias.

The firſt is, concerning the Reſurrection; Whether that which is promiſed to us, ſhall be like that of Jeſus Chriſt, or like that of Lazarus; And whether after the Reſurrection, Men ſhall be Subject to the Infirmities and Neceſſities of the Fleſh. St. Auguſtine anſwereth, that our Reſurrection ſhall be like that of Jeſus Chriſt, and that after the Reſurrection, we ſhall be freed from all cares and inconveniences of corruptible Fleſh.

The ſecond Queſtion is, if none can be Saved by Jeſus Chriſt, what is become of thoſe that died before his coming? What is become of ſo many Millions of Souls, againſt whom nothing can be objected, ſince Chriſt had not yet appeared among Men? Why did not the Saviour come ſooner? Let it not be ſaid, that the Jewiſh Law ſupplied that want; for there was already an infinite number of Men upon earth, when it was given, and yet it was neither known, nor practiſed but in a ſmall corner of the World.

St. Auguſtine having ſhewed, that the Pagans were not leſs perplexed, with that Queſtion, than the Chriſtians, anſwers, that Jeſus Chriſt being the Word of God, who Governed the World from the beginning, all thoſe that knew him, and lived according to his Precepts, might be ſaved by the Faith which they had, that he was in God, and ſhould come upon the Earth. He adds, That Jeſus Chriſt would not appear in the World, and cauſe his Doctrine to be Preached, but at ſuch a Time, and in ſuch Places, where he knew, that there were thoſe who ſhould believe in him; and that he foreſaw, that in all other Places, or at any other Times, Men would be ſuch as they have been, though the Goſpel had been Preached to them. This Notion was very favourable to the Semipelagians, and they failed not to make uſe of it; as appears by Hilary's Letter to St. Auguſtine. But this Father anſwered them in the ninth Chap. of the Book of the Predeſtination of the Saints; That he did make uſe of the Word Fore-knowledge only, becauſe he thought it was ſufficient to convince the Infidelity of the Pagans who made this Objection; and therefore he omitted to ſpeak of that which is hid within God's Counſels of the Motives of that Diſpenſation: And ſo when he ſaid, that Jeſus Chriſt would not ſhew himſelf, nor cauſe his Doctrine to be Preached but in thoſe places, and at ſuch a time, he knew thoſe Perſons liv'd, who ſhould believe in him: It is as if he had ſaid, that Jeſus Chriſt did not ſhew himſelf unto Men, nor ſuffer his Doctrine to be Preached, but in thoſe places and at that time, when he knew, that thoſe ſhould live who were Elected before the Creation. He expounds again in the ſame place, what he had ſaid in this Letter: That the Chriſtian Religion never failed of being Preached to thoſe that were worthy; and, that if it failed any, it was becauſe they were not worthy of it. Saying, that he had not declared his Opinion concerning that which renders Men worthy, whether it is the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, or their own Will.

This is the third Queſtion: Why ſhould they condemn Victims, Incenſe and Sacrifices, ſeeing that from the beginning God was honoured after this manner; and that he is repreſented as having need of the Firſt-Fruits of the Earth? Anſ. God hath no need either of our Offerings, or our Sacrifices. The Service we yield to him turns to our own profit, and not to his. At all times Sacrifices have been offered unto God, but they ought only to have been offered to the true God. The Sacrifices that are offered to Creatures are Sacrileges. Both the Sacrifices and the Sacraments of the Old Law are changed, and this Alteration was foretold. The New Teſtament is eſtabliſhed upon the Sacrifice of the High-Prieſt; that is, upon the Effuſion of the Blood of Chriſt himſelf; and now all Chriſtians offer a Sacrifice that is ſuitable to the Manifeſtation of the New Covenant.

St. Auguſtine. Tome II.

The fourth Queſtion is concerning the Eternity of Puniſhments; againſt which this Maxim of the Goſpel was objected; With what meaſure ye mete, it ſhall be meaſured to you. Every meaſure, ſay they, is limited to a certain ſpace of time; What mean then thoſe Threatnings of Eternal Sufferings?

St. Auguſtine ſhews, that this Queſtion is idle and unworthy of a Philoſopher; that it is impertinent to ſay that all meaſures are limited by a certain ſpace of time, ſince there are other meaſures, beſides thoſe of time; that it is a common Saying, that a Man ſhall be dealt withal, as he dealeth with others, though he receiveth not preciſely the ſame Treatment; that theſe Words of Jeſus Chriſt, It ſhall be meaſured unto you, after the ſame manner that ye meaſure unto others; ſignifie only, that Men ſhall be Puniſhed or Rewarded, by the ſame Will which made them do Good or Evil to others; that is, by the remorſe of their own Conſciences; that Sins and Puniſhments are not meaſured by time, but by the quality of the Will; that the Puniſhment of Sin is eternal, becauſe, as the Sinner deſired to enjoy Pleaſure for ever, it is juſt that he ſhould be puniſhed for it for ever.

The fifth Queſtion was not difficult to ſolve. It was ſuppoſed that Solomon had ſaid, that there was no Son of God. St. Auguſtine anſwers, that Solomon never ſaid it, but the contrary.

The Laſt, is a Serious Anſwer to the Jeſts of the Heathens, about the Hiſtory of Jonas.

The 103*d*. Letter, is a ſecond Letter of Nectarius of Calama, who reneweth the ſame Requeſt that he made in the 90*th*. for Pardon of his Heathen Country-men, who had miſuſed the Chriſtians.

The 104*th*. is an Anſwer of St. Auguſtine, where he particularly refuteth the Opinion of the Stoicks, concerning the Equality of Sins. St. Auguſtine received Nectarius his Letter upon the 27*th*. of March 409. and it is probable that he returned an Anſwer inſtantly.

The 105*th*. is an Exhortation to the Donatiſts. After he had juſtified the Severity of the Imperial Laws, he examines the ordinary Points of Controverſie that were in Diſpute with thoſe Schiſmaticks; Proving, 1. That the Validity of Baptiſm dependeth not upon the holineſs of the Miniſter. 2. That the Catholick Church cannot be confin'd to the Donatiſts. 3. That the Wicked, who were tolerated in the Catholick Church, could not hinder it from being the true Church.

In the 106*th*. St. Auguſtine intreateth Macrobius, a Donatiſt Biſhop at Hippo, not to Rebaptize a Sub-deacon that was gone over to their Party. St. Auguſtine gave this Letter to Maximus and Theodorus, who delivered it into Macrobius his own hands; who made them no Anſwer, but that he could not refuſe to give the Faith to them that came to him; which Anſwer, they returned to this Saint by the 107*th*. Letter. St. Auguſtine immediately ſet Pen to Paper to reprove that behaviour of the Donatiſts, as he doth by the 108*th*. Letter; wherein he proves, that Baptiſm is not to be repeated, alledging chiefly the Example of the Donatiſts themſelves, who approved the Baptiſm of the Maximianiſts, whom themſelves had condemned and put out of their Communion. The time of this Diſpute with Macrobius, is not very certain; yet it is ſuppoſed to have happened in 409.

St. Auguſtine. Tome II.

The 109*th*. is a Letter of Compliment written to St. Auguſtine by Severus Biſhop of Milevis, wherein he tells of the Pleaſure that he found in reading his Works. He gives him high Commendations, eſpecially for his love towards God and towards his Neighbour. St. Auguſtine anſwers him by the 110*th*, in a very modeſt and civil manner. The time of theſe Letters is not well known.

The 111*th*. is a Conſolatory Epiſtle, to Victorianus the Prieſt, concerning thoſe Miſeries which the Barbarians, who then waſted both Italy and Spain in the Year 409. cauſed a great number of holy Perſons and Virgins conſecrated to God to Suffer.

In the 112*th*. Letter, St. Auguſtine exhorteth Donatus, who was leaving the Proconſulſhip, in 410, to renounce the Pomps of the World, and to follow Jeſus Chriſt, and to bring back to the Communion of the Church, thoſe that had any Dependency upon him.

The 113*th*. is a Letter of Recommendation to Creſconius, concerning Frumentius his Buſineſs, who was taken out of the Sanctuary of a Church, whither he was fled to ſecure himſelf from the Purſuit of one of whom he rented a Foreſt.

The three following Letters are about the ſame Buſineſs. St. Auguſtine cites a Law that was made by Honorius the Emperor, the 21*ſt*. of January, 410. ſo that theſe Letters were written after that Year.

The 117*th*. is a Note from Dioſcorus, to which he joins ſeveral Queſtions to St. Auguſtine, taken out of Cicero's Dialogues. St. Auguſtine Anſwers him in the next, that it is unworthy of a Biſhop to ſpend time in explaining ſuch kind of Queſtions. He treateth afterwards of the Deſign which Men ought to have in their Studies, and of the chiefeſt Good. He Rejects the Philoſopher's Opinions upon that Subject; and ſhews, that God is the chiefeſt Good. He exhorteth Dioſcorus to ſtudy Chriſtian Philoſophy, diſcovering the Blindneſs and the Errors of the Heathen Philoſophers. St. Auguſtine ſpeaking in this Letter of the Hereticks he was to Diſpute with, ſaith nothing of the Pelagians; which makes it probable, that it was written before the Year 411, but it could not be written long before, becauſe he declares there, that he was growing Gray.

The 119*th*. containeth Conſentius his Queſtions concerning the Myſtery of the Trinity. And the 120*th*. containeth St. Auguſtine's Anſwers, who expounds the Faith, touching that Myſtery. He treateth there of Faith, and Underſtanding.

The 121*ſt*. Letter is written by St. Paulinus, who propoſes to St. Auguſtine ſome Queſtions upon certain Paſſages of the Pſalms, of St. Paul's Epiſtles, and the Goſpels.

In the 122*d*. St. Auguſtine excuſeth himſelf to his Clergy, and People, becauſe he was obliged to be abſent. He exhorts them to diminiſh nothing of what they were wont to do for the Poor. This Letter was written in the Year 410. when Alarick took Rome. I ſuppoſe alſo, that St. Jerome hinted at the Calamity, in Ænigmatical Terms, in the following Letter, which is the laſt of the Second Claſſe of St. Auguſtine's Letters.

The Third Claſſe.

THE Letters of the Third Claſſe are all thoſe that St. Auguſtine writ from the Year 411. to the End of his Life.

The firſt, which is the 124*th*. is directed to Albina, old Melania's Daughter, to Pinianus, and to the younger Melania, who had retired into Sicily, and from thence into Africa after the Death of Rufinus, in the Year 411. and were come to Tagaſta, when St. Auguſtine wrote this Letter; whereby he excuſeth himſelf, that the Condition of the Church at Hippo, rather than the Severity of the Winter, hindred him from coming to them.

Pinianus being come to Hippo, to ſee St. Auguſtine, as he was celebrating the Holy Myſteries, the People demanded, that he ſhould be ordained Prieſt, and obliged him to Swear, that he ſhould not leave the Town of Hippo; and that, if he took Orders, he would be ordained no where, but at Hippo. Albina, and her Children, complained of that Violence; believing, that the Men of Hippo had no other Deſign in doing ſo, but to fix in their Church ſo Rich a Man as Pinianus was; pretending, that the Oath forced upon him was not binding. St. Auguſtine writes to Alypius, the 125*th*. Letter, to juſtifie both himſelf, and his People, of the Suſpicions entertained of him upon that Subject, praying Alypius to remove them. He ſpeaketh afterwards of Pinianus his Oath, and of the Obligation to keep it; whereupon, he layeth down the following Principles about the Matter of Oaths. Firſt, that none ought to Swear to a thing forbidden, whatſoever Fear he may be in of Death if he Sweareth not; and that he ought rather to ſuffer Death. 2. That when a Man has Sworn, by conſtraint, to a lawful Thing, he is bound to Diſcharge it; and cannot diſpenſe himſelf from it, without being guilty of Perjury. 3. That the Bond of an Oath is performed, not when we do what is ſignified by the Letter, or the Terms, wherein the Oath is expreſſed, but when we obſerve what the Impoſer of the Oath expects, if it be known when the Oath is taken; and ſo a Man may be Perjured in keeping what is ſignified by the Terms of the Oath, if he defeats the Expectation of him to whom the Oath is made; and that, on the contrary, this being done, there is no Perjury, though the Letter of the Oath is not obſerved in its proper Senſe. From whence he concludes, that though Pinianus is not bound to abide at Hippo, as if that City were made a Priſon for him; yet he is obliged, by his Oath, to dwell there as an Inhabitant with Liberty to go and come, but not to go away never to return.

In the following Letter to Albina, St. Auguſtine juſtifies himſelf from the Accuſation that was made againſt his People, for detaining Pinianus out of Covetouſneſs. He ſaith, that ſuch Imputations reflect upon him, becauſe he is Adminiſtrator of the Church's Goods, whereas the People neither diſpoſes of, nor profits by them. Wherefore, to clear himſelf abſolutely, he is obliged to make Oath, and to take God to witneſs, as he doth in this Letter, that the Adminiſtration of the Church's Goods is a Charge to him. He diſcourſes again of the Validity of Pinianus his Oath, and of the Obligation he lay under to execute it.

The 127*th*. to Armentarius, and Paulina his Wife, was written ſoon after Rome was taken. He exhorts them not to regard this preſent Life; ſhewing alſo, how much they were obliged to keep the Vow of Continency, which they had made. This Letter is full of moſt Excellent Thoughts againſt againſt the Love of the World, and of Life. Among other things, he particularly takes notice, that if, to prolong this Tranſitory Life, Men are not afraid to take ſo much Pains, to undergo ſo many Dangers, and Loſſes, much more ought they to expoſe themſelves, for that Life which is Eternal: that all the Pains we take in this Life, to prevent Death, tend to nothing elſe but to keep us in Miſery; that we conſtantly avoid the preſent Death; that we may be expoſed to the Fear of all poſſible Ones. What (ſaith he) do not thoſe Men endure, whom the Phyſicians force to endure, Fire, and the Kniſe; and, what is the Conſequence of ſo many Pains? Is it to eſcape Death? No! but to die a little later. The Pains are certain, but the preſerving of Life is uncertain; and very often the Patient dies in thoſe Torments, to which he expoſes himſelf for fear of Death; and chuſing to ſuffer not to die, inſtead of chuſing to die to prevent ſuffering, it happens that they meet with Death in the midſt of thoſe Sufferings, which they chuſe to undergo to avoid it.... But the greateſt Evil, and the moſt to be abhorred, is, That to lengthen this wretched Life a little, we diſpleaſe God who is the Spring of true Life..... Beſides, tho' ſuch a miſerable Life, as this is, could continue for ever, yet were it not to be compared with an happy Life, tho' never ſo ſhort. In the mean time, the love of this Life, as ſhort as miſerable, makes us loſe a Life that is not only Happy, but Eternal; tho' in that very Life, which we ſo unhappily love, we ſeek for nothing but what we may be ſecure of in the other, and which the love of this makes us loſe. For what do we love, by loving a Life ſo wretched, and ſo ſhort? It is not the miſery of it, ſince we deſire to be happy, nor the ſhortneſs of it, ſince we fear to ſee the end. We love it therefore, only becauſe it is Life; and this alone, makes us love it, tho' ſhort and miſerable. From theſe Principles he concludes, that we ſhould love nothing but eternal Life; ſhake off all Clogs, and Cares of preſent things; cleave ſolely to Jeſus Chriſt, to whom we ſhould have our Recourſe, as to the chief Phyſician, who alone is able to eaſe our Pains, and ſatisfie our Deſires.

St. Auguſtine. Tome II.

The 128*th.* Letter, is a Declaration of the Catholick Biſhops to Marcellinus, the Emperor's Commiſſioner, appointed to be at the Conference betwixt the Catholick Biſhops, and the Donatiſts, by which Declaration they ſubmit themſelves to all the Conditions of the Order, given by Marcellinus; and give their Conſent, that in caſe the Donatiſt Biſhops yield in the Conference, and be convicted of Schiſm, yet they ſhould be maintained in their Dignity; ſo that in the Places, where there was a Biſhop of each Communion, they ſhould Govern jointly, till the Death of the one; or that both ſhould give up, and a third be choſen: And, that though they granted this Advantage to the Donatiſts, yet they made no Conditions for themſelves, but were contented to loſe their Dignity, if the Donatiſts had the better in the Conference.

Marcellinus, by his Order, had appointed a certain Number of Biſhops of each Party, to be at the Conference; but the Donatiſts deſiring to be all there, made a Solemn Declaration. The Catholick Biſhops gave their Conſent by the 129*th.* Letter. The time of theſe two laſt cannot be doubted, ſeeing they relate to the Conference at Carthage, appointed the 14*th.* of October, 410. and began the 1*ſt.* of June, 411.

The 130*th.* is directed to the illuſtrious and pious Lady Proba Falconia, the Widow of Probus, Præfectus Prætorio, and Conſul in 371. who withdrew into Africa after the taking of Rome. This Holy Widow having deſired St. Auguſtine to write to her concerning Prayer, this Saint gives her, by this Letter, excellent Inſtructions about the manner how we ought to Pray, and the neceſſary Diſpoſition to do it well. He diſcourſes there of the Contempt of Riches, of renouncing the World, of that true Happineſs which ought to be pray'd for, and of love of our Neighbour. He proves, that true Praying is from the Heart. He explains in few Words, the Lord's Prayer; ſhewing, that it contains what we are to Pray for. He obſerves that we may deſire to be delivered from Pain, Sickneſs, and Afflictions; but that we are not to deſire with Impatience, nor think that God regards us not, when we obtain not that Eaſe which we deſire. This Letter is full of very Chriſtian and Sublime Maxims, and Notions, very uſeful for Pious Perſons.

The 131*ſt.* to the ſame Lady hath nothing remarkable; he thanks her for enquiring after his Health.

In the 132*d.* Letter, St. Auguſtine exhorts Voluſian, to whom it is written, to read the Scriptures, and to propoſe to him thoſe Difficulties which he ſhall meet with.

In the 133*d.* Letter St. Auguſtine intreateth Marcellinus not to puniſh thoſe Donatiſts with Death, who had confeſſed their Crimes by Torture; and to have reſpect in the Choice of Puniſhments, to that Meekneſs which the Church profeſſeth to exerciſe towards all Men.

The next Letter contains the like Entreaties to the Proconſul, Apringius. Both theſe were written after the Imperial Law againſt the Donatiſts was enacted in 412.

By the 135*th.* Voluſianus deſires a Solution of the Difficulties propoſed againſt the Chriſtian Religion, which centred all in this Objection, How God ſhould ſo humble himſelf as to become Man? With this Letter came another from Marcellinus, which is the 136*th.* wherein he deſireth St. Auguſtine, to anſwer the Queſtions made by Voluſianus; adding ſome other Objections of the Enemies of the Chriſtian Religion. They ſaid, that God had aboliſhed the Old Law, either out of Inconſtancy, or becauſe he was weary of it. That the Doctrine of the Goſpel was contrary to States; and that the Chriſtian Emperors had done great Diſ-ſervice to the Affairs of the Common-wealth.

St. Auguſtine in the 137*th.* anſwereth Voluſianus his Queſtions. He lays down this Rule at Firſt, That though there are ſuch deep things in the Scripture, that a Man may daily make new Diſcoveries, how Learned and Quick ſoever he be; yet it is not difficult to arrive to the Knowledge of what is neceſſary to be known to be Saved. Afterward, he anſwereth Voluſianus his Queſtion concerning the Incarnation; ſhewing that though the Word was made Man; yet he did not give over the Care of Things upon Earth, nor ceaſed to be every where, and to govern all things, That the Union of the Soul with the Body, which daily happeneth, is not leſs difficult to be comprehended; than that of God with Man; which happened but once to ſave Men from their Sins. Here he lays down very powerful Arguments, to perſuade Men to believe the Incarnation of Jeſus Chriſt; as, the Original of the People of Iſrael; God's Dealings with them; his Chuſing them to be his beloved People; the Laws and Ceremonies of the Old Teſtament, which had all a relation to Jeſus Chriſt: The Predictions of the Prophets; the Life, Actions, and the Death of Chriſt; the Eſtabliſhment of the Church; its Encreaſe, and Preſervation; the greatneſs and ſublimity of the Morals that were taught in it; the plain Style of the Scripture, which makes it acceſſible to all Mankind, though there are ſuch Depths, as few Minds can penetrate, and other ſuch Conſiderations which are ſufficient to prove the Truth of the Chriſtian Religion.

St. Auguſtine. Tome II.

In the following Letter, St. Auguſtine replies to the Objections made by Marcellinus: The firſt is about the Alteration of the Old Law, which they imputed either to Envy or to Inconſtancy in God. St. Auguſtine ſaith, that God is unchangeable in all that concerns himſelf; and, that as he hath given Precepts, and Ordinances for the Good of Man, ſo it is for the ſame End, that he ſometimes changeth them; as he judgeth it may be more convenient for them.

The ſecond Objection, propoſed by Marcellinus, ſeems more difficult. They accuſed Chriſts Doctrine, as inconſiſtent with the Well-being of the State; becauſe it forbids rendring Evil for Evil; commands turning the other Cheek; giving the Cloak alſo to them that offer to take our Coats; and to go two Miles with him that forceth us to go one. Theſe Precepts ſay they, are contrary to the Practice of Common-wealths: For who is he that will ſuffer his Enemy to take away his Goods? Who doth not ſeek to return Evil for Evil to Barbarians, who come to lay the Provinces of the Empire Waſte?

St. Auguſtine refutes this Objection, ſhewing, that this Maxim here looked upon as contrary to the Good of the State was a Maxim of the Old Romans, who thought it worthy of their greatneſs, and profitable for the Common-wealth to forgive Injuries: That Cicero exalting Cæſar for a great Prince, commendeth him for his readineſs to forgive Injuries: That ſuch things are read with Admiration in Prophane Writings, whilſt they are deſpiſed in Chriſtian Books, where they are more plainly, and more nobly expreſſed. He proves afterwards, That thoſe Divine Books are ſo far from being contrary to the happineſs of Governments, that they are moſt proper to maintain Peace and Concord: That however they are not to be underſtood literally; and that we are not abſolutely forbidden to defend our ſelves, or to puniſh Crimes; but only that Men ſhould not act by a Principle of Revenge, but with a Deſign to do Good to him that offends us: So that thoſe Precepts of Jeſus Chriſt, have reſpect to the Diſpoſition of the Heart, rather than to what is done outwardly, and tend only but to preſerve Patience, and Charity in their Hearts, leaving us the liberty to do what we think may conduce moſt to the Advantage of thoſe to whom we deſire to do Good.

Having alledged both Chriſt's, and St. Paul's Example, to juſtifie ſuch a Carriage; he adds, That this hinders not the Execution of Juſtice againſt evil Doers, provided it be done with a Spirit of Charity: That War it ſelf may be managed with the ſame Spirit, when Men deſire to Conquer, with a Deſign to do good to the Vanquiſhed, and keep them from doing hurt. Then he anſwereth Marcellinus's laſt objection; ſhewing, that the Chriſtian Emperors ought not to be charged with the Decay of the Empire; the Heathen themſelves having confeſſed that their own Manners, and the Vices of the Romans, were the main Cauſes of it. He ſheweth likewiſe, how Contemptible the Juglings of Apollonius, and Apuleius were, in compariſon of the Miracles of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles.

St. Auguſtine. Tome II.

The 139*th*. Letter, is likewiſe directed to the ſame Marcellinus, but upon another Subject. He ſpeaks of Publiſhing the Acts of the Conference at Carthage: He earneſtly conjures him to hinder the Donatiſts, that were caſt into Priſon from being put to Death. He mentions his Books of Baptiſm; His Abridgment of the Conference of Carthage; A Letter to the Donatiſts; Two foregoing Letters; and that which follows, directed to Honoratus: Whereby it appears, that all theſe Diſcourſes belong to the Year 412.

The 140*th*. Letter, is this juſt now mentioned, directed to Honoratus, and written concerning five Queſtions. He treats of Grace, of the New-Covenant, and of the Deſign of Chriſts's Incarnation. He obſerves at firſt, that every Man hath a Soul endued with Reaſon; but very different Uſes are made of it. Some uſe their Reaſon with no other proſpect but to pleaſe their Senſes; others on the contrary, ſeek after thoſe good things which concern their Soul, and which are of a Nature above their own. The Soul may make a good Uſe of Temporal Happineſs, but that is only when it is applyed to the Service of the Creator: for all Subſtances being good in their Nature; it is a good thing to uſe them in order, and not thereby to oppoſe the Order of the Creator: And the ill uſe which Men make of Good things, doth not hinder the good uſe which God knows how to make, even of evil ones. For his Juſtice by Puniſhing, brings into order thoſe whoſe Injuſtice put them out of order by Sin. God granted this Temporal Felicity in the Old Covenant, which neither promiſed, nor afforded any but Temporal Advantages; but at the ſame time he revealed the New Covenant, whereof the Old was but a Figure; Tho' but a ſmall number of Saints have taken notice of it, and even thoſe though Miniſters of the Old Covenant, belonged to the New. But in the fulneſs of time, the Word of God was united with Man to be a Light to the Nations, and thoſe that received it, became the Children of God, not Children by Nature as Jeſus Chriſt is, but Children by Adoption and Grace. It is he that taught us to deſpiſe the things of this Life, and to value none but thoſe which we ſhall enjoy in the other. This is the Oeconomy of the New Covenant, which St. Auguſtine explains at large in this Letter. He proveth it by the Expoſition of the 22*d*. Pſalm, which begins with theſe Words, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? Which was the Subject of Honoratus's firſt Queſtion. He inſiſts chiefly upon ſhewing that Chriſtians ought not to put their Truſt and Confidence in the Good Things of this World; but to love and ſeek after that only which concerns the next. This is almoſt the ſole Deſign of this Letter to juſtifie that the love of Spiritual and Eternal Bleſſings is the only aim of the New Covenant; To the ſame purpoſe he expounds alſo the beginning of St. John's Goſpel; the Parable of the ten Wiſe and ten Fooliſh Virgins; theſe Words of St. Paul, Eph. 3. I pray God that being firmly ſettled, rooted and grounded in love, you may be able to comprehend with all Saints, what is the breadth, and length, and heighth, and depth; and what is ſaid in the Goſpel concerning utter Darkneſs, which were the Subject of Honoratus's five Queſtions. This Man was but a Catechumen, and yet St. Auguſtine ſets before him the moſt ſublime and the higheſt things of the Chriſtian Religion; and yet when he ſpeaks of the Euchariſt, he doth not clearly explain it; but only tells him, That he ſhall know after Baptiſm, in what time, and after what manner it is offered: But he declareth plainly enough what he believed concerning the Euchariſt, ſaying, That Proud Men who come to the Lord's Table, do indeed receive his Body and Blood, and adore it, but they are not fed therewith; becauſe they imitate him not, and though they eat it, yet they refuſe to become Poor as he was. At the latter end of his Letter he ſpeaketh againſt thoſe who put their Confidence in their own Strength, and not in the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt. This is in ſhort what St. Auguſtine, treats of in this Letter, which may be looked upon as a Treatiſe, as he ſays himſelf in the Concluſion, and in his Retractations; where he places it amongſt his entire Diſcourſes.

The 141*ſt*. is a Synodical Epiſtle of an Aſſembly of Catholick Biſhops held at Cirta, directed to all the Donatiſts, whereby they are exhorted to return into the Church; their Biſhops having been ſo ſolemnly confounded and convicted in the Conference at Carthage, of which he gives a ſhort Abridgment in that Letter. It bears Date the 14*th*. of June 412.

The next Letter to Saturnius, Euphratas, and the Clergy newly returned into the Unity of the Church, is of the ſame time. St. Auguſtine congratulates their re-union, endeavours to confirm them in the good Reſolution they had taken, and exhorts them to diſcharge their Miniſtry.

In the 143*d* Letter, St. Auguſtine anſwereth a Queſtion propoſed to him by Marcellinus, to whom it is written: namely, where the Magicians of Egypt could find Water to turn into Blood, when Moſes had turned all the Water that was there already. He ſaith, that this Queſtion may be anſwered two Ways, either by ſaying that they took Water out of the Sea; or, by ſuppoſing, that the Plagues of Egypt had their Effect only where the Egyptians were, but not where the Children of Iſrael dwelt. Having thus diſ-entangled himſelf of the Queſtion, he explains ſome Paſſages of his Book concerning Free-will, and the Original of Souls. He confeſſes, That his Writings having been written with Precipitation, ſome Faults could not but creep in, He ſincerely acknowledgeth that even in Writing he perceived Faults, and that he corrects and reproves them, being far from hiding or defending them. He ſaith, that he is not like thoſe who through exceſſive love of themſelves, and to cover their own Errors, would leave others in theirs; that he would not have his beſt Friends to ſay, that he was not miſtaken, He wiſely obſerveth that none ought to approve the Commendation given by Cicero to one, That he never uttered one word which he wiſhed afterwards he had not ſpoken. This, ſays he, belongeth to a Mad-man, rather than to a Wiſe-man; this cannot be applyed but to Divine Perſons, by whom the Holy Ghoſt hath ſpoken. He confeſſes, That he is ſtill uncertain concerning the Origine of our Souls; becauſe neither Scripture nor Reaſon hath determined the Point. He further ſaith, that Scripture and Reaſon cannot be contrary to one another; that if Reaſon ſeems to be contrary to the Scripture, it is a falſe Light, it is not right Reaſon. That if what is drawn from Scripture, is found directly oppoſed to clear Reaſon; there muſt be a miſ-underſtanding of the Scripture. Laſtly, he refutes Voluſianus, who would hardly believe what he had writ to him, that the Bleſſed Virgin could conceive Jeſus Chriſt, and remain a Virgin ſtill: This Letter is of the Year 412. for it is written after the 139*th*. and there St. Auguſtine Anſwers a Letter of Marcellinus, brought by Boniface, who was with Marcellinus when St. Auguſtine writ the 139*th*. Letter.

St. Auguſtine. Tome II.

In the 144*th*. Letter, St. Auguſtine congratulates the Men of Cirta, who returned to the Church exhorting them to give God Thanks for it, as being the effect of his Mercy. He ſaith, that the Change of thoſe who quit a Debauched Life to lead a better, without giving up themſelves to God; as that of Polemon was, ought however to be looked upon as God's Work. For, ſaith he, nothing but the heighth of Pride and of Ingratitude, can imagine, that the Beauty of the Body, Strength, and Health are God's Gifts; and that Chaſtity, which makes the Beauty of the Soul can be the Work of Man. Whence, he concludes, that the Converſion of thoſe to whom he writ, is much rather the Work of God's Mercy. He exhorts them to acknowledge it. To God, ſaith he, you are to give Thanks; fear him if you will be kept from falling, love him if you intend to go forward. DEUM TIMETE NE DEFICIATIS, AMATE UT PROFICIATIS. This Letter was Written after the Conference at Carthage.

The 145*th*. to Anaſtaſius comprehendeth moſt of St. Auguſtine's Principles of Juſtification, for having obſerved that the World is more to be feared when it fawns upon us, than when it torments us, he layeth down theſe following Principles, 1. That the love of earthly Goods cannot be totally laid aſide in this Life, and it will always have a ſhare in our beſt Actions. 2. That the Will of Man cannot be called Free, without the Aſſiſtance of Grace. 3. That the Law ſerveth to make us know our Impotency, that we may have our recourſe to Grace. 4. That Sin is not overcome whilſt Men forbear it meerly for fear of Puniſhment. For, ſaith he, though Men go not ſo far as to the outward Action, yet the ſecret Deſire, of doing Evil, in the Heart which is reſtrained only by the fear of Puniſhment, is a Tyrant that keeps us in Slavery, And thus it may be ſaid, That whoſoever abſtaineth from Sin, only for the dread of Suffering, is not altogether an Enemy to Sin; becauſe he is not perfectly in Love with Righteouſneſs; and that Sin is not properly hated; but proportionably as Righteouſneſs is loved. INIMICUS ERGO EST JUSTITIÆ QUI POENÆ TIMORE NON PECCAT . . . TANTUM PORRO QUISQUE PECCATUM ODIT, QUANTUM JUSTITIAM DILIGIT. 5. That the love of Righteouſneſs ought to go further than the love of Sin; becauſe it ſhould proceed ſo far as that all the Miſchief which can thereby befall our Bodies, may not hinder us from practiſing our Duty; and ſo nothing may ſeparate us from the love of Jeſus Chriſt, and Righteouſneſs. 6 It is the Holy Ghoſt who poureth that Charity into our Hearts; we have it not of our ſelves, and when we find our ſelves deſtitute of it, we muſt, Ask, Seek, and Knock; addreſſing our ſelves to God by Prayer. This Letter was written about the time that the Pelagian Hereſie began to be known in Africa, in 413.

The following, which is a Letter of Thanks to Pelagius, is likewiſe about the ſame time, as St. Auguſtine obſerves in the 26*th*. Chap. of the Book of the Acts of Pelagius. He having already heard that this Man oppoſed the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, he hints at ſome thing of it in this Letter; wiſhing, that God would give him ſuch Grace as might make him good always; praying him, that he would beg of God to make him ſuch, as he believed him to be already; adding in the end of the Letter, I pray God my dear Brother, that he would be pleaſed to make you acceptable in his ſight.

St. Au-

St. Augustine. Tome II.

St. Augustine in his Retractations, mentions the two following Letters; The 147*th.* to Paulina, and the 148*th.* to Fortunatianus Bishop of Sicca, and placeth them after the Books composed in 412. And indeed, this Bishop of Sicca, who was at the Conference of Carthage, died in 413. and Urbanus succeeded him, and was deputed that very year to go to Rome. St. Augustine proves in both these Letters, that God cannot be seen with bodily Eyes. In the former, he explains, what it is to see God; How he is seen; who they are that have seen him; and, who shall see him hereafter.

The 149*th.* is an Answer of St. Augustine, to the Questions proposed by St. Paulinus, in the 121*st.* Letter, about some Passages of Scripture; He critically examines the Difficulties that were raised about St. Paul's Epistles, and gives a Rational Account of them. This Letter was written about the year 414. after the Promotion of Urbanus to the Bishoprick of Sicca.

The 150*th.* is written to Proba, and to her Daughter Juliana; He wishes them Joy, that Demetrias, Juliana's Daughter, had consecrated her self to God in vowing Virginity. It is full of noble Expressions, in Commendation of Virginity.

Count Marcellinus, who presided at the Conference of Carthage, was Executed in the year 413. at Carthage, with his Brother Apringius, by order of Count Marinus, being Accused of abetting Heraclianus his Rebellion: St. Augustine being his Friend, and knowing his Innocency, used all his Endeavours to hinder that Judgment; and was sensibly affected for the Death of those innocent Persons. A great Lord, one Cæcilian, St. Augustine's Friend, and an Enemy to the two Brothers, being at Carthage the same time when this Judgment was given, was suspected to have had a hand in it; and St. Augustine having forborn writing to him for some time, this Lord thought that he had also conceived the same Suspicion; wherefore he wrote to St. Augustine about it. To this Letter St. Augustine returns an Answer in the 151*st.* wherein he represents, both the Cruelty and Injustice of Marinus's Judgment, and what had made the World believe that Cæcilian had a hand in it. Yet he professes not to believe it, considering what he had written to justifie himself; but he exhorts him to renounce all manner of Friendship with Marinus. Afterwards he makes a Panegyrick upon these two Brethren without naming them, and particularly of Marcellinus; giving an Account of the edifying Discourses he made in the Prison: This is a remarkable thing. St. Augustine declares, that having been to visit him in the Prison, he demanded of him, whether he had ever committed any Sin for which he ought to have done Penance; and that Marcellinus made him this Answer, That he took to witness those Sacraments which that hand brought him, that neither before nor after Marriage, he ever touch'd any Woman, but his own Wife. This Passage teaches us, that Pastors were careful to visit Prisoners, to assist, and carry the Sacraments to them, and enjoyned them Penance when they found them guilty of great Sins; and there is no doubt, but that after Penance they also gave them Absolution, when they feared that they should be Condemned to Die; but upon condition, that if they escaped Death they should fulfil their Penance. At last, St. Augustine sets Marcellinus his Innocence against the Cruelty and Unworthiness of Marinus's Action, whom he describes as a very ill Man, who had Sacrificed those two innocent Persons to please the Donatists. He again advises Cæcilian to abhorr that Action, and to conceive such an Indignation against him that committed it, as might oblige him to a Penance proportionable to the greatness of his Crime. At last, he tells him, that being of such an Age, and of such Probity, he ought no longer to continue a Catechumen. Marcellinus, who had been so barbarously used by Marinus, was justified at Court. St. Augustine saith, that there was not so much as need of a Pardon from the Emperor, and had not Marinus hastned the Judgment against Marcellinus, without waiting for the Bishop's Answer, who was sent to the Emperor to sollicit his Pardon, he had been acquitted; and accordingly, Marinus was disgraced, and the Memory of Marcellinus honoured by the Emperor Honorius, who by a Law of the third of August 414. Registred in the Theodosian Code, B. 16. Tit. 5. L. 55. confirms all that he had done against the Donatists, and gives him the Title of Marcellinus of Glorious Memory.

The 152*d.* Letter is from Macedonius, Lieutenant of Africa, who desires to know of St. Augustine, whether Religion permits Bishops to make Applications to Judges to obtain Favour for Enemies, as they did at that time, and as St. Augustine often did of Macedonius. This Magistrate could hardly believe that Religion authorized that Practice; Seeing that God doth so severely forbid Sin, that a Man is not admitted to Penance after the first time; and that it seems to be a countenancing of Crimes when we show an unwillingness to have them punished.

St. Augustine in the 153*d.* Letter, answereth, that Bishops intercede for Criminals, because they hope they may amend: They abhorr the Crime, but they pity the Criminals: that Repentance having no place but in this Life, there is reason to intercede for the Guilty, lest by this finite Punishment which ends their Life, they may fall into a Punishment that shall never end. So that none can doubt but that Religion approveth that Practice, since God himself, in whom is no Injustice; who seeth what every Man is, and what he ought to be, and cannot be mistaken in his Judgments, causeth his Sun to rise upon the bad as well as upon the good, and by his long forbearance invites Sinners to repentance. That when Bishops by their Intercessions, have rescued any from the severity of the Judges, they put him to do Penance, that the Crime may not remain unpunished. For, saith he, a true Penitent hath no other prospect, than that the Evil which he hath done may be punished. That if there be any Persons whose Malice is so great, that after Penance, and being reconciled and admitted to the Holy Mysteries, they relapse into their Disorders, and sometimes into greater; then indeed, the Church admits them no more to do Penance, lest a Remedy, (which is so much the more profitable, by how much it is least exposed to the contempt of Sinners) should lose its Virtue, if it become more common: But yet, we despair not of their Salvation, which they may obtain through God's Mercy, by being converted and altering their Life. Afterwards, St. Augustine alledgeth several Reasons in Equity, and several Examples, to shew, that we are not forbidden to intercede for Criminals; and that all Men ought to be inclined to Meekness and Pity. The principal Consideration which he makes use of, is the State of Man in this Life, which cannot be without Sin. For, saith he, Though the Sins which we commit, after the general abolishment in Baptism, are not of the same quality with those for which Men are separated from the Altar; yet they must be expiated, not by a barren Sorrow, but by a Sacrifice of the Works of Mercy.

St. Augustine acknowledgeth, that the Soveraign Power of Princes; the Power of Life and Death, and the Dread of Punishments, are all necessary to restrain Wicked Men, and the Terror which these things strike into the Hearts of Men, is of great advantage, not only to the good, who by this means live securely among the Wicked, but even to the wicked themselves; because whilst their Hands are tied by the fear of Punishment, their Hearts may call upon God, and turn from Evil to Good: For (saith he) they are not good Men, because they abstain from Evil through fear of Suffering; for Fear does not make Men Good, but only the Love of Righteousness.

He tells us further, that upon some occasions, it is Mercy to Punish; and in others, Cruelty to Forgive: Sicut enim est aliquando misericordia puniens, ita est crudelitas parcens. He speaketh at last, of Restoring Stoln Goods, or such as are ill gotten: And concerning these, he saith, (1.) That it is a Mockery, not to do Penance; not to restore, when it is in our power, the Goods that are gotten by those Crimes for which we pretend to do Penance. (2.) That though a Judge may, without Injustice, appoint Punishments to oblige a Thief to make Restitution; yet one may intercede for him, not to prevent restoring what is taken away, since we bind them to it by the dread of God's Judgments, and debarr them from the Communion till they have done it; but only by way of preventing unnecessary Cruelty against a Man that is supposed not to be in a capacity of making Restitution, or not fully convicted of the Theft. (3.) That when we have not evident Proofs that such a one is possessed of our Goods, it is better to hazard losing them, though perhaps he is guilty, but denies it, than to torment and put him to Death, perhaps unjustly, if he hath them not. An excellent Caveat to teach Masters not to be too forward to seize upon their Servants, merely upon Suspicion. (4.) That Lawyers may take Money for their Advice in a just Cause, but not Judges to do Justice, nor Witnesses to give Testimony to Truth: and that both are exceedingly guilty when they take Money; the one for an Unjust Sentence, and the other for a false Witness. (5.) That Lawyers having taken Money to defend an ill Cause, or to blind the Judge, are obliged to make Restitution, as well as the Witnesses or Officers, who exact Fees beyond what belong to their Places. (6.) That Estates gotten by Stealth, False Accusation, or Oppression, ought to be restored; and that it is not enough, to bestow them upon the Poor. (7.) That in some Sense it may be said, that wicked Men have Nothing, but that All things belong to the faithful. 'For (saith St. Augustine) whatsoever we have which we have no Right to, 'belongs to another, and we have Right to nothing but 'what we justly possess; and we possess nothing justly, 'but what we possess as we ought: and all that we possess 'not as we ought, is another's; and we possess nothing as 'we ought, if we make not good use of it. . . . . So that 'wicked Men never possess any thing as they ought; and 'good Men enjoy it so much the more justly, because they 'love it less.' Strange Consequences would follow from this Position, had not St. Augustine added this Restriction immediately; 'But their Iniquity is tolerated, who possess 'not this World's Goods as they ought; yea, Laws are

St. Augustine. Tome II.

'eſtabliſhed to ſecure their Poſſeſſion; and are called Civil 'Laws, becauſe that by them Civil Society is preſerved; 'not by obliging them to uſe thoſe Goods as they ought, 'but by preventing their abuſing them for the Oppreſſion 'of others..... Yet we have reſpect to theſe Humane and 'Temporal Laws; and our Interceſſions never go ſo far, 'as to hinder the reſtoring of what is ill gotten, according 'to the Laws.'

The 154*th*. Letter is from Macedonius; who ſendeth St. Auguſtine word, that he had done what he deſired; and, that he had read the three Firſt Books of The City of God, which St. Auguſtine ſent him.

St. Auguſtine anſwers him in the 155*th*. wherein he diſcourſes of Happineſs; ſhewing, that God is the Spring of a happy Life, and that true Vertue conſiſts in the Love of God: 'Vertue (ſaith he) is nothing elſe but the Love of 'what ought to be loved: To know how to make a good 'Choice, is called Prudence; not to be turned away from 'it, for any Evil, by Pleaſure or Pride, is called Fortitude, 'Temperance and Juſtice. Thus God is the chiefeſt Good: 'ſo that to love any other thing more, or as much as him, 'is not to love our ſelves; for our Condition is ſo much 'the more happy, as we approach with greater violence 'towards that which is beſt.

Theſe four Letters were written immediately after St. Auguſtine had compoſed his three firſt Books of The City of God; which were compleated in 413. before the fourth and the fifth, which were publiſhed in 415.

The 156*th*. Letter was written from Syracuſe, by one Hilary; who deſireth St. Auguſtine to let him know what he ſhould think of certain Propoſitions, ſet forth by ſome at Syracuſe; 'That it is in Man's power to keep himſelf 'pure from all Sin; that it is eaſie for him, if he pleaſe, 'to keep the Commands of God; that Men are born with-'out Sin, and by conſequence, that it is inconſiſtent with 'the Juſtice of God, that Children dying before Baptiſm, 'ſhould periſh; That rich Men cannot enter into the King-'dom of God, without renouncing their Riches, and ſel-'ling all they have, and giving it to the Poor; And that 'whilſt they keep them, all the good Works they 'may do, according to God's Law, will profit them no-'thing'. And laſtly, that we ought to Swear in no caſe. He aſketh further, Whether the Church without ſpot or wrinkle, ſpoken of by St. Paul, is that to which we now belong, or that which we hope to make up one day with the bleſſed in Heaven. This Hilary, of Syracuſe, is very like that Hilary who joined with St. Proſper to refute the Semi-Pelagians, and who writ to St. Auguſtine the 136*th* Letter; both were Lay-men, ſince St. Auguſtine calleth them Sons: they were both great Enemies of the Pelagians, Diſciples and great Admirers of St. Auguſtine: the Style of both Letters ſeems to be the ſame, which makes it probable that they were both written by the ſame Perſon.

Be that as it will, in the next St. Auguſtine anſwereth the Queſtions propoſed in this Letter; which gave him opportunity to treat at large of Original Sin; of the Corruption of our Nature; of Juſtification, and of the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt: and to prove againſt the Pelagians, (1.) that no Man can be free from Sin in this Life. (2.) That no Man can fulfil the Law without the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, which is obtained by Labour and by Prayer. (3.) That Grace doth not take away Liberty; becauſe the Will of Man is by ſo much the more free, as it is the more ſubject to Chriſt's Grace, and delivered from the Dominion of Sin: We ſhould not think that Free-will is deſtroy'd, becauſe it needeth ſuch Helps; on the contrary, it ſuppoſes that it ſubſiſts ſtill, when we ſay that it hath need of help. (4.) That we learn of St. Paul, that all the Children of Adam are born in Sin; and periſh eternally, if they are not ſanctified by the Grace of Baptiſm. Here he refuteth the Pelagians very fully; who anſwered, that Sin was not from Adam, but by Imitation: And he enlargeth upon the Oppoſition which St. Paul makes between Adam and Jeſus Chriſt; between the Condemnation cauſed by the Old Man becauſe of Sin, and the Juſtification which the New Man worketh in us by his Grace. Having handled thoſe Points, he ſpeaks occaſionally againſt Cœleſtius, who had been both accuſed and convicted of thoſe Errors which St. Auguſtine had lately refuted. Afterwards this Saint diſcourſes againſt another Pelagian Error concerning Manners; and proveth, (1.) That to be ſaved, Men need not part with their whole Eſtate, and reduce themſelves to entire Poverty. And laſtly, he obſerves, that the Church here below conſiſts both of Good and Bad. He adds further, concerning Swearing, that Men ſhould avoid Swearing as much as poſſibly they can: That it is beſt, not to Swear at all; no, not in Truth; becauſe thoſe that are uſed to Swearing, are every moment upon the brink of Perjury: that it is a moſt dangerous thing to play with Oaths; but the ſureſt way, is never to Swear, and uſe only Yea and Nay. St. Jerome mentions this Letter in his Dialogue, written in the Year 415. and ſpeaks of it as a Diſcourſe newly publiſhed. It was read in the Council of Paleſtine, aſſembled in July, 415. as St. Auguſtine obſerves in the Book of The Acts of Pelagius, chap. 11. which ſhews that it was written in the Year 414.

The Subject of the 158*th*. Letter is as followeth; Evodius, Biſhop of Uzala, having given an Account of a Young Man's happy Death, who had led a moſt holy Life, and had appear'd to ſome after his Death; propoſes ſome Queſtions to St. Auguſtine about ſuch Apparitions, and asks, Whether the Soul hath not a Body after Death? We ought not to forget that this Biſhop, ſpeaking of that Young Man's Death, obſerves, that in his Sickneſs he repeated Pſalms, and in his Agony he made the Sign of the Croſs upon his Forehead: That they buried him honourably, and for three Days together Hymns were ſung upon his Grave, and on the third Day they offer'd the Sacrifice of our Redemption. At the latter end of this Letter, Evodius asks St. Auguſtine ſome other Queſtions about the difference betwixt God's and Man's Wiſdom.

St. Auguſtine anſwers that Biſhop in the 159*th*. and tells him, that this Queſtion requireth much Labour and Study to reſolve all the Difficulties that may be in it. But to let him know his Opinion in one word, He did not believe that the Soul did go out of the Body with a Body: that as to Viſions and Apparitions, nothing can be ſaid, without deciding after what manner an infinite number of different Ideas are raiſed in our Souls: which is a thing very hard to be comprehended; though it is certain, that ſuch Repreſentations are neither Corporeal Motions, nor Corporeal Qualities. He referrs Evodius to what he had ſaid concerning that Matter, in his Book upon Geneſis; and contents himſelf to tell him what happened to Gennadius, a Phyſician at Carthage; who doubting whether there was another Life, was convinced of it by a Young Man that appeared to him in a Dream; and made him apprehend, that ſince he did both hear and ſee him, though his Eyes were ſhut, and he had no Uſe of his Ears, that even ſo after Death, though he ſhould have no bodily Eyes, yet he ſhould ſee, and feel, and live.

The 160*th*. and 161*ſt*. are both by Evodius. In the firſt, he asketh St. Auguſtine what God is? and what is Reaſon? And in the ſecond, he deſireth him to explain a Paſſage in his 137*th*. Letter to Voluſianus.

St. Auguſtine anſwereth both by the 162*d*. Wherein he tells Evodius, that he had not Time enough to anſwer thoſe Queſtions, but he had already reſolved ſeveral of them, in his Books of the Trinity; Of Free-Will; Of the Quantity of the Soul; and, Of True Religion. He confirms what he had ſaid in the 159*th*. Letter, touching a Soul ſeparated from the Body; and about Apparitions. And at laſt juſtifieth what he had ſaid of the Incarnation to Voluſianus; If a Reaſon could be given of that Myſtery, then would it ceaſe to be Wonderful: Were there an Example of it, it would not be Singular.

Though St. Auguſtine had ſignified to Evodius, that he was not at leiſure to anſwer ſuch ſort of Queſtions; yet this Man propoſes two more in his 163*d*. Letter: The former, concerning the Original of Chriſt's Soul; and the other, about a difficult Paſſage in St. Peter's Epiſtle, where it is ſaid, That Jeſus Chriſt preached in the Spirit to the Spirits in Priſon; which ſome time were diſobedient, when the long-ſuffering of God waited in the days of Noah.

St. Auguſtine reſolveth both theſe Queſtions in the 164*th*. Letter: And beginning with the latter, he ſaith, (1.) That no Man can doubt of Chriſt's Deſcent into Hell. (2.) That he did not deliver all Men from thence, but only ſuch as he judged worthy to be delivered. (3.) That almoſt the whole Church believes that Jeſus Chriſt delivered our firſt Father; and ſome others think, that he brought out the other Patriarchs and the Prophets: But that it is more probable that theſe righteous Men were not in Hell, but in another Place, called Abraham's Boſom. (4.) That thoſe juſt Men who were raiſed again when Chriſt died, did take again their Bodies to die a ſecond time. (5.) It cannot be ſaid, that Jeſus Chriſt preached the Goſpel in the other World, to thoſe that were Incredulous in this Life. (6.) That that Paſſage of St. Peter, is not to be underſtood of the Spirits or Souls detained in Hell; but of the Spirits who lived in the days of Noah, whom the Word did then enlighten: So that St. Peter's meaning in St. Auguſtine's Opinion, is not, that Chriſt deſcended into Hell, to preach the Goſpel to thoſe who believed not, in Noah's time; but that Jeſus Chriſt dying for us, was raiſed again by the ſame Spirit by whom he formerly preached, or by which he formerly inſtructed Unbelievers, in the days when Noah prepared the Ark, whilſt God's Patience waited and invited them to Repentance. (7.) That Chriſt's Birth was not defiled with Sin; and though he took in the Womb of a Virgin true Humane Fleſh, yet was it not ſinful Fleſh, becauſe Luſt had no hand in forming of that Fleſh. This brings him inſenſibly to the other Queſtion, about the Original of the Soul. St. Auguſtine is ſtill to ſeek about that Subject, and dareth not declare for any of the four Opinions that divided the Chriſtians at that time, but clearly diſowns the Notion, that for the Puniſhment of ſome Sins committed in another Life, the Soul is caſt into the Body, as into a Priſon: But maintains, that it is certain that Chriſt's Soul was not ſubject either to the Death of Sin, or to Condemnation. All theſe Letters of Evodius, and theſe

Anſwers

St. Augustine. Tome II.

Answers of St. Augustine, were written not long after one another, after that to Volusianus, in the Year 414.

The 165*th.* is a Letter of St. Jerome to Marcellinus and Anapsychia: Wherein this Father having related the several Opinions about the Origination of the Soul, adviseth them to address themselves to St. Augustine, if they desired to know more. It is visible, that this was written before the former; because it is directed to Count Marcellinus, who was executed in 413. but it is placed here, because of its relation with the following Letter of St. Augustine, which is a Treatise upon the Soul's Original, dedicated to St. Jerome, and sent to him by Orosius, in the Year 415.

St. Augustine having observed, that the Soul cannot be called a Body, if by Body be understood an extended Substance; though it might be termed Corporeal in another Sense, if this Term be taken at large to signifie Substance in general: he proposes then to St. Jerome the several Opinions concerning the Soul's Original; starting some Difficulties upon that which St. Jerome seemed to approve best; yet it is that which we now hold, that Souls are created and put into our Bodies at the Birth of each Person. He insists particularly upon this, that it is difficult to make that consist with Original Sin, and with what the Church believes concerning Children that die without Baptism; and so he asketh of St. Jerome a Solution of these Objections, having answered the Reasons alledged against that Opinion which seemed most probable to St. Augustine. He takes notice, that the Innocents were honoured in the Church, as Martyrs.

The next Letter to St. Jerome, upon these Words of St. James, ch. 2. v. 10. He that transgresses in one point, is guilty of all, was written immediately after the fore-going, as St. Augustine observes in his Retractations. He desireth St. Jerome to explain that Passage to him; and himself giveth an Explication of it, which he submits to St. Jerome's Judgment. He examineth the Stoicks Opinions, who taught, that all Sins were equal; and that of the Philosophers, who affirmed, that it was impossible to have any one Vertue, without being endowed with all. Having bandied these Questions on both Sides, he concludes, that though it were true, that one Vertue could not be alone; yet it would not follow, that all Sins were equal: But however, it is not true, that all Vertues must necessarily be joined together: because Vertue being no other thing than the Love of what one ought to love, a Man may have more or less of this Love; for no Man can attain to perfect Charity in this Life. This being supposed, he saith, that whosoever transgresseth the Law in one Point, is guilty of breaking the Whole; because Sin is against Charity, and Charity is the fulfilling of the Law. But from hence it doth not follow that all Sins are equal; because that though every Sin violates Charity, upon which the Law dependeth; yet that hinders not but that a Man is more or less guilty, according as the Sins he commits are greater or less. In a word, there is more or less Sin in us, according as there is more or less Charity; and we shall never be perfect in Charity, before we are delivered from the weakness of this mortal Flesh. Lastly, we ought not to despise small Sins, or daily Faults; but ask God Pardon for them, and blot them out by constant Prayers, and good Works. Whosoever should neglect to expiate them; and who thinking himself over-righteous, should ask of God to be judged without Mercy, would doubtless come to Christ's Judgment-Seat overwhelmed with Sins that would weigh him down, and would find no Mercy.

The 168*th.* is a Letter of Thanks, which both Timasius and James return to St. Augustine, for his Book of Nature and Grace, composed in 415. which was dedicated to them.

In the 169*th.* St. Augustine answereth Evodius about two Questions which that Bishop had put to him; one concerning the Trinity; and the other about the Dove, under whose Shape the Holy Ghost appeared; and there he explains the Faith of the Church, concerning the Trinity and the Incarnation, very clearly and exactly. This Letter is of the same Year with the Book of Nature and Grace; that is, in 415.

The next Letter, in St. Augustine's and Alypius's Name, is upon the same Subject: there they instruct Maximus the Physician, who was newly converted from the Arian Heresie; and exhort him to reduce those to the Faith whom he had led into Error.

The next is a Note from St. Augustine, and Alypius, to Peregrinus, a Bishop; whereby they desire him to give them an Account of what Success their Letter to Maximus had; and not to be offended at the length of their Letter, because they used to write such to those Persons, whom they esteemed most. This Peregrinus not being made Bishop before the Year 413. it is likely both these Letters were not written before 415.

The 172*d.* is an Answer of St. Jerome to St. Augustine's 166*th.* and 167*th.* Letters. There he commendeth what St. Augustine had writ, and excuseth himself from making any Answer. This Letter was brought by Orosius, in 416.

The 173*d.* is directed to Donatus, a Donatist Priest, of the Town of Carthagena, in the Diocess of Hippo, who having been informed, that there was an Order to arrest, and to carry him to Church, had purposed to throw himself into a Well. St. Augustine shews him, in this Letter, the Excess of his Folly; proving, that it is just to force them to do Good that are bent to do Evil. This Letter was written after the Conference at Carthage.

St. Augustine. Tome II.

The 174*th.* Letter of St. Augustine to Aurelius, Bishop of Carthage, was sent with his Book of the Trinity, compleated in 410.

The 175*th.* to Pope Innocent I. is not a particular Letter of St. Augustine's, but a Synodical Epistle of the Council assembled at Carthage in 416. whereby the Bishops of that Council, to the Number of 68. inform the Pope of what they had done in the Council against Pelagius, and Cœlestius: How Orosius having delivered them the Letters of Heros, and Lazarus, against Pelagius, and Cœlestius, after they had revised what they had done before at Carthage, five Years since, against Cœlestius, they had again Anathematized their Errors, to reclaim those that started them, from that Extravagancy; or, at the least, to cure such as were infected already, and to preserve such as might be infected, in process of time, from the Contagion. They make the Pope acquainted with it, that so the Authority of the See of Rome, being joyned with the Judgment of the African Bishops, might secure the Salvation of many, and call back, into the right way, those that had gone astray. They refute afterwards, the Principal Errors of the Pelagians, against Grace, and Original Sin. They add, that though Pelagius had been justly acquitted in the Council of Palæstine, yet now the growing Error, that over-spreads the Church, ought to be Anathematized. Lastly, that though both Pelagius, and Cœlestius, seem to disown their Errors, and have undertaken to deny that they ever owned them, and to affirm that the Writings objected to them, are none of theirs; yet Anathemas ought to be pronounced against any one who dares teach, and averr, That the natural Strength of Man, is sufficient to avoid Sin, and to accomplish God's Commandments-.....-And that dares affirm, That Children need not be delivered from Perdition, by the Baptism of Jesus Christ; or, that they can have a share, in eternal Life, without that Sacrament.

The 176*th.* is likewise a Synodical Letter of the Council of Milevis, made up of 60 Numidian Bishops, and Assembled at the same time with the foregoing. They exhort Pope Innocent to use his Authority to Condemn that new Heresie which was an Enemy of the Grace of Jesus Christ. They accuse Cœlestius, and Pelagius, as the Authors of it; yet hoping that they will renounce their Errors.

Besides these two Letters, St. Augustine writ a particular one in the Name of the Bishops, Aurelius, Alypius, Evodius and Possidius, his Colleagues, and familiar Friends: wherein he represents to him, that Pelagius having lived long at Rome, it was a thing of great Consequence there, to condemn plainly the Error which he taught; and that it were convenient to send for Pelagius, to examine him and oblige him to make such a Confession of Faith, as might not be capable of an ill Explication; and to anathematize the Errors that were found in his Books. They refute likewise the Pelagian Doctrine, explaining the Difference betwixt the Law and Grace; and shewing the necessity of the Latter to fulfil the Commandments.

St. Augustine wrote again upon the same Subject, and about the same time, the 178*th.* Letter to St. Hilary, supposed to be Bishop of Narbon; and the 179*th.* to John of Jerusalem, to whom he sendeth his Book of Nature and Grace, with that of Pelagius, desiring in exchange, The Ecclesiastical Acts; whereby it appeareth, That Pelagius had been Justified; he means, the Acts of the Council of Diospolis. All these Letters are written in 416. Orosius being come back again, who brought from Palæstine into Africa, Heros's, and Lazarus's Letters against Pelagius.

The 180*th.* to Oceanus a Gentleman of Rome, is also of the same time. This Man had also embraced St. Jerome's Opinion about the Origination of Souls, and concerning an officious Lye. St. Augustine shews him in few Words, the Difficulty, that attended St. Jerome's Opinion, about the Origination of Souls, with the difference betwixt Tropes, or Metaphors, and Lying; he observes, That St. Jerome, with whom he had had a Dispute about that Subject, had altered his Mind in his Dialogue against Pelagius. He desireth Oceanus to send him a Treatise of that Father, whereof Orosius had spoken to him, and wherein he treated of the Resurrection of the Flesh.

The 181*st.* 182*d.* 183*d.* 184*th.* Letters, are Pope Innocent's Answers to those of the African Bishops; whereby he approves and confirms all that was done in Africa, against Pelagius and Cœlestius; they are of the Year 417.

The 185*th* Letter, is amongst those Discourses that St. Augustine mentions in his Retractations, where he calls it the Book of the Correction of the Donatists, against those who found fault, that the Imperial Laws were put in Execution to make them return into the Church. He directs it to Bonifacius a Tribune, and afterwards Count in Africa. Having shewed there the difference betwixt the Arian Heresie, and the Donatists Schism, he proves that keeping within the Rules of Chriſtian Moderation, the terror of the Laws may be uſed to reduce Hereticks to the Church. He ſpeaketh at large of the cruelties which the Donatiſts, and particularly the Circumcellians exerciſed againſt the Catholicks. He refutes all the Reaſons then alledged at large; which Reaſons were now made uſe of to perſuade Men, that Hereticks are not to be reclaimed from their Errors, by Force, or Puniſhments. He ſays ſome Things concerning Penance, and Remiſſion of Sins: That Baptiſm blots out all Sins; and that, by Penance they may be alſo remitted; and, 'that if The Church hath ordained, that none of thoſe, 'who have been under Penance, ſhall be admitted into the 'Clergy, or kept in it, this is only for the upholding of 'Diſcipline, leſt ſome ſhould do Penance out of Pride, 'with a Deſign to obtain Eccleſiaſtical Dignities; not that 'ſhe would caſt Criminals into Deſpair, how Guilty ſo-'ever they be, ... but that this Method is altered upon 'thoſe Occaſions, where the buſineſs is not only to ſecure 'the Salvation of ſome particular Men, but to deliver 'whole Nations from Death. In which Circumſtances, the 'Church hath remitted much of the Severity of her Diſ-'cipline, to find a Remedy for greater Evils, and for this 'very Reaſon, ſhe declareth thus with the Donatiſts: That 'ſhe is ſatisfied if they expiate their Sin of Separation by as 'bitter grief as was that of St. Peter; and ſhe preſerveth 'their Rank and Dignity among the Clergy.' That the Church practiſed this, when whole Nations were to be reclaimed from Error, or Hereſie: That Luciſer Calaritanus was looked upon as a Schiſmatick, for being of another Opinion: That the Sin of the Holy Ghoſt is not Error, or Blaſphemy, ſince it would thence follow, that no Heretick ought to be admitted to Penance, or obtain Remiſſion of his Sin; and that, by this, no other thing can be underſtood but final Impenitency. St. Auguſtine obſerves, in his Retractations, that he wrote this Letter at the ſame time that he compoſed the Book of the Acts of Pelagius, in 417.

St. Auguſtine. Tome II.

The 186*th*. Letter of St. Auguſtine, is written to Paulinus, Biſhop of Nola; not to Boniface, as it is intitled in ſome Manuſcripts; ſince it is quoted as directed to Paulinus, in the Book of the Gift of Perſeverance, Ch. 21. and by St. Proſper, Ch. 43. againſt Caſſianus his Conferences. And indeed St. Auguſtine qnotes a Paſſage out of a Letter, from the Perſons to whom he wrote, which is found in the 8*th*. Letter from St. Paulinus to Sulpitius Severus. This whereof we now ſpeak, is written in the Name of St. Auguſtine, and Alypius, who was an intimate Friend of St. Paulinus, againſt Pelagius, whom this Saint had in great Eſteem. In this Letter St. Auguſtine layeth open all his Principles, concerning Grace, and Predeſtination, and refuteth Pelagius his Notions. He begins with the Relation of what had been done againſt him in Africa, and ſends Copies of it to St. Paulinus. Then he layeth down theſe Poſitions, that the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, that is neceſſary to enable us to do Good, is altogether of Free Gift; That God ſheweth Mercy to whom he pleaſeth; That he takes whom he thinks fit, out of the Maſs of Corruption, into which Mankind is fallen, through Adam's Sin. He inſiſteth, particularly, upon the Example of Infants, whereof ſome are ſaved thro' God's Mercy, and others damned, becauſe of Original Sin. He refutes Pelagius's Opinion, touching the State of Infants who he ſuppoſes to be in a middle State between Heaven, and Hell, which he calleth Eternal Life. He proves, That Free-Will does not conſiſt in an indifference, to Good or Evil; for it is inclined to Evil, and cannot do Good, without the aſſiſtance of the Grace of God. He tells St. Paulinus, that Pelagius maintained the contrary in his former Books, that afterwards he ſeems to have retracted his Errors in the Council of Dioſpolis, whereof he had received the Acts; and then he diſſembled again ſometimes, confeſſing the neceſſity of Grace, and often affirming, that the Will had power of it ſelf to abſtain from Sin: So that God's Aſſiſtance in his Opinion was afforded us over and above, to enable us to do that which is Good with the greater eaſe. Theſe are the Opinions refuted by St. Auguſtine in this Letter, where he urges a paſſage from a Letter, written by St. Paulinus, to convince him that he ought to reject them, and condemn Pelagius.

The next Letter to Dardanus, is a Didactical Treatiſe, mentioned by St. Auguſtine in his Retractations. There he ſhews how God is ſaid to be Omnipreſent, upon occaſion of two Queſtions, which Dardanus had propoſed to him: The one upon theſe Words of Jeſus Chriſt to the good Thief, This Day thou ſhalt be with me in Paradiſe; and the other, Whether Children have any Notion of God in the Womb. The former Difficulty is grounded upon this, that the humane Nature of Chriſt, was not in Paradiſe immediately after his Death, becauſe his Soul deſcended into Hell, and his Body was laid in the Grave. St. Auguſtine ſaith, That the Soul of Jeſus Chriſt, may be ſaid to have been in the ſame Place where the Souls of the Righteous were, which may be called Paradiſe. But he thinks it more probable, That this is meant of Chriſt's Divinity, which never ceaſed to be in Paradiſe. This puts St. Auguſtine upon treating of God's Immenſity, whereof he ſpeaketh after a very high manner; ſhewing, that we ought not to conceive of it as of a Corporeal Extenſion. He diſcourſeth, likewiſe of the Particular Manner how God dwelleth in the Saints, and in Baptized Infants that do not yet know him. And this leads him to the ſecond Queſtion, about the Knowledge of Children that are yet in their Mother's Womb. He affirms, That they have no knowledge, no, not after their Birth, and that the Holy Ghoſt dwelleth in them, and they know it not; whereupon he enlargeth upon Juſtification that is wrought by Regeneration, and ſpeaketh of Birth in Sin, the Neceſſity of Baptiſmal Grace, and of Faith in Jeſus Chriſt. It is evident by St. Auguſtine's Retractations, That this Letter was written in the Year 417. It is directed to the Præfect of Gaul, to whom St. Jerome wrote alſo a Letter.

St. Auguſtine. Tome II.

The 188*th*. Letter to Juliana, the Mother of Demetrias, is a Warning given to that Holy Widow by St. Auguſtine and Alypius, not to ſuffer herſelf to be ſurprized by the hidden Poiſon in the Letter to Demetrias, whereof they did not yet know Pelagius to be the Author. He ſhews her, that this Letter aſcribeth all to Free-Will; whereas the Principle of Chriſtian Piety is to attribute all to God.

In the 189*th*. St. Auguſtine lays down ſeveral very uſeful and edifying Rules to Boniface, to live Chriſtianly in the Profeſſion of Arms; recommending to him above all things, Charity towards God, and towards his Neighbour; as the Foundation of all Vertues. He ſhews, that to be a Soldier is no unlawful Profeſſion, and that a Soldier may be a good Chriſtian, if he be deſirous of Peace, and goes to War with no other deſign but that of procuring it. And that Neceſſity alone ought to put him upon taking away his Enemy's Life, and that his own Will ought not to have any Hand in it. That he ought to do no Injuſtice nor Violence, nor get Wealth by Wicked Means. At laſt, he adviſes him to remember, that every good thing cometh from God: It is not Certainly known in what Year this Letter was written.

The 190*th*. to Optatus contains St. Auguſtine's Opinions touching the Original of the Soul. Firſt of all he ſuppoſes Original Sin as an indubitable thing; Then he ſaith, that whereas he had written; that we may without danger be ignorant of the Soul's Extraction, it is with this Proviſo, that we certainly hold, 1. That this is not of God's Subſtance, but a Creature. 2. That it is a Spirit and not a Body. 3. That it is not placed in the Body for a Puniſhment of Sins committed in another Life. He ſaith afterward, That no Man can be juſtified but by Faith in Jeſus Chriſt, and that it was that Faith which juſtified the Patriarchs. He enlargeth alſo upon the free Predeſtination of God's Elect, which is the Choice that God made of them to take them by his Grace out of the Maſs of Perdition, and upon the eternal Death of Children dying before Baptiſm. Laſtly, he endeavours to prove, that if we reject Tertullian's groſs Opinion, who ſuppoſed the Soul to be Corporeal, the Notion of the Propagation of Souls agreeth beſt with Original Sin, tho' it hath ſome Difficulties. He obſerves, that it was the moſt general Opinion in the Weſt, and he believes it more probable than that of conſtant Creation; yet he dares not decide any thing upon this matter, neither will he condemn the Pelagians for holding the latter Opinion; But becauſe they draw from it a Conſequence againſt Original Sin, he ſpeaks of the Condemnation of Pelagius's Doctrine by the Popes, Innocent, and Zoſimus, and quotes a Letter of the latter which is not extant: St. Auguſtine writ this Letter at Cæſarea, where he dwelt ſome time after the Council of Carthage, in the Year 418. There are theſe two curious Sentences: The firſt, We make our ſelves unworthy of Knowledge, if we deſire that others ſhould believe that we know them, when we are ignorant of them. The ſecond, It is raſhneſs to decide by Conjecture what Reaſon doth not diſcover, and what the Holy Scripture doth not clearly teach.

In the 191*ſt*. Letter, St. Auguſtine congratulates Sixtus the Prieſt, afterwards Biſhop of Rome, who was ſuſpected to have been a Favourer of the Pelagians, becauſe he declared himſelf for Grace. He deſireth him to beware of thoſe who not daring to ſet forth their Doctrine openly, did notwithſtanding ſow it ſecretly; praying him to reclaim thoſe with Meekneſs, whom Fear kept in deep Silence but preſerved ſtill the ſame Venom in their Hearts.

In the 192*d*. he entertaineth Cœleſtinus the Deacon, afterwards Biſhop of Rome, with the Duties of Chriſtian Charity. He ſaith, that this Vertue is not of the Nature of thoſe Things which ceaſe to be after performance; for the more a Man performs Actions of Charity, the more Charitable he is. That no Man ought to want this Duty towards his Friends, ſince all Men are obliged to exerciſe it towards their Enemies: That Charity towards Enemies, is the way to make them Friends: For it makes us deſire that they ſhould become Vertuous, which they cannot be, unleſs they be in Charity with thoſe that wiſh them ſo much Good, even the ſame Charity that others have for them. That it is not with Charity as it is with Money: For the leſs we think to be re-imburſed, the more we love thoſe that we give Money to, whereas the more deſirous we are, that thoſe ſhould prove Charitable towards us, to whom we ſhew Charity, the more we love them. One may plainly ſee that this Letter is a Chriſtian Compliment wittily Written. It was

St. Auguſtine Tome. II.

was ſent at the ſame time with the two next to Albinus, after St. Auguſtine's Return to Hippo, whither he did not come till the 20*th*. of September of the Year 418. for it appeareth by the Acts of the Conference which he had with Emeritus, that he was then in Mauritania.

The 193*d*. Letter lately publiſhed out of a Manuſcript is directed to Mercator, who is thought to be the ſame that writ againſt Pelagius, and the Neſtorians. St. Auguſtine having excuſed himſelf, that he had not given him an Anſwer ſooner, by reaſon of his Journey into Mauritania, ſhews him that ſince the Pelagians own that their Children in Baptiſm believe through other Mens Faith, they may own likewiſe, that Original Sin is remitted to them by reaſon of others believing. He addeth ſome Proofs, of their being born in Sin; and that they cannot enjoy Eternal Life without being Baptized. He holds Death to be a Puniſhment for Sin, and anſwereth the Objection of ſome Pelagians; who, to prove the contrary, alledged the Examples of Enoch and Elias, who died not. St. Auguſtine anſwereth, that it is probable that they ſhould die ſometime or other; but if they die not, it is by the ſpecial Grace of God, who is able to remit the Puniſhment of Sin no leſs than Sin it ſelf. This Objection raiſes another that is better grounded: How can the Penalty of Sin remain after the Sin is remitted? St. Auguſtine doth not reſolve it here, but referrs us to his Book of Infant-Baptiſm. What followeth concerning the Reſurrection, is taken out of St. Auguſtine's Anſwers to Dulcitius his Objections.

The next which is the ſecond Letter to Sixtus Presbyter of Rome, was written ſome time after the former; He relates there the Pelagian Errors, which he refutes by confirming the contrary Doctrine. Theſe Errors are, 1. That Free-Will can do no Good without God's help. 2. That God were unjuſt, if he ſhewed Mercy to ſome and not to others. 3. That God doth indeed afford help, but that is only to Merit. 4. That Faith, which is in the beginning of Juſtification, depends upon Mens Free-Will. St. Auguſtine oppoſes to theſe Opinions St. Paul's Doctrine in the Epiſtle to the Romans; from which he concludes, that all Men are in the State of Perdition, and that God gives his Grace, and ſheweth Mercy to whom he pleaſeth; he oweth it to none, and they that receive it cannot accuſe him of Injuſtice, ſince they are condemned either for Original Sin, or for thoſe which they have added beſides; That he grants not this Grace to Merit, ſince there are no Merits previous to Grace; that he hardneth the Heart, not by inſpiring Malice, but by withdrawing his Grace. Theſe are the Maxims laid down by St. Auguſtine in this Letter, and and which he confirms by the Example of Children dying either before or after Baptiſm, as it pleaſeth God; and by what St. Paul ſaith in the Epiſtle to the Romans, of Jacob's Predeſtination, and Eſau's Reprobation.

The 195*th*. is a Note of St. Jerome's to St. Auguſtine wherein he calls him Happy, becauſe he was hated by Hereticks for refuting them; and had in Veneration by Catholicks, for defending the Doctrine of the Church.

In the 196*th*. to Aſellicus, St. Auguſtine having proved, that it is not lawful for Chriſtians to obſerve the Jewiſh Laws and Ceremonies, treats of the Uſefulneſs and Effects of the Laws, and of the Neceſſity of Grace againſt the Pelagians. Donatus was Primate of Numidia when this Letter was written; he was in that Station in the Council of Carthage in 418, and the Pelagians were Condemned already.

The 197*th*. Letter is directed to Heſychius Biſhop of Salona. St. Auguſtine endeavoureth to undeceive that Biſhop who fanſied that the End of the World was at hand, ſhowing, that that time is unknown to Men. He doth not believe it to be very near, becauſe the Goſpel had not yet been Preached throughout the whole Earth. Towards the latter end, he diſapproves the fanciful Opinion of a certain Man, whom St. Jerome in his Commentary upon the Prophet Daniel, had accuſed of raſhneſs, for affirming, that Daniel's Weeks related to the laſt, and not to the firſt coming of Jeſus Chriſt.

Heſychius returns this Anſwer to St. Auguſtine in the 198*th*. Letter, that though none knoweth either the Day or the Hour of the laſt Judgment, yet we may know whether it be far off, by the Signs, which Jeſus Chriſt told us ſhould precede his appearing; but however, it is an act of Piety to look for it, as near at hand. He anſwereth what St. Auguſtine had ſaid, that the Goſpel not having been Preached all the Earth over, it was not likely that the Day of Judgment ſhould happen ſo ſoon. He anſwers it, I ſay, by ſhewing that the Apoſtle St. Paul had look'd upon that Prophecy as already fulfilled; and at laſt approveth of their Opinion, who believed that the Weeks ſpoken of by Daniel, were not yet fulfilled. One of the Reaſons this Biſhop grounded his Opinion upon, is that Jeſus Chriſt foretelleth the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the End of the World at once: and he aſſures him, that the Son of Man will be at hand, when Jeruſalem is deſtroy'd.

St. Auguſtine having received this Letter, writes back to Heſychius the 199*th*. Letter; wherein, after a long Diſcourſe upon this Principle of Morality, that without enquiring when Chriſt ſhall come, we ought rather be ready to receive him when he cometh: He ſaith, that no place of Scripture doth mark the time of the Laſt Judgment, nor teaches whether it be near or far off. He refutes the Inferences which Heſychius had drawn from ſome Paſſages of Scripture; and ſhews, that Daniel's Weeks cannot be underſtood of Chriſt's laſt coming. And at laſt he diſtinguiſheth in the Prophecies in the 24*th*. Ch. of St. Matthew's Goſpel, and in the 13*th*. Ch. of St. Mark, what concerns the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, from that which relates to the End of the World; and clears the Circumſtances of thoſe Predictions. Finally, he concludes, that we ſhould have a care not to be miſtaken upon that Queſtion. That none is miſtaken, but when he thinks he knows, and affirms what he knows not. He repreſents the Diſpoſition of three ſorts of Perſons who wait for the Appearance of Jeſus Chriſt; one believeth, that he will ſhortly come; the other thinks, that it will be a great while firſt; and the third confeſſes, that he doth not know whether he will come ſooner or later. He ſaith thereupon, that the Notion of his coming quickly, is more according to our Wiſhes; but it is moſt dangerous if we ſhould be deceived. He on the contrary, who believes, that Jeſus Chriſt will not come ſo ſoon, but yet believeth, hopeth, and deſireth his coming, cannot be deceived, but his Error will turn to his Comfort: As for the third, who owneth that he knows nothing of it, but wiſhes for what the firſt promiſeth, and is ready to bear patiently what the other puts him in fear of, and aſſerts nothing, is out of danger of being deceived. Experience hath taught us, that the Condition of the laſt is beſt, and to be embraced of all Men, until the Day of Judgment comes. Theſe three Letters in all probability belong to the Year 418. or 419.

St. Auguſtine wrote the 200*dth*. Letter to Count Valerius, about his Books of Concupiſcence and Matrimony, which he ſent unto him after he had finiſhed them in 418.

The 201*ſt*. is an Order from the Emperors Honorius and Theodoſius, directed to Aurelius Biſhop of Carthage, whereby they enjoyn him, to let all the Biſhops know, that they muſt ſubſcribe the Condemnation of Pelagius and Cœleſtius, whom they had expelled out of Rome; and that as many as through impious obſtinacy ſhould refuſe to do it, ſhould be Deprived of their Dignities, Baniſhed for ever out of their Cities, and Excluded from the Communion of the Church. This Letter is dated the 8*th*. of June 419. At the latter end it is obſerved, that another like this was directed to St. Auguſtine, which ſhows, that the reſpect which the Emperors paid to the Dignity of the Church of Carthage, they paid likewiſe to the Merit and high Reputation of St. Auguſtine.

The 202*d*. is a Letter of St. Jerome's to Alypius and St. Auguſtine, expreſſing his joy for their Victory over Pelagius and Cœleſtius; and excuſing himſelf for not having yet refuted the Books of one Anianus, a Pelagian. It is the ſame Anianus who tranſlated ſome of St. Chryſoſtome's Homilies, and dedicated them to Orontius, a Pelagian Biſhop, condemned in the Council of Epheſus. Bede mentions a Letter of this Author directed to Evangelus, where he gives to thoſe of St. Auguſtine's Party the name of Traducians.

By the 203*d*. Letter, St. Auguſtine exhorteth Largus to deſpiſe the Goods of this Life, whereof he knew the Vanity by his own Experience, and to profit by the Miſchiefs that happened to him. This Largus was yet Proconſul in Africa in 419. This Letter ſeems to have been written in 420. after his being recalled.

In the 204*th*. to Dulcitius, St. Auguſtine ſhews, that he had already fully anſwered the Donatiſts, and laments the Fury of thoſe Wretches that murthered themſelves, when they could do the Catholicks no further harm. Upon this occaſion he treateth of Murther, and ſhows, that it is not lawful for a Man to kill himſelf, nor any other that was deſirous of Death; he anſwers the Caſe of Razias which is well told in the Maccabees, and was looked upon as a noble and generous Action, but not approved by him as Wiſe and Vertuous. This Letter was written in Gaudentius's time, and compoſed in 420.

The 205*th*. Letter to Conſentius, contains the Explication of ſome Difficulties about the Nature of glorified Bodies. Conſentius had asked St. Auguſtine, whether our Saviour's Body, hath now Fleſh and Bones, with the ſame parts and features which he had upon Earth. St. Auguſtine reſolveth this queſtion, ſaying, that Chriſt's Body is altogether ſuch in Heaven as it was upon Earth, when he left it to aſcend into Heaven, and that it appeareth by the Goſpel, that he had Hands and Feet, Fleſh and Bones, as well after as before the Reſurrection: That no mention is made of his Blood, and it is not convenient to engage too far in thoſe Matters, for fear of entring upon other very hard Queſtions, ſuch as theſe; If there is Blood, is not there alſo Phlegm, Choler, or Melancholy, ſince the mixture of theſe four Humours make up the Temper of Humane Bodies: Yet St. Auguſtine denieth not but that theſe Humours may be in glorified Bodies; but that we ought to have a care of believing them alterable and corruptible; whereupon he undertakes to ſhow by the Teſtimony of St. Paul, that glorified Bodies ſhall be incorruptible and freed from all corporeal and earthly qualities. Conſentius had asked likewiſe, whether thoſe that had been baptized and died without Penance for Sins committed after Baptiſm, ſhould obtain Remiſſion of them in a certain time. St. Auguſtine remits him to his Treatiſe of Faith and Good Works, where he had handled that Queſtion. Laſtly, Conſentius deſired to know, Whether God's breathing upon Adam was his Soul. St. Auguſtine anſwers, that it was either his Soul, or that which produced it; but we muſt be ſure not to believe that the Soul is any part of God. Conſentius to whom this Letter is written, is the ſame to whom St. Auguſtine dedicated his Treatiſe of Lying, compoſed in 420. It is probable, that, if this Letter be of the ſame time, it was written after his Book of Faith and Good Works, which was made in 413.

St. Auguſtine. Tome II.

St. Auguſtine Tome. II.

The 206*th*. is a Letter of Recommendation to Count Valerius in the behalf of Biſhop Felix.

The next, is that which St. Auguſtine writ to Biſhop Claudius, when he ſent him his Books againſt Julianus, publiſhed after St. Jerome's Death in 421.

In the 208*th*. St. Auguſtine exhorts the Virgin Felicia, newly returned to the Church from the Donatiſts, Party, and Scandalized by ſome Biſhops Diſorders; to continue always in the boſom of the Catholick Church, notwithſtanding all thoſe Scandals whereat ſhe was afflicted. And this gave occaſion to his Diſcourſe of Good and Evil Paſtors. It is thought, that the occaſion of this Letter, was the Scandal given by Antonius Biſhop of Fuſſala, mentioned in the following Letter, ſuppoſed to have been written in the end of the Year 422. but that is uncertain.

It is equally uncertain that the next Letter to Pope Cœleſtine is written by St. Auguſtine; ſome Criticks doubt it: (1.) Becauſe the Style of this Letter is not, as they pretend, perfectly like that of the other Letters of St. Auguſtine. (2.) Becauſe it is found but in one only Manuſcript of the Vatican Library, which is not above 200 Years old. (3.) Becauſe St. Auguſtine ſeems to ſpeak after a low Manner, and unworthy of his wonted Courage. (4.) Becauſe it ſeemeth not to agree with the Opinions of St. Auguſtine nor of the other Africans, about Appeals. (5.) Becauſe Cœleſtine could not threaten then to ſend Clerks into Africa, to ſee his Judgments executed, as he doth in this Letter; becauſe Affairs in Africa were then in great Diſorder, and the Emperors had not much Authority in thoſe Provinces that were Uſurp'd by a Tyrant. Yet it muſt be confeſſed, that this Letter agrees exceeding well to the Cuſtoms and Manners of the African Church in St. Auguſtine's time, and has a Character of Sincerity. However, If this Letter be truly St Auguſtine's, he writ it in the beginning of Cœleſtine's Pontificate, ſince he begins it with congratulating his Promotion, which was compaſſed without Intrigues or Diviſion. He ſpeaks afterwards of Antonius his Buſineſs, whom he had ordained Biſhop of Fuſſala, a Town in the Dioceſs of Hippo, where no Biſhop had been before. This Man was brought up in St. Auguſtine's Monaſtery, and looked upon by him as a Man of Great Probity: but ſeeing himſelf exalted to ſuch a Dignity, he gave way to his Paſſions, lived diſorderly, and greatly vexed the People that were under his Juriſdiction: being accuſed before the Provincial Council, he could not be convicted of the Sin of Uncleanneſs that was laid to his Charge; but it appeared that he had oppreſſed and tyrannized over the People intolerably: Thus the Judges finding not ſufficient Cauſe utterly to deprive him, and being withal unwilling his Fault ſhould paſs without Puniſhment, left him the quality of Biſhop, upon condition that he ſhould not perform the Functions thereof, nor have any Authority over a People whom he had uſed ſo unjuſtly.

To hinder the Execution of this Judgment, Antonius appealed to the Pope, who pretended a Right to receive Appeals from the Judgments of the African Biſhops, though theſe conteſted his Right. This happened at a time, when they had bound themſelves to ſee the Canons of the Council of Sardica which the Pope had alledged, as the Canons of the Council of Nice, executed with this Proviſo, till they were aſſured that they were actually made by the Council of Nice. Antonius therefore obtained of Boniface a Letter, enjoyning that he ſhould be reſtored, if he had truly ſtated his Caſe. He returned triumphing with that Letter. But the African Biſhops regarded it not: And being threatned, that the Civil Authority ſhould be made uſe of to make them obſerve the Pope's Orders, St. Auguſtine took upon himſelf to write this Letter to Cœleſtine, wherein he intreateth him by the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, and by St. Peter's Memory, who forbad the Paſtors of the Church to exerciſe Dominion; not to ſuffer things to go to that extremity: telling him, that his Heart was ſo ſet upon that Buſineſs, that he would renounce his Biſhoprick, if Antonius was reſtored at Fuſſala. He was not reſtored; and we learn by the 224*th* Letter, that his Dioceſs was immediately dependant upon St. Auguſtine, though afterwards we meet with a Biſhop of that place.

Antonius flattered himſelf with theſe hopes, either that they would have degraded him from the Epiſcopal Dignity, or have left him in the Biſhoprick. St. Auguſtine affirms on the contrary, that there are Examples of Judgments given, or approved by the Holy Apoſtolick See, whereby Biſhops were Puniſhed, without being abſolutely degraded: He citeth three of the lateſt; that of Priſcus Biſhop of the Province of Mauritania Cæſarienſis, who was ſuffered to continue in his Biſhoprick, being only barr'd from the Metropolitan Dignity, to which his Seniority might have promoted him in his Turn; that of Victor, Biſhop of the ſame Province, who was likewiſe excluded the Right of Primacy, and with whom no other Biſhop did communicate in his Dioceſs; and that of Biſhop Laurentius, with whom they proceeded as they had done with Antonius of Fuſſala. St. Auguſtine might have alledged beſides, thoſe Canons which allow to Biſhops the Rank and Honour of their Dignity, and yet deprive them both of the Function and Juriſdiction.

St. Auguſtine. Tome II.

In the 210*th*. Letter St. Auguſtine inſtructeth Felicitas and Ruſticus how the Evils of this Life are to be endured, and gives them Rules for brotherly Correction. It is probable, that the occaſion of Writing upon this Subject, was the Diſſention which happened among the Virgins conſecrated to God, ſpoken of in the following Letter, about their Superior, whom the Nuns deſigned to change. St. Auguſtine having reproved them for it, and exhorted them to Peace and Obedience, preſcribeth them a moſt wiſe and prudent Rule of Life. This Letter was written after the Death of St. Auguſtine's Siſter, who governed that Monaſtery at the time when moſt of the Donatiſts were re-united, in 424.

The 212*th*. is a Letter of Recommendation to Quintianus, in the behalf of an holy Widow named Galla, and of her Daughter Simpliciola, who carried about with them the Relicks of the Martyr St. Stephen.

After this Letter, comes the Act made at Hippo, upon the 14*th*. of September, 426. in the Church of Peace: whereby St. Auguſtine chuſeth Heraclius the Prieſt to be his Succeſſor and Coadjutor, yet without admitting him into Biſhop's Orders; and the People approve his Choice with their Acclamations.

The Occaſion of the 214*th*. Letter is this: St. Auguſtine having been informed by two Brethren of the Monaſtery at Adrumetum, that there had been ſome Diſputes among the Monks of that Convent, about Grace and Free-Will; becauſe, ſome willing to eſtabliſh the Doctrine of Grace, went ſo far as to deny Free-Will: whereas the others acknowledging Free-Will, did confeſs notwithſtanding, that it was aſſiſted by the help of the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt; approves of the latter Opinion; affirming, that he taught no other Doctrine, in his Letter to Saint Sixtus.

He again handleth the ſame Matter in the next Letter, directed to Valentinus, Abbot of the Monaſtery at Adrumetum, and to the Brethren of the ſame Monaſtery. He joined to this Letter his Book of Grace and Free-Will, which he ſent at the ſame time to inſtruct them.

Valentinus anſwered St. Auguſtine in the 216*th*. Letter: wherein, after he had thank'd him for his Letters, he gives him an Account how that Diſturbance happened in his Monaſtery, by the Imprudence of five or ſix that were offended at thoſe Diſcourſes of St. Auguſtine, which Florus had brought from Uzala to their Convent. That Evodius, Biſhop of Uzala, not being able to ſatisfie them, they came to him: that this Viſit had produced a good Effect, ſeeing it brought to their Monaſtery ſuch holy Inſtructions as his were, and had confirmed them in their Belief touching Grace and Free-Will. Theſe Letters are of the Year 426.

The 217*th*. Letter of St. Auguſtine is written to Vitalis, to undeceive him of thoſe Notions which he had then taken up; namely, that the Beginning of Faith was not a Gift of God, but the mere Product of Man's Will. St. Auguſtine refutes this Opinion, by the Prayers of the Church; by St. Cyprian's Teſtimony, in his Book of The Lord's Prayer; and by ſeveral other Paſſages of Scripture. Afterwards he explains the difference betwixt the Law and Grace; proving, that the true Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, doth not conſiſt in Natural Helps, or in External Graces. At laſt he propoſes twelve Articles; wherein he comprehends whatſoever he thinks neceſſary to be believed concerning Grace. The twelve Articles are theſe:

'I. We know, That before Men were born into this 'World, they had no other State wherein they did either 'Good or Evil...But deſcending from Adam according to the 'Fleſh, they partake, by their Birth, of the Poyſon of that 'ancient Death which he became ſubject to by his Sin; and 'that they are not delivered from Eternal Death, except 'they are regenerated in Jeſus Chriſt through his Grace.

'II. We know, That the Grace of God is not given upon 'the account of any Merit, either to Infants, or to Men that 'are come to the Age of Reaſon.

'III. We know, That Grace is an Aſſiſtance afforded 'for every Action, to thoſe that have attained to the Age 'of Reaſon.

'IV. We know, That it is not given to all Men; and 'that thoſe to whom it is given, receive it, without having 'deſerved it by their Works, or by their Will; which ap'pears particularly in Infants.

'V. We know, That it is out of God's mere Mercy, that it is given to thoſe to whom it is given.

'VI. We know, That it is by a juſt Judgment of God, 'that it is not given to thoſe to whom it is not given.

'VII. We

St. Auguſtine. Tome II.

'VII. We know, That we ſhall all appear before the 'Judgment-Seat of Jeſus Chriſt, that every one may receive 'either Reward or Puniſhment according to what he ſhall 'have done in the Body, and not according to what he 'ſhould have done had he lived longer.

'VIII. We know, That Infants ſhall not receive Re'compence or Puniſhment, but according to what they 'ſhall have done in the Body; that is, whilſt they were in 'the Body; that is, according as ſome have been regene'rate, and others not.

'IX. We know, That Eternal Happineſs is enſured to 'all thoſe that die in Jeſus Chriſt; and that nothing is im'puted to them of what they might have done, had they 'been alive.

'X. We know, That as many as Believe in God, Be'lieve willingly, and by an Action of their Free-Will.

'XI. We know, That we ought to pray unto God for 'thoſe that Believe not, that they would Believe.

'XII. We know, That whenſoever any of theſe em'braces the Faith, we are to give God Thanks ſincerely, 'and from the bottom of our Hearts, as being an Effect 'of his Mercy, and that when we do it as we are wont 'to do, we perform a Duty incumbent upon us'.

Theſe are the twelve fundamental Points of St. Auguſtine's Doctrine of Grace; to the which he reſtrains the Faith of the Catholick Church about that Matter. He applieth them likewiſe to his particular Diſpute with Vitalis, to know whether Grace goes before, or only followeth the Will; that is, Whether Grace be given us, becauſe we will have it? as Vitalis affirms: Or Whether the Will it ſelf is not a thing which God worketh in us by his Grace? as St. Auguſtine pretends that it followeth upon the Twelve Principles which he lays down. To ſhew this, the reſt of this Letter is taken up; wherein he concludes, that the Beginning of Faith, Converſion, and a good Mind, comes from God, and not from Free-Will. This Letter, in all probability, is one of the laſt of St. Auguſtine's Works concerning Grace.

In the 218*th*. Letter St. Auguſtine exhorts one Palatinus to perſevere and to proceed in Piety, and not to truſt to his own Strength. This likewiſe is one of the laſt of St. Auguſtine's Letters.

The 219*th*. is a Letter written in the Names of Aurelius, St. Auguſtine and Florentius, Biſhops in Africa, to Proculus and Cilinnius, Biſhops in Gaul, concerning Leporius the Monk; who having been expelled out of the Dioceſs of Marſeilles, becauſe of his Errors about the Incarnation, made a Retractation of them in Africa; which was drawn up by St. Auguſtine, and ſent to the Gallican Biſhops with this Letter; whereby they intreat the Biſhops to whom they write, to receive him, ſeeing he had condemned thoſe Errors for which they had expelled him. This Letter was written after the Books of Correction and Grace.

The 220*th*. is directed to Count Boniface; who being married again after the Death of his former Wife, was engaged in worldly Buſineſſes, and had committed very conſiderable Faults. St. Auguſtine adviſeth him by this Letter, to Contain, if he could perſuade his Wife to conſent to it; and to make uſe of his Authority, only to do Good. This Letter is full of excellent Inſtructions for Men of the World.

Quodvultdeus, a Deacon of Carthage, deſireth St. Auguſtine, by the 221*ſt*. Letter, to draw up a Catalogue of Hereſies. St. Auguſtine excuſes himſelf from doing it, in the 222*d*. The Deacon having again urged it by the 223*d*. he promiſes him in the 224*th*. to do it when he is at leiſure. Theſe Letters were written after his Book of Retractations, in 428.

The 225*th*. Letter is St. Proſper's; whereby he gives St. Auguſtine notice, that ſeveral Chriſtians of Marſeilles having ſeen his Works againſt the Pelagians, had believed, that what he taught concerning the Vocation of the Elect, was contrary to the Doctrine of the Fathers; and that they were more averſe to his Notions, when they had read his Book of Correction and Grace. Then he relateth their Opinions, and ſaith, (1.) 'That they indeed acknowledge that 'all Men have ſinned in Adam; and that our Salvation is 'not the Product of our Works, but of Grace, that works 'the ſame by the means of Regeneration: But they hold, 'That the Propitiation made by the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, 'is offered to all Men without Exception; ſo that as many 'as will embrace the Faith, and be Baptized, may obtain 'Salvation. (2.) That before the Creation, God, by his 'Fore-knowledge, did know thoſe that ſhould Believe, and 'who with the ſuccour of that Grace enabling them to 'preſerve that Faith which they had once embraced, ſhould 'maintain the ſame unto the end; and that he had predeſti'nated them to his Eternal Kingdom, foreſeeing that after 'he had freely called them, they would make themſelves 'worthy of his Election, and end their Life holily. (3.) That 'God calls all Men to the Faith, and to good Works, by 'his Inſtructions; and that Salvation is the Reward of 'thoſe that are willing to do Good. (4.) That whatſoever 'is ſaid of the Decree of God's Will, touching the Call 'of Men, whereby it is ſaid, that the Elect have been ſepa'rated from the Reprobate, is fit for nothing but to inſpire 'Men with Deſpondency, Idleneſs, Negligence and Luke'warmneſs; becauſe it ſeems to no purpoſe to work, if 'the Reprobate cannot be ſaved, nor the Elect be damned. '(5.) That thereby all Vertues are deſtroyed. (6.) That 'this Doctrine doth eſtabliſh, under the Name of Predeſti'nation, a fatal and unavoidable Neceſſity, or forceth Men 'to ſay that Mankind were created of different Natures. '(7.) That what is alledged out of the Epiſtle to the Ro'mans, to prove, that Grace doth prevent the Merits of 'the Elect, was never underſtood in this Senſe by any Ec'cleſiaſtical Author. (8.) That ſome reduce that Grace 'which prevents our Merits, to the natural Faculties of 'Free-Will, and of Reaſon; by the good Uſe whereof we 'arrive to that Grace which makes us to be regenerated in 'Jeſus Chriſt. (9.) That God hath indeed reſolved to 'communicate his Grace only to thoſe that are Regene'rate; but that all are called to partake of that ſaving Gift, 'whether it be by the Natural Law, or by the Preaching 'of the Goſpel. (10.) That Men are as much diſpoſed to 'Good as Evil: That the Spirit and the Will may equal'ly turn to Evil; and, that Obedience or Diſobedience to 'God's Command, wholly depends upon our Liberty. '(11.) That Infants dying before the Uſe of Reaſon, are 'either ſaved or damned, according to what God foreſees 'that they would have been, had they come to the Age of 'Acting and Deſerving. (12) That the ſame is to be ſaid 'of the Nations which God hath not enlightned with the 'Light that is neceſſary to Salvation'. Theſe are moſt of the Points of the Semipelagians Doctrine, and of the Objections which they made againſt that of St. Auguſtine. St. Proſper intreateth him by this Letter to refute theſe Perſons Opinions, and to clear the Difficulties propoſed by them, telling him, that Hilary Biſhop of Arles, a conſiderable Man, and much addicted to the Study of Spiritual and Eccleſiaſtical Matters; and who did much admire and approve St. Auguſtine's Doctrine in all other things, could not reliſh his Principles about the Decree of the Vocation of the Elect.

St. Auguſtine. Tome II.

This is not that Hilary, who had been St. Auguſtine's Diſciple, who writ at the ſame time with Proſper to St. Auguſtine upon the ſame Subject.

This Letter is the 226*th*. therein he gives a more particular Account than St. Proſper had done, of thoſe Points of St. Auguſtine's Doctrine, that diſturbed the Prieſts of Marſeilles, of the Objections which they made, and of their Anſwers to thoſe Paſſages of Scripture that were quoted by St. Auguſtine; which may be all reduced to theſe four Propoſitions. 1. That Man may believe, and deſire to be healed, by the ſtrength of his own Free-Will. 2. That when he is gone ſo far, God never denieth him his Grace. 3. That Election and Reprobation are Conſequences of God's Preſcience, whereby he ſees the Good or the Evil which Men ſhall do, or ſhould have done if they had lived. 4. That Grace is not effectual of it ſelf, and what help ſoever God affords to thoſe that are Predeſtinated; it is ſtill in their own Power either to make uſe of, or to reject it. Both theſe Letters were written in 429. after Hilary's Promotion to the Biſhoprick of Arles. St. Auguſtine anſwered them by his Books of the Predeſtination of the Saints, and of the Gift of Perſeverance.

The 227*th*. to the holy old Man Alypius, is written upon the Converſion of two Pagans who had been baptized at Eaſter; the Name of the one, was Gabinianus; the other was a Phyſician called Dioſcorus, for whom God had wrought ſeveral Miracles, related by St. Auguſtine in this Letter. It is here placed among thoſe that were written in 429. but the Date of it is uncertain.

The Date of the next to Honoratus is certain by Poſſidius's Teſtimony, who quotes it in the Life of St. Auguſtine; and affirms, that he writ it about the latter end of his Life; when the Vandals were almoſt Maſters of Africa. He examines the Queſtion in this Letter, Whether Prieſts, Clerks, and Biſhops, may fly and forſake their Flocks in time of Perſecution? St. Auguſtine affirms, that there are but two Occaſions upon which they are permitted ſo to do. 1. If the Perſecutors deſigned Miſchief to ſome particular Paſtors by name, becauſe then it is profitable, even for the Good of the Church, for them to flee, and leave the others quiet. 2. When the Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt meet with none that have need of their Miniſtry. In all other Caſes, Paſtors are obliged to watch over the Flock which Chriſt hath committed to them; neither can they forſake it without a Crime. This St. Auguſtine excellently proves in this Letter, and in Terms dictated by the Fire of his fervent Charity, and with Reaſons ſupported by a Zeal altogether Divine. He repreſents the Deſolation of a Town which is like to be taken; and the Neceſſity of the preſence of Chriſt's Miniſters. 'In ſuch occaſions, ſaith he, What flocking is there 'to the Church of Perſons of all Ages and Sexes; where'of, ſome require Baptiſm, others Reconciliation, others to 'be put under Penance, and all crave Comfort. If then no 'Miniſters are to be found, what misfortune is that for ſuch 'as go out of this Life, being Unregenerate, or not looſed? 'What Grief is it to their Kindred, if they be Faithful, that 'they cannot hope to ſee them in everlaſting reſt? What

St. Auguſtine. Tome II.

'Crys, what Lamentations, nay, what Imprecations from 'ſome, to ſee themſelves without Miniſters, and without 'Sacraments? If on the contrary, Miniſters have proved 'Faithful, in not forſaking their People; they are help-'ful to all the World, according to the Abilities which it 'hath pleaſed God to endue them with; Some are bap-'tized, others are reconciled; none is deprived of the Com-'munion of the Lord's-Body. All are comforted, fortified, 'and exhorted to implore by fervent Prayers, the Aſſiſtance 'of the Mercy of God.' This paſſage is very remarkable, ſince it ſhews what was the Church's Opinion at all times concerning the neceſſity of the Sacraments.

St. Auguſtine handleth two other Queſtions upon the ſame Subject: The firſt, Whether it be lawful for Paſtors to flee in ſuch Calamities, that they may preſerve themſelves for the Service of the Church in more peaceable times. He ſaith, That they may do it if there be other Miniſters, to ſupply their places, and who are neceſſary to the Church. The ſecond, if it happens that the Perſecution were only againſt the Paſtors, in this caſe they may flee; and whether is it better that the Church ſhould want them by their going away, or be deprived of them by their Death? St. Auguſtine anſwers, That this ſuppoſition is very extraordinary; That it ſeldom happens, that they aim only at Church-men; that in this caſe they might hide themſelves. It is to be preſumed, that as all the Laity ſhall not periſh, ſo ſome of the Clergy may eſcape. That it were to be wiſhed, that on ſuch occaſions ſome ſhould fly, and others remain; then it would be a fine thing, if among Miniſters there ſhould be a Diſpute, who ſhould ſtay behind, that the Church might not be forſaken. That to decide this Difference, it ſhould be convenient to caſt Lots, that none might go about to free himſelf from the neceſſity of ſtaying under pretence of being more neceſſary for the Church than others.

He concludes with theſe Words, We do what Jeſus Chriſt, either Permits or Commands, if we withdraw when there are other Miniſters to ſerve the Church. But when by our flight Chriſt's Sheep are deprived of the Food that is to ſuſtain the Life of their Souls, then we are Hirelings.

St. Auguſtine. Tome II.

The 229*th*. Letter is directed to Count Darius, who was ſent into Africa to treat of Peace. St. Auguſtine wiſhes him Joy of that Employ. The Count gives him Thanks by the 230*th*. Letter, and prayeth him to ſend him his Book of Confeſſions. This Saint ſatisfies him by the 131*ſt*. Letter, wherein he treateth occaſionally of the love of Praiſe. He ſaith thereupon, (1.) That Men ought not to deſire Praiſes for that which is not praiſe-worthy in them. (2.) That they ſhould not propoſe to themſelves as the end of their good Actions, to get Commendations from Men. (3.) Yet they may deſire the Praiſes of Men, for the ſake of thoſe very Men, becauſe the Praiſes given to them, are profitable for others. (4) That ſuch as find not in themſelves thoſe Vertues for which they are commended, ought to be aſhamed that they are not what they are thought to be, and what they ſhould be indeed; and this may make them deſire to become ſuch. (5.) That on the contrary, if there be in them ſomething of that which is commended, they are to give God Thanks for it, and be glad to ſee that others have an eſteem for Vertue. Towards the end of the Letter, he ſpeaks of Proſperity and Adverſity. The Careſſes, ſaith he, of this World are more dangerous than its Perſecutions, unleſs we look upon the Reſt which we may enjoy here, as a means to make us lead a quiet and a peaceable Life in all Godlineſs and Honeſty. This the Apoſtle commands us to ask of God: for if the Heart be not full of Charity and Piety, reſt and eaſe from the troubles of Life is but Perdition: and ſerves only as an Inſtrument or Provocation to Luſt. If therefore we deſire to lead a quiet Life, let it be only upon this account, that we may the better practiſe both Piety and Charity. Theſe Letters are ſuppoſed to have been written about the latter end of St. Auguſtine's Life.

The fourth Claſſe.

THe Laſt Claſſe of St. Auguſtine's Epiſtles, containeth thoſe whoſe Date is not well known.

The firſt of theſe is the 232*d*. Letter, in Anſwer to the Inhabitants of Mandaura, whereof the greater Part were yet Idolaters. He exhorts them to embrace the Chriſtian Religion; and to induce them to it, he mentions the dreadfulneſs of the laſt Judgment, which he proves ſhall infallibly come, becauſe the other Prophecies are fulfilled: He alſo ſaith ſomething concerning the Myſtery of the Trinity, and that of the Incarnation. This Letter was probably written ſome time after the Edict Publiſhed by Honorius in the Year 399. againſt the Temples.

The 233*d*. Letter, is a Challenge from St. Auguſtine to a Philoſopher, one Longinianus, to oblige him to give an account in Writing after what manner he believed that God was to be Worſhipped; and what he thought of Jeſus Chriſt. Longinianus anſwers St. Auguſtine in the 234*th*. Letter; and ſaith, according to Plato's Principles, that the way to come to God, is to live well, and to get the Favour of the inferiour Gods by Propitiatory Sacrifices, that we may come to the Supreme Creator. As for Jeſus Chriſt, he anſwereth, That he can ſay nothing of him, becauſe he knew him not.

St. Auguſtine deſireth Longinianus to explain himſelf about what he had ſaid, that the way to come to God was to live well, and to purifie our ſelves by Expiations and Sacrifices; he asketh him, whether it be the ſame Thing, or two different Things. This is in the 235*th*. Letter.

By the 236*th*. he gives Deuterius notice, That he had degraded and expelled a Deacon, one Victorinus, convicted of being a Manichee, though he was but a Hearer among them, and not one of thoſe they call Elect. He ſpeaks of the difference which they make betwixt thoſe two ſort of Perſons; and he ſpeaks of their principal Errors.

In the 237*th* Letter, he oppoſes the Dreams of the Manichees, and Priſcillianiſts, concerning the Apocryphal Books; and ridicules the phantaſtical Interpretations which they made of the Canonical Books.

The 238*th*. is a Relation of a Conference that St. Auguſtine had about the Myſtery of the Trinity, with an Arian, called Paſcentius. The three following Letters directed to this Arian, carry on the ſame Diſpute.

The 242*d*. is alſo written to Elpidius, an Arian, to whom he ſheweth, that the Son of God is equal to his Father.

In the 243*d*. St. Auguſtine exhorts Lætus, who having quitted the World, was tempted to return to it: He exhorts him, I ſay, to perſevere in his former Reſolution; and not to ſuffer his tenderneſs for his Relations, to weaken his Courage. He ſhews, in this Letter, that the renouncing of all things to follow Chriſt, ought to proceed ſo far, as to leave Father and Mother, to ſerve God.

The 244*th*. is a Letter of Conſolation to Chryſinus, for a Loſs which he had ſuſtained.

In the 245*th*. to Poſſidius. St. Auguſtine ſpeaks with great moderation, of Womens Dreſſes: He thinks, that fine Cloaths ought not to be forbidden to Married Women, who are obliged to pleaſe their Husbands; but he would not have them Paint, or Waſh, to make them appear fairer, or freſher, becauſe it is not probable, that their Husbands ſhould deſire to be thus deceived; for the true Ornament of Chriſtians of both Sexes, is neither deceitful Painting, nor Gold, nor precious Stuffs, but Purity of Manners. Laſtly, he prohibits thoſe Superſtitious Dreſſings, which they uſed to render a kind of Homage to Dæmons. He tells Poſſidius, that he would not adviſe him to ordain a Man that had been Baptized among the Donatiſts.

The 246*th*. Letter to Lampadius, is againſt thoſe who accuſe Fate for the Faults which they commit themſelves.

By the 247*th*. Letter, St. Auguſtine reproves one Romulus a Rich Man, that would make his Debtors to pay twice; pretending, that they had pay'd his Receiver in his Wrong.

The 248*th*. to Sebaſtianus, is concerning that Sorrow which affects the Righteous, becauſe of the Impiety of the Wicked.

In the 249*th*. St. Auguſtine Comforteth Reſtitutus the Deacon, who could hardly bear with the Diſorders of ill Chriſtians; and inſtructs him to keep Peace with the Wicked.

The 250*th*. Letter is very conſiderable. There St. Auguſtine reſolveth a very nice Queſtion: whether a whole Family, or Community, may be Excommunicated for the Sin of one Member. It is directed to a young Biſhop called Auxilius, who had Excommunicated one Claſſianus, with his whole Family, becauſe he came to the Church to demand certain Perſons who had taken Sanctuary there, after he had by a falſe Oath, prophaned the Sanctity of the Goſpel. He asketh that Biſhop what Reaſon he could have for ſo doing, and how the Son can be excommunicated for the Father's Sin, the Wife for her Husband's, and the Servant for his Maſter's, yea the Children that are yet unborn: Excommunication being not a puniſhment which falls upon the Body, but an effect of the power given to Chriſt's Miniſters, to bind and to looſe, which properly concerns the Soul. St. Auguſtine confeſſeth, that this Biſhop might ground his proceeding upon the Example of ſome great Biſhops, who had Anathematized whole Families, for one particular Perſon's Sin. But he affirms, that they could hardly juſtifie their Action, and that he never durſt do it himſelf. Yet he addeth, rather in Jeſt, than in Earneſt, that he is ready to hear his Reaſons, 'Your Youth (ſaith he) and the 'ſhortneſs of the Time that you have been a Biſhop, will 'not hinder me from hearing your Reaſons. I am ready 'to learn of you, how young ſoever you be; though the 'Gray Hairs that I wear, and all the Experience I may 'have got by thoſe many Years that I have been a Biſhop, 'give me ſome ſmall Authority over you.' After that, he Aggravates the Injuſtice of that Pretence which might prove the loſs of a Soul for want of Baptiſm, through the Impoſſibility to which the Sentence of Excommunication reduced thoſe that were excommunicated, from having Recourſe, course to the Sacraments. Wherefore he exhorteth Auxilius to revoke a Sentence, wherein Anger had a greater share than Justice; and so much the rather, because he, against whom it was pronounced, had no ways deserved it.

St. Augustine. Tome III.

In the next Letter, St. Augustine sendeth Word to Classicianus, That he will propose that Question in Council: that he was much concerned at Auxilius his Behaviour, especially because it might happen, that some might die without Baptism; that he will also cause to be examined there if need be, this Question; whether those ought not to be Excommunicated who deal unfaithfully with their Securities? and, that if it should be requisite, he would write to the See of Rome, about it, that so what was to be done on such Occasions, might be settled with general Consent. But he sticks not to affirm, 'That an unjust Excommunica-'tion is of greater Prejudice to him that pronounces it, than 'to him against whom it is pronounced; forasmuch as the 'the Holy Ghost, who dwelleth in the Saints, never puts 'any to Pain who deserves it not: For if Charity is neither 'rash, nor hasty, what shall we say of him that diffuseth it 'into our Hearts?'

The 251*st.* Letter was written by St. Augustine to Pancarius, concerning one Secundinus a Priest, that was accused before him. He tells Pancarius, that he will receive the Accusations of Catholicks, but not of Hereticks; and prays him not to suffer any Disorder to be committed in that Priest's House.

The four following Letters were written about a Virgin that was an Orphan, who was committed to the Church's Trust. St. Augustine declares, in these Letters, that he takes all the care of her that may be; and that he will not marry her, without her Consent, to a Catholick; and that he was looking out for an advantageous Match for her.

The 256*th.* is an Answer of St. Augustine's to Christinus, who desired, that he would write to him, to exhort him to give himself to God.

The 257*th.* is a Letter of Compliment to Orontius.

In the 258*th.* he congratulates Martianus for being a Catechumen, exhorting him speedily to receive Baptism.

The 259*th.* was written to reclaim a very lewd Man, one Cornelius, from his evil Way; and adviseth him to imitate his Wife, who lately deceased; upon whom St. Augustine promiseth to write a Panegyrick, if he will follow her Vertue.

By the next, Audax desireth St. Augustine to write longer than he used to do, and concludes with four Verses in his Commendation. St. Augustine excuseth himself for his great Business, advising him to read his Works, and to come and see him. That's the Subject of the 261*st.* Letter.

In the 262*d.* St. Augustine reproves one Ecdicia, a Lady severely; who (unknown to her Husband, whom she had brought to consent to live in Continence with her) had distributed his whole Estate to the Poor, and put on a Widow's Habit. He enjoyns her to make her Husband Satisfaction; who out of Anger for his Wife's Behaviour, lived disorderly. This Letter is full of excellent Instructions for married Wives, teaching them not to give their Husbands any occasion of Discontent, by indiscreet Devotion.

The 263*d.* is a Letter of Consolation to Sapida; who having wrought a Garment for her Brother Timothy, and he dying, desired, for her Comfort, that St. Augustine would wear it. St. Augustine thanks her; but wishes her to seek in the Scripture some more solid Consolations.

In the 264*th.* he comforteth a Lady called Maxima, who beheld with Grief, and Disturbance, her Country infected with Errors.

The 265*th.* to Seleuciana, is a Refutation of the Enthusiastical Notions of a certain Novatian, concerning Baptism, and St. Peter's Repentance. He affirmeth, in the First Place, That St. Peter was Baptized as well as the other Apostles: That it is an Error to say, that he had not received the Baptism of Water before his Sin, though he had not yet received the Baptism of the Holy Ghost; yea, he thinks it probable, That the Apostles were Baptized by Christ himself. He saith, Secondly, That when it is said, that St. Peter did Penance, we are not to think that he did as they do in the Church, who are properly called Penitents. Thirdly he distinguishes two sorts of Penance, that which goeth before Baptism, and that which cometh after; when after Baptism Men have committed any of those Sins, for which they ought to be excommunicated, and cut off from the Altar, after which they are reconciled if they deserve it: And this sort is the Penance of those to whom is properly given in the Church, the Name of Penitents. Besides these two sorts, they admit also a daily Penance of those very Faithful that live in Piety and Humility; whereby they petition, and obtain the forgiveness of Light, but Customary Sins, which Human Frailty makes us fall into; and which, saith he, we ought to expiate continually, lest we be over-whelmed with their Number.

St. Augustine. Tome III.

In the 266*th.* Letter, St. Augustine offers to Florentina, a Virgin, to explain all the Difficulties which she should desire to have cleared.

The 267*th.* is a Pious Letter to Fabiola; wherein he rejoyceth, because she bore the Exile of this Life with difficulty.

St. Augustine having borrowed a Sum of Money to pay the debt of one Fascius, who retired into the Church, being pursued by his Creditors; intreateth his People in the 268*th.* Letter, to make a Gathering, that might repay that Sum.

By the 269*th.* St. Augustine intreateth Bishop Nobilius to excuse him, because he could not be present at the Consecration of a new Church, to which that Bishop had invited him.

The last, is a Letter directed to St. Augustine, but the Author of it is not known. By it, he that wrote it, complaineth to St. Augustine, that he had not met him with Bishop Severus in the City of Leges, where he hoped to find him.

To these Letters, we ought to add the Fragment of a Letter of St. Augustine to Maximus, which the Benedictines have taken out of Primasius his Commentary upon the Revelations, and placed at the latter end of the second Tome in their Edition. This Fragment contains several Rules concerning the degrees of Christian Perfection.

It is manifest by these Extracts from St. Augustine's Letters, that they are an inexhaustible Spring of Principles, Rules, Precepts and Maxims upon the Articles of our Faith, and the Discipline of the Church upon Christian Morals, and the Government of Life: for which Reason, I insisted the longer upon them, and drew the Extracts at large, there being hardly one that deserves not particular Attention, and where there is not some fine stroke to be taken notice of. I intend to discourse more briefly of the rest of this Father's Works.

The Addition of Spurious Pieces annexed to this Volume, is not very large.

There are at first thirteen Letters or Notes under the Names of St. Augustine, to Boniface, and of Boniface to St. Augustine; containing several Passages taken out of St. Augustine's Genuine Letters, and several things may be observed, which do not agree with the History of that time: They are composed by one who had a mind to exercise his Pen with that Fiction.

We need not speak here of Pelagius his Letter to Demetrias, which is after these to Boniface.

The two next, whereof the one is intitled, St. Cyril of Jerusalem's Letter to St. Augustine concerning the Virtues of St. Jerome: And the other, St. Augustine's Answer to St. Cyril about St. Jerome's Miracles; discover their Imposture by their very Title, as is observed in another place; since St. Cyril of Jerusalem died long before St. Jerome.

Lastly, St. Augustine's Dispute with Pascentius, that was formerly placed among the Letters, Number 178. is very rightly placed by the Benedictines among the spurious Books. It is certain by the 238*th.* Letter, that St. Augustine had a Conference with Pascentius; but nothing like that which is mentioned in this Letter. For he observes, 1. That he could not obtain, that what was said on both sides, should be commited to Writing, but every thing is written in this Conference and inserted in the Publick Acts. In the former, no body Presided; in this there is a Judge called Laurentius. That whereof St. Augustine speaks, was held at Carthage; this is supposed to have been at Hippo. Both Possidius and St. Augustine mention one Conference with Pascentius; but this supposeth that they had had a Dispute before. The Character of both the Persons introduced speaking in this, is nothing like either St. Augustine's or Pascentius's. This is but a cold Dispute, and there is little said to the purpose. The Answers made for St. Augustine are weak, and the Objections attributed to Pascentius have nothing of that Fire and Rage which Possidius taxeth him with. The Style of those Answers supposed to be St. Augustine's, comes not near that of this Saint, either in his Letters or in his Conferences. There are Terms, and manners of Expression, which he never used, and which do not belong to that Time. In a word, this Treatise is found in no Manuscripts annexed to St. Augustine's Works or Letters. These Reasons sufficiently prove, that this Work is not a Conference which St. Augustine really had with Pascentius, but a Dialogue composed by some other Author. Now we know none to whom it may be more properly ascribed, than to Vigilius Tapsensis, who composed several Dialogues of that sort, under the Names of several great Men.

The third TOME.

St. Auguſtine. Tome III.

THe third Tome of the new Edition of St. Auguſtine, containeth his Treatiſes upon the Holy Scripture, which in the former Editions were diſperſed in other Volumes.

The Benedictines have placed the Books of Chriſtian Doctrine firſt, which may ſerve inſtead of a Preface to St. Auguſtine's Commentaries upon the Holy Scripture; becauſe they contain ſuch Precepts and Rules as he thought were to be obſerved, both for the underſtanding and the explaining of the Scriptures. He began this Work ſoon after he was Conſecrated, about the Year 397. but he ſtop'd at the 36*th*. Chapter of the third Book; and afterwards added the reſt of this Book with the fourth in 426. as he ſays himſelf in his Retractations; where he makes two Remarks upon that Work. 1. That it is not certain, as he affirmed. That the Wiſdom of Solomon was written by Jeſus the Son of Syrach, the Author of Eccleſiaſticus. 2. That when he ſaith, that the Old Teſtament containeth 44 Books, he uſed that Word in the ſenſe of the Church; though St. Paul ſeems to underſtand by the Old Teſtament no more than the Law given upon Mount Sinai; He confeſſeth likewiſe, that he committed a Fault of memory, in quoting one of St. Ambroſe's Books for another.

In the Preface to this Work, he anſwereth three ſorts of Perſons who might find Fault with it; Some, becauſe they did not underſtand it; Others, becauſe they could not make uſe of the Precepts and Rules which he gives to underſtand, and to expound the Scripture; and the laſt, becauſe they underſtand and expound the Holy Scripture without making uſe of his Rules, only by the light of the Holy Ghoſt. He tells the firſt and ſecond, that it is not his fault if they want Underſtanding or Light. And the third, that they ought not to Judge of others by themſelves, ſince God hath not granted the ſame Gifts to all Men: and that we ſhould tempt him, if we neglected thoſe Human Means which God affords us to underſtand the Holy Scripture, under pretence that he can give us that knowledge, without either Study or Labour.

The Deſign of this Book is, as we have obſerved, to give Rules and Precepts, both to underſtand and to explain the Holy Scripture. Theſe two divide the whole Work. He treateth in the three firſt Books of the underſtanding of the Scripture; and in the laſt, of the way to expound it, and make it intelligible to others.

The firſt Book contains looſe Reflections and general Principles. He obſerves at firſt, that all knowledge is either of Signs or of Things; and that Things are expreſſed by Signs. He diſtinguiſheth two ſorts of Things; ſome which we may enjoy, and others which we are only to uſe. The three Perſons of the Divinity, are the only Things we are to enjoy. They are that ineffable God, whom we look upon as the Supreme Being, as the immutable Wiſdom to be preferred before all Things; to know him, we muſt purifie our Minds: and to teach us this, the Wiſdom of God was incarnate; it is that which Cures Man of his Diſtempers, Weakneſſes, and Blindneſs. He confirmed our Faith by his Reſurrection and Aſcenſion; and he increaſes and upholdeth it by the hope of Reward, the fear of Puniſhment, and by the expectation of the laſt Judgment. He hath eſtabliſhed a Church, to which he hath granted neceſſary Gifts and Graces to lead Men to their Heavenly Country. He gave it Keys to bind Sinners, and to looſe them that are Penitent. As for created Beings, we are not permitted to enjoy them; that is to ſay, to eſteem them as our Ultimate End; but we may uſe them, and they ought to be loved with reſpect to God. Thus we are to love both our Selves and our Neighbour. The Scripture commands us not to love our ſelves; we are but too prone to this naturally, but it enjoyns us to love our Neighbour. The whole Law centers in this twofold Charity, which makes us love God above all things, and our Neighbour as our ſelves. Our Charity towards our Neighbour ought to be regulated: We muſt not love Sinners as Sinners, but as Men; and though we are more ſtrictly obliged to ſuccour thoſe that are near to us, whether by Kindred or Friendſhip, yet we ought to love all Men alike, becauſe they are our Neighbours; even Angels are to be comprehended under this general Name. St. Auguſtine having laid down theſe Principles, ſaith, that the double Precept of Charity, is to be a Rule for the underſtanding of the Holy Scriptures. That any ſenſe that hath no relation to Charity, is not certainly the true ſenſe; but on the contrary, every ſenſe which hath reſpect to it, is uſeful; though not always conformable to the Writer's intention; and yet we ſhould endeavour not to depart from their particular meaning. He ſaith, in the laſt place, that the underſtanding of the Scripture is compriſed in Faith, Hope, and Charity; So that a Chriſtian who is endued with theſe three Vertues, hath no abſolute need of the Scripture for himſelf; but only for the Inſtruction of others: Yea, that ſeveral Perſons live very Chriſtian Lives in their Solitude without the help of the Sacred Books. He concludes from all that he hath ſaid in this Book, that whoſoever is throughly perſuaded, that the Scripture is that Charity which proceedeth out of a pure Heart, of a good Conſcience, and Faith unfeigned, may without Fear betake himſelf to the reading of the Holy Scripture.

St. Auguſtine. Tome III.

In the ſecond Book, he comes to the Knowledge of Signs; and having given the Definition, and Diviſions of them, he obſerves, that Words hold the firſt place among Signs. He ſhows how the Sound of Words is formed, and how the variety of Tongues was introduced into the World. He ſuppoſes that the Scripture is not plain every where; and that there is need of Application to underſtand it; that the moſt Skilful meet with Difficulties; that the Allegories and Figures, there to be met with, ſometimes render it dark; but commonly what is obſcure in one place, is cleared in another; and ſo the Holy Ghoſt feeds the Hungry with what is clear, and prevents their being nauſeated by exerciſing them with what is obſcure. He ſheweth, at laſt, by what Degrees we may attain to the perfect Knowledge of the Wiſdom, contained in the Holy Scripture. Theſe Degrees are, the Fear of God, Piety, Knowledge, Courage, Counſel, and Purity of Heart. Afterwards followeth a Catalogue of the Canonical Books, * the very ſame with ours. The Rule he makes uſe of to diſtinguiſh them, is this. I deſire (ſaith he) that to know the Canonical Books, the Authority of the greateſt part of the Catholick Church may be obſerved, and particularly of thoſe that have Apoſtolical Sees, or which have had the Happineſs of receiving the Epiſtles of the Apoſtles. But among the Canonical Books, thoſe that are received by all Churches, muſt be preferred before thoſe which are rejected by ſome. Again, among theſe we ſhould pay a greater regard to thoſe which are acknowledged by a great number of Churches, and by the moſt conſiderable, than to ſuch as are admitted only by few Churches, and thoſe of no great Authority. And if ſome have been received by the greater Number of Churches, and rejected by thoſe that have greater Authority; though it is hard to meet with ſuch, yet they ought to be put in the ſame Rank, and to obtain the ſame Authority. He adviſeth all Pious Perſons, that fear God, and ſeek to know his Will, to read all the Canonical Books, to draw from them Precepts for Manners, and Rules of Faith, and at laſt, he furniſheth them with the means to arrive to the underſtanding of hard and obſcure Paſſages. The firſt is the Knowledge of that Language, wherein thoſe Books were written. The ſecond is to conſult and compare the ſeveral Tranſlations, whereof ſome ſerve to explain the reſt. Among the Tranſlations, he preferrs the Vulgar Latin, as being more literal, and clearer: And among the Greek Verſions, he adheres to the Septuagint, to which he aſcribes much Authority. He doth not decide, Whether the Seventy compoſed it ſeparately, every one in his Cell by God's Inſpiration, or by conferring together. But he affirms, that however it was compoſed, it ought to be followed, and preferred even before the Hebrew Text, becauſe it is not credible, that they made this alteration, without a ſecret Aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit, for the Good of the Church. As to the Books of the New Teſtament, he ſaith, That, without doubt, the Latin Tranſlation is to be Corrected by the Greek Copies.

[* By theſe Words our Author means, that St. Auguſtine's Canon of S. S. was the ſame with that now received in the Church of Rome: But that does not appear from St. Auguſtine's Words; for of thoſe Books which the Church of England condemns as Apocryphal, he names none but Tobith, Judith, Wiſdom of Solomon, Eccleſiaſticus, and the Maccabees. By the Book of Esdras, he does not mean thoſe which we call by that name, but the Books of Ezrah, and Nehemiah, which he mentions no where elſe, and which were never diſputed in the Church; and it is uncertain, whether he owned thoſe Additions to the Book of Eſther, that are now received in the Church of Rome.]

The third thing which St. Auguſtine looks upon as neceſſary for the underſtanding of the Scripture, is the Knowledge of Things ſignified; as the Nature of Animals, Plants, Herbs, and of other Things which are made uſe of in Compariſons and Figures in Holy Scripture. He lays great weight upon the Knowledge of Numbers, and Muſick, which he pretends to be of great uſe: And he would not have Profane Sciences neglected; provided, that ſuch as are Falſe, and Superſtitious, be laid aſide; and particularly, Judicial Aſtrology, and Magick. He reckoneth Painting, and Mythology, among thoſe Things whoſe Knowledge is Superfluous; but he ſhews the uſefulneſs of Hiſtory, Mechanicks, Logick, Rhetorick, and other Sciences, provided that a good Uſe be made of them, that Men depend not too much upon them, nor be lifted up becauſe of them, but that both Charity, and Humility, be preſerved as the two Keys, without which the Holy Scripture cannot be underſtood.

The third Book lays down Rules to clear thoſe Difficulties that ariſe from the different Senſes, in which a Diſcourſe courſe may be taken; as for inſtance, when the Parts of a Diſcourſe are diſtinguiſhed by Points, and Commas, which variouſly placed, alter the Senſe. St. Auguſtine would have Men referr themſelves, in ſuch caſes, to the Rule of Faith, and reject that Diſtinction which makes an Heretical Senſe: That if both Senſes be Catholick, that is to be followed, which agreeth beſt with the connexion of the Diſcourſe; and laſt of all, if both agree with the Text, then we may follow that which ſeems moſt probable. He applies the ſame Rules to determine the pronunciation, and ſignification of undetermined Terms: At laſt he deſireth, that Men ſhould conſult the Original Text.

St. Auguſtine Tome III.

There is much more difficulty, when the Words are taken in a Metaphorical, and Figurative Senſe; then we muſt have a care how we underſtand them in a Proper, and Natural Senſe. The Jews were for a long time, Slaves to this literal Meaning. The Gentiles likewiſe were Slaves to unprofitable Ceremonies. But Chriſtians deliver the Jews, by diſcovering to them the Truths that were hid under the Letter, and they ſet the Gentiles at Liberty, by utterly rejecting their profane Ceremonies. Themſelves are charged but with a ſmall Number of Signs eaſily practiſed, whoſe Signification is very Majeſtical, and their Obſervation very Pure. Chriſt himſelf inſtituted them, and the Apoſtles taught the Church the Knowledge of them: Such are the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and the Celebration of the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt.

After this, St. Auguſtine goes to the neceſſary Rules, whereby we may diſtinguiſh the Proper Senſe from the Figurative. The firſt, and moſt general is, that whatſoever cannot be made to agree, either with Purity of Manners, or with the Truth of Faith, when 'tis underſtood according to the Letter, muſt neceſſarily have a Figurative Senſe. But we are not to judge of what may be Pure, or True, according to the Prejudices, either of Cuſtom, or Opinion, but only by the Rules of Faith, and Charity, becauſe the Holy Scripture teacheth nothing but Charity, and condemns nothing but Luſt.

Neither muſt thoſe Opinions, and Actions, be taken in a Figurative Senſe, which ſeem to imply a kind of Cruelty, which in Scripture, is aſcribed either to God, or to Righteous Men, when they are made uſe of againſt the Luſts of carnal Men. But a Word, or an Action which is abſolutely unjuſt, and that cannot be excuſed by any Circumſtance, when it is attributed to God, or to thoſe whoſe Sanctity is commended in Scripture, muſt neceſſarily be expounded by a Figure. This Rule takes place in Things that are expreſſed in the Form of a Command. If the Letter forbids a Crime, and enjoyns a good thing, there is no Figure; but, on the contrary if it ſeems to command a Crime, and forbid a Vertue, it is a Figure. It often happeneth, that ſuch as are in a more perfect State, do underſtand Figuratively, what is ſaid of a State leſs Perfect; but let thoſe Men conſider, that there are Precepts for all Men in general, and ſome that relate to each State in particular. He adds, that we ſhould not believe, that ſince the Coming of Jeſus Chriſt, thoſe things can be obſerved, which were either permitted, or preſcribed only for the time of the Old Law, though at that time, they were to be taken in their proper Senſe. He inſtanceth in the Polygamy of the Patriarchs, becauſe they lived Holily in Marriage, with a proſpect of having Children; and he confidently preferreth that State, before that of ſuch Men, who having but one Wife, abuſe Matrimony to ſatisfie their bruti ſh Luſt.

Finally, it muſt be confeſſed, that when the Scripture mentions great Men's Faults, we may not only ſeek there for a Figurative Senſe, but alſo for Inſtruction in the Hiſtorical Senſe, becauſe their Fall teaches the Holieſt Men, not to be lifted up through Preſumption.

St. Auguſtine addeth, beſides the following Obſervations, that the ſame Figurative Expreſſion ſometimes ſignifies two different Things, and ſometimes contrary Things. That a dark Place of Scripture ought to be explained by thoſe that are clearer; and that Reaſonings may likewiſe be uſed to clear it: But it is ſafer to have Recourſe to other Paſſages of Scripture; and that the ſame Paſſage may have ſeveral Significations equally good. He concludes with the Seven Rules of Tychonius, the Donatiſt; but they are very far from the good Senſe, and the Uſefulneſs of St. Auguſtine's: They diſcover great Subtilty; but it is very difficult to apply them.

In the laſt Book of Chriſtian Doctrine, St. Auguſtine ſhows how to Expound the Holy Scripture for the benefit of others. He ſays at firſt, that they were not to expect Rhetorical Rules upon that Subject from him; which though they are not uſeleſs, yet ſince they may be found in other places, they ought not to be introduced into this Work; He enlargeth however upon the Qualifications of a Chriſtian Orator. He ſhews, that it were an Error to think, that Truth cannot make uſe of Rhetorical Ornaments to refute Error; ſo that he would have Chriſtians ſtudy to ſpeak Eloquently. He adviſeth young Men to learn the Precepts and Rules of Art; but as for Men in Years, his Opinion is, that they ſhould only read Books that are well written, and frame their Diſcourſes after their Pattern, without regarding the Precepts of Art, which are of little Uſe. The Deſign of a Preacher who expounds the Holy Scripture, who ſets forth God's Word, who defends the Faith, and oppoſes Errors, ſhould be to teach that which is Good, and to perſuade others to depart from that which is Evil; to bring over thoſe of contrary Opinions, to quicken the Slothful, to inſtruct the Ignorant, to ſoften, and convert hardned Sinners. St. Auguſtine. Tome IH.

When the Queſtion is only how to inſtruct the Ignorant, it is enough to declare the Doctrine of the Church; but if Gain-ſayers are to be perſuaded, it muſt be eſtabliſhed by ſolid Arguments: And Laſtly, If Men's Hearts are to be moved, there is need of Prayers, Reproaches, Threatnings, Exhortations, and other Figures proper to affect them. Such as want Eloquence to excel in theſe things, ought to make up their Diſcourſes with Paſſages, and Expreſſions out of Holy Scripture. He proves by ſeveral Examples, that there is much Eloquence in the Holy Writings; yet he would not have a Preacher imitate that Obſcureneſs which is to be met with in ſome Paſſages of the Holy Scripture, but charges him, above all things, to be clear; not to content himſelf to pleaſe with agreeable Notions, but to inform by ſolid Inſtructions. As the Matter which a Preacher treateth of is high, ſo he ought never to loſe his Gravity, though he may alter his Style according to the variety of Subjects. St. Auguſtine produces Examples, both out of the Holy Scripture, and out of the Fathers, of three kinds of Eloquence; ſhewing, at the ſame time, upon what Occaſions, and to what Subjects they are to be apply'd. Laſtly, having laid down ſeveral uſeful Rules to compleat a Preacher, he adviſes him, above all, to prepare himſelf by Prayer, and to be ſure that his Life be anſwerable to his Sermons. He blames not thoſe who Preach Sermons compoſed by others, when they cannot make Sermons themſelves.

After this Treatiſe of Chriſtian Doctrine, follow St. Auguſtine's Writings upon the Holy Scripture.

The firſt is his imperfect Book upon Geneſis. It is the firſt, not only according to the Order of the Books of the Holy Scripture, but alſo according to that of its Compoſition. St. Auguſtine wrote it in Africa, in the Year 393. before he was Biſhop. He deſigned to prove againſt the Manichees, that the Hiſtory of Geneſis, taken literally, was no ridiculous thing, as they pretended: But he confeſſes, that being not well inſtructed in thoſe Matters, he found this Undertaking to be above his ſtrength; which obliged him to ſtop in the way, even before he had finiſhed the firſt Book, which remained imperfect. He was once reſolved utterly to ſuppreſs it; but he thought it more convenient to leave it as a monument of his firſt Enquiries upon the Holy Scripture, and he added ſome Periods to it. He begins this Book with an Account of the Doctrine of the Church, concerning the Trinity, and the Incarnation. He adds againſt the Manichees, that Sin is none of God's Creatures, but that it conſiſts in the Abuſe of Free-Will. Afterwards he diſtinguiſhes four Senſes of the Scripture: The Hiſtorical, which takes place when a Relation is made of Matters of Fact, as they happen'd: The Allegorical, which explaineth what is ſpoken by Figures: The Analogical, when the Old and New Teſtament are compared together, and their Agreement is juſtified; And the Ætiological, whereby Reaſons are given of the Actions and Diſcourſes that are related in the Holy Scripture.

This being ſuppoſed, he undertakes to Explain the Hiſtory of the Creation, ſet forth in the beginning of Geneſis. He frames Difficulties, upon every Word, and makes ſeveral Objections to himſelf, but often anſwers them not; or if he doth, his Anſwers are not commonly very juſt, nor ſufficient to ſatisfie the leaſt Scrupulous. This Work endeth at Man's Creation.

He purſues very near the ſame Method in the twelve following Books upon Geneſis, which he writ when he was Biſhop: They were begun in 401. and compleated in 415. He explains the Text of Geneſis from the beginning, to that place where it is ſaid that Adam was driven out of Paradiſe. He examines the Words, and ſtarts an infinite number of Queſtions: ſome he anſwers, but moſt are left unreſolved. He often gives Myſtical and Moral Solutions, which are not very literal. He diſcourſes likewiſe by the bye, of ſeveral common Places, concerning the Nature both of Angels, and of the Soul; the Fall of Angels, and that of Man; concerning the Myſteries of the Number Six; concerning Hell and Paradiſe, Viſions, and ſeveral other Subjects which he meets with in his way.

The ſeven Books of the Ways of ſpeaking, in the ſeven firſt Books of the Bible, which follow this Work we have now ſpoken of, is a Critical Treatiſe; wherein St. Auguſtine explaineth ſeveral Ways of ſpeaking that are peculiar to theſe Books, and which ordinarily are not met with in others. This Work is of the Year 419.

In making theſe Remarks upon the Ways of Speech, in theſe ſeven firſt Books of the Bible, he finds ſeveral Difficulties about the things themſelves, which he collecteth in the Form of Queſtions, which he propoſeth to himſelf; whereof he gives a Solution in few Words, though without going to the depth. This is both the Subject and the Method of the ſeven following Books: where he takes a ſhort view of the principal Difficulties that he met with in the Pentateuch, in the Book of Joſhua, and in that of Judges. This is a very curious and uſeful Work. There he does not recede from the literal Senſe, as in his other Treatiſes, but makes very learned and judicious Remarks, which ſerve very much to clear the Text of the Bible.

St. Auguſtine Tome III.

The Notes upon Job are a very imperfect Work. St. Auguſtine had writ them in the Margin of a Copy of the Book of Job; from which ſome Body took them, and compiled them into a Book by themſelves: which makes him ſay, that he knew not whether it was to be called his Work or theirs who had thus collected and reduced them. He findeth there much Obſcurity, proceeding from their great Brevity, and becauſe they added ſome Notes to thoſe words of the Text to which they do not referr. In one word: He found ſo many Faults in that Work, that he had ſuppreſſed it, had he not known that there were ſeveral Copies of it abroad. This is the Account which he gives of it in the 13*th*. Chapter of the ſecond Book of his Retractations. Yet this Treatiſe is not ſo contemptible; it is a kind of Paraphraſe, or literal Explication of the Book of Job, which explains it, and diſcovers ſuch Notions as may be further improved.

The Looking-glaſs taken out of the Scripture, is neither a Commentary, nor a particular Work upon the Scripture, but barely a Collection of Paſſages out of the Old and New Teſtament, containing Precepts and Inſtructions for Manners. Poſſidius affirms, that St. Auguſtine wrote a Book of this Nature, and Caſſiodorus recommends the reading of it. It is not certain whether this is that which St. Auguſtine wrote. The Preface is in his Style, but in the Body of the Book the Scriptures are cited according to St. Jerome's Tranſlation. Perhaps the Text uſed by St. Auguſtine was changed, and the more common Verſion was put in the room of it: For I can hardly believe that St. Auguſtine would quit his Old Tranſlation, to make a conſtant uſe of St. Jerome's. Father Vignier hath alſo publiſhed A Looking-glaſs taken out of Scripture, attributed to St. Auguſtine: But this relates to Doctrine, more than to Manners; which doth not agree with what Poſſidius ſaith of St. Auguſtine's.

Theſe are all St. Auguſtine's Treatiſes upon the Old Teſtament, which make up the firſt Part of the Third Tome. The Second contains Treatiſes upon the New Teſtament, and begins with a Harmony betwixt the four Goſpels divided into four Books.

In the Firſt, having ſpoken of the Number, Authority, and of the Style of the Goſpels, he refuteth thoſe who refuſe to give Credit to the Goſpel, becauſe it was not written by Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, but by his Diſciples, whom they ſuppoſe to have receded from their Maſter's Doctrine, that ſo they might perſuade the World that he was God, and thereby deſtroy the Worſhip of the Gods. He obſerves, that two of the four Evangeliſts were Apoſtles, St. Matthew and St. John; and two were not, St. Mark and St. Luke; that ſo none might ſay, that there was a Difference betwixt thoſe who had ſeen with their Eyes Chriſt's Actions, and thoſe who wrote them upon the Relation of thoſe who had ſeen them. He addeth, that other Men's Works, who undertook to write the Hiſtory of Chriſt, were not received by the Church as Canonical; becauſe the Authors of theſe Hiſtories were not to be believed, having ſtuff'd their Works with falſe Relations, and Errors, contrary to the Rule of the Catholick and Apoſtolick Faith, and to ſound Doctrine. He believes, that the four Goſpels were compoſed in the ſame Order as we ſee them in at preſent: That St. Matthew's Goſpel was written in Hebrew, and the others in Greek: That each Evangeliſt hath obſerved a particular Order, yet without obliging himſelf not to ſpeak any thing that had been ſpoken by another: That St. Matthew deſigned particularly to give an Account of Chriſt's Royal Deſcent, and to repreſent him according to that Humane Life which he led among Men: That St. Mark did little elſe but abridge St. Matthew: That St. Luke apply'd himſelf to ſet forth Chriſt's Prieſthood; which is the reaſon why he doth not reckon his Genealogy from King David, by Solomon, as St. Matthew doth, but by Nathan: and for the ſame reaſon, he takes notice, That the Virgin Mary was a-Kin to Elizabeth, who was of the Sacerdotal Race, and Wife to Zacharias the Prieſt. Laſtly, That St. John taketh his Subject above Chriſt's Humane Actions, to ſpeak of his Divinity, and to diſcover the Equality of the Word with his Father: So that it may be ſaid, that the three firſt Evangeliſts are more for the Active Life, and St. John for Contemplation. After this, St. Auguſtine makes Application of the four Beaſts in the Revelations to the four Evangeliſts; and having made theſe Remarks, he anſwereth thoſe who found fault that Chriſt had written nothing. He propoſes to them the Examples of Socrates, Pythagoras, and of the wiſeſt Heathen, who left to their Diſciples the care of committing to Writing both their Doctrine and their Inſtructions. He ſhews, that Chriſt cannot be ſaid to have written Magical Books, or that he approved the Worſhip of falſe Deities. He particularly enlargeth upon this laſt Head, ſhewing, that the Apoſtle's Doctrine, touching the Worſhipping of One only God, is conformable to that of the Prophets, who fore-told, that the Meſſiah ſhould preach the ſame upon Earth, and that it ſhould be publiſhed and received throughout the World. The three other Books, are a Harmony of the Evangeliſts. In the Second and Third, he followeth the Text of St. Matthew's Goſpel, and compareth the three other Goſpels with that. In the Laſt, he takes notice of what the three other Evangeliſts have peculiar to themſelves. He doth not only compare the Text of the Evangeliſts, but makes them agree together, and reſolves the ſeeming Difficulties and Contrarieties that are betwixt them, as to the Order and Manner of their relating both of the Words and Actions of Jeſus Chriſt. This Work was very difficult and laborious, and it was finiſhed by St. Auguſtine with great exactneſs. It was compoſed about the Year 400.

St. Auguſtine. Tome III.

After this Treatiſe, we find in this Volume the two Books of St. Auguſtine, upon the Sermon of Chriſt in the Mount, written about the Year 393. They contain Moral Reflections, with Inſtructions and Precepts contained in Chriſt's Sermon, recorded by St. Matthew in the 5*th*. 6*th*. and 7*th*. Chapters of his Goſpel. St. Auguſtine likewiſe clears the Difficulties that he meets with in the Letter of the Text. Among the Paſſages of this Treatiſe which he reviſeth in his Retractations, there are two of Conſequence: The former, is, about the Divorce allowed by Jeſus Chriſt, in caſe of Fornication. He had extended what is ſaid of Fornication, to all thoſe Crimes that ſet us at a diſtance from God. Here he retracteth this Opinion, and confeſſeth, that this Notion is not very certain. He ſaith alſo, that it is a very hard Queſtion, whether a Man may marry another Wife, having been Divorced from a former? the ſecond Point of any importance, taken notice of in his Retractations, is, touching an Expreſſion he had uſed when he ſpake of Jeſus Chriſt: He had called him Homo Dominicus: He diſapproves that Term, though he had read it in Eccleſiaſtical Writers. He retracts likewiſe what he had ſaid, that the Sin unto Death, was Envy againſt our Brother: with ſome other Explications that were not very juſt. However, the Treatiſe it ſelf is very inſtructive, and very uſeful: It contains ſeveral Moral Precepts, which may be of very great Uſe. In the ſecond Book, he explains the Lord's Prayer.

Both the Books of Queſtions upon ſome Paſſages of St. Matthew's and St. Luke's Goſpels, were compoſed by St. Auguſtine with great precipitation, to ſatisfie the Requeſts of a Perſon that read the Goſpel. Moſt of his Anſwers are either Myſtical or Moral Explications. He places this Book in his Retractations, among thoſe which he writ about the Year 400. and takes notice of ſome Faults of Inadvertency. The firſt Book is upon St. Matthew's Goſpel. The ſecond, upon that of St Luke. He makes no mention of the ſeventeen following Queſtions upon St. Matthew's Goſpel, neither are they mentioned in the beſt Editions of the Catalogue of St. Auguſtine's Works, made by Poſſidius: which gives us reaſon to doubt whether they are St. Auguſtine's, though Rhabanus hath quoted them under his Name, and though they are written in a Style very much like his.

The 124. Treatiſes upon St. John's Goſpel are of a very different Nature from the former; they are Homilies preached by St. Auguſtine to his People, wherein he followeth the Text of St. John, and draws important Inſtructions from it upon the principal Points both of Doctrine and Morality. He attacks three ſorts of Hereticks principally; the Arians, the Donatiſts, and the Pelagians. He maintains againſt the firſt, the Divinity and Conſubſtantiality of the Word. He often refutes the Reaſons alledged by the ſecond to juſtifie their Separation, and earneſtly exhorts them to re-unite themſelves with the Church; and proves againſt the laſt, the neceſſity of Chriſt's Grace, and the free Predeſtination of the Elect. Theſe are the principal Subjects treated of in theſe Homilies, which he preached after the Pelagian Hereſie broke out, before the Deſtruction of the Donatiſts Schiſm, ſome time after they had found St. Stephen's Body, as he affirms in the 120*th*. Sermon; which makes us conjecture that they are the Sermons which he preached to his People in the Years 416. and 417. For he began with them about the end of Winter, towards February, in the Year 416. as appears by the beginning of the Sixth: He continued them in Lent, as it is obſerved in the 10*th*. and 11*th*. They were interrupted during Eaſter Holy-days. After the Holy-days he undertook the Expoſition of St. John's Epiſtle, and then proſecuted his Goſpel. He had got but to the 27*th*. Homily, about the Feaſt of St. Laurence, and ſo could not finiſh theſe Sermons before the next Year.

St. Auguſtine's ten Homilies upon St. John's Epiſtle, interrupted, as we ſaid juſt now, the courſe of thoſe which he compoſed upon the Goſpel. He gives notice of it himſelf in his Preface; where he obſerves, that having been obliged by the Solemnity of thoſe Feſtivals, wherein particular Leſſons are yearly recited, to interrupt the courſe of his Explications upon St. John's Goſpel; before he returned to it, he thought it convenient to Expound, during thoſe ſeven or eight Days, the Epiſtle of the ſame Evangeliſt, that was moſt agreeable to that joyful Time, becauſe it ſpeaks of nothing but Charity. St. Auguſtine, in his Homilies, makes excellent Reflections upon this Vertue. He obſerves, that Fear brings in Charity, but that Charity drives away Fear. He distinguisheth two sorts of Fear; that which is conceived by a dread of Punishment, which goes before Charity; and that which he calleth a Chast Fear, which consists in the Fear of losing Charity. He explaineth these two sorts of Fear, by the different Dispositions of two Women, whereof the one loveth her Husband, and the other hateth him, though both fear him. There are other excellent Instructions in these Homilies of St. Augustine, concerning the Love of God and our Neighbour. He speaks also occasionally, concerning Grace and the Church: 'And expounds these words of 'Christ to St. Peter, Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will 'build my Church, of the Faith whereof St. Peter had im- 'mediately before made Profession.

brings

St. Augustine Tome III.

St. Augustine composed at Carthage, in 394. his Exposition of several Passages of the Epistle to the Romans, in Answer to the Difficulties that were proposed to him. He had not then perfectly formed his System of Grace, which made him let slip some Explications different from some which he hath given since: And this very thing gave Occasion for his Remarks upon this Book, in his Retractations, where he corrects what he had said, whereby some might be made to believe, that the Beginning of Faith cometh from Man, and not from the Grace of Jesus Christ.

He undertook also at the same time a larger Commentary upon this whole Epistle; which would have been prodigiously large, since the single Exposition of the Salutation with which St. Paul begins the Epistle, makes up a whole Book. True it is, that he makes there a Digression of several Pages, upon an incidental Question concerning the Sin against the Holy Ghost, which he thinks to be final Impenitency; but both the Extent and the Difficulty of that Work made him give it over: however, he left that Book, and intituled it, The Beginning of an Exposition upon the Epistle to the Romans.

At the same time likewise he made a continued Commentary upon the Epistle to the Galatians, wherein he contents himself with clearing the whole Text, with Explications and Reflections, without departing from his Subject by long Digressions.

The Addition at the latter end of this Volume, containeth several Discourses upon the Scripture, which are none of St. Augustine's.

The first is intituled, Of the Miracles of the Holy Scripture, contained in the Old and New Testament. One needs only read one or two Periods of this Work, to be convinced that it is not St. Augustine's; so different is the Style thereof from that of this Father: The Author thereof seems to have been either an Englishman or an Irishman. He speaks of the Flowing and Ebbing of the Sea upon the Coasts of the British Islands; and to express the same, he makes use of Terms that were usual in Bede's time, he fixes the time where he lived in the 4*th*. Chapter of the 2*d*. Book; and speaking of those Islands, he shews, that he wrote after the Year 660. This Work is divided into three Books: The first contains the Miracles related in the Historical Books of the Old Testament. The second, those that are contained in the Books of the Prophets. And the last, those that are mentioned in the New Testament. It is ill written, and of very little use.

St. Augustine. Tome III.

The small Discourse of the Benedictions of the Patriarch Jacob, belongs not to St. Augustine but is a Fragment of Alcuinus's Questions upon Genesis; who took part of it from the Questions upon Genesis, and part from the Morals of St. Gregory. This very Book is found in the 3*d*. Book of the Commentary upon Genesis, attributed to St. Eucherius, Bishop of Lyons.

We have observed already, speaking of the Works of Hilary the Deacon, in the Second Volume of this Bibliotheca, that the Questions upon the Old and the New Testament, are not St. Augustine's; and the Conjectures, for which they were ascribed to Hilary the Deacon, were there set down: He that desires more Arguments to prove, that they are not St. Augustine's, should read the first Part of the Benedictines Preface to this Treatise. It remains only, that we take notice with them, that in all probability these Questions are not at all written by the same Author. In some Manuscripts there are only the 127 Questions, which were published at first; others have 151. but in these, there are not all those that are in the first Manuscript; and among the rest the 44*th*. and the 115*th*. which afforded Conjectures concerning the Age and the Country of their Author. This makes it difficult to affirm any thing certainly concerning the Author of these Questions.

Tome VI.

The Explication of the Apocalypse, which is the last Book that is added to this Volume of St. Augustine's, is a Collection of Notes upon the Revelations, taken out of the Commentaries of Victorinus, Primasius and Bede, and disposed into the Form of Homilies. Those that thought that this was the Commentary of Tychonius the Donatist, upon the Revelations, did not take notice that it was so far from containing things favourable to the Donatists Sect; that on the contrary it refutes their Errors, and particularly that of Rebaptization, in the sixth Homily upon the Revelations, Vers. 11. Neither do we find here, those Expositions which Bede mentions as written by Tychonius, nor the long Dissertation, to prove that the Angels spoken of in the Revelations, are those Churches which Tychonius had inserted into his Commentary as St. Augustine observes in the thirtieth Chapter of the third Book of Christian Doctrine.

The fourth TOME.

Tome IV.

THe fourth Tome of St. Augustine's Works contains this Father's Explication upon the Psalms; which makes two large a Book, to be comprised in one Volume with his other Commentaries upon the Holy Scripture. He composed them not in that order wherein we find them, but some at one time, and others at another; and not all after the same manner. Some are Commentaries written in his Study, and the others, which make by far the greater number, are Discourses made to his People. Cassiodore observes, that in his time, they were divided into fifteen Decads; this division is not observed at present, and it is not likely that St. Augustine made it. St. Augustine understanding no Hebrew, followed the Latin Translations made from the Greek Versions of the Septuagint, to the Text whereof he often referrs. In some of these Explications, and particularly, in those that were not written to the People, as the thirteen first, he only makes Allegorical Notes upon the Text of the Psalms; but in the rest, he is either very diffuse, and enlargeth much upon Reflections that are not very solid, or else he goeth from his Subject by long Digressions. He professes to explain the Letter, but his literal Sense is almost always Spiritual or Moral. If he clears any Term, or insists upon the signification of any Word, it is always to extract an Allegory, or something Moral from it. He brings all to Jesus Christ, to the Mysteries of our Religion and to the Church. The Recompences and Blessings mentioned in the Psalms, are always in his Opinion, Spiritual Recompences and Eternal Blessings. He often gives several Senses of the same place, and very frequently makes a digression against the Schism, or the Heresies of his own time; he is full of useless Allusions, ill-grounded Subtilties, and improbable Allegories. His very Moral Thoughts are seldom such as might have been naturally inferred from the Scripture Text; but ordinarily such far-fetcht Notions as could never fall into the Mind of any Man that should read the Text.

Tome IV.

Yet here and there one may meet with lively and fervent Exhortations, which raised his People; and profitable Instructions upon the most important Truths of Religion. So that though this Work cannot pass for a good Commentary upon the Psalms, yet it may be looked upon as a wonderful Collection of Christian and Moral Notions; and if it be of no great use for those that enquire after the literal Sense of the Scripture; yet it will prove very Profitable to Preachers, who desire to fit their Minds with necessary Thoughts and Rules to help them to discharge well that part of their Ministry.

The fifth TOME.

Tome V.

MOst of St. Augustine's Sermons being Homilies upon the Scripture, they are with a great deal of Reason brought in to make up this Volume, which follows immediately after St. Augustine's Commentaries upon the Holy Scripture. They had hitherto been in great confusion, because new Collections of them were still Printed, as new Sermons were discovered. There was a great number of Suppositious or Doubtful ones among the True; most Editions were full of Faults, so that it was necessary, that Persons so exact, learned, and versed in such Matters as these Benedictines are, should undertake to set them in order, to distinguish St. Augustine's from those that are Suppositious, and to Correct the Text from the best and ancientest Manuscripts. This they have performed most happily in the fifth Tome, which containeth all St. Augustine's Sermons, placed in very good order, and divided into five Classes.

Tome V.

The first containeth 183 Sermons upon several Passages both of the Old and New Testament.

The second is made up of 88 Sermons upon the great Festivals of the Year.

In the third are 69 upon the Festivals of the Saints.

The fourth comprehendeth 23 upon various Subjects, as, The Love of God, Fear, Penance, Contempt of the World, Behaviour of the Clergy, Peace and Concord, Resurrection from the Dead, &c.

St. Auguſtine Tome V.

The laſt Claſſis is compoſed of ſuch Sermons, as cannot be certainly affirmed to be St. Auguſtine's, though there is no certainty that they are none of his; among theſe, there are ſome of which we have more reaſon to doubt, which are printed in a ſmaller Character; there are not above 31 of them.

They have alſo added at the latter end Fragments of ſome other Sermons of St. Auguſtine's, which are taken out of the Collections of Eugippius, Bede, Florus, and John a Deacon of the Church of Rome: Another Fragment of the Sermon upon the Aſcenſion, and a Sermon of Heraclius, a Diſciple of St. Auguſtine's.

The Addition contains 317 Spurious Sermons, divided into four Claſſes, according to the order obſerved in the true ones; At the Head of each, is a very exact Critick; Several of them are reſtored to Cæſarius their true Author; Some are found to belong to Rhabanus, and ſome others are taken out of Origen's Homilies, out of the Works of St. Cyprian, St. Ambroſe, St. Maximus, St. Leo, Fauſtus, St. Gregory, Alcuinus, and Ivo Carnutenſis.

St. Auguſtine's Sermons are written neither Artificially nor Methodically, they are not regular Orations compoſed of all their Parts; They are familiar Diſcourſes, ſpoken without much preparation; Moſt of them are very ſhort, and made up of conciſe Sentences and Phraſes; he doth not go to the depth of Points either of Doctrine or Morality, as the Greek Fathers do, but contents himſelf to ſpeak of them ſuccinctly, and in few Words. Interrogations, Antitheſes and Quibbles, are almoſt all the Figures that he beautifies his Diſcourſe withal; he doth not aſſert the Truth ſtrongly, nor inculcate it pathetically; but barely propoſes it with agreeable Expreſſions, and impreſſes it with ſome pleaſant Thoughts. This kind of Eloquence is much inferior to that of the Greek Orators, but it may be that it reliſhed beſt with the Men of St. Auguſtine's Age, and agreed with the Genius of the Africans; who not only admired his Sermons, but were moved by them. It would not be ſo now, and I queſtion whether a Sermon of St. Auguſtine's preached in our Pulpits would draw many Auditors: Yet it muſt be confeſſed, That few Latin Preachers are to be compared with him, and that if he be much inferior to the St. Baſils, or the St. Chryſoſtomes, he is much above the St. Maximus's, the Chryſologus's, and ſeveral other Latins that came after him. I ſhall not enter into particulars upon his Sermons, which were both a tedious and an endleſs Work.

St. Auguſtine. Tome V.

The ſixth TOME.

Tome VI.

THe ſixth Tome of St. Auguſtine's Works contains his Dogmatical Books, upon ſeveral Points both of Morality, and Diſcipline: he begins with ſome ſmall Treatiſes, containing Anſwers to ſeveral Queſtions upon various Subjects.

The firſt, is a Collection of Anſwers to 83 Queſtions, which he reſolved, after his return into Africa, about the Year 388. and which he Collected after he was a Biſhop. Theſe are the Reſolutions contained in thoſe 83 Queſtions, with moſt of the Principles from whence they are taken.

I. The Soul is not of it ſelf nor by it ſelf; ſince it is not eſſentially the Truth.

II. God did not make Man like himſelf. He is not good by Nature, but by Will; therefore he muſt be free.

III. If a Wiſe Man's Advice never makes another Man worſe than he was before, Is it credible, that God ſhould make Man more wicked?

IV. What then may be the Cauſe of Man's Wickedneſs? We muſt ſeek for it, either in himſelf, or in others, or in nothing: Conſider it well and you will find, That the Will of Man is the Cauſe of his Depravation.

V. Animals have no knowledge, and therefore cannot be Happy.

VI. All Corporeal and Spiritual Beings have a perfection which makes their Eſſence: Evil hath none; therefore it is no Being.

VII. Sometimes we confound the Soul with the Spirit, and ſometimes we diſtinguiſh them: when the Actions of Man that are common to him with Beaſts, are attributed to his Soul, the Spirit cannot be meant by that Term; for Beaſts have no Reaſon: and Reaſon is a neceſſary Adjunct of a Spirit.

VIII. The Soul hath no other Motions beſides its Will and its Actions; It makes the Body change its Place, but changes not her ſelf.

IX. Our Senſes only acquaint us with thoſe Things that are in a perpetual Change; Therefore they cannot give us the Knowledge of Eternal and immoveable Truth.

X. Whatſoever hath any Perfection cometh from God: Bodies have; Therefore God is the Author of them.

XI. Jeſus Chriſt was Man; but he is Born of a Virgin: Who can doubt then of his being come to ſave both Sexes?

XII. God may be preſent, indeed; yet a defiled Soul cannot ſee him: this Notion is not St. Auguſtine's, but an Heathen's called Fonteius; who was afterwards Baptized, and died a Chriſtian; as St. Auguſtine aſſures us in his Retractations.

XIII. Man can tame and dreſs a Beaſt; but do we find that Beaſts can do the ſame to Man?

XIV. If Chriſt's Body had been but a Phantome, Chriſt had deceived us; but he is not capable of ſo doing.

XV. The Spirit of Man comprehends it ſelf, ;and knows no infinite perfection in it ſelf: wherefore it is finite.

XVI. The Time paſt, is no more; The Future is not yet: Every thing is preſent with God.

XVII. There ſhould be three Cauſes of a Creature; that which gives it a Being; that which gives it ſuch a ſort of Being; and that which gives it a love to its Being; Therefore the Cauſe of it is a Trinity. This Argument is not the moſt convincing.

XVIII. In Eternity there is neither Time paſt nor to come, all is preſent.

XIX. God is no where, and comprehends all things, without being the place of any thing; for he could not be in a place, nor be a place, without being Corporeal.

XX. Since God is the Author of Being, he cannot be the Author of what tends to nothing. Evil tends to nothing; therefore God is not the Author of Evil.

XXI. The only reaſon why we need any thing, is a defect in our ſelves; God therefore needs nothing.

Tome VI.

XXII. Man is wiſe, becauſe he partaketh of wiſdom; but God is wiſe through wiſdom it it ſelf. It is the ſame in all other Perfections.

XXIII. If any thing ſhould happen in the World by chance, then there would be no longer Prudence; but there is a neceſſity of Prudence: for all Beings are perfect, but can no further be ſo, than as they participate of the Goodneſs and Perfection of God. God and Man are the Authors of all that is done in the World. Good and Evil depend upon our own Wills.

XXIV. It was the part of Wiſdom to ſhew that the moſt ſhameful Death is not to he feared: And that's one of the reaſons for which Chriſt endured ſuch a one.

XXV. There are Sins of Weakneſs, Ignorance and Malice; Weakneſs is contrary to the Strength of God, Ignorance to his Wiſdom, and Malice to his Goodneſs: Thus whoſoever knows what God's Strength and Wiſdom are, may know which are Venial Sins: And whoſoever knows God's Goodneſs, knoweth alſo what thoſe Sins are, which deſerve to be be puniſhed both in this World and in the next. This well underſtood ought to be a Rule whereby to judge what ſort of Sinners ſhould be obliged to do Publick Penance, though they confeſs their Sins. Yet this Rule is very general and very equivocal.

XXVI. God makes uſe of the Wicked both to puniſh and to help. Afflictions are an Exerciſe to the Righteous, and a Puniſhment to the Wicked. Reſt and Peace corrupt the Wicked, and ſanctifie the Righteous. God makes uſe of Men to accompliſh the deſigns of his Providence though they know it not. We act our ſelves when we follow God's Commandments; but in all other things God guides us by the Springs of his Providence; and we have no ſhare in the Events.

XXVII. We ſhould not ask why God would create the World, that were to ſeek after a Cauſe of that which is the Cauſe of all things.

XXVIII. When it is ſaid, Seek thoſe things which are above; the meaning is, thoſe things that are great and ſublime by their excellency.

XXIX. Man may make uſe of all things, but he ought only to enjoy God; and the uſe which he makes of all things, ought to have a Relation to God. Whoſoever uſes the Creatures otherwiſe, abuſes them.

XXX. This Queſtion is not St. Auguſtine's; it is a Definition of Virtue out of Tully.

XXXI. Whoſoever conceiveth a thing, conceives it as it is; and he who conceives it not as it is, doth not conceive it at all: There are no different degrees of Conception.

XXXII. We are affraid of loſing what we love: and we are affraid that we ſhall not obtain what we deſire: If we deſire to be without fear, How can we fear that we ſhall not be freed from fear?

XXXIII. Men ſhould not deſire preciſely to be free from fear, becauſe raſh and ſtupid Men are without fear: we ſhould have a reaſon why we are not afraid.

XXXIV. We oguht to love what we poſſeſs, No Man can know, and love Happineſs, without being happy: Happineſs therefore is an eternal love and knowledge of a good thing which cannot be taken away from us.

XXXV. To preſerve and increaſe Charity, we muſt oppoſe and leſſen Luſt. This is to be begun by impreſſing a Dread of God's Judgments, to deſtroy the habit of Sin: After that, we ought both to diſcover the Beauty and Excellency of Virtue, to manifeſt the difference betwixt the Old and the New Man; to propoſe Chriſt's Life as an Example; to make uſe of his Exhortations, Inſtructions and Promiſes misses; to consider the vast number of those that followed and imitated him; to set forth the Virtues both of Saints and of Martyrs, as Patterns; and at last to oppose Pride and Ambition, and to inspire the fear and the love of God.

St. Augustine. Tome VI.

I omit the following Questions, because they are obscure, and contain nothing remarkable.

The XLV*th.* is against Judicial Astrology.

The XLVI*th.* is concerning Plato's Ideas.

The XLVIII*th.* is expressed in these Terms. We believe three sorts of Things. The first, are such things as are believed, and not conceived, as History. The second, are both believed and conceived at the same time; as the reasonings of Men. The third, are things believed but not conceived at that time, though they are conceived afterwards; such are Divine Instructions, which are conceived by none but those that have Pure Hearts.

In the LI. Question, He explains in what Sense it is said, that Man was created after God's Image and Similitude: And in the LII. he proves, that what is said in Genesis, that it repented God to have made Man, is not to be understood literally.

In the LIII. He justifies the Command which God gave the Jews to borrow of the Egyptians rich Vessels to carry them away; by saying, that God made use of them to Punish the Egyptians: But that from thence it cannot be inferred, that Men may deceive, because the People of Israel was not capable of Evangelical Perfection.

The Resolutions of the following Questions, are Mystical and Moral Explications of several Passages both of the Old and of the New Testament.

The LXXX. Is against the Error of the Apollinarists.

The two Books of Questions directed to Simplicianus Bishop of Milan, who succeeded St. Ambrose in the Year 397. are the first which St. Augustine writ, after he was made a Bishop. In the first, he discourseth upon two Passages of the Epistle to the Romans, upon what is said, Ch. 7. of the Man, who being under the Law, doth not what the Law requireth: And upon what is written in the 9*th.* Chapter, of Jacob's being call'd, and Esau's being rejected. He proves in this first Book with great strength, the Necessity of Grace to every Good Work, even for the beginning of Faith, and a Free Call. He saith himself, both in his Book of Predestination, and in that of the Gift of Perseverance, that he began then to see clearly into those Matters which he had not taken right in his former Books. Yet he understands the first Passage in the Romans, of a Man under the Law, who is yet without Grace; whereas he believed afterwards, that it was rather to be understood of that Man, who being Spiritual in his Superior part, finds himself carnal, by the desires and motions of the Inferior.

The second Book contains the Resolution of five Questions, about particular Passages in the Old Testament. The first is, of what Sipirit that which is said in the first Book of Kings, That the Spirit of God entred into Saul, is to be understood. Whether it was the Holy Ghost, or the Evil Spirit, wherewith he was possessed afterwards? After several Reflections and Digressions, St. Augustine concludes, that it must be understood of the Spirit of God; and that Saul was filled at first with the Spirit of God for a time, and afterwards was possessed with an evil Spirit. Yea, he thinks, that Saul had a Spirit of Prophecy at the time when he persecuted David, and he proves, that this Gift of the Holy Ghost may be found in Wicked Men.

The second Question is upon those Words attributed to God in the first Book of Kings, Chap. 17. It repenteth me that I have set up Saul. How God's Repenting can agree with his Prescience? St. Augustine answers, that the Repentance ascribed to God, is not accompanied with regret, as that of Men is; it is only an Alteration of Will. This Question puts him upon discoursing of God's Knowledge.

The third Question is about the Story of the Witch of Endor. St. Augustine does not decide whether it was the Soul of Samuel, or a Phantome that appeared to Saul; he thinks the latter to be more probable.

Both the other Questions are about two Passages in the Books of Kings, which have not much difficulty.

The last is concerning the Spirit of Error, whereby God permitted King Ahab to be deceived.

Dulcitius, a Tribune in Africa, having proposed eight Questions to St. Augustine, about some Matters which he had already treated of, he Collected in this Book, which he sent in Answer to his Questions, what he had said in his other Works.

The first Question was, Whether the Baptized that die in Sin, shall at any time be delivered from Damnation? St. Augustine answereth, No; and expounds a Passage of St. Paul, 1 Cor. Ch. 3. v. 11. where he speaks of the Fire which is to purifie the Faithful, by consuming the Evil which they shall have built upon the sound Foundation of Faith. He understandeth by Fire, that Affliction in this Life which purifies the Faithful from light Sins. He adds, that we may believe, that some such thing is done also in the other Life, towards those who die before they are cleansed from those light Sins: But he affirms, that none can believe without Impiety, that this can be apply'd to such as die with the guilt of those Sins that exclude Men from the Kingdom of God. This Answer is taken out of his Book of Faith.

St. Augustine. Tome VI.

The second Question of Works, hath great relation to the former. It was demanded, Whether the Oblations and Prayers that are made for the Dead avail them any thing? St. Augustine answers what he had said already in his Book concerning the Care that ought to be taken of the Dead, that the Oblations and Prayers are profitable to those who deserved in their Life-time, that Prayers should avail them. He addeth what he had said in his Enchiridion to Laurentius, 'That in all that time, between Death and the last Re-'surrection, the Souls shall be detained in secret and hid-'den places, where they shall either enjoy Rest, or suffer 'Pain, according as they have deserved, when they were 'in the World: That Souls in that Condition, are refresh-'ed by the Piety of the Living: When the Sacrifice of the 'Mediator is offered for them, or Alms are given in the 'Church in their Behalf. But, saith he, that availeth only 'them, who in their Life-time deserved by their Actions, 'that these things should be available to them, when they 'are out of the World..... Thus when the Sacrifices of the 'Altar are offered, or Alms given for all the Dead that 'were baptized, they become Thanksgivings for them that 'were extremely Good; they are Intercessions for those 'that were not great Sinners: And if these things do not 'ease those that were very wicked, yet they administer 'Comfort to the Living.

The third Question is, whether all Men shall Die before the Day of Judgment? St. Augustine answereth, no; according to what he had said before in the 193*d.* Letter to Mercator; He confesses, that this is a difficult Question.

The other five Questions are upon some hard Passages of Scripture; He repeats those Explications which he had given in his other Books. This Book was composed after the Enchiridion that was written in 421. and before the Book of Retractations written in 427. Which shews, that it must necessarily belong to the Year between; yet the Date of Easter of the Years wherein this Book was written, which is at the beginning, should regularly fall in the Year 430, or 419. wherefore there must have been a Mistake in the Cypher.

The small Treatise concerning the belief of those things which are not conceived, is placed again in this Volume, among the Treatises that are really St. Augustine's; though the Louvain Doctors after Erasmus, had put it among the Spurious Books. St Augustine does not mention it in his Retractations; but he doth in the 231*st.* Letter to Count Darius; and it is written in his Style, and is very worthy of him. He shews there, that many things are believed, though they are not seen. He particularly urges the Example of Friendship, and good Wishes which are believed without being seen. Whence he concludes, that if that Faith is taken away, which makes us believe things that we see not, Society would be utterly overthrown. He confesseth, that to believe a thing, we ought to have some Marks that such a thing is: But he affirms, that we believe not in Jesus Christ, without sufficient Proofs of his Authority; that the Church alone is a constant and visible Proof of the Truth of his Doctrine; since we see that accomplished which Christ and the Prophets foretold. That none can doubt of the Truth of the Prophetical Books, since the Jews, who were the Christians great Enemies, preserved them; who also are unquestionable Witnesses of their Antiquity. He concludes this Discourse with a short Exhortation to the New Christians, to keep the Faith of the Church inviolable. What is said in the 10*th.* Chapter concerning the demolishing of the Temples, shews, that this Treatise was Written, and Composed after Honorius his Law, that was dated in 399.

It has been observed already, that St. Augustine being yet but a Priest, expounded the Creed in a Council of African Bishops assembled at Hippo. This Discourse which he afterwards put in Writing, as he declares in his Retractations, contains an exact Exposition of the Articles of the Creed. We have it here intitled, Of Faith and the Creed.

In the Book of Faith and Good Works, St. Augustine refutes several Errors which he had read in some Books that had been sent to him. There it was affirmed, 1. That all were to be admitted to Baptism who desired to be baptized, without any Examination. 2. That it was sufficient to instruct them in the Articles of Faith, though they were not taught the Rules of Manners till after they had received the Sacrament. 3. That what Crime soever a baptized Christian might commit, and in what Condition soever he might die, yet he should be infallibly saved, after he had passed through the Fire. St. Augustine declares against the first Proposition, that though the Wicked are to be tolerated in the Church, yet Correction was not to be neglected, nor the Discipline of the Church suffered to relax. He confesses however, that Sinners ought to be reproved with Meekness and Charity. Against the second Proposition, he teacheth, that Sinners who persevered in their Wickedness, were by no means to be admitted to Baptism; Showing, that the Holy Scripture requireth Repentance before Baptism; that St. John gave Precepts concerning Manners to those which he baptized; and that this is the Temper of the Church, which appointed the Times and Ceremonies obſerved by the Catechumens, for no other end, but to be ſure, that they are well-diſpoſed to receive the Sacrament of Baptiſm. Laſtly of all, St. Auguſtine proves againſt the third Error, that whoſoever dieth in the State of Mortal Sin, without Repentance, is eternally Damned: And he anſwers the place of St. Paul, that was alledged to prove the contrary. This Treatiſe was Compoſed in 413. after the Book of the Spirit and the Letter. Garnerius ſuppoſeth, that St. Jerome is the Perſon whom St. Auguſtine diſputes with in this Book. But he cannot ſuſpect that Father as guilty of either the firſt or the ſecond Error: And it is altogether unlikely that it ſhould be St. Jerome whom St. Auguſtine refuteth concerning the third.

St. Auguſtine. Tome VI.

The Enchiridion, or Treatiſe of Faith, Hope, and Charity, was written at the Requeſt of Laurentius, a great Lord of Rome, and Brother to Dulcitius; who had deſired St. Auguſtine, to ſend him a ſmall Book, containing an Abridgment of the Chriſtian Religion. To ſatisfie him, St. Auguſtine dedicated to him this Book; wherein he reduceth all Religion to the Virtues of Faith, Hope, and Charity, becauſe a Man knoweth all that is compriſed in Religion, when he knows what is to be Believed, what is to be Hoped for, and what is to be Loved. He explains what is to be Believed, by keeping to the Method of the Creed, refuting the Errors, and Hereſies that are contrary to the Doctrine of the Church, without naming their Authors. He layeth down alſo moſt excellent Maxims, ſuch as theſe: That Faith does not ſtop at a curious Inquiry after Natural Things: That Errors of Right are more dangerous than Errors of Fact; that all Errors are not Sins; and that there are ſome things, which it ſignifies little whether they are known, or not. He enlargeth much upon Original Sin; upon the Fall of Man, and Angels; upon the Neceſſity of a Mediator; of Baptiſm, and Grace; upon the Diſtinction of Venial and Mortal Sins; upon the Eternity, and the Inequality of the Pains of the Damned, upon the Extent of the Will of God to ſave Men; upon Free-Will; and upon the State of Souls till the Day of Judgment. Having thus explained what concerns Faith, he comes to Hope; and he ſaith, that Chriſtians ought to Hope in God alone; and that whatſoever we Hope for, is comprehended in the Lord's Prayer, upon which he makes ſome Reflections. Laſtly, he treateth of Charity; without which he pretends, that no Man can be Righteous. To which he referrs all the Commandments of God, and Advices of the Goſpel. This Book was written after St. Jerome's Death, who dyed in 420. as is plain by the 87*th*. Chapter, where St. Auguſtine ſpeaks of him as one dead.

The Book, intituled, The Combat of a Chriſtian, has much the ſame Deſign with the foregoing. St. Auguſtine compoſed it ſoon after he was a Biſhop, in a plain Style, that it might be more proper to inſtill the Doctrine, and Precepts of Chriſtian Religion into thoſe Chriſtians who were not Skilful in the Latin Tongue. He exhorts them, at firſt, to fight againſt the Devil: Then he ſhows, that Men get the Victory over him, when they overcome their Paſſions, and bring their Bodies under Subjection; which is only done by ſubmitting to God, to whom every Creature ought to be ſubject, either Willingly, or out of Neceſſity. He adds, that in this Combat, Man is armed with Faith, and with the Aſſiſtances which Chriſt merited for us by his Death. At laſt, he runs through the Articles of the Creed, and refutes the contrary Hereſies.

The Book of Inſtruction for thoſe that have no Knowledge of our Religion, was written at the Requeſt of a Deacon of Carthage, who deſired of St. Auguſtine, Rules, and a Method to Catechize his People acceptably, and uſefully. The Father comforts him at the beginning, upon his being very often, not pleaſed with his own Diſcourſes, ſince it ſometimes happens, that a Diſcourſe which diſpleaſes the Speaker, is very acceptable to the Hearers. He adviſeth him to teach them cheerfully, and not to be tired with it: and then furniſhes him with Rules how to inſtruct them right in their Religion. He ſaith, in the firſt place, that perfect Inſtruction ſhould begin at the Creation of the World, and end with the preſent Age of the Church: But for this, there is no need of learning by heart, or reciting all the Books of the Bible; one needs only chuſe the beſt, the moſt admirable, and moſt diverting Paſſages. He layeth down, in the ſecond place, his uſual Rule, that every thing ought to be referred to Charity: that Care muſt be taken, that the Auditor may Believe what is ſpoken; Hope what he Believes, and Love what he Hopes for. And he would have him inſpired with a wholſome Fear of God's Judgments, and kept from all proſpects of temporal Intereſt, and Advantage that he might have by being a Chriſtian. He obſerves, that the ſame Method is not to be followed with the Learned, as with the Ignorant; and he lays down very prudent Rules how they are to be dealt withal. He ſhews what things commonly tire the Hearers; and he gives excellent Remedies how they may be avoided; and at laſt, makes two inſtructive Speeches, one pretty long, the other ſhorter, but compoſed with a great deal of Art, to ſerve for an Example, or Pattern of ſuch Inſtructions, as ought to be given. This Treatiſe ſhews, that to inſtruct Men well in Religion, is an harder Task than moſt Men imagine; and that the Method, formerly uſed, was nobler, and larger, than that which is now obſerved. This Book is of the Year 400, or thereabouts.

St. Auguſtine. Tome VI.

Though St. Auguſtine does not mention his Treatiſe of Continency in the Review of his Works, yet he owns it in the 262*d*. Epiſtle; and Poſſidius reckons it among his Works. This Book is a Diſcourſe upon theſe Words of the 140*th*. Pſalm. Set a Watch, O Lord, before my Mouth, and keep the Doors of my Lips. O let not my heart be inclined to any Evil Thing; let me not be occupied in ungodly Works, with the Men that work Wickedneſs. He ſhews, that that true Continency conſiſts in ſuppreſſing ones Paſſions; and he recommends the neceſſity of Grace to overcome them. He ſpeaks againſt the Proud who excuſe their Sins, and particularly againſt the Manichees, who charged their Sins upon an evil Nature that was in them. This Sermon is thought to be of the Year 395. or thereabouts.

Both the following Treatiſes were written againſt the Error of Jovinian. This Enemy of Virginity hath drawn aſide ſeveral Roman Virgins from their Deſign of continuing ſo, and perſuaded them to Marry; ſaying to them, Are you better than Suſanna, or Anna, or ſo many other Holy Women? Though Jovinian's Opinion was rejected at Rome, yet this Heretick's Diſciples gave out, that none could refute him without condemning Marriage. To undeceive thoſe that were of this Opinion, St. Auguſtine writ a Book, intituled, Of the advantage of Matrimony, before he undertook to ſpeak of the Excellency of Virginity. Wherein he ſaith firſt, that the Union betwixt the Husband and the Wife, is the moſt Ancient, and the moſt Natural. After that, he examineth a Queſtion, rather Curious than Uſeful, namely, how Men could have had Children, had they perſiſted in the State of Innocence. He obſerves a four-fold advantage in Marriage: The Society of both Sexes, the Procreation of Children, the good Uſe of Luſt, which is regulated by a proſpect of having Children, and the Fidelity which Husband and Wife preſerve towards each other. He ſaith, that every Union between a Woman and a Man, is not Marriage. He doth not think, That this Name is to be given to that Union, whoſe aim was only to ſatisfie their brutiſh Paſſion, if they endeavour to prevent their having Children. He declares, that Man guilty of Adultery, who ſhould abuſe a Virgin, when he has a deſign of Marrying another: As for the Young Woman, he judgeth her guilty of Sin, but not of Adultery, if ſhe is true to that Man, and deſigns not to Marry when he leaveth her: Nay, he preferrs her before ſeveral married Women who abuſe Matrimony by their Intemperance. He doth not excuſe from Venial Sins either the Man, or the Woman, who have another Proſpect in Marriage, than the begetting of Children. In a Word, he diſtinguiſhes three things in Marriage: The Fidelity which married Perſons owe one to the other, which is of natural Right; the Procreation of Children, which ought to be the end of Marriage; and the Sacrament, or myſterious Signification, which makes it indiſſoluble: For which Reaſon he determines, that though human Laws permit a Man to Marry again when he is divorced from a former Wife, yet it is not lawful for Chriſtians, to whom St. Paul forbids it. He concludes, that Marriage is of it ſelf a good Thing, but one of thoſe good Things which we ſhould not look after, but in order to a greater Good, or to avoid a greater Evil. That before Chriſt, the moſt Continent might Marry to multiply that People from whom the Meſſiah, was to be born; but now, as many as are able to contain do well not to Marry. That for this reaſon Men were permitted formerly to have ſeveral Wives, and never Women to have ſeveral Husbands, but now no Man is to have more than one Wife. That the Goſpel-Purity is ſo great in this Point, that a Deacon was not to be ordained, who had ever had more than one Wife. He approves their Opinion, who underſtand this Maxim in its whole Extent, and without Reſtriction, as St. Jerome doth by excepting thoſe who contracted a former Marriage before Baptiſm: For, ſaith he, Baptiſm doth indeed remit Sins; but here the Queſtion is not concerning a Sin. And as a young Woman that hath been defiled when ſhe was a Catechumen, cannot be conſecrated as a Virgin after Baptiſm, even ſo it hath been thought reaſonable that the Man who hath had more than one Wife, whether before, or after Baptiſm, ſhould be looked upon as wanting one neceſſary Qualification for Orders.

In Anſwer to Jovinian's Objection, he diſtinguiſhes the Habit from the Action of Virtue: This being Premiſed, he ſaith, that the old Patriarchs had an Habit of Continency, but did not practiſe it, becauſe it was not convenient to do it in their time; and ſo when the Queſtion is put to a Man that is not Married, Are you more perfect than Abraham? he ought to anſwer no; but Virginity is more perfect than conjugal Chaſtity: Now Abraham was endued with both theſe Virtues; for he had the Habit of Continency, and exerciſed conjugal Chaſtity. He adds, that Perſons are to be diſtinguiſhed from Virtues: One Perſon may have one Virtue in a higher Degree than another, and yet be

St. Auguſtine Tome VI.

be leſs Holy, becauſe he hath not other Virtues in the ſame Degree. Thus a diſobedient Virgin, is leſs to be eſteemed than a married Woman with the Virtue of Obedience. Laſt of all he exhorts Virgins not to be lifted up becauſe of the Excellency of their Condition, but to be conſtant in Humility.

The Book of Holy Virginity, came out preſently after that Of the Advantage of Matrimony. St. Auguſtine ſhews there, that Virginity is one of the moſt excellent Gifts of God, and that Humility is neceſſary to preſerve it. He exalteth the Excellency of Virgins conſecrated to God, by the Example of the Virginity of the Mother of God, who, according to him, had made a Vow of Continency before the Angel appeared to her. He refutes thoſe that condemn Matrimony, and thoſe that compare it with Celibacy. He does not think that Virginity is of Command, but of Advice: It ſhould not be choſen as a thing neceſſary to Salvation, but as a ſtate of greater Perfection. And this he proves by ſeveral Paſſages of Scripture, and explains a Paſſage of St. Paul, from which ſome concluded, that he recommended Virginity meerly upon account of the advantage of this preſent Life. He aſſerts alſo, that Virgins ſhall have a particular Reward in Heaven. At laſt, he exhorts them to Humility; propoſing ſeveral convincing Reaſons, and powerful Motives, to inſpire them with it. Then he recommends to them above all things, the Love of their Divine Spouſe, and ſpeaks of him in a very moving manner: 'Behold (ſaith he to them) the Beauty of your Spouſe! Think 'that he is Equal with his Father, and yet he was willing to 'ſubmit himſelf to his Mother: He is a King in Heaven, 'and a Slave upon Earth: He is the Creator of all things, 'and yet he ranked himſelf among the Creatures. Conſider both the Greatneſs and the Beauty of that which the 'Proud look upon with contempt: Behold with the Eyes 'of Faith the Wounds which he received upon the Croſs, 'the Blood of the dying God, who is the Price of our 'Redemption, and the Cauſe of our Salvation.... He ſeek'eth only the inward Beauty of your Soul: He gave you 'the power to become his Daughters: He deſires not the 'Handſomneſs of the Body, but Purity of Manners. None 'can deceive him, nor make him be jealous of you; and you 'may love him without fear of ever diſpleaſing him upon 'account of falſe ſuſpicions.' Both this and the foregoing Books were written in the Year 401.

They did well to joyn unto this the Book that treats Of the Advantages of Widowhood, which Eraſmus and others had inconſiderately rejected, as a Work that was none of St. Auguſtine's. St. Auguſtine, indeed, takes no notice of it in his Retractations; but that's not to be wondred at becauſe it is only a Letter to Juliana, which Poſſidius put into his Catalogue. * Philo and Bede quote it as St. Auguſtine's; and in the 15*th*. Chapter ſome other Pieces of St. Auguſtine's are quoted. This Book is an Inſtruction for Widows. He aſſerts there, that Widowhood is to be preferr'd before Marriage: Yet he doth not condemn Second Marriages, nor Third and Fourth; but only ſays, that it is a great Crime to Marry after the Vow of Virginity; though he judges thoſe Marriages to be good and valid, and blames thoſe who look upon them as adulterous. The Practice of the Church at that time was, to put them under Penance who Married after vowing Virginity; but their Marriages were not yet declared void, as is plain by the Sixteenth Canon of the Council of Chalcedon, and by ſeveral other Teſtimonies of the Ancients. The reſt of this Letter is full of Inſtructions to Juliana, and her Daughter Demetrias, who had already made Profeſſion of Virginity, as it is obſerved in the 19*th*. Chapter: And ſo this ſmall Treatiſe is of the Year 414. He bids them beware of the Pelagian Errors.

In both the Books Of Marriages which cannot be excuſed from Adultery, St. Auguſtine handleth this Nice and Difficult Queſtion, whether it be lawful either for the Man or the Woman to Marry after Divorce on the Account of Fornication? Pollentius, to whom theſe Books are directed, believed, that the Exception of the Caſe of Adultery, which we find in St. Matthew's Goſpel, was no leſs to be underſtood of a Permiſſion to Marry again, than of a Separation of Bodies: ſo that a Husband might not only leave his adulterous Wife, but alſo take another when he was divorced from the firſt. St. Auguſtine affirms on the contrary, That a Woman thus Divorced ought never to Marry again, no more than the Husband who cauſed her to be divorced. This whole Diſpute depends upon the Senſe of that Paſſage in St. Matthew, which excepteth the Cauſe of Fornication; and upon that of St. Paul, 1 Cor. 7. which ſaith that the Bond of Matrimony is indiſſoluble but by the Husband's Death; and that if the Wife is married to another while he liveth, ſhe committeth Adultery. St. Auguſtine enlarges much upon the Senſe of theſe two Paſſages. He endeavours to make the firſt to agree with his Opinion, which he groundeth eſpecially upon the ſecond. He anſwereth Pollentius's Arguments, and uſes ſeveral Reaſonings upon the Matter. He confeſſes in his Retractations, that he had not yet cleared that Point, but that there are ſome conſiderable Difficulties beſides, though he had given Light enough to reſolve them.

He further explaineth in the 1*ſt*. Book, another Paſſage in the ſame Epiſtle of St. Paul, concerning the Diſſolution of Marriage between Infidels. Pollentius held, that St. Paul abſolutely forbids Believing Husbands to put away their Unbelieving Wives: Whereas St. Auguſtine affirms, that it is only an Advice that he gives them, not to uſe the liberty they have to ſeparate. He concludes this Book with another Queſtion concerning the Catechumens, who fall into ſuch Diſeaſes as take away their Speech and Knowledge, whether they ſhould be Baptized or no? He ſaith, that they ought to be Baptized; though he doth not condemn thoſe that dare not hazard the Sacrament: and he goes ſo far, as to declare, that in ſuch Caſes thoſe very Catechumens may be Baptized, who are known to be in a habit of Sin, and who ought not to be admitted to Baptiſm at another time. He adds, that Penitents are to be dealt withal after the ſame manner, and they ſhould not be ſuffered to Die before they are Reconciled. In the 2*d*. Book, he treateth more at large than in the Firſt, Of the Indiſſolubility of Marriages, and examines ſeveral Queſtions upon that Subject. He concludes with an Exhortation to Huſbands that have left their Wives, to live in Continency; alledging the Example of Church-men, who abſtain ſo religiouſly, though they often were forced to take that Profeſſion upon them againſt their Wills. The rank which St. Auguſtine ſets theſe two Books in, in his Retractations, ſhews that he compoſed them in the Year 419.

St. Auguſtine Tome VI.

The two next Books are concerning Lying. There St. Auguſtine handleth this Queſtion, which was very famous in his time, Whether a Lye may be uſed upon ſome Occaſions. He confeſſeth in the 1*ſt*. Book, intitled, Of Lying, and written in 395. That this is a perplexing Queſtion, often diſturbing Conſciences; and that there ſeem to be ſome Occaſions, when in Civility; and ſometimes, out of Charity, officious Lyes may be lawful. He ſays, that he will forthwith examine the Queſtion, that he may find out ſome Light in ſo obſcure a Matter; and that at laſt, he will declare for the Truth; being perſuaded, that though he were miſtaken in ſo doing, yet his Miſtake would prove leſs dangerous; becauſe Error can never do leſs miſchief than when Men are deceived by a great Love of the Truth, and by oppoſing Falſhood with too much Zeal.

After this Preface, he defines what Lying is. He confeſſes, that Ironies are not Lyes; That every Untruth which a Man may ſpeak, is not a Lye, if Men believe that what they ſay is True; and, that to Lye, is to ſpeak what we do not think, with a Deſign to deceive. Whereupon he examines this ſubtle Queſtion, Whether a Man ſpeaking what he knoweth to be falſe, becauſe he is ſure that he to whom he ſpeaks will not believe it, tells a Lye? And on the other ſide, Whether a Man that ſpeaketh a Truth with a Deſign to deceive him whom he ſpeaks to, becauſe he knows that he will not believe him, is free from Lying? St. Auguſtine ſaith, That neither of theſe can be taxed with Lying; becauſe the one deſign'd to perſuade the Truth by telling an Untruth; and the other ſpake a Truth, to perſuade a Falſity; but neither can be excuſed from Imprudence and Raſhneſs. Then he comes to the Queſtion which he propoſed to himſelf, Whether a Man might Lye upon ſome Occaſions? Thoſe that held the Affirmative, alledged ſeveral Examples of Lyes, which ſeem to be both approved and commended in the Old Teſtament, and added a Reaſon from common Senſe. Should any one (ſaid they) flee to your Houſe for ſhelter, and it is in your power to ſave him from Death, by telling a Lye, would you ſee him unjuſtly murthered, rather than tell a Lye? If a ſick Man aſketh you a Queſtion about ſomething that he muſt not know; yea, ſuppoſing that he will be the worſe if you give him no Anſwer; would you then utter a Truth that might occaſion Death? or will you keep ſilence, when you may eaſe him by telling a charitable Lye? St. Auguſtine oppoſes to theſe Reaſons thoſe Paſſages of Holy Scripture which forbid Lying without Reſtriction, and then anſwereth the Examples out of the Old Teſtament; That the Righteous who ſeem to have Lyed, did not intend that what they ſaid ſhould be underſtood in the uſual Senſe, but that by a Prophetical Spirit they meant to diſcover thoſe things that were ſignified by thoſe Figures; as for other Perſons which are not in the number of the Righteous, the Holy Scripture never approves their Actions, but by comparing it with a greater Evil. He affirms, that there is no Example of Lying in the New Teſtament, and endeavours to anſwer the Inferences which they pretend to draw from the Inſtances of the Diſpute betwixt St. Peter and St. Barnabas, and betwixt St. Peter and St. Paul, as well as from the Circumciſing of Timothy. Laſtly, that he might put an End to all the Reaſons alledged from Neceſſity or Advantage, he maintains that we muſt never do Evil, what Advantage ſoever we may get by it: That ſo the whole Queſtion is, Whether Lying be Evil or no? And not whether it is ſometimes profitable? Whence he concludes, that no Lye is to be told either to preſerve our Chaſtity or our Life, or for the Good of others, or for any other reaſon whatſoever; no, not the eternal Salvation of our Neighbour, becauſe that Sin cannot be imputed to a Man, which he cannot prevent but by committing himself another Sin. To explain what he had said more at large, he reckons up eight sorts of Lyes; and having laid this down for a Rule, that we must depend altogether upon Gospel-Precepts, he enlargeth upon those that make against Lying.

* [Who this Philo is, I don't know; it ſeems to be a Fault of the Preſs: Philo Carpathius, mention'd in the laſt Volume, dy'd ſeveral Years before St. Auguſtine wrote this Letter to Juliana.]

St. Augustine. Tome VI.

The second Book against Lying, is written upon the same Principles, but long after the first; for St. Augustine wrote it in 420, at the Request of Consentius, who asked him, whether it was not lawful to make use of Lyes, to discover the Priscillianists, who concealed their Error by Lying, and horrid Execrations? St. Augustine condemns not only the Practice of the Priscillianists, but also the Zeal of the Catholicks, who made use of Lyes to discover the Men of that Sect. He positively condemns the Catholicks Action, who feigned themselves Priscillianists, more than that of the Priscillianists, who feigned themselves Catholicks. From hence he takes an opportunity to enter upon the general Question concerning Lying; and he affirms, that it is never allowed upon any Pretence whatsoever; because whatsoever is Sin in its own nature, can never be rectified by any good Intention. He shews by the Examples of David, and Lot, that we are not always to imitate the Actions of Righteous Men. He excuseth Abraham, and Isaac from Lying. As for Jacob's Action, he saith, it was no Lye but a Mystery: That there is no Example of any Lye in the New-Testament, because Tropes, Parables, and Figures, cannot be called Lyes, no more than what is said of Jesus Christ; that in his Discourse with the Pilgrims, who went to Emmaus, he made as though he would have gone further; that we are no more to imitate Thamar's Lye, than Judas's Fornication; that God rewarded not the Lye of the Egyptian Midwives, but their compassion towards the Israelites Children. The same must be said of Rahab's Action. In one word; these Examples of Lyes taken out of the Old Testament, are no Lyes, or if they be, they cannot be excused. Lastly, Whatsoever Pretence they may have, Men are never permitted to betray the Truth for any Advantage, how great soever it may be, because they are never allowed to sin. And indeed, as St. Augustine observes once again, it is a very dangerous thing to allow Lying upon some occasions, because this Maxim may be stretched too far, and upon the same Principles, Perjury, and Blasphemy may in time be allowed.

St. Augustine confesses, in his Retractations, that both these Treatises are very intricate; and that he had a design himself to suppress them.

The Book Of the Business of Monks, is an excellent Satyr against some Monks, who thought themselves exempted from working with their Hands, because Christ hath said, that we should take no care for the Morrow, and so contented themselves with Praying, Reading, and Singing. St. Augustine opposes to them both the Example, and the Authority of St. Paul, who plainly says, That whosoever will not Work, ought not to Eat. He refutes the false Distinctions which they made to shift it off. He proves, that the true Sense of that Passage of the Gospel which they quoted, did not exempt Men from Working, but only banished the Ingratitude of worldly Men; that to labour with ones Hands is not inconsistent with Prayer; that it is so far from being unworthy of the Monastical State, that it is part of it: For, saith he, if a Rich Man makes himself a Monk, what can there be more perfect, than having quitted great Estates, to be obliged to Labour to get Necessaries. And if this new Convert be Poor, and of mean Condition, would not that be a Criminal Nicety, to desire to live more at ease in a Monastery than he did before in the World? Afterward he draws the Picture of those Idle Monks, whom he calls Hypocrites in Monastical Habits, with whom the Devil hath overspread the World. They travel (saith he) from Province to Province, without any Mission; they have no fix'd Habitation, and abide in no place; they continually alter their Station: Some carry Relicks about, (if they be Relicks,) and make an Advantage of them: Others take much upon them, by reason of their Habit and Profession. Some say they are going to see their Kindred, who, as they have heard, dwell in such a Country: But they all beg, and take it ill if you give them not, either to supply the wants of such a Poverty as enricheth them, or to Recompence a seeming and counterfeit Honesty. EXIGUNT AUT SUMPTUS LUCROSÆ EGESTATIS AUT SIMULATÆ PRETIUM SANCTIATIS. Lastly, St. Augustine compares his own Condition with that of the Monks, affirming, that he would chuse the Life of a Regular Monastery, to work at certain hours with his Hands, and to have others for Prayer and Pious Reading, rather than to be subject to the Fatigues of his Episcopal Office, and to be continually entangled with the secular Businesses of other Men. Towards the latter end, he laughs at the Fancy of those Monks who would never cut their Hair. Nothing is more pleasant than the Answer which they made to that Passage of the Apostle, where he forbids Men to let their Hair grow. This (said they is spoken) for Ordinary Men, but not for those that have made themselves Eunuchs for the Kingdom of Heaven. St. Augustine makes Sport with that ridiculous Notion of the Monks; shewing them that they are Men as well as others. This Book is in the Retractations, among those that were written about the Year 400.

St. Augustine. Tome VI.

The next Book is concerning the Predictions of Dæmons; wherein St. Augustine explains how they may Imagine and Foretell things, and how they often Mistake; shewing at the same time, that Religion permits us not to Consult with them. He supposes that Dæmons have very subtile Bodies. This small Treatise was composed in an Easter-Week, of some of the Years betwixt 406, and 411.

The Book of the Care which they ought to have of the Dead, was written to answer that Question which St. Paulinus, Bishop of Nola, had proposed to St. Augustine in the Year 421. namely, Whether a dead Man was any thing the better for being buried in the Church of some holy Martyr. To this Question is added another, To what purpose are the Church's Prayers for the Dead, seeing that according to the Apostle's Maxim, all Men shall be judged according to what they have done in this Life? St. Augustine answereth, that the Book of Maccabees establishes the Custom of Praying for the Dead; and, that though nothing of it were found in the Old Testament, yet the Custom of the Church is sufficient to authorize that Practice, which is done in the Administration of the Eucharist. He is persuaded, that the Honour of Burial doth neither Good nor Hurt to the Soul of the dead Person; but yet that this Duty is to be pay'd to the Dead, as a Testimony of the Respect which is due to the Memory of pious Persons: That to be buried in a Martyr's Church, doth nothing of it self; but it serves to put the Faithful in mind of Praying for the Dead, because the Devotion for the Martyr increaseth the Fervency of Prayer. But that commonly the Care of decent Burial proceeds from the Respect which Men have for the Body: That Martyrs had Reason to lay aside that Care: That the Scripture commends those that are careful to bury the Dead, because it is a Token of their Tenderness and Affection towards their Brethren. St. Augustine speaks afterwards concerning Apparitions of the Dead, by Dreams or otherwise; and having mention'd several Examples, he examineth how they come to pass. He thinks it more rational, to attribute them to the working of Angels, who form those Ideas in the Imagination, than to the Souls of the Dead. He does not believe that they are present, or that they take any notice at that time of the things that are done, but that they are acquainted with them afterwards, either by Angels, or by the Souls of those that are dead; or last of all, by the Inspiration of God. And by this last means, he believes that the Martyrs come to know the Necessities of the Faithful, and to hear their Prayers. He does not question but Martyrs help the Living; but he knows not whether they do it by themselves, or whether God doth it by Angels, at their Request. He confesseth, that we cannot know by which of these means, or whether by both, the Martyrs work Miracles.

He concludes, that of all that is done for the Dead, nothing availeth them where they are, but the Offering of the Eucharist, Prayers and Almsdeeds: That these things are not useful to all, but only to such as deserved in their Lifetime, to reap Benefit by them after their Death: That however, these things are performed for all Christians that were Baptized, because we cannot distinguish who shall be the better for it or not: That it is better that they should be superfluous to some than that they should be wanting to others: That these Duties are with Reason more exactly performed for our Friends and Kindred, that we may receive the same Assistance from our other Relations: That the Decency of Burial availeth nothing to the Salvation of the Dead, but it is a Duty of Humanity which is not to be neglected.

The Discourse of Patience, is one of those that St. Augustine mentions in the 231st. Letter. He treateth there of that Virtue rather Dogmatically than Pathetically. He takes notice at first, that God's Patience is of another nature from that of Men, because he cannot suffer. Then he distinguishes true Patience, which is a Virtue, from the Counterfeit, which is a Vice. Ambitious Men, Covetous, Luxurious Men, and Robbers, endure patiently extremity of Pain and Misery; yet want the Virtue of Patience, because they suffer upon an ill account. None but such as suffer for a good Cause, can be said to be truly Patient. But if wicked Men endure all things for the Goods of this World, what ought not the Righteous to suffer for Eternal Life? then he proposes the Examples both of Job and of the Martyrs; to the which he opposes the Impatience of the Donatists, who killed themselves, that they might be accounted Martyrs; shewing, that Self-Murther is a greater Sin than Murthering of another; 'For (saith he) a Parricide is more 'guilty than a Man-slayer, because he kills a Person that 'is nearer to him than other Men; By the same reason, he 'must be thought the greater Sinner who kills himself, be'cause none are so near to us as our selves.' Lastly, He maintains, that true Patience is not from our own strength, but from God's help; because true Patience is grounded upon Charity, which is the Gift of God. This puts St. Augustine upon discoursing of Grace, and proving that it is not given to our Merits; but that it prevents them, and goeth before

Faith

St. Auguſtine Tome VI.

Faith it ſelf, which is the beginning of all good Works. This ſhort Diſcourſe was written about the Year 418.

Of the four following Sermons upon the Creed, there is none but the firſt which comes near St. Auguſtine's Style, as it is obſerved in the Preface. It contains a clear and ſuccinct Explication of the Articles of the Creed. He ſaith, upon the Article of the Church, that there is but one only true Catholick Church, which oppoſes all Hereſies, and can never be overcome. Upon the Article of the Forgiveneſs of Sins, he diſtinguiſheth two ſorts of Sins, Light and Great Sins; Baptiſm remitteth both. After Baptiſm, Light Sins, from which no Man can be abſolutely free, are remitted by the Lord's Prayer: But great Sins, as Adultery, and other Enormous Crimes, cannot be remitted but by an humbling Penance. In this Creed we find the Article of Everlaſting Life, which gives Grounds of Suſpicion, that this Diſcourſe is none of St. Auguſtine's; becauſe this Article is not in the Book of Faith, and the Creed, which is certainly his.

The Benedictines have Reaſon to Print the three other Sermons upon the ſame Subject, in a ſmall Character, and to obſerve as they do, that they are written in a very different Style from St. Auguſtine's; yet they believe them to be ancient, and written by ſome Diſciple of St. Auguſtine, during the Vandals Perſecution againſt the Catholicks, which is mentioned in the ſecond Sermon.

They likewiſe put into the ſame rank three other Sermons, which they believe to belong to the ſame Author; the Sermon of the fourth Day of the Week, Or, Of the Dreſſing of the Lord's Vineyard; a Diſcourſe concerning the Flood, and the Sermon of the Time of the Barbarians Perſecution; which they have alſo Printed in a ſmall Character.

They have left the Sermon of the New Song under St. Auguſtine's Name; but they ſay in the Preface, that they doubted whether it was his. They might have paſſed the ſame Cenſure of the Sermon of Diſcipline, and that of the Uſefulneſs of Faſting; which I cannot find to be any more than the others of St. Auguſtine's Style: Nay, I ſcarce believe, that the Sermon of the taking of the City of Rome, which is the laſt in this Volume, is truly St. Auguſtine's; yet every Man is left to judge as he pleaſes, that ſhall read it.

The Treatiſes which you find in the Supplement, are certainly none of St. Auguſtine's: The Benedictines have made an exact Critick of them in their Prefaces, and have Collected all that could be ſaid or gueſs'd at concerning their Authors.

The firſt is a Collection of one and twenty Queſtions, gather'd without any Order by a very Ignorant Author. Moſt of them are about Philoſophical Matters, and compoſed of Extracts out of ſeveral of St. Auguſtine's Books.

The Sixty five following Queſtions and Anſwers, which are found in ſome Manuſcripts under Oroſius's and St. Auguſtine's Names, are in a better order than the former, and concerning more Theological Matters; but they are Extracts out of ſeveral Paſſages: The firſt twelve are taken out of a Treatiſe falſly attributed to St. Auguſtine, Concerning the Trinity and Unity of God. Moſt of them that follow, are Extracts out of St. Eucherius. Some are out of St. Auguſtine's Treatiſe upon Geneſis. They end with a Citation of a Paſſage of St. Auguſtine againſt thoſe who deſire to be Biſhops, that they might Command, taken out of the 19*th*. Chapter of the 19*th*. Book of the City of God; which is quoted as of a Father ancienter than himſelf: One of the Fathers, ſaith he, hath ſaid very elegantly, againſt thoſe that deſire to Command: Let thoſe, ſaith he, who would Command rather than Serve others, know, that they are not Biſhops.

The Book of Faith to Peter, belongs to St. Fulgentius, to whom it is aſcribed in a Manuſcript of Corby, above one thouſand years Old, as well as in another later. It is cited under his Name by Ratramnus, in his Treatiſe of the Body and Blood of Chriſt. Both Iſidore, and Honorius of Autun, do likewiſe mention a Treatiſe of St. Fulgentius, containing the Rule of Faith; which is not different from this.

The Book of the Spirit and Soul, which is a Collection of Paſſages from ſeveral Authors, is attributed to Hugo de S. Victore by Trithemius, and by Vincentius Bellovacenſis, and Printed among this Author's Works. Yet the great number of Extracts taken out of the very Works of Hugo de S. Victore makes it queſtionable, whether it be his. St. Thomas aſcribes it to a Ciſtercian Monk. The Benedictines believe that it was written by Alcherus, a Friend of Iſaac's, Abbot of Stella, to whom this Man directed a Letter of the Soul. In the Bibliotheca Ciſterciana, it is attributed to Iſaac, and it is obſerved that he publiſhed it under Alcherus's Name; but it is not likely that Abbot Iſaac would inſert a part of his own Letter into this Treatiſe.

The Treatiſe of Friendſhip is an Epitome, or rather an Extract out of the Treatiſe of Aelredus Rievallenſis, which is found among that Author's Works.

The Book of the Subſtance of Love, is made up of two ſmall Treatiſes among the Works of Hugo de S. Victore. That of the Love of God, is a Collection of Paſſages of this ſame Author's, out of St. Bernard, and St. Anſelm. Vincentius Bellovacenſis cites it under Peter Comeſtor's Name.

The Soliloquies that are here, are not thoſe of St. Auguſtine, which are in the firſt Volume of his Works: Theſe are made up out of Paſſages of the Soliloquies and Confeſſions of St. Auguſtine, and the Books of Hugo de S. Victore. There is the firſt Chapter of the fourth Lateran Council held in the Year 1198. St. Auguſtine. Tome VI.

It is proved in the Preface to the Book of Meditations, that they cannot be St. Auguſtine's. Many of them are attributed to St. Anſelm; but the Benedictines have proved that they are rather written by John Abbot of Feſcamp, who lived in the time of the Emperor Henry III. to whoſe Widow he directs a Letter, publiſhed by Father Mabillon in the firſt Volume of his Analecta, from another Manuſcript of the Abby of St. Arnoul of Metz, where this Treatiſe of Meditations is mentioned, part whereof is found in the ſame Manuſcript.

The following Treatiſe of the Contrition of the Heart, is taken out of the Meditations attributed to St. Anſelm.

The Manual is Compoſed likewiſe of Extracts out of St. Anſelm's Works, and St. Bernard's Hugo's de S. Victore, and Alcuinus; there are alſo ſome Paſſages of St. Auguſtine, St. Cyprian, St Gregory, and of Iſidore of Seville. Part of this Book is in the next Book, intituled the Looking-Glaſs: Another part of it is the Extract of a Prayer which is in the Manuſcript of Corby, which containeth the Works of Abbot John.

The Looking-Glaſs makes a part of the Confeſſion of Faith, which Chiffletius publiſhed under Alcuinus's Name; yet it is Compoſed of Paſſages out of Alcuinus's own Works.

The next Book is intituled, The Looking-Glaſs of a Sinner. The Author citeth a Sentence of Odo Cluniacenſis, in Commendation of St. Martin. He uſeth the Term of Prebend, and he hath taken ſome places out of the Prayer of Hugo de S. Victore, out of the Book of the Spirit and Soul already mentioned, and out of the Book of Conſcience, aſcribed to St. Bernard. The Book of the threefold Habitation is of the ſame nature; and there are the ſame Notions. It is very likely that all theſe Treatiſes of Piety belong to the ſame Author.

The Book intituled, The Ladder of Paradiſe, attributed to St. Bernard, and intituled in his Works, the Ladder of the Cloiſter; or, a Treatiſe how to Pray; is written by Guigo [or Guido] Carthuſianus, as appears by the Letter that ſerves for a Preface, taken out of the Manuſcript of the Carthuſian Houſe in Colen.

Honorius of Autun, in his Book of Luminaries, mentions a Book which he had written, intituled, Of the Knowledge of Life; or, Of the true Life. This here bears the ſame Title, and has the Style and Genius of this Author; as is proved in the Preface.

The Book of a Chriſtian Life, was formerly reſtored by Holſtenius, to one Faſtidius, a Britain, who is the true Author of it; as we learn not only by the ancient Manuſcript belonging to the Monaſtery of Mount-Caſſin, by which Holſtenius Printed it at Rome, in 1633. but alſo by the Authority of Gennadius, who aſcribes it to him, and who obſerves that this Author was a Britain.

In this Book there are ſeveral Footſteps of Pelagius's Errors; he lived much about the ſame time.

The Book of Wholſome Inſtructions, is here reſtored upon the Credit of an ancient Manuſcript, in the Library of M. Colbert, to Paulinus Patriarch of Aquileia; who lived about the latter end of the Ninth Century.

* [This ſeems to be a miſtake of the Preſs: this Paulinus, or as it is in the French Paulus was Contemporary with Charles the Great, aſſiſted at the Council of Francfort, and dy'd according to Dr. Cave, in the Year 804].

The Author of the Book, Of the Twelve Abuſes of the Age, is not known; it is as wrongfully attributed to St. Auguſtine as to St. Cyprian: only it is obſerved in the Preface, that this Book is quoted by Jonas Biſhop of Orleans, who was ancienter than Hincmar, who writ a Book bearing the ſame Title, different from that mentioned by Flodoardus: Pamelius found a Manuſcript, having in the Margin the Name of Evrard, inſtead of St. Auguſtine; but this Evrard is not known.

They did not Print the two Treatiſes of the Seven Deadly Sins, and of the Seven Gifts of the Holy Spirit, which F. Vignier publiſhed under St. Auguſtine's Name, in the firſt Part of his Supplement, becauſe they are amongſt the Works of Hugo de S. Victore.

The Treatiſe of the Conflict betwixt Virtues and Vices was firſt aſcribed to St. Auguſtine, then to St. Leo, then to St. Ambroſe, and at laſt to Iſidore of Seville: but here it is reſtored to its true Author Ambroſius Autpertus, a Benedictine Monk [of the Monaſtery of St. Vincent] upon the Vulturnus near Benevento. This Treatiſe is mentioned in his Life, which is in the Acts of the Benedictines, Age III. at the Year 778. The Style of this Treatiſe is very like that of this Author's Commentary upon the Revelations.

Of the ſame Nature is the Book of Sobriety and Charity, and the Author of it is unknown. There Drunkenneſs is particularly reproved. This Book is well enough written, and ſeemeth to me to be ancient.

St. Auguſtine. Tome VI.

The Benedictines prove in their Preface to the Book of true and falſe Repentance, that this Book has not St. Auguſtine's Style, though it hath been cited under his Name by Gratian, by the Maſter of the Sentences, Petrus Bleſenſis, and ſeveral others.

The Treatiſe of Antichriſt, is likewiſe among the Works of Alcuinus and Rabanus. Rupertus cites it without naming the Author. The Manuſcripts attribute it to Alcuinus, and it agrees well enough with his other Writings. It contains ſeveral Circumſtances relating to Anti-Chriſt, and the End of the World, which he deſcribeth with as much Confidence as if he had learned it by Revelation.

After this Treatiſe comes a Prayer, or rather an Imprecation out of ſeveral Verſes of the Pſalms. It is intituled in a Manuſcript of the King's Library, The Pſalter of Pope John, made at Vienna. John the XXIId. is thought to be the Man meant by that Title.

The following Treatiſe upon the Magnificat, is a Fragment of the Treatiſe of Hugo de S. Victore, upon this Hymn.

That of the Virgin's Aſſumption, is a Sermon of ſome Author of the twelfth Century, or thereabouts; which teacheth that the Bleſſed Virgin is in Heaven, both Soul and Body.

Both the Diſcourſes concerning Viſiting the Sick, contain uſeful Rules to teach Prieſts how they ſhould behave themſelves towards Sick Perſons; but they are very late. Both the Diſcourſes of the Comfort for the Dead, are of the ſame Nature, and it may be of the ſame Author.

The Treatiſe of Chriſtian Behaviour is a Collection of Notions taken out of St. Eloi or Eligius Biſhop of Noyon, and Cæſarius. The Diſcourſe upon the Creed, is likewiſe a Collection of Remarks drawn out of Ruffinus, Cæſarius, St. Gregory, Ivo Carnutenſis, and others. The Sermon upon Eaſter-Eve, about the Paſchal-Lamb, and that upon the 41*ſt*. Sermon, are among the Books falſly attributed to St. Jerome.

St. Auguſtine. Tome VI.

[What this Book upon the 41*ſt*. Sermon ſhou'd be, I cannot tell; it is falſe Printed in all probability, but not having this Benedictine Edition of St. Auguſtine by me, I could not alter it.

The three Sermons to the Novices, concerning Unction, Baptiſm, and Waſhing of the Feet, are not like St. Auguſtine's Writings, though they are attributed to him in very ancient Manuſcripts.

The Treatiſe of the Creation of the firſt Man, is inſerted entire into the Book of the Spirit and the Soul. It is among St. Ambroſe's Works, intituled a Treatiſe of the Dignity of the firſt Man; and among Alcuinus's it is intituled, Thoughts of the Bleſſed Albinus a Levite, upon theſe words of Geneſis, Let us make Man after our own Image.

The Sermon of the Vanity of this preſent Age, is inſerted into the Treatiſe of Chriſtian Behaviour, the Author of the Sermon upon the contempt of the World is not known. That about the Advantage of Diſcipline belongs to Valerianus Cemelienſis: It is not known who was the Author of the Sermons of Obedience, Humility, Prayer, Alms, and that of the Generality of Alms-deeds. The ſmall Diſcourſe of the twelve Prayers ſpoken of in the 21*ſt*. Chapter of the Revelations, belongs perhaps to Amatus a Monk, of Mount-Caſſin, or rather an Extract of Bede's Commentary upon that Paſſage in the Revelations.

Finally, the Sermons to the Brethren that live in the Wilderneſs, are the Work of ſome Modern Monk, who was ſo imprudent as to publiſh them under St. Auguſtine's Name, though it be as clear as the day, that they are not of this Father. Baronius obſerves, that they were Compos'd by an Impoſtor, and that they are full of Fables, Falſities, and Lyes. Bellarmine ſaith, that the Style of them is Childiſh, Courſe, and Barbarous. There are ſeveral Paſſages out of St. Auguſtine, Cæſarius and St. Gregory. It is probable, that the Author was a Flemming.

The Seventh TOME.

Tome VII.

THE ſeventh Volume contains St. Auguſtine's great Work of the City of God. He undertook it about the Year 413. after the taking of Rome by Alaric King of the Goths, to refute the Heathens who attributed that Misfortune to the Chriſtian Religion. This Work held him ſeveral Years, by reaſon of many intervening Buſineſſes which he could not put off; ſo that he did not finiſh it before the Year 426. It is divided into two and twenty Books, whereof the firſt five refute thoſe who believe that the worſhip of the Gods is neceſſary for the Good of the World; and affirmed, that all the Miſchiefs lately happened, proceeded from no other Cauſe, but the aboliſhing of that Religion. The next five are againſt thoſe who confeſſing that the ſame Calamities have been in all Ages; yet pretend that the worſhip of the Heathen Divinities was profitable to a future Life. Thus the ten firſt Books are to Anſwer both theſe Chimerical Opinions, which are contrary to the Chriſtian Religion. But leſt they ſhould reproach him with having refuted the Opinions of others, without eſtabliſhing the Chriſtian Religion, the other part of this Work is allotted to that purpoſe, and it conſiſts of twelve Books, though he ſometimes eſtabliſheth our belief in the former ten, and ſo in the twelve others he ſometimes correcteth the Errors of our Adverſaries. In the four firſt of theſe twelve, he deſcribes, the Original of the two Cities; the one of God, and the other of the World. In the four next, their Progreſs; And in the four laſt, their Ends: And ſo, though all the 22. Books do equally treat of both Cities, yet this Work has its Name from the better, and they are commonly called, The Books of the City of God. This is the Account which St. Auguſtine gives, both of the Subject and of the Occaſion of theſe Books in his Retractations. Let us now examine more particularly what is moſt remarkable in each Book; for it is a Work made up of a great variety of very learned and very curious Things.

In the firſt Book, he ſhews, that inſtead of imputing to the Chriſtians, the Deſolation and the Taking of Rome, the Heathen ought rather to aſcribe to the ſpecial Favour of Jeſus Chriſt, that the Barbarians, only out of Reverence to his Name, ſpared all thoſe that had retired into the Churches. He pretends, that there are no examples in the Wars of the Heathen, to ſhew that the Enemies who ſpoiled a Town taken by Storm, ſpared thoſe who took Sanctuary in the Temples of their Gods. This puts St. Auguſtine upon asking, why this Favour of God was extended to thoſe Ungodly Men that fled into the Churches, who feigned themſelves to be Chriſtians; and why the good were involved in the ſame Miſchief with the wicked. He confeſſes, that both the Good and the Evil Things of this World are common both to Good and Evil Men; but the difference conſiſts in the Uſe which they make of them. He obſerves, That perhaps good Men probably are puniſhed with the wicked, becauſe they took no care to reprove and to correct them; and that however good Men loſe nothing by loſing the good things of this World; that a Chriſtian ought to be eaſily comforted for want of Burial, ſeeing that this doth him neither good nor hurt: And he comforteth the Virgins that had been raviſhed in that diſorder; ſhewing, that they loſt neither the Chaſtity of the Soul, nor the Purity of the Body; He excuſeth thoſe that killed themſelves, rather than endure that diſhonour. But he ſhews at the ſame time, That this Action ſo much admired by the Heathen, is contrary, both to Reaſon and to the Laws of Nature; and that it is never lawful to kill our ſelves upon any account whatſoever. He anſwers the Examples of ſome Holy Women who threw themſelves into the River, to eſcape the Violence of thoſe that would have raviſhed them. He ſaith, that they might have been induced to that, by the Spirit of God, as Sampſon was. He concludes with a deſcription of the Depravation of the Romans, and the Diſorders of their Manners, at that time.

Tome VII.

In the Second Book he affirms, that the corruption of Manners, which is the greateſt of Miſchiefs, was always reigning in Rome, and that the Gods they worſhipped, were ſo far from preſcribing them Laws, for the Reformation of their Manners, that on the contrary they encouraged them to Vice, by their Examples, and by their Ceremonies, that were uſed in their Worſhip.

In the third Book he goes back as far as the Siege of Troy, and then takes a view of the principal Events which happened to the People of Rome, to convince the moſt Stubborn, that their Gods preſerved them not from the ſame Diſaſters and Calamities which the Heathen now imputed to the Chriſtian Religion.

In the fourth Book he ſhews that the increaſe of the Roman Empire can be attributed neither to all the Divinities which they adored, nor to any one in particular: That however, no Empire is to be called Happy, which is increaſed only by War, as the Roman Empire was: That great Empires without Juſtice, were but great Robberies; and that the true God alone, is the ſole Diſpenſer of the Kingdoms of the Earth.

He proſecuteth the ſame Subject in the fifth Book; and proves, in the beginning, that the greatneſs of Empires depends not upon Chance, nor upon a particular Conjunction of the Stars, which gives him occaſion to ſpeak of Deſtiny and to refute Judicial Aſtrology at large. He acknowledges a Deſtiny, if by this Term is meant a ſeries, and concatenation of all Cauſes, which God foreſaw from all Eternity; but he adviſes Men rather not to uſe that Word which may have an ill Senſe. He endeavours to make God's Fore-knowledge, and the Infallibility of thoſe Events, which he foreſees, to agree with Man's Free-will. Then from this Diſpoſition of Things, he comes to enquire into the Cauſes of the Roman Victories, and he meets with none more probable than their Honeſty. He confeſſes, that God rewarded warded their moral Virtues with those sorts of Recompences; adding. that thereby God made the Inhabitants of the eternal City, to know what Recompence they were to expect for their Christian Virtues. Since the counterfeit Virtues of the Heathen were so well rewarded, that he set this Example before their Eyes, to teach them how much they ought to be in love with their Heavenly Country for an immortal Life, since the Inhabitants of an Earthly Country were so much in love with it, for an human, and a mortal Glory, and how hard they were to Labour for that Heavenly Country, since the Romans had taken such great Pains for their Earthly One. 'He examineth afterwards, 'wherein consists the true Happiness of Christian Kings, 'and Princes: And he shews, that they are not Happy for 'having reigned long, for dying in Peace, and leaving their 'Children Successors of their Crowns, nor for the Victories which they obtained, because such Advantages are 'common to them with ungodly Kings: But that Christian Princes are said to be Happy, when they set up Justice, 'when in the midst of the Praises that are given them, and 'the Honours that are payed unto them, they are not 'swell'd with Pride, when they submit their Power to the 'Sovereign Power of God, and use it to make his Worship to flourish. When they fear, love, and worship God; 'when they preferr, before this which they now enjoy, 'that wherein they are not affraid to meet with any Competitors; when they are slow to Punish, and ready to 'Forgive; when they punish only for the good of the Publick, and not to satisfie their Revenge; and when they 'forgive purely that Men may be Corrected, and not that 'Crimes may be Countenanced; when being obliged to 'use Severity, they temper it with some Actions of Meekness, or Clemency; when they are so much the more 'temperate in their Pleasures, by how much they have a 'greater Liberty to exceed; when they affect to Command 'their Passions rather than all the Nations of the World, 'and they do all these things, not out of Vain-Glory, but 'to obtain eternal Happiness; and, in short, when they 'are careful to offer unto God, for their Sins the Sacrifice 'of Humility, Mercy and Prayer.' These, saith St. Augustine, are the Christian Princes whom we call Happy: Happy even in this World by Experience, and really Happy, when what we look for, shall come. Finally, he proposes the Examples of some Christian Emperors, and particularly of Constantine, and Theodosius, whose Greatness, and Prosperities he extols and sets forth.

St. Augustine. Tome VII.

In the sixth Book, St. Augustine proves by the Authority of Varro, that the fabulous Divinity of the Heathen is ridiculous; he makes the same Conclusion concerning their civil Theology, and grounds what he saith of it upon Seneca's Authority.

He goes on in the seventh, to discover the Falshood of the Heathen civil Theology; shewing that their chiefest Divinities, or select Gods, do not deserve to be called Gods; and that the Christian's God alone governs the World.

The eighth Book refutes the natural Theology of their Philosophers: He preferrs the Platonists before all other Philosophers, and owns that they knew the True God; shewing withal, that they were deceived by honouring Dæmons, as subaltern Deities, and Mediators betwixt God, and Men: He shews, 'That the Christians never committed this Mistake; and that they are so far from adoring 'the Dæmons, which are evil Spirits, that they do not 'worship the Angels, nor the Holy Martyrs; that they do 'indeed Honour, and Reverence them as the Servants of 'God, but that they did not build Temples for them, nor 'consecrate Priests, nor offer Sacrifices unto them. For, 'saith he, who among Christians ever saw a Priest before 'an Altar, consecrated to God, upon ~~the~~ the Body of a 'Martyr, say in his Prayer, Peter, Paul, or Cyprian, I offer 'you this Sacrifice?' It is offered to God, though it be upon the Monuments of Martyrs; and these Ceremonies were appointed to be performed upon their Monuments, for no other end, but to give the True God Thanks for the Victories which they had obtained, and at the same time to stir up Christians to imitate their Courage, and to make themselves worthy to have a share in their Crowns, and Rewards: So that all the Acts of Piety, and Religion, which are done at the Tombs of the Holy Martyrs, are Honours pay'd to their Memory, and not Sacrifices offered to them as Divinities.

But forasmuch as they owned two sorts of Dæmons, some good, and some bad, St. Augustine examines that Distinction in the next Book, where he shews by the Principles both of Apuleius, and of the Chief of the Heathenish Authors, that all Dæmons are Evil. Whence he concludes that they cannot be Mediators between God, and Men. He doth not believe that Angels deserve that Title, affirming, that it belongeth to none but Jesus Christ alone.

In the tenth Book he treateth at large of Angel Worship: He saith, that they are Creatures, whose Felicity is all in God; that they Worship God, and their Desire is, that all Men would Worship him; that they require of us neither Adoration nor Sacrifices; and that God doth not expect from us Sacrifices, like those of the Heathen, but a Sacrifice of the Union, such as the Church celebrates in the Eucharist, and which the Faithfull know: That the Miracles which were wrought by the interposition of Angels, (not of Dæmons, whose Prodigies are nothing but illusions:) These Miracles, I say, were wrought by God's Power, to make himself known unto Men: That the Invisible God becomes Visible by the Ministry of his Angels, whom he made use of to deliver his Law to the World: That it is so true, that no Sacrifice is to be offered to any but God; that Jesus Christ, as Man, would be made a Sacrifice himself, and not receive one from any Body else: That God alone can purifie Men of their Sins, as the Platonists themselves acknowledge, that so it was necessary that God should be made Man, to be a true Mediator: That the just Men under the Old Law, were not saved but by Faith in this Mediator: That Pride alone keeps the Platonists from owning the Incarnation: That the Soul is not Coeternal with God, as they imagine: And Lastly, that the Means of delivering the Soul which they sought after to so little purpose, is nothing but the Christian Religion.

St. Augustine Tome VII.

In the 11*th*. Book, St. Augustine finds the Original of both Cities, in the diversity of Angels; which gives him occasion to treat of the Creation of the visible World, which was immediately preceded by that of the invisible, that is, of the Angels whom he created all in a state of Righteousness, from which some are fallen through their own Fault. He makes some digressions to speak of the Trinity, and of several Circumstances of the Creation of the World.

Having proved in the 12*th*. That the difference of good, and evil Angels doth not proceed from their Nature, but from their Will, because God created nothing but what was both Good, and Perfect. He comes to discourse of Mankind; and proves that Men are not from Eternity, but that God created Man in time: And he mentions something, concerning the Fall of the First Man, whereof he speaks more at large in the 13*th*. Book, where he shews, that the Death, both of Body and Soul, was the consequence, and the punishment of Adam's Fall. There one may meet with several curious Notions concerning Death; and several Reflections upon the Resurrection, and the Quality of glorified Bodies. He goes on in the 14*th*. Book, to speak of the Fall of the First Man, and of the lamentable Consequences that attended it, and particularly of irregular Desires, and shameful Passions. He enquires, whether the first Man was subject to Passions, and how he could Sin being free from them. Lastly he asketh several Questions, rather nice, than necessary, how Men should have had Children in the Earthly Paradise, had they continued in the State of Innocence.

The fifteenth Book is the first of those wherein he examineth the Progress of both the Cities: He finds the History of it in the Old Testament, where he shews who were the Citizens of both these Cities. This Book prosecutes this History from the Creation, to the Flood. On the one side, we see Abel, and Isaac, and on the other Cain, and Esau: And both these Cities may be taken notice of in the Marriages of the Sons of God, with the Daughters of Men. The Church is represented by Noah's Ark. There are in this Book curious Allegories and several Reflections upon the History of Genesis. Amongst other things, he examines the length of the Lives of the first Patriarchs; and the Difference betwixt the Translation of the Septuagint, and the Hebrew Text, about the Number of the Generations.

In the 16*th*. Book he carries on the History of both Cities, from Noah to Abraham, and from Abraham to the Kings of Israel. He doth not find that the Scripture takes notice of any that served God from Noah to Abraham. He speaks of the Posterity of the Children of Noah, of the Confounding of Languages, of the Antiquity of the Hebrew Tongue, and of the Multiplication of Mankind. He questions, whether there be Antipodes. In the rest of the Book he clears the History of Abraham, and of his Posterity, which is explained with relation to the City of God.

In the 17*th*. taking a view of the History both of the Kings and of the Prophets, he relates and expounds the Prophecies which are in the Books of Kings, in the Psalms, and in the Books of Solomon, which relate to Christ or his Church.

Now as he had quitted the History of the City of the World, when he was come to Abraham, so he resumeth it in the beginning of the 18*th*. Book; which contains an Abridgment of the History of the Principal Monarchies in the World, the times whereof he makes to agree with the History of the Bible; and he omits not to speak of the Fabulous Histories, and of the Matamorphoses. Afterwards, he quotes the Sibylline Oracles; but he insists most upon the Predictions of the Prophets, which he produces in all their Particulars. He speaks also of the Books of the Maccabees: and having made some Reflections upon the Authority of the History of the Canonical Books, and of the Translation of the LXX. he describeth in few Words the Fall of the Jewish Empire; and so he comes to the Nativity of Jesus Christ, the Dispersion of the Jews, the Settlement of the Church, the Persecutions and Heresies which immediately followed. St. Augustine makes very ingenious Reflections upon all these Articles; and concludes this Book, by shewing, that the end of the World is unknown; and he refutes a false prediction which the Heathens published, that the

St. Auguſtine. Tome VII.

Chriſtian Religion ſhould laſt but Three hundred ſixty five Years.

The 19*th.* Book treateth of the End of both Cities: Each one aims at the chiefeſt Good: but the Inhabitants of the Terreſtial know ſo little of it, that their Philoſophers, the Wiſeſt among them, could never agree wherein it conſiſted. Varro reckoneth two hundred eighty eight different Opinions of Philoſophers about it. The Chriſtian Religion diſcovers the Falſity of all thoſe Opinions, by letting Man know, that he cannot be Happy in this Life, but only in Hope; becauſe he cannot enjoy here Peace and perfect Tranquillity.

The 20*th.* Book contains a deſcription of the Laſt Judgment, of the Renewing of the World, of the Reſurrection, and of the Heavenly Jeruſalem.

The 21*ſt.* treateth of the End of the Earthly City, and repreſents the Horror of the Torments of Dæmons and Damned Men, and of the Eternal Fire of Hell. St. Auguſtine refutes the vain Reaſons of thoſe that doubt of it; and the Fancy of ſome, who affirmed, that thoſe Torments ſhould have an End, and that Men ſhould be kept from them by the Interceſſion of the Saints by the Uſe of Sacraments and by Almſdeeds.

The laſt Book is, concerning the Happineſs which the Saints ſhall enjoy to Eternity. The main End which St. Auguſtine aims at there, is, to prove the Probability of Man's Reſurrection. His chief Reaſon is grounded upon Chriſt's Reſurrection; atteſted by ſuch Credible Witneſſes, that none can rationally doubt of it, the Truth thereof having been confirmed by ſo many Miracles. But becauſe Unbelievers demanded why Miracles were not ſtill wrought, St. Auguſtine mentions ſeveral that were done in his time, which he pretends to be very certain, and very well atteſted. He ſpeaks again of the Condition of Glorified Bodies and Crowns his Work with an excellent Pourtraicture of the Happineſs of the Saints. 'How great (ſaith he) will be 'that Felicity that ſhall be diſturbed with no Evil, and 'where no other Buſineſs ſhall be followed but ſinging 'the Praiſes of God who ſhall be All in all? ...There will 'be found True Glory, where there is neither Error nor 'Flattery. There is true Honour; ſince it is refuſed to 'none that deſerve it, and it is not given to any that deſerve 'it not; yea, where no Unworthy Perſon ſhall pretend to 'it, becauſe there ſhall be none there but ſuch as are Worthy. There will be true Peace, where a Man ſhall ſuffer nothing either from himſelf, or from other Men. He that is 'the Author of Virtue, ſhall himſelf be the Reward of 'it; becauſe there is nothing better than he. He ſhall be the 'End of our Deſires, whom we ſhall See to be without 'End, whom we ſhall Love without Diſguſt, and Praiſe 'without Wearineſs. This Employment will be common 'to all Men, as well as Eternal Life; but it is impoſſible 'to know what degree of Glory ſhall be proportionable to 'each Man's Merit; and yet it is certain, that there is a 'great difference betwixt the Happineſs of the one, and of 'the other. But one of the great Advantages of that City, 'will be, that none ſhall envy thoſe whom he ſhall ſee to 'be Above him.... Every one ſhall enjoy a Happineſs, ſome 'greater, and others leſs; but Every one ſhall have this Gift, 'Not to deſire a greater than what he has. And we are not 'to imagine that Men ſhall be there without Free-Will, becauſe they cannot take pleaſure in Sin. For he will be 'ſo much the more Free, who ſhall be delivered from the 'Pleaſure of Sinning, ſo as to take an unalterable Pleaſure in not Sinning any more.... Wherefore, all the Inhabitants of this Divine City ſhall have a Will perfectly 'Free, exempt from all Evil, filled with all manner of Good, 'enjoying without intermiſſion the Delights of an Immortal Joy, without remembrance either of his Faults or of 'his Miſeries, otherwiſe than to bleſs their Deliverer for 'the ſame.'

St. Auguſtine Tome VII.

They have left out in this Edition the Commentaries both of Ludovicus Vives, and of Leonardus Coquæus; which exceeded the Text of St. Auguſtine by much, and which ſerved but little to underſtand it, tho' otherwiſe full of Learning and Erudition.

Theſe Books of St. Auguſtine are very pleaſant, for the ſurpriſing variety of the things which he hath brought in to ſerve his purpoſe, ſo as all to tend to the ſame End. Their Learning is generally admired; yet they contain nothing but what is taken out of Cicero, Varro, Seneca, and other profane Authors, whoſe Works were common enough in thoſe days; and one may ſay, that there is nothing very curious or elaborate; and in ſome places he is not exact, and he does not directly reſolve moſt of the Difficulties which he propoſes both upon the Text, and upon the Hiſtory of the Books of the Bible. He diſcuſſes very uſeleſs Queſtions, and ſometimes makes uſe of Reaſons too weak to perſuade thoſe that would doubt of what he intends to prove: yet for all that, this is a moſt excellent Book: What I moſt admire in it, is, the Management of the whole Work, the judicious Reflections which he makes upon the Opinions therein related, and the great Principles of Morality which he layeth down upon Occaſion.

At the latter end of this Volume there are ſome Letters which have ſome relation to what St. Auguſtine ſaith in the 8*th.* Chapter of the laſt Book of the Miracles that were done in his time. The firſt is one of Avitus, upon the Tranſlation of a Letter written by Lucianus, concerning the Diſcovering of St. Stephen's Body. With this Tranſlation, they have added another Tract, tranſlated out of Greek by Anaſtaſius the Library-Keeper, about another Diſcovery of St. Stephen's Relicks at Conſtantinople. They have likewiſe placed their Biſhop Severus's Letter, touching the Miracles happened in the Iſland Minorca, at the appearing of St. Stephen's Relicks for the Converſion of the Jews: And two Books aſcribed to Evodius, Biſhop of Uzala, concerning St. Stephen's Miracles; which have been mentioned already.

The Eighth TOME.

Tom. VIII

THE eighth Volume of St. Auguſtine's Works, contains his Writings againſt Hereticks, excepting thoſe that are againſt both the Donatiſts and the Pelagians, which make up two diſtinct Volumes. It begins with the ſmall Treatiſe of Hereſies, compoſed in the Year 428. at the Requeſt of Quodvultdeus, a Deacon, to whom it is directed.

This Writing was to have had two Parts: The firſt, concerning the Hereſies raiſed from Jeſus Chriſt's to St. Auguſtine's time. He promiſed to examine, in the ſecond, what it is that makes a Man an Heretick. This ſecond ſhould naturally have been the firſt; becauſe that to know the Hereſies that have broken out ſince Jeſus Chriſt's time, it is neceſſary to know what is Hereſie. But St. Auguſtine finding this Queſtion hard to be reſolved, began with the other that was more eaſie, and never undertook the ſecond. Therefore this Treatiſe is only a very ſuccinct Catalogue of the Names of Heretical Sects, and of their principal Errors. It beginneth with the Symonians, and endeth with the Pelagians, and containeth Eighty eight Hereſies: it is by no means exact, and one ſhall hardly find any thing there which is not taken out of St. Epiphanius and Philaſtrius.

The Treatiſe againſt the Jews, is a Sermon in which St. Auguſtine proves by the Prophecies, that the Jewiſh Law was to have an End; that it was to be changed into a New Law; and, that God would reject the Jews, to call the Gentiles.

Theſe two ſhort Treatiſes are followed by St. Auguſtine's Writings againſt the Manichees; which are ſet down in the firſt place, becauſe thoſe Hereticks oppoſed the firſt Principles of the Chriſtian Religion. The firſt of all, is that of the Uſefulneſs of Faith, which St. Auguſtine compoſed ſometime after he was Ordained Prieſt, in the Year 391. to reclaim his Friend Honoratus from the Errors of the Manichees, wherein he had been engaged as well as St. Auguſtine; becauſe thoſe Hereticks had put him in hope, that without making uſe of Authority, they ſhould diſcover the Truth to him by the Light of Reaſon, and by this one only Mean bring him to the Knowledge of God, and deliver him from all ſorts of Errors. St. Auguſtine having ſhewed the difference betwixt the Author of a Hereſie, and a Perſon ſurprized with it afterwards, doth at firſt juſtifie the Old Teſtament; ſhewing, that it agreeth exactly with the New, in the Hiſtory, Morals and Allegories; and that the Church puts ſuch a Senſe upon it, which the Manichees themſelves cannot condemn. He overthroweth the Manichees Principle; proving, that we muſt Believe before we Know. To this end, he ſuppoſes certain Perſons having no Religion, and ſeeking to be inſtructed in the True, to be like thoſe who ſhould enquire after a Maſter to teach them Rhetorick or Philoſophy. Afterwards he obſerves, that the only Party which theſe Perſons are to embrace at firſt, is to ſide with thoſe who are commonly and generally approved: That it is great Raſhneſs in thoſe who are incapable of themſelves to judge of things, to depart from the Common Voice; to preferr the Judgment of ſome particular Men, before that of the Multitude. So that it is moſt rational, ſince one Party or other is to be embraced, to ſide with the Catholick Church, eſpecially becauſe it forbids not thoſe that come into her to enquire after the Truth. It ſaith indeed, that we ought to Believe: But it hath an Authority ſo to do; for no Man can Believe, but he muſt be perſuaded, that he in whom he believeth, is worthy of Credit; and this makes the difference betwixt a Wiſe and a Credulous Man. But had it not been better to give convincing Reaſons of Things? No; for all Men are not capable of Reaſon, and ſome things cannot be underſtood without the help of a Divine Light. It is very dangerous to follow thoſe who promiſe to make us comprehend all things; becauſe they often boaſt of knowing what they are ignorant of, and often make us believe ſo too. And very ſhameful is that Condition, for two Reaſons: Firſt, Becauſe ſuch a Perſon takes no more Pains to learn, being falſely perſuaded of his Knowledge: And, Secondly, becauſe that an inconinconsiderate readiness to judge of a thing, is a Mark of a weak Understanding. Reason makes us apprehend things, Authority makes us believe, but Error persuades us to affirm rashly that which is false. Upon these Principles St. Augustine proves the Necessity of Faith, in Matters of Civil Life, as much as in Matters of Wisdom: For in the first place, the Whole of Humane Society is grounded upon the Belief of some certain Things. As for Example: The Honour we render to our Parents, is grounded merely upon our Belief, that they are the Persons from whom we received Life. Secondly, there is no getting of Wisdom, without consulting with Wise Men. But how shall we know these Wise Men, except we trust Others? For unless we are Wise our selves, we can never know true Wisdom. Wherefore, we must Believe, to seek after Religion: For did we not believe that there is such a thing, why should we seek for it? All Hereticks own that we must believe in Jesus Christ: But what Motives have we to believe Jesus Christ's Authority? Are they not the same with those that make us believe the Church? are they not the Miracles, the Sanctity both of the Doctrine and of the Morals, the Publishing of the Gospel, the Blood of Martyrs, and some other Proofs of this nature, which establish the Authority of the Church no less than that of Jesus Christ? Therefore St. Augustine concludes thus, 'Why should we make any 'difficulty to throw our selves into the Arms of that Church 'which hath always maintain'd her self by the Succession 'of Bishops in Apostolick Sees, in spite of all the Endeavours of Hereticks condemned by her, or by Peoples 'Faith, or by the Decisions of Councils, or by the Authority of Miracles? It is either a matchless Impiety, or a 'very indiscreet Arrogancy, not to acknowledge her Doctrine for a Rule of our Faith. For if the Spirit of Man 'cannot attain unto Wisdom, and so to Salvation, but by 'Faith directing our Reason; is it not to be Ungrateful, 'and neglect the Succour proffered by God, to resist so 'weighty an Authority? And truly, if any Science, though 'common and easie, cannot be learned without a Teacher; 'it is Presumption, in the highest degree, to refuse to learn 'the Sense of the sacred Books from those that understand 'them; and to condemn them, without hearing what they say.'

Tom. VIII

St. Augustine. Tom. VIII

After this first Book against the Foundation of the Manichæan Heresie, St. Augustine composed the Book Of the two Souls, against one principal Error of those Hereticks; asserting, that there were two Souls in each Man; a Good one, of a Divine Substance, the Cause of all that is Good in us; and an Evil one, of the nature of Darkness, proper to the Flesh, which is the Principle of all disorderly Motions, and of all the Evil that we do. St. Augustine proves in this Book, First, that the Soul being a Spirit and Life, is more perfect than Corporeal Light which the Manichees believe to come from God. Secondly, that there is no Nature or Substance naturally Evil; and that Evil consists only in the Abuse of our Liberty. Some Passages in this Book attribute much to Free-Will; nay, there are some which may not agree well with the Doctrine of Grace, and of Original Sin, which St. Augustine correcteth in his Retractations.

There was at that time in Hippo a Priest, one Fortunatus, a Famous Manichee, who had seduc'd many Inhabitants of that City. The Catholicks engaged St. Augustine, in a Conference with him. What was said on both Sides, was set down in Writing by Notaries, and that Act preserved among St. Augustine's Writings. The Dispute lasted but two Days; and the Questions that were disputed about, were of Nature, and the Original of Evil. St. Augustine affirms, that Evil proceeds from the Abuse of Free-Will. The Manichee pretends, that there is an Evil Nature Coeternal with God. In the first day's Conference the Manichee defended himself well enough; but he could not Answer St. Augustine's Objections next day, and was obliged to say, that he would conferr about them with the Heads of his Sect. The shame of being confuted in that Conference, obliged him to leave Hippo. This Conference is dated the 26th. of August, under the second Consulship of Arcadius and Rufinus, in the Year 392.

About that time, St. Augustine met with some Works of one Adimantus, who had been a Disciple of Manichæus, written against the Law and the Prophets; which he affirmed to contain things contrary to the Precepts of the Gospel and of the Apostles. He undertook to Answer the Objections of that Heretick, and to Justifie the Agreement betwixt those Passages of the Old and New Testament which he had produced, as being contrary. This Book is of the Year 394.

St. Augustine having refuted the Disciple, undertakes the Master, and Answereth the Letter which he called, The Epistle of Foundation: shewing, that Manichæus set forth in it nothing but Falshoods and Absurdities. He lays down, at first, the Reasons for his adhering to the Church, in these Terms: 'Not to speak (saith he) of that Wisdom and Understanding which few Men apprehend in this Life, several Motives keep me in the Bosom of the Catholick Church; the 'general Consent of Nations and People, an Authority 'grounded upon Miracles, upheld by Hope, perfected 'with Charity, and confirmed by Antiquity; the Succession of Bishops from St. Peter to our time; and the Name 'of the Catholick Church, which is so peculiar to the true 'Church, that though all Hereticks call themselves Catholicks, yet when you ask, in any Country whatsoever, 'where Catholicks meet, they dare not shew the Place of 'their Assemblies. These are powerful Motives which keep 'a faithful Man within the Pale of the Church, though he 'be not yet arrived to a perfect understanding of the Truth. 'But among you Manichees, that have none of these Reasons 'either to invite or to keep me, I hear none but vain Promises, to make me understand the Truth clearly. I confess, 'that did you perform it, I ought to preferr an evident 'Truth, which none can doubt of, before all the Motives 'that make me keep to the Catholick Church. But so long 'as you do only promise, and not give this Knowledge, 'you shall not shake that Trust which I have in the Catholick Church, which is grounded upon such powerful 'Reasons and Motives.' He examines afterwards the Principles contained in Manichæus's Letter; and proves, that he not only fails in the Demonstration of what he affirmeth, but that he is contrary even to Reason and Common Sense. This Book is placed in the Retractations, among the Books composed about the Year 397.

St. Augustine Tom. VIII

The most considerable of all St. Augustine's Works against the Manichees, is, his Treatise against Faustus, divided into three and thirty Disputes or Arguments; wherein he writes down the Text of this Manichee's Books, which contained most part of the Blasphemies and Impieties of those Hereticks, against both the Old and the New Testament: which St. Augustine strongly and solidly refutes. This Work was compleated about the Year 400. and sent to St. Jerome in 404.

The next Book contains the Acts of a Conference which St. Augustine had at Hippo, in December, 404. with a Manichee, one Felix. The Dispute lasted three Days, but we have a Relation but of what happened in the two last Conferences. In the Conclusion of the latter, the Manichee was Converted, and Anathematized Manichæus.

In the same Year, St. Augustine composed a Treatise Of the Nature of Good, against the Manichees: wherein he shews, that God is of an Immutable Nature: that he hath created all other Beings, whether Spiritual or Corporeal, which are all good in their Nature: that Evil proceedeth only from the Abuse of Free-Will: that the Manichees call Evil Good, and Good Evil.

The Book against Secundinus, is properly an Answer of St. Augustine's to that Manichee, who had exhorted him by a Letter, never to encounter with the Manichees, of whose Opinion himself had been formerly; and he had also urged him to return to their Sect. St. Augustine gives him the Reasons of his Conversion, and discovers some of Manichæus's Errors.

The following Treatise is against a Heretick who was worse than the Manichees, who in a distinct Treatise asserted, that God did not make the World, nor give the Law. St. Augustine refuteth him, under the Name of The Adversary of the Law and the Prophets, in two Books bearing that Title, composed about the Year 420.

Orosius having consulted St. Augustine, in 415. about the Impieties of the Priscillianists, and some Errors of Origen's Disciples, St. Augustine answered him in a Book directed to him, intituled, against the Priscillianists and Origenists. In this small Treatise he rejects these Errors: 1. That the Soul is of a Divine Nature. 2. That the Torments both of the Dæmons and of Damned Men shall have an end. 3. That the Reign of Jesus Christ will not be Eternal. 4. That both Angels and Souls are Purified in this World. 5. That the Stars are Animated. 6. That Angels commit Sins.

The rest of St. Augustine's Treatises contained in this Volume are against the Arians.

The first is an Answer to a Discourse of an Arian, containing a great many Objections against the Divinity of the Son of God, and of the Holy Ghost. This Discourse was made the next Year after the Conference with Emeritus, held in 417.

Next to this Treatise, are, The Conference with Maximinus, and Two Books against that Arian Bishop. The Conference was held at Hippo, in the Year 428. whither Maximinus was sent by Count Sigisvultdeus. In the Conference were several Discourses on both Sides; but Maximinus having said many more things than St. Augustine, and spoken last, he bragg'd that he had got the Victory: which obliged this Saint to recollect all that had been said in the Conference, and to refute Maximinus's last Arguments, which he had not had time to answer.

St. Augustine's Books of the Trinity, are rather a Dogmatical Treatise, concerning that Mystery, than Polemical Writings against Hereticks; for he insisteth not so much upon refuting their Reasons, or establishing the Doctrines of the Church, as upon subtile Reasonings, to expound and clear this Mystery. He began them in the Year 400. and finished them in 416. The first Book begins with a Preface containing very important Reflections. He observes, at first, that Men have three false Notions of the Divinity; that ſome conceive of God as a Corporeal Subſtance, attributing to him Corporeal Properties; that others have ſuch an Idea of him, as they have of their Souls, and of other Spirits; and ſo they aſcribe to him the like Imperfections, as Repenting, Forgetting, and Remembring; and that others entertain ſuch a Notion of God, as may have nothing Common with a Creature; and ſo they conceive none but Chimerical Ideas of him. The Holy Scripture condeſcends to Mens Weakneſs, aſcribing often ſuch things to God, as belong properly to Bodies, or imperfect Spirits; and ſeldom makes uſe of Terms peculiar to God, becauſe it is very difficult to know, in this Life, the Subſtance, or Eſſence of the divine Nature perfectly. But becauſe ſome Perſons deſire to be informed about this Matter, and ask how three Divine Perſons make one and the ſame Eſſence, he undertakes two things in this Work: Firſt, to ſhew, that the Scripture teaches us ſuch Doctrine; and then to raiſe the Mind, as far as it is capable in this Life, to the knowledge of this Myſtery.

St. Auguſtine. Tom. VIII

He proves the firſt Point in the firſt ſeven Books.

In the firſt, he eſtabliſhes, by Paſſages of Scripture, the Unity, and the Equality of the three Divine Perſons; and explains the principal Places that were urged by the Arians, againſt the Divinity of Jeſus Chriſt. The main Rule which he makes uſe of, is, that Jeſus Chriſt being one only Perſon, made up of two Natures, what is ſaid of the humane Nature ſhould be diſtinguiſhed from that which is ſpoken of the Divine.

In the ſecond, he confirmeth the former Rule, and layeth down another, that the Scripture ſpeaks things of the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt, which are not ſpoken of the Father, to ſhew, that they receive their Eſſence from the Father: As when 'tis ſaid, that the Son doth nothing of himſelf; that he receiveth Life from the Father. This, ſaith St. Auguſtine, doth not ſhew, that the Son is of a different Nature from the Father, but only, that the Son receiveth his Subſtance from the Father. And by this Rule, he explains the Miſſion of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt. He ſpeaks alſo of Apparitions; wherein he pretends, that not one ſingle Perſon, but the whole Trinity, hath either ſpoken, or operated.

This laſt Queſtion is the Subject of his third Book; wherein he examines, whether God, in his Apparitions, formed Creatures to make himſelf known unto Men by them; or, Whether theſe Apparitions were by the Miniſtry of Angels, who made uſe of Bodies to accompliſh them. He concludes, in favour of the latter Opinion, rejecting the former, which had been held by all the Fathers before him.

The fourth is about Chriſt's Incarnation, whereby God hath manifeſted how much he loved us. The Word was made Fleſh, to deliver us from the Darkneſs wherein we lay, to purifie our Hearts, and Minds. His Death delivered us from two kinds of Death; from that of the Body, by reſtoring Immortality to us; and from that of the Soul, by waſhing us from our Sins. Here he makes a Digreſſion, concerning the perfection of the Number Six, which is neither very ſolid, nor much to the Purpoſe. He diſcourſes afterwards of the wonderful Effects of Chriſt's Mediation; and ſhews, at laſt, that the Humiliation of the Son of God, by his Incarnation, hinders him not from being equal with his Father, according to the Divine Nature.

In the fifth Book, He refutes the Sophiſms of Hereticks againſt the Myſtery of the Trinity.

In the ſixth, He conſiders in what Senſe the Son is called the Wiſdom and Power of the Father: Whether the Father be Wiſe of himſelf; or, Whether he is only the Father of Wiſdom. He puts off the Deciſion of that Queſtion, and treats again of the Unity and Equality of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt.

In the ſeventh Book he reſolves the Queſtion propoſed in the ſixth, ſhewing that the Father is not only the Father of Power and of Wiſdom, but that he hath in himſelf both Power and Wiſdom; and that all the three Perſons of the Trinity are Wiſe and Powerful by the ſame Power and Wiſdom, becauſe they have but one Godhead. Afterwards he explains in what Senſe God is ſaid to have but one Eſſence and three Perſons, or, according to the Greeks, three Hypoſtaſes.

Having proved in the eighth Book that the three Perſons together are not greater than any one alone, he enters upon the ſecond Part of his Work by exhorting Men to raiſe up themſelves to the Knowledge of God, thro' Charity, wherein he finds a kind of Trinity.

St. Auguſtine. Tom. VIII

In the ninth, He endeavoureth to find a Trinity in Man, who was created after the Image of God; he findeth there a Spirit, a Knowledge of himſelf, and a Love wherewith he loves himſelf: theſe three Things are equal among themſelves, and make but one Eſſence. This is according to St. Auguſtine, an Image of the Trinity. Memory, Underſtanding, and Will, furniſh him with another, which he believes is clearer and more like. He explains it in the tenth Book. He finds ſome reſemblances even in the outward Man, in the inward Senſes, in Knowledge and Wiſdom: and theſe are the Subjects of the following Books.

He concludeth at laſt, in the fifteenth Book, that though we have here below ſeveral Repreſentations of the Trinity, yet we ſhould not ſeek for it, but in immutable and eternal Things, and that we cannot ſee it in this Life, but by a Figure, and Enigmatically: And thus he pretends, that we have an Idea of the Generation of the Word, by the production of the Word of our Underſtanding, and an Idea of the proceeding of the Holy Ghoſt, by the Love that proceeds from the Will. But he confeſſeth, that theſe Notions are very imperfect; and that there is an infinite Difference betwixt theſe Compariſons, and the Myſtery of the Trinity.

The Treatiſe of the five Hereſies, or rather the Sermon preached againſt five ſorts of Enemies to the Chriſtians, Heathens, Jews, Manichees, Sabellians, and Arians, which the Louvain Doctors had aſcribed to St. Auguſtine, though Eraſmus doubted of it, is thrown into this Edition, amongſt the ſuppoſititious Treatiſes and this was done with a great deal of Reaſon, for the Style thereof is very different from St. Auguſtine's: And the Author of that Sermon preached it, when Arianiſm was the predominant Religion in Africa, as appears by the 6th. and 7th Chapters; which ſhews, that St. Auguſtine is not the Author of it, but ſome other African who lived at the time of the Vandals Perſecution. The Sermon of the Creed againſt the Heathens, Jews, and Arians, is alſo of the ſame time, and probably of the ſame Author.

The Suit betwixt the Church, and the Synagogue, is the Work of ſome Lawyer, who tryed to Exerciſe himſelf, in making the Church to condemn the Synagogue, after the ſame manner that a Judge condemns a Malefactor.

The Book of Faith, againſt the Manichees, is reſtor'd to Evodius of Uzala, upon the Authority of Ancient Manuſcripts, and the different Style.

The following Memorial of the manner of admitting the Manichees, that were converted into the Church, is very Ancient; and, in all probability, it is an Order of ſome Council of Africa.

The Book of the Unity of the Trinity, is here reſtor'd to Vigilius Tapſenſis, the true Author, who citeth it himſelf in the Preface to his Books, againſt Varimadus, to whom it is attributed in an ancient Copy.

Both the Books of the Incarnation of the Word, are taken, as it is obſerved, out of the Tranſlation of Origen's Principles by Rufinus.

The Treatiſe of the Unity, and Trinity of God, is made up of Extracts out of ſeveral Paſſages of St. Auguſtine's Works, both Genuine and Spurious.

The Book of the Eſſence of the Divinity, which is likewiſe attributed to St. Ambroſe, St. Jerome, St. Anſelm, and Bonaventure, is partly taken out of a Book Written by St. Eucherius.

The Dialogue of the Unity of the Holy Trinity, was found in two Manuſcripts, Eight Hundred Years old; in one of them it is aſcribed to St. Auguſtine, yet it is clearly written in a different Style from his.

The Book of Eccleſiaſtical Maxims, ought to be quite expunged out of St. Auguſtine's Works, to which it hath no relation; yet it is quoted under that Holy Father's Name, by the Maſter of the Sentences; and it beareth his Name in ſeveral Manuſcripts. Trithemius aſcribes it to Alcuinus; and Gratian citeth it under the Name of Paterus: But the vulgar Opinion is, that Gennadius writ it, to whom it is attributed by Algerus, Walafridus Strabo, the Maſter of the Sentences, and Thomas Aquinas in ſeveral Places. It is likewiſe cited, under his Name, in ſeveral MSS. This Book contains an Abridgment of the Principal Articles of Religion. It is evident, that the Author thereof was not of St. Auguſtine's Opinion, concerning Grace, and Free-Will. They have left out ſome Articles which had been inſerted after the 21ſt. and taken out of St. Cœleſtine's Epiſtles to the Biſhops of Gaul, of the Council of Carthage, and that of Orange.

The Ninth TOME.

Tome IX.

THe ninth Volume of St. Auguſtine's Works, containeth his Treatiſe againſt the Donatiſts,

The firſt is a Hymn which St. Auguſtine compoſed in vulgar, and popular Terms, to teach the moſt unlearned the State of the Queſtion betwixt the Catholicks, and the Donatiſts, and to exhort theſe to a Re-union with the Catholicks. This Writing which conſiſts but of Two Leaves, is proper, as St. Auguſtine himſelf obſerves, for none but very ordinary People.

Tome IX.

In 393. he wrote a Book againſt Donatus, his Epiſtle; and in 398. two Books againſt the Donatiſts: But both theſe Treatiſes are loſt.

We are therefore to begin St. Auguſtine's Works againſt the Donatiſts, from the three Books againſt the Epiſtle of Parme-

St. Augustine. Tome IX.

Parmenianus, who succeeded Donatus, in the See of Carthage,. There he refutes the Letter which that Shismatick wrote to Tychonius, wherein he accused the whole Church of being defiled, for communicating with Persons that were guilty of several Crimes. St. Augustine having proved, that Cæcilian, and the greatest part of the others, who were accused by the Donatists, had been declared Innocent; addeth, that though the Crimes, whereof they accused particular Men, were proved, yet the Church would still be the true Church, tho' she had not cut them off from her Communion because she is made up of good and bad Men, and that even these may be tolerated for Peace sake. These Books were composed about the Year 400. We must not forget to observe, that there is in this Edition, chap. 3*d.* of the first Book, a very important Correction of a Passage which had much perplexed Historians. St. Augustine speaks there of the Roman Council which condemned the Donatists: and they made him say in the common Editions, and in most Manuscripts, that this Council consisted of two hundred Bishops. Usque adeo dementes sunt homines, ut ducentos judices, apud quos victi sunt, victis litigatoribus credat: And because this was not Sense, they added against the Authority of the MSS. esse postponendos. It being certain that St. Augustine speaketh in this Place of the Council of Rome, and that there met but 19 Bishops; they thought that 19 were to be put instead of 200. But the Restoration made here upon the Credit of the Vatican Manuscript, resolves all the difficulty, and clears the Sense without adding any thing, neither 19 nor 200, are mentioned in the Text. Thus it runs, Usque adeo dementes sunt homines, ut CONTRA judices victis litigatoribus credat. It appears at the first sight, that this is the true Sense, which all the Conjectures of the Learned could not find out. They took the Contra, made short with two C C. for the Cypher of 200, and they had writ ducentos instead of this Cypher at all Adventures; and because the Text was then not Sense, the Louvain Doctors added Esse Postponendos after Credat. One single Manuscript discovers presently those Mistakes, and gives the true Sense. And now let Men say, that there is no need of comparing the Authors to be published with ancient Manuscripts. But to return to our Subject.

The seven Books Of Baptism were composed by St. Augustine at the same time. He undertakes there to refute the Donatists, who used St. Cyprian's Authority to defend their Opinion concerning the Nullity of Baptism administred by Hereticks. He shews, that if that Saint seems to favour them in that Point, yet his Practice and Doctrine condemned their Saparation. He refutes also the Reasons which that Saint and his Colleagues urged to prove, that those were to be re-baptized, who had been baptized by Hereticks. There he handleth several Questions, touching the Necessity, Validity, Effect, and other Circumstances of Baptism.

After the Books Of Baptism, St. Augustine placeth a Treatise which he composed against a certain Book brought by Centurius from the Donatists. But that Discourse is lost: And so immediately after the Books of Baptism, follow Three Books against a Letter of Petilianus Bishop of the Donatists at Cirta. The first of these Books is written in the form of a Letter to the Church: Therein he refutes the first part of Petilianus's Letter. But having received afterwards the whole Letter, he thought himself obliged to answer every Proposition by it self. Whilst this was doing, Petilianus having seen the Letter that St. Augustine writ at first, returned an Answer; to which, St. Augustine opposed a third Book, wherein without insisting upon Petilianus's reproachful Language, he discovers the weakness of the Answers that he brought in defence of his Party. The first of these Books, which is rather a Letter than a Book, was composed about the Year 400. both the others are of 402.

The next Book is likewise written against Petilianus, and is intituled in the Manuscripts, A Letter from St. Augustine to the Catholicks concerning the Sect of the Donatists: And Possidius seems to have mentioned it under this Title, in the third Article of his Index. It is likewise cited under this Title, and ascribed to St. Augustine in the fifth Council, Collat. 5. Yet St. Augustine does not mention it in his Retractations. It may be answered, that this Book being written in the form of a Letter, he reserved to speak of it in the other part of his Retractations, which was to contain his Sermons and Letters. And yet we see that St. Augustine speaks of Dogmatical Treatises that were long, though composed in the form of Letters, in this Part; so that it is unlikely that he should have forgot to mention this, when he spoke of his other Letters against Petilianus. The Benedictines have made some other Observations upon this Treatise, which may make us doubt whether it is St. Augustine's, or no. They observe, that the Salutation in the beginning, Salus quæ in Christo est, is extraordinary, and that St. Augustine never used it. They find improper forms of Speech, Transitions, Figures and Expressions, not very elegant, which do not agree to St. Augustine's Style. Nay, besides they take notice of a Point of Doctrine different from St. Augustine's. For the Author of this Book teaches in the 13*th.* Chapter, That the Separation of the ten Tribes from Judah, was no Heresie; but St. Augustine affirms in the 23*d.* Epistle, and in his first Book against Cresconius, Chapter 31*st.* That the Samaritans made a Schism, a Sect, and an Heresie. And lastly, they have collected some Passages of Scripture which are not of that Translation, which St. Augustine uses in other Places. They add, that the Author of this Book, Chapter 24*th.* doubts whether the Water that issued out of our Saviour's Side, was a figure of Baptism which St. Augustine, sets down for a certain Truth in several places of his Writings.

St. Augustine. Tome IX.

These Objections are not unanswerable: St. Augustine hath not mentioned all his Works in his Retractations, and particularly, those that are in the form of Letters. We have already taken Notice of some that he has omitted. This is found in Possidius's Catalogue, and the Author declares in the beginning, that he had written already against Petilianus's Letter; The Style, indeed, is not so Elegant as of some other of St. Augustine's Works; but it no wonder, because it is a Letter that was to be seen and understood by all Mankind. For the same Reason, the Hymn against the Donatists might be rejected, which is much flatter, and containing more barbarous Expressions. The Salutation agrees very well to the Subject, and is not unworthy of St. Augustine: And if he never used it in other places, it doth not follow that he should forbear it in this. When St. Augustine reckoned the Samaritans among the Heretical Jews, he did not speak of the ancient Inhabitants of Samaria, immediately after the division of the Tribes, but of the later Samaritans, who were real Hereticks among the Jews. Lastly, it is no extraordinary thing for St. Augustine to cite some places of Scripture in other Terms than he had used in other places; or that he should doubt here of some things, whereof he speaks more affirmatively at other times.

Though these Answers should not be sufficient to remove all suspicion, yet is certain, That this Book was written in St. Augustine's time; and all that can be said is, that it might have been drawn up by some of his Friends, and directed in his Name to the Donatists. It was written in 402. after the second Book against Petilianus, and before the third; It is a new Challenge which he sendeth to this Bishop to defend his own Party, and to shew, that the true Church is on his Side. He describes the Marks of the true Church, and proves, that they do not agree with the Donatists Party, but with that of the Catholicks; and then Answereth those Passages which the Donatists urged for themselves, and the Accusations which they formed against the Church.

One Cresconius, a Grammarian, of the Donatists Party, undertook to defend Petilianus against St. Augustine's first Writing. As soon as he saw his Letter, he refuted it in three Books, and retorted upon him all his Arguments, by retorting in a fourth Book the business of the Maximianists. These Books were Written about the Year 406.

Here should have been placed three other Treatises against the Donatists, which he mentions in his Retractations, but they are lost. These were, A Book of Proofs and Testimonies against the Donatists; A Treatise against a Donatist; And an Advice to the Donatists about the Business of the Maximianists.

The Book of one Baptism, against Petilianus, was written after the Conference at Carthage. The Principal Question treated of by St. Augustine, is concerning the Validity of Baptism administred by Hereticks.

St Augustine being willing to Publish an Account of the Conference of Carthage, wrote a Breviary of what was said in the three Days Conference, in 412.

He wrote a Book likewise directed to the Donatists, with the same Design; wherein he makes several Reflections upon the Conference of Carthage, that he might perfectly undeceive that Party, and shew that they were seduced and deceived by their Bishops. He likewise answereth their Cavils against the Judgment of Marcellinus. This Book is of the Year 413.

The Treatise to Emeritus a Donatist Bishop, who was one of the principal Defenders of that Party in the Conference at Carthage, is lost. St. Augustine had collected there the main Points wherein they had been baffled, as he says, in the 49*th.* Chapter of the second Book of his Retractations. After this he went to Cæsarea, a City of Mauritania, where he met with Emeritus, before whom he Preached a Sermon to persuade him to reconcile himself to the Church; but not prevailing by this means, he held a Conference with him, about those things which had been done in the Conference at Carthage; and then pressed him so hard upon the Quarrel of the Maximianists, that Emeritus had nothing to say: This Conference was held in the presence of the Bishops, Clergy, and People, the 20*th.* of September 413. or 418. for the Manuscripts do not well agree about the Consuls Names.

At last, Gaudentius one of the seven Donatist Bishops who defended their Party in the Conference at Carthage, being pressed by the Threatnings of Dulcitius writ two Letters, which St. Augustine answers in his first Book against this Donatist Bishop; which is particularly to justifie the severity exercised towards them. Gaudentius willing to answer something wrote a Discourse; wherein, without meddling with the Conteſt betwixt them, he juſtified his Party and calumniated the Church. St. Auguſtine anſwereth this Treatiſe in the ſecond Book. Both theſe Books of St. Auguſtine are of the Year 420.

St. Auguſtine Tome IX.

There is a Sermon attributed to St. Auguſtine, concerning one Ruſticianus, a Sub-deacon, who was Re-baptized by the Donatiſts, and then Ordained Deacon; but this Diſcourſe does not agree to St. Auguſtine, as it is proved in the Preface. This Volume ends with a Catalogue of St. Auguſtine's Works againſt the Donatiſts, which are in the other Volumes of St. Auguſtine's Works. We have not ſpoken particularly of the Matters handled by St. Auguſtine, in every Book againſt the Donatiſts; becauſe he commonly repeateth the ſame Arguments, and ſo we ſhould have been obliged to ſay often the ſame things, and for which Reaſon it was put off to this place; that ſo I might give an Abridgment of his Doctrine, and a Breviary of his chief Reaſons all at once.

It has been obſerved already, that the Donatiſts began their Schiſm by a Separation of ſome African Biſhops, who accuſed Cæcilian of ſeveral Crimes whereof they had been convicted themſelves. Tho' they had been condemned in the Council of Rome, in that of Arles, and at laſt by Conſtantine's Judgment, yet they remained firm to their own Opinions, and would by no means be reconciled to the Church. Their Party alſo was much ſtrengthned by the great number of Biſhops whom they ordained almoſt in every Church of Africa, and by the Multitudes of People whom they drew after them: So that in St. Auguſtine's time, their Party was very near as ſtrong in Africa, as that of the Catholicks. But they held no Communion with all the other Churches in the World, which acknowledged Cæcilian, his Succeſſors, and thoſe of that Party for the true Church.

The Donatiſts in their own defence affirm'd, that Cæcilian, Felix of Aptungis, who ordained him, Miltiades that abſolved him, and ſeveral others of his Brethren, having been convicted of certain Crimes, ought to be depoſed and expelled out of the Church; that their Crimes made them ceaſe to be Members of the Church, which ought to be pure and without blemiſh; That as many as had defended them and had Communicated with them, were become Acceſſaries to their Crime by approving it; and that ſo, not only the Churches of Africa, but even all the other Churches in the World, which held Communion with the Churches of Cæcilian's Party, having been defiled, ceaſed to be Parts of the true Church of Jeſus Chriſt, that was then reduced to the ſmall number of thoſe who would not partake with Prevaricators; but kept themſelves in the Primitive Purity. Beſides this, they charged the Church with another great Crime as they eſteemed it; which was, that they made Application to the Emperor's Authority to Perſecute their Party; and that they cauſed ſeveral Violences to be exerciſed againſt them. Now they perſiſting in the Opinion of St. Cyprian, and of the ancient Biſhops of Africa; Who held, that Baptiſm by Hereticks and Schiſmaticks was invalid, and ought to be renew'd; a neceſſary Conſequence of their Principles, was the Rebaptizing of the Catholicks that came over to their Party.

Theſe are the Grounds on which the Schiſm of the Donatiſts ſtood.

There were two ways to deal with them; either by denying the Matter of Fact, or by oppoſing the Matter of Right: Thoſe who firſt writ againſt the Donatiſts, inſiſted moſt upon the Matter of Fact; that is, The Juſtification of Cæcilian, Felix of Aptungis, and the reſt. Neither doth St. Auguſtine omit this; for he often proves Cæcilian's Innocency, by the Judgments given in his behalf; Firſt, at Rome, by Pope Miltiades, and other Biſhops; Secondly, In the Council of Arles; and at laſt, by the Judgment of Conſtantine. He adds, as an abſolute Juſtification, the conſent of all the Churches in the World, which had approved and followed the Judgment of thoſe Councils. He likewiſe produces the Acts that were made to juſtifie Felix of Aptungis: He defends Miltiades and Hoſius, againſt the Calumnies laid upon them. And ſhews at laſt, That the Donatiſts had no Proofs of what they alledged againſt the Catholick Biſhops. But he doth not think this to be the the main Point, and therefore he paſſes to the Matter of Right, and maintains, That though Cæcilian, and the reſt of his Brethren, had been guilty of the Crimes laid to their Charge; yet that was not a ſufficient Ground for a Separation from the Church; and that the Church did not ceaſe to be the Church, becauſe it Communicated with wicked Men, ſince either ſhe did not know them; or elſe, ſhe bore with them to preſerve Peace: which brings him to that great Queſtion, Whether the Church here below is made up only of Saints and Righteous Men, or compoſed of Good and Bad. St. Auguſtine affirms, that there was always in the Church Chaff and Corn; that is, both good and wicked Men; and that ſuch will be to the Day of Judgment, which ſhall divide the good from the bad; that ſometimes the number of the latter exceeds that of the former; that many cannot be driven out of the Church, becauſe they are not known, and becauſe it is convenient to tolerate ſome for quietneſs ſake, to prevent a Schiſm which might be occaſioned by cutting off from the Communion thoſe Perſons who might draw along with them ſeveral of the Faithful; That it is great raſhneſs to condemn all the Churches in the World, for the Crime of one or two; That the Catholick Church ought to be diffuſed over the whole Earth, and not confined to a ſmall part of the World, as in a Corner of Africa. Here St. Auguſtine triumphs over his Adverſaries, proving by Prophecies, and other Paſſages both of the Old and New Teſtament, that the Catholick Church was to have a conſiderable Extent.

St. Auguſtine. Tome IX.

Theſe are properly the main Points in Controverſie betwixt the Church and the Donatiſts; but there are other Secondary Queſtions.

The firſt is, concerning the Perſecution, which the Donatiſts imputed to the Church as a Crime. St. Auguſtine defends the Church very Modeſtly, either by diſapproving ſuch Violences, or by ſhewing that it was lawful to make uſe of the Imperial Laws, and of ſome ſort of Severity to bring the Donatiſts back to the boſom of the Church. He chargeth them likewiſe with the ſame things; objecting the Cruelties, Violencies, Sacrileges and Murders committed by thoſe of their Party called Circumcellians, and authorized thereunto by Optatus Gildonianus.

The other acceſſary Queſtion, which St. Auguſtine looks upon as a principal one, is about the Validity of the Baptiſm of Hereticks. St. Auguſtine needed only to prove that his Party was the true Church, and ſo Condemn by a neceſſary Conſequence the Donatiſts, for Rebaptizing thoſe that had been baptized before by Catholicks, ſince it was agreed on both ſides, that the Baptiſm of the true Church was valid. But St. Auguſtine undertook beſides, to prove the validity of the Baptiſm of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks; and that though his Party were not the Church, yet the Donatiſts were not to baptize them a ſecond time. He confeſſes, that St. Cyprian, and moſt of the African Biſhops in his time were of a contrary Opinion; that Agrippinus his Predeceſſor, had appointed Hereticks to be Rebaptized; that St. Cyprian and the Councils held in Africa at that time, confirmed Agrippinus's Decree; that this Queſtion remained long undecided, or rather variouſly decided in divers places. But that at laſt the thing was decided in a Plenary Council of the whole Church, (in all likelihood he means that of Arles) and that after ſuch Determination, it was not permitted to doubt, becauſe the Provincial or National Councils muſt give place to the Authority of Plenary Councils. That St. Cyprian was to be excuſed for not taking the right ſide of ſo hard a Queſtion, which was not yet cleared or decided, and ſo much the rather, becauſe he defended his own Opinion without making a Schiſm, and with the Spirit of Peace and Unity: However, that the Letters and Writings of the Saints were not to be rely'd upon, as the Apoſtles Epiſtles, and the other Books of the Holy Scripture.

Now to explain St. Auguſtine's Opinion touching Baptiſm more particularly, we are to obſerve as he doth, that Baptiſm may be ſaid to be of two ſorts; the one adminiſtred in the Name of the Trinity, that is, by invoking of the Trinity; and the other performed without naming the three Divine Perſons. The latter, St. Auguſtine confeſſes to be null; but affirms the other to be valid, whoſoever he be that adminiſters it. So that it matters not who baptizeth, provided that Baptiſm be in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt. Two things are likewiſe to be diſtinguiſhed in Baptiſm, the Sacrament, and the Effect of the Sacrament: The Sacrament is found in thoſe that are baptized by Hereticks; but becauſe they have not Faith, they are deprived of the Effect: For, that Baptiſm may be complete, both as a Sacrament, and as to its Effect, the Sacrament muſt be intire, that is, the Perſon muſt be baptized outwardly in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt, and he that receives muſt believe and be converted. The Sacrament is often found without Faith, and Faith without the Sacrament. Children have the Sacrament without Faith. The good Thief had Faith without the Sacrament. God ſupplies in Children the Faith they want, and he ſupplied in the good Thief the Sacrament which he could not receive. But when either of theſe is wanting, by the Man's own fault, he cannot be excuſed; and he receiveth not the Effect of Baptiſm. When the Sacrament is found without Faith, and without Converſion, it is not neceſſary to be reiterated: It is ſufficient only to ſupply what is wanting; as when one is already converted, it is enough to receive the Sacrament. The difference lieth in this, that the Adult cannot be ſaved without Faith and Converſion, though they may be ſaved without the Sacrament, if ſo be that they do not want it through Contempt or Neglect, but becauſe they lay under an impoſſibility of receiving it.

From theſe Principles, St. Auguſtine draws the following Concluſions: 1. That Baptiſm conferred by Hereticks in the Name of the Trinity, is good and valid as it is a Sacrament, and ought not to be repeated. 2. That neither the Miniſter's Faith, as to Religion, nor his Sanctity avail any thing to the Validity of Baptiſm. 3. That it is God, and not the Miniſter who gives the Holy Spirit, and worketh the Remiſſion of Sins. 4. That Baptiſm produces this Effect,

St. Auguſtine. Tome IX.

Effect, but in them alone that are well-diſpoſed by Faith and Converſion of the Heart. 5. That the Prayers of the Church, which conſiſts of Saints and Righteous Men, ſupplie the Actual Faith, which Children cannot have. 6. That the Adult who have Faith and are Converted, may be ſaved without actual receiving of the Sacrament, but not without the Sacramental Vow.

As for ſome other Queſtions which might be made about Baptiſm adminiſtred by Infidels, or ſome impious Perſons that are Excommunicated or in jeſt; St. Auguſtine ſaith, in the ſeventh Book of Baptiſm, Chap. 53*d.* thus, 'It is asked, 'ſaith he, whether that Baptiſm is to be approved, which 'is adminiſtred by an unbaptized Perſon, who out of Cu'rioſity hath learned the way of baptizing among Chriſti'ans? It is asked further, Whether it be neceſſary for the 'Validity of Baptiſm that he, who either adminiſters or re'ceives it, be ſincere? And if they ſhould be only in jeſt, 'Whether Baptiſm ought to be adminiſtred again in the 'Church? Whether Baptiſm conferred in Deriſion, as that 'would be, which ſhould be adminiſtred by a Comedian, 'might be accounted Valid? Whether it is more Criminal 'to receive Baptiſm in jeſt in the Church, or to receive it 'with the ſame Spirit, in Hereſie or Schiſm? Whether Bap'tiſm adminiſtred by an Actor, may become Valid, when 'he that receives it is well-diſpoſed.

'St. Auguſtine anſwers to theſe and ſuch-like Queſtions, 'that the ſecureſt way is to return no Anſwer to Queſti'ons that never were decided in any Council, General, or 'National. But he adds, ſhould any Man, meeting with 'me at ſuch a Council, ask my Advice about theſe Queſti'ons, and that it were my Turn to declare my Opinion, ha'ving not heard other Mens Opinions, which I might preferr 'before mine own, and if I perceiv'd in my ſelf the ſame 'Diſpoſitions that I am now in, I ſhould without difficul'ty acknowledge, that they all receive Baptiſm truly in any 'place whatſoever, and by whomſoever adminiſtred, if on 'their part they receive it with Faith, and with Sincerity. 'I am apt alſo to believe, that ſuch as receive Baptiſm in 'the Church, or in what is ſuppoſed to be the Church, are 'truly baptized as to the Sacramental Part of the Action, 'whatſoever be their intention. But as for Baptiſm admi'niſtred and received out of the Church, in Raillery, Con'tempt, and to make Sport; I could not approve the ſame 'without a Revelation.

Theſe are St. Auguſtine's Opinions concerning the Validity or Invalidity of Baptiſm. As to the Anſwers which he makes to the Arguments of St. Cyprian, and the other Biſhops of his Opinion, they are grounded for the moſt part upon the Compariſon between concealed Hereticks and Evil Miniſters, with known Hereticks and Schiſmaticks. For ſince the Baptiſm of the former is Valid and not to be renewed; why ſhould not the ſame thing be ſaid of the latter, ſince all the Reaſons that are alledged for the nullity of the Baptiſm of Hereticks may alſo belong to Evil Miniſters? It is ſaid, for Example, that to give the Holy Ghoſt one muſt have it; that Hereticks have it not; and conſequently that they cannot give it. Why may we not reaſon after the ſame manner concerning Baptiſm conferred by concealed Hereticks, or by wicked Prieſts? Have they the Holy Ghoſt to give? thus St. Auguſtine overthrows the Reaſons and Teſtimonies brought in by St. Cyprian and his Collegues againſt the Validity of the Baptiſm of Hereticks, by ſhewing, that whilſt they prove too much, they prove nothing.

But his great Argument to deſtroy the Donatiſts, which he particularly inſiſteth upon in his laſt Book againſt Creſconius, is an Argument taken from their Conduct in a Schiſm that was riſen up amongſt themſelves, betwixt Maximianus, upheld by ſome other Biſhops of their Sect, and Primianus another Biſhop of their Party at Carthage; they accuſed one another of ſeveral Crimes, and condemned one another; but Primianus's Party being the ſtronger, prevailed and held a Plenary Council at Bagais, wherein they condemned Maximianus, and his Adherents, in very reproachful Terms, and got this Judgment to be confirmed by the Emperor's Letters. Now, according to the Donatiſts Principles, Perſons thus Condemned were out of the Church; all that Communicated with them were out of the Church; all whom they baptized, were to be baptized again. And yet the Primianiſts behaved themſelves quite otherwiſe; for they kept Communion with ſome of the condemned Biſhops, and owned them for lawful Biſhops; they acknowledged thoſe that were Baptized by the Maximianiſts, to be truly Baptized; and they admitted into their Communion thoſe that were of the Maximianiſts Party. St. Auguſtine compares this their Conduct, with their Behaviour towards the Scripture and the Univerſal Church; and by that Argument convinceth them, that it was only Prejudice and Obſtinacy which kept them in their Separation from the Church. St. Auguſtine. Tome IX.

The Supplement that is added to this ninth Volume, contains not only the Book againſt Fulgentius the Donatiſt, falſely attributed to St. Auguſtine, concerning which the Cenſure of the Louvain Doctors, and of Vindingus, ſet before it, may be conſulted; but alſo Extracts from ancient Pieces concerning the Hiſtory of the Donatiſts, taken out of Optatus, Euſebius, St. Auguſtine, the Conference at Carthage, the Councils of Carthage, and the Imperial Laws againſt the Donatiſts. And that all that St. Auguſtine writ againſt the Donatiſts might be publiſhed together, they copied out what he ſaid in the Conference at Carthage. This Collection is the more uſeful, becauſe there are conſiderable Reſtitutions of ſeveral Paſſages of Optatus, from a Manuſcript in the Library at St. Germains des Prez. Here is one of the principal. There is a Paſſage in the firſt Book of Optatus, where it is ſaid, that Eunomius and Olympius were ſent into Africa to Ordain a Biſhop, and to Degrade Cæcilian and Optatus: Ut remotis duobus unum ordinarent! This Paſſage obliged Albaſpinæus to affirm, that Donatus of Caſæ Nigræ had been Biſhop of Carthage. He likewiſe draws from it great Advantages in favour of the Church of Rome: yet this Period is not in the St. Germain's Copy, and it ſignifies nothing either for that which goes before, or for that which comes after. If we read the Paſſage, we may judge: Tunc duo Epiſcopi ad Africam miſſi ſunt, Eunomius, & Olympius. Venerunt, & apud Carthaginem fuerunt per dies quadraginta, vel quinquaginta ut pronunciarent ubi eſſet Catholica. Hoc ſeditioſa pars Donati fieri paſſa non eſt. This Place is clear and plain: whereas if this Period be inſerted, Ut remotis duobus unum ordirent, the Senſe is alter'd, and it will be contradictory. There is likewiſe, ſome Lines before, another Reſtitution, which is confirmed by St. Auguſtine's Teſtimony, in the Conference at Carthage. Donatus petiit, ut ei reverti licuiſſet, & nec ad Carthaginem accederet. Whereas they read before, Ut ei reverti Carthaginem contingeret. In the Extract out of the the third Book of Optatus, they diſtinguiſh three Perſecutions againſt the Donatiſts; and the Governors are named by whoſe Orders they were raiſed. This is not to be found in the ordinary Editions of Optatus. I ſhall not mention ſeveral other Corrections, which may make us wiſh that a new entire Edition of this Author were undertaken.

The Tenth TOME.

Tome X.

THE Tenth Volume, not yet Printed, is intended for the Books which St. Auguſtine compoſed againſt the Pelagians.

The three Books Of Merits and Remiſſion of Sins, wherein he treats of Infant-Baptiſm, directed to Marcellinus, ought to be ſet in the firſt place; for till then he had not undertaken the Pelagians, except in his Sermons, or in Converſation, (as he takes notice in his Retractations.) He writ theſe in the Year 412. in Anſwer to the Pelagians Queſtions which Count Marcellinus had ſent to him at Carthage. He ſpeaks there particularly of Infant-Baptiſm, as neceſſary to remit Original Sin; and of the neceſſity of the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, which juſtifies us, or maketh us righteous; though whilſt we are in this Life, we cannot ſo perfectly accompliſh God's Law, but that we are obliged to ſay in our daily Prayers, Forgive us our Sins. Theſe are the principal Truths oppoſed by the Pelagians. St. Auguſtine refutes them without naming the Authors, and ſpeaks of Pelagius in good Terms; becauſe ſeveral Perſons had a great Eſteem for his Virtue: And he had not yet ſet forth his Doctrine in his own Name, being contented to propoſe it in other Mens Names, in his Commentaries upon St. Paul. St. Auguſtine, in the laſt Book, refutes the Explication which he had given of thoſe Paſſages of the Apoſtle that ſpeak of Original Sin.

Count Marcellinus having received theſe three Books from St. Auguſtine, ſent him Word back again, that he had found a Paſſage which puzzl'd him; St. Auguſtine had ſaid, that with the help of Grace, Man might live without Sin; though none was yet arrived to that Perfection in this Life, and that none would ever arrive to it. Marcellinus asked St. Auguſtine how he could affirm this to be poſſible, if there were no Examples of it. To ſatisfie him about that Queſtion, St. Auguſtine wrote the Book Of the Spirit and of the Letter: Yet he doth not examine this Queſtion to the bottom; but having anſwered in very few Words, that God can do many things which he doth not, he boldly attacks thoſe who durſt affirm, that a Man may fulfil the Commandments, be Juſt and Virtuous, without the ſuccour of Chriſt's Grace. He grounds theſe Reaſonings upon that place of St. Paul, the Letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth Life. By the Letter, he underſtandeth the Law and the Commandments, which are unprofitable without the help of Grace, which is the Spring of Faith, of Righteouſneſs, Holineſs, and all Chriſtian Virtues. This Book is of the Year 413. Tome X.

In the Year 414. two young Monks, Timaſius and James, having been undeceived by St. Auguſtine, as to the Pelagian Errors, ſent to him one of Pelagius's Books; wherein he pleaded for the Strength of Nature, to the Prejudice of St. Auguſtine. Tome IX.

Chriſt's Grace. St. Auguſtine immediately engaged to write againſt it, and compoſed upon that Subject the Book Of Nature and of Grace: wherein he defends the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, without Prejudice to Nature, which is delivered and regulated by Grace. He explains in this Treatiſe his Principles concerning the Fall of Humane Nature, and the Neceſſity of Grace to be Juſtified; yet he ſpares Pelagius's Name.

But this Monk having afterwards diſcovered his Opinions, was cited by Heros, Biſhop of Arles, and by Lazarus, Biſhop of Aix, to a Council of Fourteen Biſhops, held at Dioſpolis, in Paleſtine, in the Year 415. wherein he was declared Catholick in the abſence of his Accuſers, having made a ſhew of condemning the Errors whereof he was accuſed. St. Auguſtine fearing leſt Men ſhould believe that the Council had approved his Doctrine, wrote a Book, intituled, Of the Acts of Pelagius: wherein he declares how Things were carried; and diſcovers at the ſame time, that Pelagius had impoſed upon the Fathers of the Council, by profeſſing a Doctrine which he had oppoſed in his Writings. This Book is of the Year 416, or 417. Pelagius made uſe of the ſame Artifice to perſuade Albinus, Pinianus and Melania, that he did not maintain the Errors he was accuſed of, by Anathematizing them in appearance. Cæleſtius alſo deceived Pope Zoſimus by the ſame Fraud, by preſenting unto him a Counterfeit Catholick Confeſſion. Theſe Cheats St. Auguſtine diſcovers and refutes in the Treatiſe Of Chriſt's Grace, and in that Of Original Sin; wherein he ſhews, that theſe Confeſſions of Faith are captious and deceitful. Theſe Treatiſes are of the Beginning of the Year 418. It is probable alſo that it was at that ſame time that St. Auguſtine writ the ſmall Treatiſe Of the Perfection of Righteouſneſs, againſt Cœleſtius: where he Anſwers the Objections and Difficulties propoſed by this Man, under the Name of Definitions againſt the Opinion of the Catholicks, who affirmed, that there never was, nor ever ſhould be a Man that could attain to that Perfection, of paſſing his whole Life without offending God. St. Auguſtine maintains, that God does not grant this Grace even to the greateſt Saints; and ſo that it is ridiculous to believe that Man can compaſs this by the ſole ſtrength of his Free-Will, as Pelagius and Cœleſtius imagined. He does not mention this Book in his Retractations, but St. Proſper quotes it ſeveral times.

The firſt Book Of Marriage and Concupiſcence, was compoſed about the latter end of the Year 418. There St. Auguſtine Anſwereth one of the moſt malicious of the Pelagian Objections againſt Original Sin. If Concupiſcence (ſaid they) is Evil, and an Effect of Sin; if all Children are Born in Sin, how comes Matrimony to be approved, which is the Effect and Spring of this Sin? St. Auguſtine handleth this nice Queſtion very cunningly, by ſhewing, that though Luſt be a Defect, and a Conſequence of the firſt Man's Sin, which remaineth even in the Baptized; yet Conjugal Chaſtity is to be approved, which makes a good uſe of an evil thing. He occaſionally diſcourſeth of ſeveral Queſtions about Marriage, which he had treated of in other Books. This Book is dedicated to Count Valerius, into whoſe hands the Letter that contained this Objection fell.

Julianus, an Italian Biſhop, a Man of Wit, having read this Book, he was reſolved to ſignalize himſelf, by writing four Books againſt this Treatiſe of St. Auguſtine. This Father having ſeen ſome Extracts of them, that were directed to Valerius, anſwered them in the ſecond Book Of Marriages and Concupiſcence, written in 419.

Some time after, he received the four whole Books of Julianus. In reading of them, he perceived that the Extracts ſent to him were not very faithfully drawn; which determined him to undertake another Work to Anſwer them fully. It is divided into ſix Books. In the two firſt he oppoſes the Teſtimonies of the Holy Fathers who dy'd in the Communion of the Church, to Julianus's Calumnies, who had accuſed St. Auguſtine of approving the Manichæan Doctrine; becauſe he had taught, that all Men inherited Original Sin from Adam; which is remitted not only in thoſe of riper Years, but even in Children, by the Grace of Baptiſm. And for this he alledgeth ſome Paſſages out of St. Irenæus, St. Cyprian, Rheticius Biſhop of Autun, Olympius a Biſhop in Spain, St. Hilary of Poictiers, and St. Ambroſe, which prove, that Man is Born in Sin, and is cleanſed by Baptiſm. But becauſe Julianus appealed to the Greek Fathers, St. Auguſtine produceth likewiſe the Teſtimonies of St. Gregory Nazianzen, St. Baſil, together with the Judgment of the Biſhops of Palæſtine, who condemned Pelagius. He anſwereth a Paſſage of St. Chryſoſtome which Julianus had cited, and quotes ſeveral other Paſſages out of this Father, which ſuppoſe Original Sin. Having thus ſtrengthned his Opinion with theſe Great Mens Authority, he likewiſe recriminates upon Julianus for publiſhing ſuch Principles as ſavoured of the Hereſie of the Manichees; and with this he concludes the firſt Book.

In the Second Book, he refuteth the chief Arguments of the Pelagians, againſt Original Sin, by the Authorities of the Fathers; ſhewing that in their Writings they prevented and reſolved thoſe very Objections which the Pelagians did ſo much depend upon. Having collected a great Number of Paſſages upon that Subject, he ſaith, that their Authority is ſo much the more conſiderable, becauſe they had ſaid theſe things without Prejudice, before the Pelagian Hereſie broke out, following therein the Senſe of the Church. St. Auguſtine. Tome IX.

'We have ſhewed, ſaith he, directing his Speech to the Pelagians, by invincible Authorities, that the Holy Biſhops, 'who lived before us, taught the ſame Faith which we 'maintain, and overthrew the Arguments which you make 'uſe of, not only in their Diſcourſes, but in their Writings alſo.... We have ſhewed you their Opinions, 'which are very particular, and clear: It is not their Power, but God's who made them his Holy Temples, which 'you ought to Fear. They judged our Cauſe, at a time, 'when they could not be ſuſpected either of favouring, 'or hating either Party; they had neither Relation to, 'nor Affection for the one, or the other; they were angry 'neither with you, nor us; neither you, nor we, could 'move them to Pity. They preſerved the Doctrine which 'they found in the Church, and they taught what they had 'Learned: They delivered to their Children what they received of their Fathers. We had not yet referred our 'Cauſe to them, and yet they gave judgment on our Side 'neither of us were known to them, and yet they pronounced in our behalf; we had not any Diſpute with 'you, and they declared the Right to be on our Side.... 'Thoſe Biſhops were Learned, Juſt, and Wiſe; they ſtrongly defended the Truth againſt Innovations; and none can 'ſay, that they wanted Wit, Knowledge, or Freedom. Should 'a Council be aſſembled from all Parts of the World, it 'were hard to find ſuch a Number of Biſhops of that Importance; neither did they all live at the ſame time. They 'are the Choice of the greateſt Men whom God gave to 'his Church in ſeveral Ages, Their Teſtimonies are collected in a Book, which may come to your Hands. The 'more you ſhould wiſh to have them for your Judges, if 'you defended the Faith of the Church, the more ought you 'to fear them, when you oppoſe it. I hope that their Teſtimonies will cure your Blindneſs, as I wiſh it; but if you 'continue obſtinate in your Error, which God forbid, you are 'no more to look for a Tribunal to juſtifie you, but thoſe 'wonderful Defenders of the Truth to accuſe you, St. Irenæus, St. Cyprian, Rheticius, Olympius, St. Hilary, St. Gregory, St. Ambroſe, St. Baſil, St. John Chryſoſtome, St. Innocent, and St. Jerome, with all thoſe that communicated 'with them, that is to ſay, the whole Church, if you run 'to that exceſs of Folly, you muſt be anſwered by defending the Faith of theſe great Men, as the Goſpel it ſelf is 'defended againſt ungodly Men, and the Enemies of Religion.' This he doth in the Four next Books, which contain the Anſwer to Julianus his Four Books. There He treateth particularly of Original Sin, of Concupiſcence, of the falſhood of the Virtues of the Heathens, of the neceſſity of Baptiſm, and of Grace; and anſwereth all that Julianus had ſaid againſt what he had ſet down in his Book of Matrimony and Concupiſcence. I do not believe that theſe Books were finiſhed before the Year 424.

Before he had written them, Pope Boniface ſent him two Letters of the Pelagians: the one of Julianus written to Boniface himſelf; and the other, in the Name of Eighteen Biſhops of the ſame Opinion which had been ſent to Theſſalonica. St. Auguſtine having received them, immediately wrote four Books to refute them, which he directed to Pope Boniface. In the beginning of the Firſt, to get that Pope's good Will, he thanks him for the Love whice he ſhewed towards him, and for the courteous Manner wherewith he received his Brother Alypius of Tagaſta; he compliments him upon the Dignity of his See, and tells him, that tho' all Biſhops are obliged to watch for the Defence of Chriſt's Flock, he was yet more particularly engaged to do it, becauſe he was in a more Eminent Place. Afterwards he anſwers Julianus's Calumnies, and proves, that the Catholicks did not deny Free-will; that they do not condemn Marriage, nor the Lawful Procreation of Children; that they do not condemn the Saints of the Old Teſtament, neither do they ſay, that the Apoſtles were defiled through diſorderly Deſires, and explains in what Senſe St. Paul ſaid he was carnal. But they maintain, that Man cannot be Righteous without Grace; that Children are born in Sin; that the involuntary Motions of Concupiſcence, are an effect of Sin; that the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt doth not only help Man to do good when he is willing, but makes him willing to do it; that the Saints of the Old Teſtament, were only juſtified by Faith in Jeſus Chriſt; that Baptiſm is not only neceſſary to Children, to enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, but alſo to obtain a ſhare in Life Eternal, out of which they are excluded by Original Sin alone.

In the two next Books, he refutes almoſt the ſame Calumnies contained in the other Letter of the Pelagians: The two Firſt are about Free-Will, and Marriage. St. Auguſtine adds nothing to what he had ſaid in the fore-going Book. In the Third, they taxed the Catholicks with introducing Fatality. St. Auguſtine ſhews the difference betwixt Grace and Fate. In the Fourth, they accuſed them of maintaining that the Law was not given to juſtifie Man, but to render render him more Sinful. St. Auguſtine tells them, that they did not underſtand the Opinion of the Church, in that Point; that the Law was given to teach what ought to be done, but that it is Grace which makes us obey the Law; and ſo the Law doth indeed ſhew what Righteouſneſs is, but doth not make us practiſe it. Fifthly, they upbraided the Catholicks with believing, that Baptiſm did not remit all Sins; ſo that Men continued partly God's Children, and partly the Children of the Devil. St. Auguſtine replies, That Baptiſm doth indeed remit all Sins, but it doth not cure Nature of its Weakneſs, and Imperfections ... That the Righteous may, and do Sin often, without becoming therefore the Children of the Devil, becauſe there is no Man ſo Righteous as that he ſinneth not. The Sixth Calumny is concerning the Old Teſtament. St. Auguſtine anſwereth, That the Righteous who lived under the Old Teſtament, were juſtified through the Grace of the New; whereof the Old was only the Figure. The Seventh is, that the Apoſtles, and Prophets were not perfectly Holy, but only leſs criminal than others. St. Auguſtine anſwers, that they were truly Righteous through Faith and Charity, but they had not all the perfection of Virtue, which now they have in the other Life. He utterly rejects the Ninth Calumny, whereby they accuſed the Catholicks of ſaying, that Jeſus Chriſt had been ſubject to Sin. The Tenth Calumny was expreſſed in theſe Terms: They affirm, that Men ſhall begin in the next Life, to practiſe the Commandments, which they did not practiſe in this. St. Auguſtine oppoſes it; ſhewing, That they put an ill Conſtruction upon a Catholick Truth; which is, that the Virtue, the Righteouſneſs of Men, ſhall only be perfect in the next Life.

St. Auguſtine. Tome. X.

In the laſt Book, St. Auguſtine refutes the Pelagian Doctrines; and ſhews, that under pretence of commending Nature, Marriage, Free-Will, the Law, and the Saints of the Old Teſtament, they advanced very dangerous Errors, to which he oppoſes ſeveral Teſtimonies of St. Cyprian, and of St. Ambroſe.

The Book of Grace, and Free-Will, was written by St. Auguſtine in the Year 427. upon a Diſpute which happened in the Monaſtery of Adrumetum, againſt thoſe who fearing, leaſt by the Doctrine of Grace, Free-Will ſhould be denied, do indeed deny Grace by defending Free-Will, becauſe they ſuppoſe that Grace is given according to Merit. This laſt Error St. Auguſtine chiefly oppoſes in this Book; ſhewing, that the beginning both of Faith, and good Reſolutions, is an effect of Grace.

The reading of this Book did not ſettle Peace among thoſe Monks: For there was an Objection propoſed, which was obvious enough to every Man's underſtanding. If no Man can do Good, without the Grace of God, and this Grace cannot be merited, no Man is to be reproved, or corrected for not doing his Duty, ſince it is not in his Power to do it, becauſe he wants Grace, and cannot deſerve it. St. Auguſtine perceiving the difficulty of this Objection, for the Solution thereof, compoſed the Book of Correction, and Grace, wherein, without retracting any thing of what he had formerly ſaid, he affirms, that Admonition is to be uſed: 1. Becauſe it may happen, that God will touch the Heart of him that is reproved. 2. Becauſe Sinners ſin voluntarily, and without Compulſion; and that they cannot complain that God hath denied them his Grace, or the Gift of Perſeverance, ſince he owes his Grace to no body. He does not content himſelf with anſwering the Objection; but further explains and confirms his Principles, by ſhewing the difference betwixt the Grace of Adam in the State of Innocence, and that which is neceſſary to Man in the State of fallen Nature. He ſpeaks alſo of the Gift of Perſeverance, which is not granted unto all; and of the Power of Grace, and the free Predeſtination of the Elect.

He again inſiſteth upon the ſame Matter, and upon the ſame Principles, in both the Books which he writ in Anſwer to Hilary's, and Proſper's Letters. The Firſt is of the Predeſtination of the Saints, and the Second of the Gift of Perſeverance: Wherein he demonſtrates, That the beginning of Faith and good Purpoſes, is the Gift of God; and that ſo our Predeſtination, or Vocation, does not depend upon our Merits. The Second Book concerns the Gift of Perſeverance, which he ſhews to depend equally upon God, as the beginning of our Converſion. St. Auguſtine compoſed theſe Treatiſes in the Year 429.

St. Auguſtine's laſt Effort againſt the Pelagians, fell upon Julianus his old Adverſary; who, to maintain the Quarrel he had begun, compoſed Eight Books againſt St. Auguſtine's Second Book Of Matrimony, and Concupiſcence. St. Auguſtine having received Five of them from Alypius, undertook to write againſt them, and was engaged about the Fourth, when he writ the 224*th*. Letter to Quodvultdeus, in the Year 428. It is probable, that Alypius ſent him the other three, but St. Auguſtine anſwered but ſix; and this Work remains imperfect, as Poſſidius affirms. The Six Books of St. Auguſtine, were publiſhed by F. Vignier, from a Manuſcript of the Abby of Clervaux, which, in all probability, will be reviſed and corrected in a new Edition from ſome other Manuſcripts. Theſe Books are written by way of Dialogue: There St. Auguſtine produces Julianus's own Terms, and anſwers them plainly, and in few Words.

St. Auguſtine. Tome. X.

We referr'd to ſpeak of St. Auguſtine's four Treatiſes Of the Original of the Soul, to this place, becauſe they were not written properly againſt the Pelagians, though St. Auguſtine handleth there ſome Queſtions, that have ſome relation to the Diſpute betwixt them: Therefore I think that it had been more proper to have ſet them at the end of the Sixth Volume, than in this place. The occaſion and ſubject of theſe Four Books is this.

A Prieſt of the Province of Mauritania Cæſarienſis, one Victor, who was Sirnamed Vincentius, from a Donatiſt Biſhop, Succeſſor to Victor of that Name, whoſe Memory that Prieſt who had been a Donatiſt, did reverence very much: This Prieſt, I ſay, having met in the Houſe of one Peter, a Spaniſh Prieſt, with a Writing of St. Auguſtine's, wherein this Saint had ſet down his uſual Doubts about the Soul's Original, wrote two Books againſt him, which he directed to Peter himſelf. He affirmed in that Book, That nothing was eaſier than the deciſion of that Queſtion, and that he was ſure that God did every moment create new Souls; but added to this Principle ſeveral erroneous Conſequences: He confeſſed indeed, that the Soul was no part of God's Subſtance; but he would not ſay that he created it of nothing; He aſſerted, That it had a Body, and ſo that Man was made up of a groſs Body, of a Soul that was a more ſubtile Body and of a Spirit. He ſaid, that the Soul deſerved to be placed in the Body, to contract ſome Pollution by converſing with Fleſh; but that it was alſo purified by the Fleſh. That thoſe Children whom God predeſtinated to Baptiſm, were ſaved, though they were not baptized; That their Souls went into Paradiſe until the Day of Judgment, and that after the Reſurrection they ſhould enter into the Kingdom of Heaven: That Sacrifices were to be offered for them: And laſt of all, that the reaſon why ſome were Saved and others Damned, was the knowledge which God had of the Good or Evil which they ſhould have done, if they had lived. Theſe Notions being very dangerous, and Vincentius having maintained them with a great deal of Wit and Eloquence; when St. Auguſtine had received theſe Books from Renatus, a Monk of Cæſarea, he thought himſelf obliged to anſwer them.

He wrote therefore a Treatiſe to this Renatus, who had ſent them; wherein he refuteth the particular Opinions before-named: and among the reſt, That of Childrens Salvation who die without Baptiſm; He ſheweth, that they cannot be ſaved but by that Sacrament; and that the Euchariſt is not to be offered for thoſe that died before the Uſe of Reaſon, and unbaptized: For, ſaith he, The Body of Jeſus Chriſt is not to be offered but for ſuch as are Members of Jeſus Chriſt; but none can be a Member of Jeſus Chriſt, but by Baptiſm in Jeſus Chriſt; or by dying for Jeſus Chriſt; 'Niſi Baptiſmate in Chriſto, aut morte pro Chriſto.' He anſwereth the Example of the good Thief, in whom Faith ſupplied Baptiſm; and that of Dinocrates Brother to St. Perpetua, a Child of Seven Years of Age, to whom God granted Salvation, through the Prayers of that Saint, as it is related in the Acts of her Martyrdom. As to this latter Example, St. Auguſtine ſaith at firſt, that being not taken out of a Canonical Book, he can ground no Doctrine upon it, and that it is Uncertain whether that Child was baptized or no.

After this, he anſwers Vincentius's Notion, that Children were either Saved or Damned, for the Good or Evil which they would have done, if they had lived; This, he ſays, is a fooliſh Opinion: For, how can a Perſon be puniſhed or recompenced, for Evil or Good Actions which are not, and which ſhall never be? Were this true, no Man that is baptized can be ſecure; for who knows, whether he ſhould not have Apoſtatiz'd, had he lived? And how can this be made to agree with what the Scripture ſaith of a Man that is taken away, leſt the Wickedneſs of his Sin ſhould corrupt him. Having refuted Vincentius's falſe Conſequences, he ſhews, that thoſe Paſſages of Scripture which he alledgeth to prove the daily Creation of Souls, do indeed prove nothing, and that he takes almoſt all of them in a wrong Senſe; yet he condemns not this Opinion, provided that Teſtimonies of Scripture be not abuſed to prove it, and that nothing be alledged contrary to the Doctrine of the Church to uphold it: provided likewiſe that it be not ſaid, 1. That God created ſinful Souls. 2. That Children dying before Baptiſm, are ſaved. 3. That Souls ſinned before their entrance into Bodies. 4. That they are puniſhed for future Sins that ſhall never be.

St. Auguſtine was not contented to write this Book to Renatus; but he writ beſides, a ſecond Treatiſe upon the ſame Subject, to Peter the Spaniſh Prieſt, who had given the occaſion of this Contraverſie, to diſabuſe him concerning Vincentius's Opinions.

And laſt of all, he dedicates two Books to Vincentius himſelf. In the firſt, he refuteth theſe Errors, which he reduces to theſe Eleven Propoſitions: 1. That the Soul is not created of Nothing. 2. That God creates Souls in infinitum. 3. That the Soul looſes its Merit by being united with the Body. 4. That it is renewed by the ſame Fleſh, which cauſed it to looſe its Merit. 5. That it deſer-ved to be ſinful, before it entered into the Body. 6. That Original Sin is remitted in Children that die without Baptiſm. 7. That ſome Children whom God hath predeſtinated to be baptized, do not receive that Sacrament. 8. That one may ſay of them, He was taken away, leſt wickedneſs ſhould corrupt him. 9. That there are Habitations for them in the Kingdom of Heaven. 10. That the Euchariſt ought to be offered for them. 11. That their Souls go into Paradiſe after Death; and that after the Reſurrection they ſhall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven.

St. Auguſtine. Tome X.

In the ſecond, St. Auguſtine defends thoſe things which Vincentius found fault with in his Book: They are Three. 1. His Doubts of the Original of the Soul. 2. His denying it to be a Body. 3. That he diſtinguiſhed not the Soul from the Spirit. He ſaid, touching the firſt Point, Is it credible that a Man does not know himſelf? If that be, wherein doth he differ from Beaſts? St. Auguſtine anſwers, That Man ought to confeſs his Ignorance, not only as to what relates to the Divinity, but alſo as to many things that concern his Body and Soul: And he produces ſeveral Examples of them. Upon the ſecond, his Queſtion was, What the Soul is, if it be not a Body? but as he confeſſed at the ſame time that God is not a Body; St. Auguſtine asketh him the ſame Queſtions concerning the Nature of God, which he had ſtarted about the Nature of the Soul. He refuteth their Opinion who believed the Soul to be Corporeal, and particularly Vincentius's Fancy, that the Soul being entred into the Body, was diffuſed into all the Parts, and by a kind of Congelation, had received the figure thereof. He anſwers the Argument which Vincentius had raiſed out of the Parable of Dives and Lazarus, and from Apparitions; obſerving, that the Soul feels and repreſents Bodies, though it be not a Body, and though there be no Body preſent. As for what is ſaid of Lazarus's Finger, and of the parts of a Soul; he retorts the Argument upon Vincentius, becauſe he ſpake likewiſe of the Finger of God, and Scripture aſcribes Members to him, though he be a meer Spirit.

At laſt, St. Auguſtine ſaith to the laſt Point, that when the Spirit is diſtinguiſh'd from the Soul, the word Spirit is taken in a ſpecial manner for Intelligence or Underſtanding; but not for Spirit, as it is a Nature oppoſed to Body. Laſtly, he exhorteth Victor to lay aſide the Sirname of Vincentius; becauſe, being entred into the Church, he could no longer without Condemning himſelf, look upon Vincentius as a Saint, who died a Donatiſt. Theſe Treatiſes were compoſed in 419.

Though the main Points treated of in St. Auguſtine's Works againſt the Pelagians have been mentioned already: yet, it will not be amiſs, to give here a general View of his Doctrine. God created the firſt Man in a ſtate of Innocence, Holineſs, and Grace. He was ſubject neither to the neceſſity of Dying, nor to Sickneſſes, nor Pain, nor the Motions of Luſt, nor Ignorance, nor any of the Inconveniencies of Life, or the Imperfections of Nature, which are the Conſequences and Effect of his Sin. His Free-Will was entire, and weakened with nothing. It was perfectly indifferent to either Good or Evil, though it could not do Good without the help of Grace; but this Grace which God afforded him, was entirely ſubjected to his Free-Will: It was a help without which he could not do good; but it did not make him do good. Such was the Condition of the Firſt Man, like that of the Angels before their Sin. Such would have been the Condition of his Poſterity, had he continued in that happy ſtate; but having offended God by his Diſobedience, he, and all his Poſterity are become ſubject unto Death, Pain, Sickneſſes, Puniſhments; and what is worſe, to Ignorance and Luſt, that is to ſay, to Extravagant Motions which are within us, whether we will, or no. But what is yet more incomprehenſible, all his Deſcendents begotten in the ordinary way, are born in Sin; They all contract the Sin which we call Original, which makes Children the Objects of God's Wrath, and infallibly damns them, except they are regenerated by Baptiſm. Baptiſm doth indeed take away the ſtain of Sin, but it doth not remove the Puniſhment, and the Conſequences of Sin. Concupiſcence, Ignorance, Inclination to Sin, Weakneſſes, and other Puniſhments for Sin, abide ſtill during the whole courſe of this Mortal Life. Free-Will is not extinguiſhed, but it hath not ſo much ſtrength, and ſtands in need of powerful aſſiſtance to do Good. The Grace which it needs to act, is not only that help without which it could neither will nor do that which is good; but alſo ſuch an aſſiſtance as makes it both will and do it infallibly: This Grace is neceſſary not barely to accompliſh entirely what is good, and to continue therein; but it is even neceſſary to begin Faith, for Prayer, and for the firſt Motions of Converſion. Yet it bereaves us not of our Liberty, becauſe we do not keep the Commandments, but as far as we are willing. It worketh this Will in us without Violence or Compulſion: for God conſtraineth no Man to do either good or evil; but to do good the Will muſt be ſuccoured by Grace, which doth not deprive it of its Liberty: and this Grace is not granted to Merit, but is abſolutely free. Since the Firſt Man's Sin, the whole Maſs of Mankind was corrupt, condemned, and ſubject to Death. God by free Grace and Mercy takes out of this maſs of Corruption whom he pleaſes, leaving the reſt in that condition, out of that Juſtice which none can find fault with; for what is Man that he ſhould diſpute it with God? Doth the Earthen Veſſel ſay to the Potter that framed it, Why haſt thou made me thus? However, it may be truly ſaid, that all Men may be ſaved if they will; if they be not, they can only accuſe their own perverſe Will, whereby they reſiſt the Call of God. There are ſome Graces which he refuſeth not to Reprobates, wherewith they might do good if they would. To ſome, he gives the Knowledge of his Law, and they deſpiſe it; He inſpires into others a deſire of being Converted, and they reject it; Some he excites to Prayer, but they neglect to do it; He ſpeaks to the Hearts of ſeveral, who harden themſelves, that they may not hearken unto his Voice; He overcomes the hardneſs of ſome for a time, converting them by an effectual Grace, who plunge themſelves again into Vice. In a Word, how ſtrong and powerful ſoever the Grace is which he gives, yet it may be ſaid in ſome Senſe, that Man may always reſiſt it, though he doth not actually do it. God does not grant this Grace to all Men, not only becauſe he oweth it to none; but alſo becauſe ſome make themſelves unworthy of it: for to ſay nothing of Children who die before the uſe of Reaſon, who are either damned becauſe of Original Sin, or ſaved by the Grace of Baptiſm, the Adult who have not the gift of Perſeverance, have made themſelves unworthy of it, either through their own Sins, or by the Contempt which they have caſt upon God's Vocation; or by the Oppoſition they have made to inward Grace; or laſtly, by falling again into the ſtate of Sin from which God delivered them in his Mercy. And ſo no Man can either excuſe himſelf, or accuſe the Juſtice of God, becauſe every one receiveth what he deſerved; every one is rewarded or puniſhed, according to the good or the evil which he hath done, by his Will which co-operates with the moſt effectual Grace.

St. Auguſtine Tome X.

The Effect of this Grace, according to St. Auguſtine, is to make us in love with that which is good; it is a pleaſure which draws our heart towards good things, and enables us to keep the Commandments; without this Grace, there is no Action meritorious. The fear of Puniſhment, though merely ſervile, is good and profitable, becauſe it regulates the inward Man, but it does not render us Righteous before God. We ſhall never perfectly accompliſh the Precept of loving God in this Life, becauſe we ſhall never love him ſo perfectly as in the next: And though through God's Grace, a Man may abſolutely avoid all Sin in this Life; yet it never did, nor ſhall ever happen that a mere Man (excepting the Bleſſed Virgin, of whom St. Auguſtine would not have us to ſpeak, when Sin is mentioned) paſſed through this Life without Sin: For this reaſon, the moſt righteous ſay daily, Lord remit us our Debts; that is, our Sins; But theſe are not mortal Sins, which bereave the Soul of Righteouſneſs and Holineſs; they are venial and daily Sins, which are indeed againſt God's Law, but do not utterly deſtroy Charity.

St. Auguſtine's Principles concerning Predeſtination and Reprobation, do exactly agree with his Opinion touching Grace. Both thoſe Decrees, according to him, ſuppoſe the fore-knowledge of Original Sin, and of the Corruption of the whole maſs of Mankind. If God would ſuffer all Men to remain there, none could complain of that ſeverity, ſeeing they are all guilty and doom'd to Damnation, becauſe of the Sin of the firſt Man. But God reſolved from all Eternity, to deliver ſome whom he had choſen out of pure Mercy, without any regard to their future Merits; and from all Eternity he prepared for them that were thus choſen, thoſe Gifts and Graces which are neceſſary, to ſave them infallibly; and theſe he beſtows upon them in time. All thoſe therefore, that are of the number of the Elect, hear the Goſpel and believe, and perſevere in the Faith working out by Love, to the end of their lives. If they chance to wander from the right way, they return, and repent of their Sins: and it is certain that they ſhall all die in the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt.

Reprobation is not like Predeſtination; God doth not poſitively caſt away any Man; he predeſtinateth none to Damnation; he only knows thoſe that are left in that maſs of Perdition, and are not of the happy number of thoſe whom he will deliver through Mercy. Theſe Wretches are at laſt Condemned, either becauſe of Original Sin which is not remitted to them, and ſuch are the Children that die without receiving Baptiſm, or for the Sins which by their Free-Will they have added to the firſt Sin; or, becauſe they wanted Faith and Righteouſneſs; or laſtly, becauſe they did not perſevere unto the end.

This is an Abridgment of St. Auguſtine's Doctrine, which is ſet down in his Books againſt the Pelagians, and in ſeveral other places of his Works.

The Supplement to this Volume, containeth for the moſt part Writings that ſerve to juſtifie St. Auguſtine's Doctrine of Predeſtination and of Grace, and ſome other Treatiſes upon the ſame Subject, attributed to St. Auguſtine; the Authors whereof are not well known. St. Proſper's four Books, in in Defence of St. Auguſtine, are of the firſt ſort; to which they have added his Epigram, in Commendation of the ſame Father.

St. Auguſtine. Tome X.

Cœleſtine's Letter, the Capitulars that follow it, and the Canons of the Council of Orange, are likewiſe Illuſtrious Approbations of St. Auguſtine's Doctrine. Here one might add ſeveral other Treatiſes about Grace, written upon occaſion of thoſe Conteſts raiſed concerning St. Auguſtine's Opinion; ſuch as the Letter of the African Biſhops that were baniſhed into Sardinia; The Canons of the Council of Valentia; with the Treatiſes of Florus, Lupus, Remigius of Auxerre, Ratramnus, and ſeveral other Authors who writ of theſe Matters in the Ninth Century.

The other Works contained in this Addition do not bear the Names of any Authors. The firſt is a conſiderable Treatiſe, divided into ſix Books, and intituled, Hypognoſticôn; Or, Reflections and Notes againſt the Pelagians and Cœleſtians. The Author ſets down the main Doctrines of the Pelagians in their own Words, and then confutes them. Although this Book is conformable to St. Auguſtine's Doctrine, yet it hath not his Style. That Father among the Benedictines, who chiefly looks after the New Edition of St. Auguſtine, having given me notice, that he thought it might be Marius Mercator's; I have examined it, and found that his Conjecture is not ill grounded. For, in the firſt place, that Work is of an ancient Author, who both liv'd and writ at the ſame time with Pelagius and Cœleſtius, and he was of St. Auguſtine's Opinion; this agrees with Marius Mercator. 2. Marius Mercator uſually gives his Treatiſes the ſame Title with this; for ſo he intituled his Writing againſt Julianus. 3. The Form of this Treatiſe is perfectly like that of his other Treatiſes: he lays down there the very Terms of his Adverſaries, and then refutes them with Notes and Reflections. 4. Having compared this Treatiſe with others of Marius Mercator, and particularly with his Book againſt Julianus, I found the Style to be the ſame: One may meet with the ſame Terms repeated again, the ſame Figures, the ſame Livelineſs, the ſame Turn, and the ſame Expreſſions. Laſtly, St. Auguſtine, in the 193*d*. Letter, to Marius Mercator, in 418. affirms, that this Man had written a Book full of Scripture-Teſtimonies againſt the new Hereticks: and this can belong to no other of Mercator's Treatiſes, but agrees perfectly with this. Theſe are the Conjectures which I thought of, and I doubt not but the Benedictines will bring ſeveral others much ſtronger; in the mean time, theſe may be ſufficient to make their Conjecture very probable.

The Book Of Predeſtination and Grace, which is among St. Auguſtine's Works, under the Name of an uncertain and ſuſpected Author, is attributed by Sirmondus to St. Fulgentius, and Printed under his Name among this Father's Works. We ſhall examine whether it be his, when we come to St. Fulgentius. However, this ſmall Diſcourſe of Predeſtination agrees neither with the Style nor with the Doctrine of St. Auguſtine.

Theſe are all this Father's Works. His Life will be added in another Volume, with the Teſtimonies of the Ancients concerning him, the Commendations that have been given him, and very large and uſeful Tables.

Though we have given a ſufficient Account both of St. Auguſtine's Character and Genius, in ſpeaking of his Works; yet it is convenient to ſay ſomething of them here in general. He was a Man of great Extent, great Exactneſs, and great force of Mind. His Reaſonings were very ſtrong. His ordinary Method is, to lay down extenſive Principles, from which he draws an infinite number of Conſequences: ſo that all the Points of his Doctrine have a great Connexion one with another. He argued more upon moſt of the Myſteries of our Religion, than any Author before him. He ſtarts ſeveral Queſtions never thought of before, and reſolves many of them by the mere Strength of his Wit. He often left the Notions of his Predeceſſors, to follow a Path wholly new, whether in Expounding the Scriptures, or in Opinions of Divinity. That may be ſaid of him, as to Divinity, what Cicero ſaid of himſelf, as to Philoſophy, That he was Magnus Opinator; that is, that he advanced ſeveral Opinions that were only probable. But St. Auguſtine doth it modeſtly, and with much Prudence, without pretending to oblige others to embrace his Opinions without Examination: whereas, when the Queſtion is about the Doctrine of the Church, he propoſes and maintains it ſtoutly, and as ſtrongly oppoſes its Oppoſers. He had much leſs Learning than Wit; for he underſtood not the Languages, neither had he read the Ancients much. He wrote with greater Facility and Clearneſs, than Politeneſs and Elegancy. Though he had taught Rhetorick, yet either he was not Maſter of the Eloquence of the Orators, or he neglected it: nay, his Expreſſions are not always pure; for he often uſes improper and barbarous Words. He often uſes little ſtrokes of Wit, and plays with Words. He repeats the ſame things, and inſiſts upon the ſame Arguments in hundreds of places. He dwells long upon the ſame Thought; to which he gives ſeveral Turns, and enlarges frequently upon common places. He treated of infinite numbers of Things, by laying down Principles; and framed (if we may ſo ſay) the Body of Divinity for all the Latin Fathers that came after him. They have not only taken out of his Books the Principles they make uſe of, but often they have only copied them. The Councils have borrowed his Words to expreſs their Deciſions. In ſhort, Peter Lombard, in the twelfth Century, going about to compoſe an Epitome of the whole Body of Divinity, did little elſe but collect Paſſages out of St. Auguſtine. And though Thomas Aquinas, and other Schoolmen, followed another Method; yet, for the moſt part, they have ſtuck to St. Auguſtine's Principles, whereupon they erected their Theological Opinions.

St. Auguſtine. Tome X.

After this, no Man needs wonder that his Works were ſo much looked after formerly, and ſo many times publiſhed ſince Printing was invented. The Edition of St. Auguſtine's Works was one of the firſt conſiderable things that Printers committed to the Preſs. Amerbachius undertook it in 1495. This Gothick Edition was followed by that of Baſil, in Nine Volumes, in the Year 1506. and by that of Paris, in 1515. with long Lines, publiſhed in 1528. and in 1526. which is the faireſt for its Character. The Editions of Guillard and Chevallon, which came out not long after, are likewiſe pretty fair ones.

In 1571. two came out; the one in Paris, by Morellus; and the other at Lyons. The Doctors of Louvain having carefully Reviſed St. Auguſtine's Works, cauſed them to be Printed at Antwerp, in 1577. The following Editions are only new Impreſſions of this. The firſt and the faireſt was done at Paris, 1586. and was followed by thoſe of the Years 1609, 1614, 1626, 1635, 1652. not to mention that at Venice in 1584. that at Colen, in 1616. and the laſt Edition at Lyons. Now they having Printed, from time to time, ſeveral Treatiſes of St. Auguſtine that were not in the former Editions, Father Vignier thought fit to collect them into a Body, that might ſerve for a Supplement to all the Editions of St. Auguſtine. He joyned to it the imperfect Treatiſe againſt Julianus, and ſome Sermons which had not been Printed before, and publiſhed them all in two Volumes, in Folio, at Paris, in 1655. This Labour becomes uſeleſs by the laſt Edition of St. Auguſtine, which excelleth and effaces all the fore-going Editions.

ZOSIMUS.

Zoſimus.

POpe Innocent I. dying the 12*th*. of March, 417. Zoſimus was promoted into his Place upon the 18*th*. of the ſame Month. Though he ſat but one Year, nine Months, and ſome Days in the Roman See, yet he very much exerted his Authority in the Diſputes which he had with the Biſhops both of Africa and Gaul. This appears by his Letters, which we are now to diſcourſe of according to the Order wherein they ought to be placed. To underſtand thoſe which concern Africa, we are to know, that Cœleſtius, Pelagius's Diſciple, having been condemned in the Council of Carthage, aſſembled in 412. thought it convenient to appeal to the Pope, contrary to the Order and Cuſtom of that Time. The Africans did not much trouble themſelves about that Appeal; neither did he much value it himſelf; for without taking it out, he went to Epheſus, where he found means to be Ordained Prieſt. Some Years after he came to Conſtantinople; from whence he was expelled by Atticus, who diſcovered his Error, and writ againſt him to Theſſalonica, to Carthage, and into Aſia. That happened at the ſame time that Zoſimus was raiſed to the Popedom. Cœleſtius being informed of it, came immediately to Rome, to prepoſſeſs this new Pope, and to ingratiate himſelf with him, by making him a Judge in his Cauſe. And indeed, Zoſimus finding this a fit Opportunity to promote his Deſign of increaſing his Authority, and drawing to himſelf the Appeals of Cauſes judged in other places, he failed not to hearken to Cœleſtius, and to admit him to juſtifie himſelf. He left all other Buſineſſes, to ſtick particularly to this. He made Cœleſtius appear in St. Clement's Church; examined the Heads of the Accuſation that was formed againſt him. He cauſed him to make a Confeſſion of Faith, whereby he diſowned the Errors which Heros and Lazarus had laid to his Charge. He enquired after the Qualifications of thoſe Accuſers; whom he found (as he ſaith) to have been wrongfully ordained, expelled out of their Biſhopricks, and ſeparated from the Communion of the reſt. Zoſimus, though much prepoſſeſs'd in Cœleſtius's behalf, yet durſt not give Judgment in his Caſe without writing to the African Biſhops; but he did it after ſuch a manner as ſufficiently diſcovered how much he favoured him: For after he had writ all this that we have ſaid, he declares, that if Cœleſtius's Accuſers came not to Rome within two Months, to convict him of maintaining other Opinions than thoſe which he then profeſſed, he ſhould take it for

Zoſimus.

Zoſimus. granted that he was Innocent. At the latter end, he declares all theſe Queſtions to be only vain Subtilties, and unprofitable Conteſts, which rather deſtroy than edifie; and are Effects of an imprudent Curioſity, and of too great an itch of Speaking and Writing. This Letter was written about July, in the Year 417.

After the writing of this Letter, Zoſimus received one from Prailus, Biſhop of Jeruſalem, in Cœleſtius's behalf, with Pelagius's Confeſſion of Faith. This News, the Abſence of the Accuſers, and the Silence of the Africans, who returned no Anſwer to his Letter, confirmed him in the Judgment which he had made of Cœleſtius's Doctrine. He deals with their Accuſers, as with moſt unworthy Perſons. He upbraids Lazarus, as one that made it his practice to accuſe the Innocent; and as one that had been condemned by Proculus, Biſhop of Marſeilles, in a Synod at Turin, for having falſely and calumnioufly accuſed Britius, Biſhop of Tours. He adds, that having been Ordained Biſhop of Aix, ſome time after, by the Favour of Conſtantine the Tyrant, he retained the Shadow of the Prieſthood ſo long as the Power of that Tyrant laſted. As for Heros, he reproacheth him for following the ſame Party, and for doing Violence. Afterwards, he tells the African Biſhops, that they were to blame, in being ſo eaſily perſuaded upon the Word of thoſe Accuſers; and makes no ſcruple of declaring Pelagius and Cœleſtius Innocent, ſeeing their Accuſers had not appeared.

Zoſimus's firſt Letter was carried by Baſiliſcus, a Subdeacon, who cited Paulinus to the Pope's Tribunal; but he did not concern himſelf to appear: And the African Biſhops were not at all moved by Zoſimus's Pretenſion; on the contrary, they ſtood by the Judgment which they had given firmly; which alſo had been confirmed by his Predeceſſor. They told him plainly, that this Cauſe being born in Africa and judged there, Cœleſtius could not Appeal, nor he take Cognizance of it. Laſtly, they made a Proteſtation, to prevent Zoſimus's pronouncing Judgment for their making default in the behalf of Cœleſtius and Pelagius: Yea, they went further, for without waiting for the Pope's Judgment, they confirmed what they had done, and condemned the Doctrine of Pelagius and Cœleſtius a-new. Having taken this Precaution, they writ again to Zoſimus, and ſent him all the Acts of what had been done in Africa againſt Cœleſtius: ſhewing him at the ſame time, that it was not enough to oblige Pelagius and Cœleſtius to approve in general what was in Pope Innocent's Letter, but that they ought to be made to acknowledge particularly all the Catholick Truths that were contrary to their Errors.

Zoſimus having received theſe Letters, with the Advertiſements of the Africans who had likewiſe written to Court about the buſineſs, durſt not go any further, and was contented to aſſert his Authority, by writing to them, that though he had power to judge all Cauſes, and none had any right to reform his Judgments, yet he would do nothing without communicating it unto them: that he was ſurprized, that they ſhould write to him as if they had been perſuaded that he had given credit to all that Cœleſtius had ſaid to him: That he had not proceeded ſo faſt; becauſe too much Deliberation cannot be uſed, when a Supreme Judgment is to be pronounced: and, that after the firſt Letter which he received from them, he left all in the ſame Condition that it was before. This Letter, of the 19*th*. of March, 418. is the tenth in the uſual Order of Zoſimus's Letters.

It appears by this, that the Pope began to alter his Mind, concerning Cœleſtius, and to miſtruſt his Sincerity. But he was fully convinced of his Double-dealing, when the time of Judgment came: for having cauſed him to be cited to come and condemn the Six Articles that were laid to his Charge clearly, if he would be abſolved of the Judgment that was given againſt him in Africa, he not only refuſed to appear, but fled from Rome. Zoſimus, provoked to ſee himſelf deceived, wrote to all the Biſhops a long Letter, wherein he condemned Cœleſtius's Articles, and Pelagius's Writings. This Letter is not all extant, but only ſome Fragments of it produced by St. Auguſtine and Marius Mercator. It was very long, and contained the whole Hiſtory of this Affair. He gave this Judgment after April, in the Year 418.

Zoſimus had likewiſe ſome Conteſts with the Biſhops of Gaul. The Churches of Arles and Vienna had long diſputed the Right of Primacy, over the Provinces of Gallia Narbonenſis, and Viennenſis. This Conteſt had been laid aſleep for ſome time by a Decree of the Council at Turin, which ordained, that in Expectation of an abſolute Deciſion of that Quarrel, both Churches ſhould enjoy the Right of Metropolis over the Churches that were near to each of them. But Zoſimus was no ſooner promoted to the Popedom, but he declares for Patroclus, Biſhop of Arles; and granted him by his Letter all that he could wiſh for: For he gave him, in the firſt place, the Right of giving formed Letters to all the Eccleſiaſticks of Gaul that would come to Rome; forbidding abſolutely that any ſhould go out of Gaul without that ſort of Letters from him, whereby it appeared what they were, and whence they came. This Privilege did belong to the Church of Arles; as indeed Zoſimus ſaith, that he granted it not to Patroclus, becauſe of his Church, but for his Deſerts. Meritorum ejus Contemplatione. The ſecond Advantage which Zoſimus would have Patroclus enjoy, was annex'd to the Dignity of his Church, and concerns the Metropolitical Rights which he ordains him to have over the Province of Gallia Viennenſis, and both the Narbonenſes, which implies the Right of Ordaining all the Biſhops of thoſe Provinces. Zoſimus.

Laſtly, Zoſimus annexed to the Biſhoprick of Arles, all the Pariſhes and Territories which formerly belong'd to it. He added, that all the Conteſts that ſhould ariſe in the Provinces of Gallia Viennenſis, and Narbonenſis, were to be carried to the Biſhop of Arles; except the Buſineſs was of Conſequence; in which caſe, he affirmed it neceſſary, that he ſhould examine the ſame himſelf at Rome: Niſi magnitudo cauſæ noſtrum deſideret examen. He obſerves beſides in that Letter, that Trophimus was ſent to Arles by the See of Rome, and that through his means the Gauls received the Faith of Jeſus Chriſt. This Letter was written ſoon after the Promotion of Pope Zoſimus, the 20*th*. of March, of the Year 417. It is the fifth in the common Editions.

About the latter end of the Year he writ two more; wherein he confirms the Metropolitical Rights to the Church of Arles; rejecting even with ſcorn the Canon of the Council at Turin, and condemning Proculus of Marſeilles, and Simplicius of Vienna, who oppoſed his Deſign. In both thoſe Letters he grounds the Primacy of the Church of Arles upon its being founded by Trophimus, who was ſent from the See of Rome. Theſe Letters are the ſeventh and the eighth. The former is directed to the Biſhops of Gallia Viennenſis,; and the ſecond, to Narbonenſis; and the latter to Hilary of Narbon, who maintained, that to him belonged the Ordinations of the Biſhops of the firſt Narbonenſis. Both theſe Letters are dated the 27*th*. of September, 417.

He that moſt oppoſed Patroclus, was Proculus Biſhop of Marſeilles, who conſtantly Ordained Biſhops in his Province, notwithſtanding the Pope's Prohibitions. Zoſimus undertook him, and cited him to Rome. But he not much regarding that Citation, continued to maintain his Rights, and to Ordain, as he had done before. This brought upon him a Condemnation from Zoſimus, who writ againſt him, not only to Patroclus, but alſo to the People of Marſeilles, That they ſhould expell him out of his Biſhoprick. His Ninth Letter to Patroclus, is upon this Subject, September 27*th*. 417. And the eleventh to the ſame, written March 2*d*. 418. and the twelfth, to the People of Marſeilles, dated on the ſame Day. Yet notwithſtanding the Pope's Judgment and Threatnings, Proculus remained peaceable Poſſeſſor of of his Biſhoprick; and was always aknowledged Lawful Biſhop, not only by the Gallican, but alſo by the African Biſhops. And St. Jerome tells us in his Letter to Ruſticus, That this Proculus of Marſeilles, who was uſed ſo ill by the Popes, was a moſt Holy and Learned Biſhop.

The grudge which Zoſimus bore to Proculus, made him Condemn likewiſe two Biſhops Ordained by him, called Urſus and Tuentius; againſt whom he writ a Circular Letter to the Biſhops of Africa, Gaul and Spain; it is the ſeventh, dated September 20*th*. 417. He ſaith of theſe two Perſons whom Proculus had Ordained, that they had been both Condemned. The firſt by Proculus himſelf, and the ſecond by other Biſhops: that this Man, after his Condemnation, came to Rome; where he did Penance, and abjured the Errors of the Priſcillianiſts. He reproaches Proculus for regarding neither his Judgment, nor the Judgment of others. He ſpeaks alſo againſt Lazarus, whom Proculus Ordained Biſhop of Aix, who aſſiſted ar the Ordination of Urſus and Tuentius. He declares that thoſe Ordinations were Illegitimate, having been performed in prejudice of the Biſhop of Arles, who alone had the Right to Ordain in the Provinces of Narbon and Vienna. Laſtly, he adviſes the Biſhops of Gaul, Spain, and Africa, not to own either Urſus, or Tuentius, for Biſhops, and not to communicate with them.

By theſe Letters one plainly ſees the Reaſon why Zoſimus did ſo much deſire to invalidate the Judgment given againſt Cœleſtius, and Pelagius. Their Accuſers were Heros and Lazarus; Patroclus's Adverſaries, and Friends of Proculus of Marſeilles. He openly declared for Patroclus. He eagerly proſecuted Proculus and his Adherents. He would have been glad to find Matter of Condemnation againſt Heros and Lazarus, by cauſing them to be looked upon as falſe Accuſers. Perhaps this is the only thing that made him favour Cœleſtius and Pelagius at firſt: But ſince both of them were convicted of Hereſie by the Biſhop of Africa, The Love of Truth prevailed in him, over the ſecret Satisfaction which he would have had by the Condemnation of Heros and Lazarus.

We have three Letters beſides aſcribed to Zoſimus, which do not ſeem to have had any relation to either of theſe Affairs we have now ſpoken of.

The firſt is directed to Heſychius, Biſhop of Salona; to whom he preſcribes with much Imperiouſneſs, and with a very Commanding Tone, the Diſtances which he ſhould cauſe to be obſerved between the Sacred Orders. The Date is of February, 418.

The ſecond is directed to the Clergy of Ravenna. He ſpeaketh there againſt thoſe who durſt go to Court to complain Zosimus. plain against him: telling the Clergy of Ravenna, That they were Excommunicated. The Letter is of the 2*d.* of October, of the same Year.

The Last, if it be true, is directed to the Bishops of the Province of Byzacena in Africa; and not to the Bishops of Byzantia, as it is in the common Title. There he blames those Bishops for admitting Lay-men to judge Church-men. It is dated November. 14*th.* 418. But it is not probable that it is Suppositious, because it is of a very different Style from the rest. Zosimus.

Zosimus writes purely, and nobly. He speaks with Vigour, and Authority, and turns every thing to his own Advantage. He discerneth the weak side of his Adversaries, and omits nothing that can do them Hurt. In a word, he writes like a Man throughly skil'd in Business, who knows the strong and the weak side of every thing, and the exact Management of Affairs.

BONIFACE. I.

Boniface. I. AFter the Death of Pope Zosimus, the Church of Rome was divided about the Election of his Successor. The Arch-Deacon Eulalius, who aspired to the Bishoprick of Rome, shut himself up in the Church of the Lateran, with part of the People, some Priests, and some Deacons, and made them chuse him in Zosimus's room. On the other side a great Number of Priests, several Bishops, and part of the People, being assembled in the Church of Theodora, elected Boniface. Both were ordained. Eulalius was ordained by some Bishops, among whom was the Bishop of Ostia, who used to ordain the Bishop of Rome. Boniface was likewise ordained by a great Number of Bishops, and went to take possession of St. Peters's Church.

Symmachus, Governor of Rome, having try'd in vain to make them agree, writ to the Emperor Honorius about it. In his Letter of the 29*th.* of December, 418. he speaks in Eulalius's behalf, and judges Boniface to be in the wrong. The Emperor believing his Relation, sent him word immediately, That he should expell Boniface, and uphold Eulalius. The Governor having received this Order, sent for Boniface to acquaint him with it, but he would not come to him; so that the Governor sent to him, to signifie the Emperor's Order, and kept him from returning into the City. The Bishops, Priests, and the People that sided with Boniface, wrote immediately to the Emperor, to intreat him that he would order both Eulalius, and Boniface, to go to Court, that their Cause might there be judged. To satisfie them, the Emperor sent to Symmachus an Order of the 30*th.* of January 419 signifying, that he should enjoin Boniface, and Eulalius, to be at Ravenna, about the 6*th.* of February. Honorius conven'd some Bishops thither to judge of their Cause; and that they might not be suspected of favouring any one side, he commanded, That none of those who had ordained either of them should be a Judge in the case. The Bishops that were chosen to judge this Cause being divided, the Emperor put off the Judgment till May, and forbad Eulalius and Boniface, to go to Rome; and sent thither Achilleus, Bishop of Spoleto, to perform the Episcopal Functions, during the Easter Holy-Days. In which time he prepared a numerous Synod, and invited the Bishops both of Africa and Gaul; but Eulalius could not endure that Delay, and spoiled his Business by his impatience: For whether he distrusted his Right, or whether he was of a restless temper, he returned to Rome the 16*th.* of March, and would have stay'd there, notwithstanding the Emperor's Orders, which obliged Symmachus to use Violence to drive him out of Rome, and the Emperor having been informed of his Disobedience, waited for no other Judgment, but caused Boniface to be put in possession, in the beginning of April 419.

One of the First Things that Boniface did, was to write to the Emperor, to intreat him to make an Edict, to prevent for the future, the Intrigues, and Cabals that were made use of to get the Bishoprick of Rome. This Letter bears Date the First of July. To cut of the Root of these Divisions, Honorius ordained, that if ever two Men should be ordained Bishops of Rome, that neither should remain in Possession, but that both the Clergy, and People, should chuse a third.

Boniface's Second Letter, ought to go before this now mentioned, if the order of their Dates was observed, since this is of the 13*th.* of June, 419. It is directed to Patroclus, and to the other Bishops of the Seven Provinces of Gaul, concerning Maximus Bishop of Valence, who was accused by by the Clergy of that City, who had carried their Accusation directly to the Pope, in all probability about the Contests which had been in that Province, concerning the Right of Primacy. Boniface accuses that Bishop not only for refusing to appear at Rome to plead for himself, but for avoiding to appear before Provincial Synods, to which he was remitted by the Popes his Predecessors. Yet he declares, that he would not condemn him, because he ought to have been judged in his own Province: wherefore he desireth them to call a Council before the first of November, that he might appear there to make his own defence to the Accusations formed against him; adding that if he refused to appear, he should hope no longer, that his absence could put a stop to his Condemnation. 'For, saith he, it is a shrewd 'Mark of a Man's Guilt, who, when he is accused, and 'has so many occasions of clearing himself, yet neglects to 'make use of them.' Boniface. I.

Boniface's Third Letter to Hilary, Bishop of Narbona, of the 2*d.* of February 422. overthrows all that Zosimus had done in the behalf of the Church of Arles. For upon the the complaint of the Inhabitants of Lodeve, a City of Gallia Narbonensis Prima, against Patroclus, Bishop of Arles, for ordaining a Bishop, without consulting with the Metropolitan, he declares that it was an Action against the Canons of the Council of Nice, which he could not patiently bear with, because he was obliged to maintain the Canons. Whereof he sends word to the Bishop of Narbon, That if that Church be of his Province, he should go to that City, and there perform a lawful Ordination, and put a stop to the Bishop of Arles's Presumption, who undertook beyond the Bounds of his Jurisdiction. Lastly, he ordaineth, That for the future, every Province shall be subject to its own Metropolitan. Nothing can be more contrary than the Opinions of Zosimus, and Boniface, concerning the Dignity, and Jurisdiction of the Church of Arles. Zosimus is persuaded, that the Bishop of Arles ought to ordain all the Bishops of the seven Provinces; and Boniface declares, that that is a Violation of the Canons. The former saith, that the Bishop of Arles is the sole Metropolitan; and the latter affirmeth, That none can be Metropolitan of two Provinces. Zosimus is of Opinion, that the pretensions of Hilary, of Narbon, and of the other Metropolitans of the seven Provinces, that they have a Right to ordain the Bishops of their respective Provinces, are extreamly rash. On the contrary, Boniface maintains, that it is a well-grounded Right; and that the pretension of the Church of Arles to ordain in those Provinces, is a breach upon the Canons, to which opposition must be made. The one forbids Hilary of Narbon, to ordain the Bishops of his Province, when he asks it of him: The other enjoyns him to it without asking. Can there be a greater contrariety of Opinions betwixt Popes, who succeeded each other immediately. This made St. Leo say in the Epistle to the Bishops of Provincia Viennensis, that the See of Rome had taken away from Patroclus what it had given him, by a more just Sentence, than that by which it was granted. ID IPSUM QUOD PATROCLO A SEDE APOSOLICA TEMPORALITER VIDEBATUR ESSE CONCESSUM, POSTMODUM ESSE SENTENTIA MELIORE SUBLATUM. Is it because those Popes thought themselves absolute Masters of these Things? If so, why should they alledge the Canons, and profess to observe them? Is it because they believed that Priviledges attended the Persons of Bishops, and not their Churches? Wherefore then did Zosimus exalt the Dignity, and Antiquity, of the Church of Arles so high, because it was founded by Trophimus? We are therefore to conclude, that there is no other Reason of that contrariety, besides the difference of the Opinions of the two Popes: But which of the two was in the Right, and which in the Wrong, is a great Business to be decided, which we shall find afterwards sharply debated in the time of St. Leo. In the mean time we may observe, That the common Right was on Boniface's side, and that we do not see any Priviledge Authentick enough, or any Custom sufficiently established, whereby we should allow to the Church of Arles, what Zosimus grants to it. There are besides five of this Pope's Letters to Ruffus Bishop of Thessalonica, and to the Bishops of Illyricum recorded in the Council that was assembled under Boniface II. in 531. Boniface I. was peaceable Possessor of the See of Rome, untill the Year 423. Though there were still some Christians of Eulalius's Party.

SYNESIUS.

Synesius. SYnesius, Originally of Cyrene, a City of Pentapolis, a Platonick Philosopher, and Disciple of the famous Hypatia, having spent part of his Life in Worldly Employments was converted and chosen Bishop of Ptolemais in the Year 520. He was hardly brought to accept of that Office, which seemed to him to be contrary to that Philosophical Life, wherein he had lived till then: neither could he resolve to leave his Wife; nor was he yet fully Synesius.

Syneſius. perſuaded of all the Articles of the Chriſtian Religion. He believed that Souls were created before Bodies, and could not conceive that the World was to have an end: He did not believe the Reſurrection of the Dead, as it is believed in the Church; imagining, that what is ſaid in the Scripture, had ſome myſtical, and ſecret Senſe. He urges theſe Reaſons in his 105*th.* Letter, to prevent their ordaining him Biſhop. Baronius thinks, that he did not really hold ſuch Opinions, but that he feigned to have them to avoid the Epiſcopal Function. But this Conjecture is not at all Probable, becauſe he affirms with an Oath, that he expreſſes his real Senſe: Wherefore it is better to ſay with the Ancients, that Syneſius's Merit, and the Need which the Churches of Africa ſtood in of his Protection in a moſt difficult time, ſuperſeded theſe Conſiderations, in hopes that being ordained Biſhop, he would ſubmit his Opinions to thoſe of the Church. It is related in the Pratum Spirituale, that when he was Biſhop, a very remarkable thing happened to him; which ſhews, that he had altered his Opinion, concerning the Reſurrection of Bodies. A Heathen Philoſopher, one Evagrius, Syneſius's old Friend, came to Cyrene. Syneſius uſed all his Endeavours to convert him. After ſeveral Sollicitations to that purpoſe, this Philoſopher declared to him at laſt, that the Reſurrection of the Body was one of thoſe things which he was moſt diſpleaſed with in the Chriſtian Religion. Syneſius affirmed, that whatſoever the Chriſtians taught was true, and never left him, till he had Converted, and Baptized him. This Man ſometime after his Baptiſm, having given Syneſius a Sum of Money to diſtribute to the Poor, demanded a Bond, to repay it him again in the next Life. Syneſius readily gave him one. The Philoſopher kept it, and ſometime before his Death, commanded his Children to put it into his Coffin. Three Days after he appeared to Syneſius in the Night, and bad him come to his Grave, and take his Bond becauſe he was pay'd; and to aſſure him of it, he had ſignified a Diſcharge with his own Hand. Syneſius not knowing, that his Children had put the Bond in his Coffin, having ſent for them, and learned of them how the buſineſs had been carried, telling them withal what had happened, went to this Man's Grave, with his Clergy, and the chief Men of the Town, and cauſed the Coffin to be opened; where they found the Bond, with a Receipt newly written in Evagrius's own Hand at the bottom. The Author of the Pratum Spirituale, relates this Hiſtory, as having learned it of Leontius of Apamea, who came to Alexandria, in the time of the Patriarch Eulogius, to be Ordained Biſhop of Cyrene; adding, that that Man certified, that this Bond was ſtill kept in the Veſtry of the Church of Cyrene. This may give ſome Credit to a Story which would deſerve none, were it ſolely grounded upon the Teſtimony of the Author of the Pratum Spirituale, who is known to be of no great Authority. However, Evagrius and Photius affirm, that Syneſius was no ſooner Ordained Biſhop, but he yielded to the Opinion of of the Church, concerning the Reſurrection.

Syneſius's Treatiſes are Philoſophical Diſcourſes, written with great nobleneſs, and loftineſs. The Catalogue of them is as follows,

A Diſcourſe of reigning well, ſpoken in the preſence of the Emperor Arcadius about the Year 398. when he was Deputy of his own Province that was waſted by the Barbarians Incurſions, to obtain ſome Succours, and ſome Eaſe of the Emperor. Syneſius ſpeaks there of Government with a wonderful freedom, and declaims openly againſt Courtiers, againſt the Luxury and Ambition of Princes. He lays down moſt excellent Inſtructions for Kings; He ſhews what are the truly Royal Virtues, and the Qualities of a good Prince. And diſcovers at laſt the ſpring of the Empire's Misfortunes, which was the Credit and Power that was given ſome time ſince to the Goths in the Affairs of the Empire. He compoſed at the ſame time another Diſcourſe directed to Pæonius, to whom he ſent Aſtronomical Tables which he had made. This Diſcourſe contains a Commendation of Philoſophy, and particularly of Aſtronomy, with a deſcription of the Work which he ſent.

The Book Intituled Dion Pruſæus, begins with the Praiſes of that great Man mentioned in Philoſtratus. There Syneſius juſtifies himſelf againſt thoſe that blamed him for applying himſelf to the Study of Philological Learning, and againſt ſuch as found fault that the Books he made uſe of were not very exact. He ſhews with great Eloquence, that the Study of the fine Learning of Poetry and Rhetorick is of very great Uſe, and not unworthy of a Philoſopher. Afterwards he ſtrongly oppoſes the ſecond Calumny; proving that it is ſometimes good for the Exerciſe of a Man's Parts, to uſe Copies that are not ſo very Correct.

The Praiſe of Baldneſs, is one of the moſt ingenious of all Syneſius's Works; and though the Matter ſeems not to afford much of it ſelf, yet he enlarges and beautifies it with variety of wonderful Reaſons and Figures.

The two Books of Providence contain the Hiſtory, or rather the Romance of two Brothers, Kings of Egypt, called Oſiris and Typhon. It is thought that he deſcribes under thoſe borrowed Names, the State of the Empire in his time.

In the Book of Dreams, there are ſeveral curious Obſervations upon the Original, Vertue, and Significations of Dreams. Syneſius.

Syneſius's Letters are written with inimitable Eloquence, Pureneſs, and Dexterity: They are full of Hiſtorical Paſſages, Sublime Notions, Fine Railleries, Moral Reflections, and Pious Expreſſions. There are 155. of them: We ſhall ſpeak of thoſe only that relate to Religion, and the Church's Affairs which are but very few.

To this may be referr'd what he ſaith in the Fourth Letter of a Shipwrack; He obſerves, That their Pilot was a Jew, who quitted the Helm on the Saturday's-Eve after Sun-ſet, and that he could not be perſuaded to take it again, what Threatnings ſoever were uſed, till the Ship was in an unavoidable Danger of periſhing. This Letter is of the beginning of the Year 410.

In the 5*th.* Letter directed to certain Prieſts, he exhorts them to proſecute the Eunomians, and to hinder their Meetings; yet ſo, that it might appear, that they had no deſign upon their Eſtates.

In the 9*th.* he commends a Letter that was written by Theophilus Biſhop of Alexandria.

In the 11*th.* he declares how unwilling he was to be made a Biſhop, and prays God who called him to that State, to give him ſtrength to diſcharge the Duties of it with Applauſe and recommends himſelf to the Prieſts and Peoples Prayers both Publick and Private.

In the 12*th.* he exhorts a Prieſt and a Biſhop called Cyril, to return to the Church from which they had been divided for a time; affirming, that Theophilus, their common Father, had admitted them if he had been alive. This Letter was written after Theophilus's Death, which happened in October 412.

The 13*th.* is an Epiſtle written from Alexandria; wherein he aſſigns the Day to his Clergy when they were to obſerve the Feaſt of Eaſter: The Day there ſet agrees with the Year 412.

Andronicus Governor of Pentapolis, a cruel Man, exerciſed ſeveral Violences againſt the People. Syneſius, who was of a meek and merciful Temper, uſed all his Endeavours to hinder that Man's Cruelties, and to help thoſe Wretches whom he tormented. Among the reſt, he ſuccoured a Man of Quality, Andronicus's Enemy, whom that inexorable Governor perſecuted without any Cauſe. That charitable Action provoked him, and made him utter in his anger theſe Impious Words: That that Unfortunate Man fled to the Church in vain, and that no Man ſhould be taken out of Andronicus's Hands, though he held Jeſus Chriſt by the Feet. Syneſius having heard this Blaſphemy, excommunicated him in a Synod held in the Year 411. and with him Thoas, the Chief Miniſter of all his Cruelties, with his whole Family. After this Excommunication, he pronounced a Diſcourſe againſt him, which is the 57*th.* of his Letters. There he deſcribes that Governor's Cruelty; He ſpeaks of his own former Life, and with what reluctancy he acccepted the Biſhoprick; he bewails the deplorable Condition of his Country, declaring, that he was altogether unfit to manage a Buſineſs of that Nature; wherefore he intreats his Brethren, either to chuſe one in his Room, or give him a Colleague that was verſed in Buſineſs.

In the 58*th.* Letter, he gives Notice to all Biſhops in the Name of the Church of Ptolemais, that an Excommunication was pronounc'd againſt Andronicus, declaring, that they ought to ſhut their Church-Doors againſt him and all his Accomplices; that if any Man receives him, not regarding the Sentence of a ſmall Church, he breaks the Unity of the Church, and that he will have no fellowſhip with him.

Andronicus ſtruck with that Excommunication, ſeem'd to be ſorry for his Fault, and promiſed to do Penance. Syneſius knowing his humour, did not think fit to admit him; but the other ancienter Biſhops were not of that Opinion, and judged that the Excommunication was to be ſuſpended; and that they ſhould forbear ſending the Letter that declared him Excommunicated, having taken his word, that thenceforth he ſhould not offer the like Violences. But this Governor, inſtead of keeping his Promiſe, was more Cruel than ever; ſo that Syneſius publiſhed the Excommunication that had been pronounced, and wrote to the Biſhops to give an Account of the Governor's relapſe in the 72*d.* Letter. He makes another Deſcription of this Governor's Violences in the 79*th.* But at laſt this cruel Man received the Puniſhment of his Cruelties, and was dealt withal as he had dealt with others. Syneſius charitably pitied his Condition, as he obſerves in the 89*th.* Letter to Theophilus.

In the 66*th.* Syneſius maliciouſly asks Theophilus, How he ſhould entertain Alexandria, who had been ordained by St. Chryſoſtome, Biſhop of Baſinopolis in Bithynia; giving him to underſtand at the ſame time, that he approved not of his Behaviour towards thoſe who ſided with that holy Patriarch of Conſtantinople. He readily tells Theophilus, that he reverenced his Memory; and, that at leaſt Men ought not to hate an Enemy when he is dead. He adds, that Theophilus himſelf had writ to Atticus, exhorting him to admit into his Communion thoſe of St. Chryſoſtom's Party.

That

Synesius. That as for this Alexander who was born at Cyrene, formerly a Monk, then raised to the Dignity of a Deacon, and a Priest, and at last ordained Bishop of Basinopolis by St. John Chrysostome, that he was withdrawn into his own Country. Synesius durst not admit him to the Communion, nor to partake of the Church's Prayers; but he received him privately into his House, and shewed him much Friendship, it being his Custom so to deal with all guilty Persons. He intreats Theophilus to answer him plainly and clearly, whether he should look upon Alexander as a Bishop, or no? this Letter is of the latter end of the Year 410. or the beginning of 411.

The 57*th.* to the same Theophilus, contains several remarkable Points of Discipline; shewing the Power of the Bishop of Alexandria over all Egypt. He had appointed Synesius to compose some Disputes among the Bishops of Pentapolis, and in this Letter Synesius gives him an exact account of what he had done. There were in Pentapolis two Villages, Palebiscus and Hydrax, near Libya. Both these had formerly been Subject to the Bishop of Erythra the neareſt City. Since that under Orion Bishop of Erythra an Easie Man; the Inhabitants of both these Villages had caused a Young Man, Syderius by Name, to be ordained their Bishop, who had served in Valens's Army; that they might have a Man of Courage to protect them; without observing the Formalities requisite in a Legal Ordination, for he was ordained by one only Bishop, and without the Approbation of the Bishop of Alexandria. But this happening when the Heretical Eactions were formidable, they forbore the Severity of the Laws: And St. Athanasius caused Syderius to be translated to Ptolemais; but towards the latter end of his Life, he returned to his former Church. After his Death, Palebiscus and Hydrax were reduced to their former dependency upon the Bishop of Erythra; the Inhabitants of those Places being willing, according to the Bishop of Alexandria's Letters, to own Paulus of Erythra, for their Bishop. Since that, Theophilus upon the Information of some particular Men, offered to give them a Bishop, and gave Synesius a Commission to go and ordain him. He being come to the Village, found the People resolved to have no other Bishop but Paul, and could never bring them to consent that he should ordain a particular Bishop. He writ all this to Theophilus, and insinuates, that though the Inhabitants of those Villages were ready to obey, if he would absolutely impose a Bishop upon them; yet it was not convenient to do it.

There was another Business also to be decided at Hydrax. In this Town there was a Castle situate upon an Hill, whereunto belonged a great enclosure, which might have yielded a good income, if they rebuilt the Walls which had been thrown down with an Earthquake. The Dispute about it was betwixt Dioscorus Bishop of Dardania, and Paulus of Erythra: The latter to take Possession, consecrated there a Chappel, and alledged, that that place had been long since consecrated. Synesius having examined the case, found that formerly Publick Prayers had been made in that Castle during the Barbarians Incursions. But he thought that this was not sufficient to make the place sacred, because that by the same Reason, all others would prove consecrated Places, wherein Publick Prayers, and Holy Mysteries had been celebrated in the time of War. As for the Chappel, it was proved that Paul had consecrated it to make himself Master of the Place. Synesius declared, that it was an ill Example, to make use of the Church's Prayers, of the Holy Table, and of the Mystical Veil, to invade another Man's Estate. And so far from looking upon that Chappel as consecrated, he made no Scruple of declaring it to be common. 'For, saith 'he, we are to distinguish Superstition from true Religion. 'Superstition is a Vice adorned with the Name of Virtue; 'but Wisdom makes us discover it to be a third sort of 'Impiety: And so I do not think that there is any Sanctity in a thing unjustly undertaken; neither do I regard 'the Consecration that is alledged. It is not with Christians as with Heathens. They do not imagine that their 'God is made to come down with Words and Ceremonies; 'they require a pure Heart, and free from Passions: And 'when Wrath or Anger causes Ministers to act, they do 'not believe that the Holy Ghost accompanies their Motions.' Paul did not refuse to take away the Chappel, but since Synesius urged to have it done, he presented a Petition full of Invectives against Dioscorus, but he soon confessed his Fault and begg'd Pardon. Then Dioscorus, who would yield nothing whilst Paul disputed it, proposed of himself to come to an Agreement with Paul about that Castle, and so exchanged it, with some Lands hard by, for some other Lands which Paul gave him in another place, which lay more convenient for him, though of less Value. Synesius gave Theophilus an account of all this, and commended Dioscorus for relieving the Poor of Alexandria.

A third Business that Synesius had order to compose, was a Quarrel betwixt two private Persons, Jason, and Lamponianus; the latter being accused to have slandered the other, chose rather to confess, than to be convicted, and was required to do Penance, and to separate from the Assemblies of the Faithful. The People requested that he might be Absolved. Synesius referred the Matter to the Bishop of Alexandria, and only gave order to the Priests to admit him to the Communion of the Church, if he should be in danger of Death: For, saith he, as much as in me lies, I will take Care that no man shall die bound with Ecclesiastical Bonds. He adds, that Absolution should not be granted in case of Necessity, but upon this Condition, that if he recover, he shall be in the same State as before. Lamponianus was indebted to the Church one hundred forty seven Crowns of the Poors Money, which he had lost by some Misfortune, which he promised to pay; but required time to work, that he might get that Sum. Synesius.

Synesius writ again to Theophilus about some Abuses that were practised in those Parts. Bishops accused one another of Ill Behavionr, rather to make the Governors get Money, than because they had any Grounds for so doing. Synesius prays him to make an Order directed to him, whereby that Abuse might be forbidden; but without reproving any particularly, that it might not appear that he had accused them. He saith, that with such an Order, he would put a stop to that Infamy of Bishops. For, saith he, God forbid that I should say, the Infamy of the Church. He observes, that this will turn to greater Advantage for the Accusers, than for the Accused, because they shall be delivered from a greater Evil, since it is a greater Evil to do injury, than to suffer; because the one comes from our selves, and the other concerns other Men. The last thing which Synesius acquaints Theophilus withal, is concerning certain Bishops, who quitted their Bishopricks without being expelled, to go from Church to Church, to receive there the Honours due to their Character. His Opinion is, that they should not be received, nor Precedency given them; that they might be obliged to return to their Churches. And thus, he thinks, those ought to be dealt withal in Publick; as to what should be done privately, he waits for an Answer to the Letter he writ to Theophilus, concerning Alexander, which is that now mention'd; He concludes their Letter with those very humble Words: Pray to God for me, and you shall Pray for a poor forlorn Man who wants all things, and needs help, not daring to address to God for himself; for I perceive that every thing is against me, since I undertook to Minister at the Altar, who am laden with Sins; who was brought up out of the Church, and followed all my life-time a Profession different from this. This Letter is of the Year 411.

In the 76*th.* Letter Synesius recommends to Theophilus, Antonius, who had been chosen Bishop of Olbiata, a Town of his Province, and was going to Alexandria, to be ordained by Theophilus, according to the Custom of that time.

The 95*th* was written by Synesius, seven Months after he was made Bishop; He expresses, with what difficulty he accepted of the Office, and begs of God Grace to discharge it well.

The 105*th.* is that famous Letter which he writ to his Brother, when he was chosen Bishop of Cyrene; wherein he sets down the Reasons that kept him from being promoted to that Dignity. The rest of the Letters contain nothing that is remarkable touching Religion.

We have but two Homilies of Synesius which are not entire. The first is the beginning of a Homily upon God's Law, of which he understandeth what is said in the 75*th. Psalm*, In the Hand of the Lord there is a Cup, &c.

The second is likewise imperfect. It is the Fragment of a Sermon preached upon Easter-Eve. Both these Fragments shew, that Synesius did not excell in this kind so much as he did in others; yet he was Eloquent, and composed Pieces of Rhetorick very well; as appears by his Discourse concerning the Ruine of his Province; and by his Panegyrick upon Anysius, which come after the two Homilies now mentioned; but there is a particular sort of Eloquence necessary for the Pulpit, which he seems not to have had. He had a better genius for Hymns; We have ten of his which are very excellent, in which there are some Platonick Principles concerning the Trinity. This Author ascribes much to God's Help, and to the Grace of Jesus Christ, which he requires us to ask by fervent Prayer, that we may be delivered from those Passions and disorderly Desires of Lust, wherewith we are transported. We have lost a Philosophical Work of his, Intituled, Cynegeticks, mentioned in the 153*d.* Letter.

Synesius's Style, according to Photius's Judgment, is great and lofty, but something Poetical.

He chiefly excelleth in Narratives and Descriptions. He varies the Matters which he treats of, with long Prefaces, and frequent Digressions. He makes them agreeable by excellent Passages out of Histories and Fables, and by the best Thoughts of the Profane Poets. His Philosophy hath nothing harsh or disgusting. He has found a way to render it pleasant and easie. He seems to have designed only to recreate, when he discovers the main Points of Wisdom. The Reader is brought insensibly to the Knowledge of most Important Truths, when he thought to read only pleasant Relations. He observes in his first Letter, that he writ two sorts of Books, some of the most refined Philosophy, and others Rhetorical Pieces; but that they are easily known to be all written by the same Person, who applies himself

Syneſius. ſometimes to ſerious things, and ſometimes to pleaſant ones.--And indeed, it maintains every where the ſame Character. His Philoſophical Works are adorned with Rhetorical and Poetical Figures, and his Pieces of Eloquence are ſupported with Philoſophical Thoughts. He had a thorough Knowledge of Plato's Writings, and from that Fountain, he drew the nobleſt and the ſublimeſt Notions in the old Philoſophy, concerning the Knowledge of the Supreme Being, and Principles of Morality. He wrote but little touching our Religion, and he was far from underſtanding it ſo well as he did Plato's Philoſophy. Yet one may ſee by his Letters that he was a very Wiſe, Prudent and Good Biſhop. He avoided Buſineſs as much as he could; but when he was engaged, he acted very dexterouſly, and brought every thing to a good iſſue. His Behaviour was accompanied with great Freedom and Uprightneſs of Heart. He wanted neither Courage nor Meekneſs, as there was occaſion. His endeavours to avoid being a Biſhop, and his manner of ſpeaking of himſelf, ſhow his great Humility. The Year of his Death is not known.

The Book of Dreams was Printed in Greek and Latin, Tranſlated by Ficinus, at Venice in 1497. and at Lyons in 1541. In 1553. Turnebus publiſhed moſt of his Works in Greek. The Letters were Printed in Greek at Venice in 1499. at Baſle in 1558. and at Paris in 1605. with Turnebus's Tranſlation. The Hymns were likewiſe Printed in 1590. with the Poems of St. Gregory Nazianzen, and thoſe of St. Cyril of Alexandria, and Reprinted in 1603. in Latin by Portus. In 1653. Janus Cornarius tranſlated moſt of Syneſius's Works, and his Tranſlation was Printed at Baſle in 1560. The Diſcourſe of Government of the ſame Tranſlation, was Printed by it ſelf at Francfort in 1583. Syneſius.

At laſt, Petavius having review'd and tranſlated a-new all Syneſius's Works, cauſed them to be Printed in Greek and Latin at Paris by Morellus in 1612. With Nicephorus's Notes and Commentary upon the Book of Dreams. This Edition was corrected and augmented in 1640. wherein Syneſius's Works are joined with St. Cyril's Catechetical Lectures.

POLYCHRONIUS.

Polychronius. Polychronius Biſhop of Apamea, Brother of Theodorus of Mopſueſta, and Diſciple of Diodorus of Tarſus, writ ſome Commentaries upon Job and Ezekiel; whereof you may find ſome Fragments in the Greek Catenæ, and in St. John Damaſcene, if any Credit may be given to that ſort of Quotations. There are Spurious Acts of St. Sixtus with Polychronius, dated after his Death. He lived about the latter End of the Fourth Century. Polychronius.

ATTICUS Biſhop of Conſtantinople.

Atticus. Arſacius, the Brother of Nectarius, who had been put into the See of Conſtantinople, in the Place of St. Chryſoſtome being dead in the Year of his Ordination, Atticus a Monk of Armenia, after ſome Conteſts *, was choſen to fill that See. He entered upon it in the Year 406. and enjoyed it peaceably until the Year 427. in which he dyed. Socrates, who had a very particular Eſteem for this Biſhop, has deſcribed him to us as a Man competently learned, but very wiſe and prudent, endued with abundance of Piety, Meekneſs and Charity, who not only took care of the Orthodox, but alſo won over the Hereticks by his courteous and taking Behaviour, He adds; That while he was a Prieſt he got his Sermons by Heart; and that after he was a Biſhop, he accuſtomed himſelf to ſpeak ex tempore, but that his Diſcourſes were not beautiful enough to gain the Applauſe of the People, nor to deſerve to be put in Writing. So true is it that a Diſcourſe muſt be ſtudied with an Intent to pleaſe. Nevertheleſs he helped forward the Converſion of many Perſons, and very much increaſed the Church. His Liberality contributed much towards it; for the People are much better diſpoſed to hear and believe their Paſtor, when they ſee that he provides as well for their Temporal as Spiritual Wants, and at the ſame time he diſpenſes to them the Bread of Life to nouriſh their Souls, he alſo gives them liberally that by which they may procure Nouriſhment for their Bodies: And this he did, not only to the Poor of his own Dioceſs, but likewiſe to Strangers. Socrates, in the Seventh Book of his Hiſtory, Chap. 25. recites a Letter which Atticus wrote to Calliopius a Prieſt of Nice; wherein he tells him, That he had ſent him Three hundred Crowns, to relieve the Neceſſities of the Poor of the City of Nice. He admoniſhes him, at the ſame time, to beſtow his Charity upon the moſt Poor, and to give them nothing who made a Trade of Begging: He would not have him, in this Diſtribution, to have any Regard to Religion: And recommends it to him, to give that which is neceſſary to ſupport Life, to all that are in Want, not excepting ſuch as are of a different Religion. Socrates further relates ſome Anſwers of this Biſhop, in favour of the Novatians; but ſince this Hiſtorian was a Friend to that Party, his Teſtimony is a little to be ſuſpected: However that be, the Anſwers that are attributed to him are very moderate, for when one ſaid unto him, That he ought not to ſuffer the Meetings of the Novatians in the Cities: He anſwered, Do you not know how much they ſuffered for the Faith under the Emperors Conſtantius and Valens? They are Witneſſes, beyond Exception, of the Truth of our Doctrine, for having ſeparated themſelves a long time from the Church, they are found to have the ſame Faith with us. He commended Aſclepiades, an Ancient Biſhop of the Novatians, that he had undergone that Charge for the ſpace of Fifty Years: And he ſaid to this Biſhop, I praiſe Novatus, but cannot approve of the Novatians. Aſclepiades having demanded of him the Explication of this Paradox; he reply'd, Novatus denyed not Communion but only to thoſe who had fallen into Idolatry during the Perſecution; I have done the ſame thing my ſelf; but I cannot approve of the Novatians, who exclude the Laity from Communion for trivial Sins. Aſclepiades anſwered him; That beſides Idolatry, there were many other Mortal Sins, for which the Church depoſeth the Clergy for ever: And that the Novatians did alſo excommunicate the Laity for ever, who had committed thoſe Sins, leaving the Power of Pardoning them to God only. Socrates tells us further, That Atticus foretold his own Death to Calliopius; and that he did die indeed, according to his own Prediction, in the Year 427. in the beginning of October. Beſides this Letter of which we have juſt now ſpoken, Theodoret, in his Second Dialogue, cites a Fragment of a Letter, to Eupſychius, concerning the Incarnation. He wrote alſo a Letter to St. Cyril, Biſhop of Alexandria, to perſwade him to put St. Chryſoſtome's Name in the * Diptychs, as we underſtand by the Anſwer which St. Cyril made to him, related in the Fourth Book of Facundus; by whom we are informed, That Atticus was as moderate as St. Cyril was angry upon that account. We have Atticus's Letter and St. Cyril's Anſwer to it among the Epiſtles of the latter. Theſe Fragments of the Writings of Atticus make it evident, That Socrates hath paſſed a ſound Judgment of his Character, Style, and Temper. Gennadius ſays, That he had made an excellent Book concerning Faith and Virginity, dedicated to the Princeſſes, the Daughters of Arcadius; in which he condemns the Error of Neſtorius before-hand. St. Cyril cites a Paſſage of it in his Book to the Empreſſes; which is alſo repeated, with another, in the Council of Epheſus; altho' Vincentius doth not reckon Atticus among thoſe who were alledged for Witneſſes of the Faith of the Church in the Council of Epheſus, and ſays, That theſe Paſſages are not to be found in ſome Manuſcripts of that Council. Atticus.

* Within ſixteen Months and ſome odd Days. Altero poſt anno. Socr.

‡ Qui petere erubeſcunt.

* Eccleſiaſtical Tables, wherein the Names of the Living and Dead Saints were written; and out of which they were read, and ſolemnly commemorated at the publick Prayers, to ſhew reſpect to them, and Communion with them.

TICHONIUS.

Tichonius. Tichonius, an African, an ingenious Man, of the Party of the Donatiſts, was accounted very skilful in the Literal Senſe of Holy Scripture. Nor was he wholly ignorant of Profane Sciences, but was very well verſed in Eccleſiaſtical Studies. He hath compoſed a Treatiſe containing Seven Rules, for the explaining of the Holy Scripture; of which St. Auſtine hath made an Abridgement, in his Third Book of the Chriſtian Doctrine. Gennadius teaches us, That he had alſo written Three Books of the Inteſtine War, and a Narration of ſeveral Reaſons why he quotes the Ancient Synods in the Defence of his own Party. He further adds, That he had made a Commentary upon the Revelation, in which he explains that Book in a Spiritual Senſe altogether. He therein did reject the conjectural Opinion of the Millennium; and maintained, That there ſhould be but one Reſurrection of the Good and Sinners, which would happen at the ſame Time; Inſomuch, that according to his Judgment, the firſt Reſurrection of the Juſt is here below in the Church, when being delivered by Faith from the Death of Sin, they receive Tichonius.

Tichonius. receive by Baptism the earnest of Eternal Life. He affirms, in that Book, That the Angels are Corporeal. He flourished, according to Gennadius, at the same time as Rufinus and St. Austin, under the Empire of Theodosius the Great and his two Sons. We have his Book of the Seven Rules, published by Schottus, and inserted in the Bibliotheca Patrum: It is very obscure, and of little use. St. Austin's Abridgment of it is to be seen at the End of his Third Book of the Christian Doctrine. Tichonius.

LEPORIUS.

Leporius. THis Monk is numbred among the Ecclesiastical Authors, upon account of a Book, which he made to retract the Errors of Pelagius and Nestorius, of which we have spoken in the Works of St. Austin. We may also see what is said of it by St. Leo, among the Testimonies of the Fathers, touching the Verity of the two Natures in Jesus Christ Facundus Bishop of Harmianum, l. 1. c. 4. Gennadius, c. 59. Cassian in the Book of the Incarnation, c. 4. And Vigilius Tapsensis, l. 2. of the Trinity. Leporius.

St. ISIDORE of Damiata.

St. Isidore of Damiata. ISidore, (a) a Priest (b) of Damiata, † a City in Egypt, situated upon the Mouth of the River Nilus, flourished in the Reign of Theodosius the Younger. (c) He embraced a Monastick State, and spent his whole Life in mortifying his Body, by continual Abstinence, and in nourishing his Soul with Meditation upon Celestial Doctrines, insomuch that it may be said of him, That he lived an Angel's Life upon Earth, and that he was a Living Picture of a Monastick and Contemplative Life. He was in so great Reputation for his Piety, Doctrine and Eloquence, that the Greeks gave him the Surname of (d) Famous. Facundus reports, That he had written two thousand Letters. Suidas attributes to him three thousand upon the Holy Scripture, and five thousand upon different Subjects. Nicephorus also reckons ten thousand; but it is as almost incredible that he should write so great a number: But however that be, we have no more than 2012. and there are no more extant in the most ancient Manuscripts. He had composed some other Works. (e) He speaks himself of a Treatise of Fate, against the Gentiles. Evagrius makes mention of some Writings of Isidorus to St. Cyril, but it may be he intends the two Letters which he wrote to him, which are still extant, and which are recited by Facundus. By them we are taught, that he was yet alive in the Time of the Council of Ephesus, but was then very old. The Greek and Latin Church celebrate his Memory on the fourth Day of February.

† Anciently called Peluſium, whence he is usually styled Peluſiota, by Authors.

Dr. Cave, 2013.

The Epistles of this Author are all Laconick that is to to say, (as he himself explains it, after St. Gregory Nazianzen) they contain a great many things in a few Words. In writing them he follows the Rule which he gives in the one hundred fifty third Letter of the first Book. He there observes, thrt they ought not to be void of all sort of Ornament; nor on the other side too curiously polished. The first Defect puts into them such a dryness and baseness of Style, that they are thereby rendred over-budensome to the Reader; but the other makes them weak and ridiculous, and therefore they ought to have so much Ornament as is necessary to render them grateful and profitable. And this he hath Marvellously well performed in all his Letters, for they are written with a great deal of Wit and Elegance, and yet there is not the least appearance of affectation or constraint. His Expressions are fine and delicate, nevertheless he hath not departed from the most natural way of speaking of things. There are no Ambiguities nor false Propositions to be found in them, but they are full of ingenuity and acuteness which runs equally through all of them. Lastly, it may be said of him, that he hath found out the secret so much searched after by others, of mingled Profit and Pleasure together. In truth, though he hath many Letters upon Critical Questions, relating to several Places of Holy Scripture, and whatsoever is of greatest subtilty in the explication of other Mysteries, yet he wants not Expressions to render them very grateful and acceptable to the Reader. But yet he hath joyned Knowledge and Learning with the Elegancy and Politeness of his Language; and his Letters are Collections of an infinite number of Common Places in Divinity, very well treated of and cleared. In them we may find a great many Texts of the Old and New Testament explained, and applyed to different Subjects. This is the most common Argument of these Letters. Some there are, wherein he explains and illustrates the Mysteries and Doctrines of our Religion; in others he makes Remarks upon the Discipline of the Church: In the greatest part of them he propounds and confirms the great Principles of Christian Morality, and teaches in many of them the Rules and principal Maxims of a Spiritual Life. Sometimes he gives lively Instructions, sometimes also he utters smart Reproofs, and more often Charitable Advice. He spares no Man; he speaks with Freedom, Steddiness, and Authority, not only to the Ignorant Laity, or the Monks subject to his Government, but also to Kings themselves, great Lords, Magistrates, and to Bishops of Sees, to whom he was subject. He opposes Vice where-ever he finds it. He gives sharp Reprimands to all disorderly and vicious Persons, of whatsoever condition they be. He applies himself to the Persons themselves, and never dissembles what he thinks of them. He not only flatters no Person in their Vices, but he makes use of no cunning Evasions to sweeten his Admonitions. He tells them plainly and severely what he thinks. He represents to them their Irregularities with all the Candor and Cogency possible, and presses them vigorously to forsake them. He commends very seldom, but when he doth, it is in a way that is not mean, and that cannot puff up with foolish Pride. This is in general the subject of St. Isidore's Epistles, let us consider them in particular. St. Isidore of Damiata.

Of the Letters of St. Isidore upon the Holy Scripture.

The greatest and best part of St. Isidore's Letters, are upon several Texts of Holy Scripture. There is hardly a Book, as well of the Old as of the New Testament, of which he doth not explain several Texts. He often recommends the Reading of Holy Scripture, and gives excellent Rules for the good Use and true Uunderstanding of it.

He requires that every one that attempts to read it, should prepare himself, by purifying his Heart, and purging it from Passions and Vice, l. 4. 133. that in Reading it all-a-long he should not only endeavonr to comprehend the Sense, but labour earnestly to believe and practise what it teacheth, l. 4. 43. He adds, that we must Read it with a great deal of Reverence, and not seek to dive into the incomprehensible Mysteries, l. 1. 24. That God hath, with much Reason, ordered, That there should be in Holy Scripture some things very plain, and other places very obscure, as a mark of his Wisdom and Providence; for if all of it were clear, what would Man have to stir up his Attention? And if all of it were obscure, how would it be possible to understand it? That which is evident explains that which is obscure; and altho' some places may still remain obscure, yet there is one great Advantage to be drawn from them, which is to debase Man's Pride, l. 4. 82. He also observes, in several places, that the Holy Scripture is written in such a Style, as is to be preferred before all other Authors: For, saith he, the affected Eloquence of Heathen Writers serves only to gratifie their Vanity, contributes nothing to Instruction; but the Style of Scripture is plain and natural, and very proper to instruct and inform the ignorant in the greatest Truths, l. 4. 61, 79, 140. He that undertakes to explain Holy Scripture, must have a grave and free elocution, and a Mind filled with Piety and Goodness. He must take the Sense of it, and not impose his own upon it, nor offer Violence to the Words of Scripture, that he may explain them agreeably to his own Fancy, l. 3 292. He must not take little pieces by themselves, and put that Sense upon them that first comes into his Head, but we must weigh every Word, examine the Context, the Subject of which it treats, and why it was written so, l. 3. 136. Those that maintain, that all that is in (a) A Priest.] All the Ancients give him no other Title; and it doth not appear by his Letters that he had any other.

(b) Of Damiata.] Ephrem in Photius, c. 228. saith, That he was born at Alexandria; nevertheless it may be said, That he was of Damiata, because he retreated into a place near that City, as appears by his Letters.

(c) He embraced a Monastick State.] His Letters make it evident enough, and Evagrius, l. 1. c. 15. of his History, assures us of it in the same Terms that we have used.

(d) Famous.] So Evagrius calls him, τῦ κλεινῦ παρὰ πᾶσι ποιητοῦ. Whose Fame is spread far, as the Poet says. They that make use of this passage to prove that he made Poems, understand it ill. Ephrem gives him a like Epithet.

(e) He speaks himself of a Treatise of Fate against the Gentiles.] Suidas says, That he had composed some other Works. He cites the Treatise of Fate, in Ep. 235. lib. 3. I do not believe it a distinct Treatise from that against the Gentiles, cited in the 137*th.* and 228*th.* Letters of the second Book, because what is said in those Places respects the same matter.

St. Iſidore of Damiata.

the Old Teſtament hath a reſpect to Jeſus Chriſt are miſtaken, and do an Injury to Religion, by impoſing upon the Words of Scripture a far-fetched Senſe, which doth not agree to it, that it may have a Relation every where to Jeſus Chriſt. We muſt content our ſelves to apply that only to him which is apparently ſpoken of him, and not conſtrain our ſelves to attribute that to him which doth not relate to him; for thoſe who would find Jeſus Chriſt in thoſe places where he is not ſpoken of, give an occaſion to the Unbelievers to doubt of thoſe where he is. Geneſis is the firſt and principal of Moſes's Books, becauſe it is neceſſary before a Law be eſtabliſhed, that the Power and Authority of the Law-giver be made known, and the Rewards which he will give to thoſe that keep his Commandments, and the Puniſhments which he will inflict upon thoſe that break them, be diſcovered: Both of which are laid down in the Hiſtory of Geneſis, l. 4. 176. In reading the three Books of Solomon, we muſt begin with the Proverbs, proceed next to Eccleſiaſtes, and end with the Canticles: And that for this Reaſon. The firſt of theſe Books teaches us Moral Virtues; the ſecond ſhews us the Vanity and Falſhood of Worldly Things; and the third inſpires us with the Love of Spiritual Things, and repreſents the Happineſs of that Soul, that is in poſſeſſion of them. If we ſhould read the Canticles firſt, we might be apt to believe that it ſpeaks of a Carnal and Terreſtrial Love, but when we are fitted for the reading of this Book by the two other, there is no fear that we ſhall have any ſuch Thoughts, for the Mind being furniſhed with Moral Precepts, and looſened from Earthly things, eaſily underſtands that the good Things and Beauties which that Book inſpires us with the love of, are altogether Spiritual.

Altho' the Explications which St. Iſidore gives to the greateſt part of the Texts of Holy Scripture, upon which he makes any Reflections, do rather reſpect Morality and Piety than the literal Senſe of Scripture, yet that hinders not but that he ſometimes diſcuſſes and reſolves Critical Queſtions. As for Example, he enquires into the beginning of Daniel's ſeventy Weeks, and explains the Hiſtory of that Prophecy, l. 3. 89. He obſerves, upon the Genealogy of Jeſus Chriſt, that the Virgin was of the Tribe of Judah as well as Joſeph, l. 1. 7, 478. He proves that the Text of the Goſpel of St. Matthew, ch. 1. 20. Joſeph knew her not, i. e. Mary, till ſhe had brought forth her firſt-born Son, doth not prove that Joſeph knew Mary after her Delivery: Whereupon he produces a great many Examples taken out of Scripture, by which he ſhews, that the Particle until doth not ſignify that the thing was done afterward, but on the contrary it denotes that it never was. He adds, that Jeſus Chriſt upon the Croſs recommended the Virgin to St. John, becauſe that Apoſtle was a Virgin, l. 1. 18. He aſſerts, that the Meat that St. John the Baptiſt did eat in the Wilderneſs called ἀκρίδες, were not, as is commonly believed, Graſhoppers, or a ſort of Creatures like Snails, but the tops of Plants or Herbs. l. 1. 132. The Sabbath, called in Scripture δευτεροπρῶτον, or the ſecond Sabbath, Luke 6. 1. after the firſt, hath always ſeemed a Place hard to be underſtood. St. Iſidore gives an Explication of it natural enough: He ſaith, that it is the firſt Day of Unleavened Bread, which followed the Feaſt of the Paſſover. This was the ſecond Sabbath, or ſecond Feſtival after the Firſt, on which the Paſſover was celebrated, l. 3. 110. The three Days and three Nights which Jeſus Chriſt is ſaid to remain in the Sepulchre, are very hard to find out: St. Iſidore gives two explications to ſolve it: According to the firſt, Jeſus Chriſt having been Crucified on Friday at Noon, we ought to count the firſt Day from that Hour to the time when the Earth was covered with Miraculous Darkneſs: This Darkneſs may very well paſs for the firſt Night. The Darkneſs being over and gone, about three or four a Clock in the Afternoon, the Day returned; which may be called the ſecond Day. The ſecond Night was from Friday to Saturday. The third Day is Saturday. The third Night is from Saturday to Sunday. This firſt Explication is not at all Natural, not only becauſe it gives the Name of Night to the miraculous Darkneſs, but becauſe the Queſtion is not about the time that was ſpent after Jeſus Chriſt was faſtned to the Croſs to the Reſurrection, but about the time that his Body was in the Sepulchre. We muſt then rely upon the ſecond: The firſt Day is Friday, the ſecond Saturday, and the third Sunday, in the Morning of which Jeſus Chriſt roſe from the Dead: Theſe three are not whole Days, but ordinarily the Beginning and end of Days are taken for whole Days, when many are reckoned together. As for example, If it be ſaid to a Priſoner on Friday in the Evening, within three Days you ſhall come out of Priſon; it is meant that he ſhall come out on Sunday, becauſe whether it be in the Morning or Evening, it is true in ſome Senſe to ſay, that he hath been three Days in Priſon. As for the three Nights, it will be more difficult to find them out: We can count but two, and they are from Friday to Saturday, and from Saturday to Sunday. There is neither beginning nor end of the third Night; but neither is it neceſſary, becauſe that when Jeſus Chriſt ſaid, that he ſhould be three Days and three Nights in the Bowels of the Earth, as Jonas was three Days and three Nights, in the Belly of the Whale, it ought not to be underſtood literally, it being the uſual way of ſpeaking among the Jews, not to diſtinguiſh the Night from the Day. It is ſufficient to prove the Truth of the Prophecy, That Jeſus Chriſt was as long in the Sepulchre as Jonas was in the Belly of the Whale, l. 4. 114. l. 2. 212. There is a place which hath much perplexed all our Interpreters. 'Tis that in which St. Paul ſpeaks of Baptiſm for the Dead. St. Iſidore reſolves this Difficulty after a very intelligible and rational manner. To be baptized for the Dead, ſaith he, is to be baptized into the hopes of being changed into an incorruptible State, l. 1. 221. Some have taken great pains to know, what St. Paul means, and what we are to underſtand in the Creed by the Quick and the Dead, which ſhall be judged at the laſt Day. St. Iſidore tells us, that it is either the Body and the Soul, or perhaps the Good and the Sinner, or rather thoſe who ſhall be then alive, and thoſe who ſhall be dead before, l. 1. 221. Several Authors have confounded Philip, one of the ſeven firſt Deacons, who baptized the Eunuch of Queen Candace, with St. Philip the Apoſtle. St. Iſidore is not guilty of that miſtake, but diſtinguiſhes the two Philips, l. 1. 447. The curious Enquirers after the Greek Antiquities, have taken much pains to know the Original of the Altar erected to the Honour of the unknown God, of which mention is made in the Acts: Some affirm, ſaith he, that the Athenians having required the aſſiſtance of the Lacedæmonians, their Meſſenger was ſtopp'd near a Mountain of Parthenia, by a Ghoſt who commanded him to return home, and bid the Athenians be of good Courage; for they ſhould have no need of the help of the Lacedæmonians, he would aſſiſt them: That the Athenians, after this, having obtained the Victory, built an Altar to that unknown God, which had given them that Advice, and helped them. Others ſay, that the City of Athens being afflicted with a Rageing Peſtilence, The Athenians having invoked all their other Gods to no purpoſe, bethought themſelves to build an Altar to the unknown God, and immediately the Plague was ſtayed. l. 4. 69. There are a great number of others of St. Iſidore's Letters upon ſeveral Texts of the Holy Scripture: But as a Proof of his Acuteneſs and Ability to interpret Holy Scripture, it is ſufficient to obſerve, that he gives ten Explications of one Text of St. Paul, l. 4. 829. And that in one Letter of a few Lines, he explains eight ſeveral Texts of Scripture, l. 4. 112. ſo ready and Familiar was it to him. He ſometimes unfolds thoſe Texts which the Hereticks did abuſe to uphold their Errors, and maintains againſt their falſe Gloſſes thoſe Texts which the Orthodox alledged; he often enlarges upon ſuch Maxims of Piety and Principles of Morality as are contained in thoſe Texts of Holy Scripture which he quotes. He likewiſe very commonly explains it in a Spiritual Senſe, that he may raiſe out of it ſome Moral Obſervations and uſeful Inſtructions.

St. Iſidore of Damiata.

Of his Letters of Doctrine.

Altho' St. Iſidore hath not profeſſedly treated of any Doctrine of Religion, yet in many of his Letters we find them very ſtrongly confirmed and proved. He ſhews, that the Heathen Religion hath evident Marks of Falſhood, l. 1. 95. l. 4. 27, 29, 30, &c. And that Chriſtianity hath all the Signs of Truth, and oppoſes thoſe who accuſe it of Novelty, l. 2. 46. He affirms, that if we do but compare the Holy Scriptures with the Heathen Writers, we may ſoon diſcern on which ſide the true Religion is, l. 1. 21. That the former contain ſublime Truths, which beget Reverence, whereas the latter are full of Fables and deſpicable Fooleries and Cheats, l. 2. 4. 5. Among the Proofs of the Chriſtian Religion he forgets not to inſert that of the confirmation of the Goſpel by Miracles, and the deſtruction of Paganiſm, l. 1. 271. He confutes the Jews in ſeveral places, not only by demonſtrating, that the Prophecies of the Meſſias are fulfilled in Jeſus Chriſt, but alſo by confirming the truth of the Conception of Jeſus Chriſt in the Womb of the Virgin, l. 1. 141. l. 4. 17. He proves, that God hath created Angels, Men and all Beings, l. 1. 343. That all things are over-ruled by Providence, and not by the influences of the Stars, or by Fate, l. 3. 135, 154, 191. That things do not come to paſs, becauſe God foreknows them or foretells them, but God foreknows and foretells them becauſe they will ſo happen, l. 1. 56. He explains the Myſteries of the Trinity and Incarnation in ſo many Letters, that it is needleſs to cite them all. Among others, theſe are worthy of our Conſideration about the Trinity, l. 1. 67, 138, 139, 327. l. 4. 99. About the Incarnation, l. 1. 323, 403. He confutes the Error of the Arrians, l. 1. 246, 353. l. 4. 31, 334. and of the Sabellians, l. 3. 247. He proves the God-head of the Holy Ghoſt, l. 1. 20, 60, 97, 109, 499, 500, &c. He condemns the Error of the Neſtorians, and ſhews that the name of the Mother of God ought to be given to the Virgin Mary, l. 1. 54. He alſo oppoſes thoſe, who confounded the two Natures, as well as the Manichees, who aſſerted, that the Fleſh which appeared in Jeſus Chriſt, was a mere Phantom, l. 1. 102, 303. He refutes the Marcionites, l. 1. 11. the Manichees, l. 4. 13. the Montaniſts, l. 1. 242. to

St. Isidore of Damiata.

242. to the 246. and the Novatians, l. 1. 100, 338. He maintains the perpetual Virginity of Mary, both before and after her Conception, l. 1. 23. He is of Opinion, that Jesus Christ came out of her Womb, as well as out of the Sepulchre, without opening the Passage, l. 1. 404. He proves the Soul to be Immortal, l. 3. 295. l. 4. 125. But he confutes the Doctrine of Origen about the eternal Præexistence of Souls, l. 4. 163. He also disproves the Opinion of those who believed, that the Soul is part of the Substance of God himself, l. 4. 124. He shews, that the Resurrection of the Body is certain, but the manner of it and time, is uncertain, l. 1. 284. l. 2. 43. He holds, that after the Resurrection, the Bodies of the damned shall be Spiritual, as well as the Bodies of the blessed; that is to say, as he explains it, active, and of the nature of the Air. He believes, that the damned shall be punished in different manners, according to the difference of their Sins, l. 4. 42. He defends the freedom of Man's Will, l. 1. 271, 303, 352, 363, &c. He allows, that Grace is necessary to perform that which is good, but he will have Man on his part to use his diligence and labour, that Grace may be operative. The Nature of Man, saith he, hath received several Graces which it is in Man's power to make good use of. Man's labour must concurr with Grace, as the Industry of Sailers is helpful to the prosperous Winds. It is of God's Providence that our help comes, but we must also joyn our endeavours with it, l. 2. 2. We are our selves, saith he, in another Letter, the cause of our own Damnation, and Jesus Christ is the cause of our Salvation; for it is he that hath justified us by Baptism, who hath delivered us from the Punishments we have deserved, and hath enriched us with his Gifts; but all his Graces will be of no advantage to us, if we do not what we are able to do on our part, l. 2. 61. Man, saith he in another place, stands in need of the divine Assistance to accomplish those very things, which seem to be in his Power; but that Grace is never wanting to those, who on their part do what they are able; for if the Divine Providence excites, and stirs up those, who have no desire to do good, with what reason can it deny necessary helps for doing good to those, whose Will is well inclined, and do what they are able? l 4. 171. Nevertheless, Man must not attribute the good he doth to himself, but must referr all to the Grace of God, otherwise his best Actions will be of no use to him, l. 2. 265, 242. In sum, no Man lives upon Earth, and sins not, l. 1. 435. St. Isidore delivers himself upon the Sacraments of Baptism and the Lord's Supper, in a way altogether conformable to the Doctrine and Discipline of the present Church. The Baptism of Infants, saith he, doth not only wash them from their natural Pollution, caused by the Sin of Adam, but it also conferrs Graces: It not only obliterates the Sin of those that receive it, but also makes them God's adopted Children, l. 3. 195. The Veil, that covers the Sacramental Elements, doth undoubtedly overspread the Body of Jesus Christ, l. 1. 123. And the Holy Spirit turns the Wine into the Blood of Jesus Christ, l. 1. 314. The scandalous Lives of Ministers, their Sins and Impieties do not hinder the effect of the Sacraments which they administer, l. 1. 120. l. 2. 37, 52. l. 3. 34, 294. He approves of the Honour which is given to the Martyrs, and the respect which is bestowed on their Relicks. He disallows not the presenting of Offerings at their Altars in honour of them; but the principal respect, which we can give them, is to imitate their Lives, l. 1. 55. l. 2. 89. He preferrs a single Life before Marriage, l. 2. 133. He observes, that the Polygamy of the ancient Patriarchs, was then very excusable, because it was necessary that they should have a numerous Posterity; but it may not be now used as a pretence to cover our Incontinence. We will conclude with the Idea and Definition which he gives the Catholick Church: The Faithful, saith he, dispersed throughout the whole World, make up the Body of the Universal Church; every particular Church is a Member of it, l. 4. 103. This Universal Church hath often been assaulted, but it never was, nor ever shall be utterly extinct, l. 3. 5.

Letters concerning the Discipline of the Church.

In the Letters of St. Isidore there are a great many important things worthy of our Observation touching the Discipline of the Church. He condemns Symony in an infinite number of them, l. 1. 26, 29, 30, 45, 106, 111, 119, 120, 136, 145, 158, 315. l. 2. 125. l. 3. 17. &c. He taxes all those Exactions which were used upon the account of Ordinations, with this Crime. He condemns, in several places, those who ambitiously sought for Bishopricks. He reminds the Priests about the Administration of the Sacrament of Penance, that they have Power to bind as well as loose; that they neither may nor ought to loose those, who bring no Medicine for their Sins, and who do not endure a Penance proportionable to the greatness of their Crimes. He advertiseth them, that they ought to be Ministers of Jesus Christ, and not Fellow-Criminals; that they are Intercessors with God and not absolute Judges; that they are Mediators and not Masters, l. 3. 260. He tells the Deacons, that they are the Bishops Eye, and that they ought to be very careful in the management of the Church's Revenue, l. 1. 19. He orders all Ecclesiastical Persons to carry themselves modestly, and avoid the familiarity, converse and sight of Women, l. 1. 89. l. 2. 284, 278. l. 3. 11, 66. He requires them to be subject to Princes, and pay them Tribute, l. 1. 48. He observes, that in the Apostles time the Christians had no Churches, but that in his time they were become very sumptuous and fine, l. 2. 246. He blames the Bishop of Damiata for having built a stately Church, with the Money which he had scraped together by selling Ordinations, and other Exactions of the People. He tells him, that it is to build Zion by Blood, and establish Jerusalem by Iniquity; as it is said in the Prophet Micah; That a Sacrifice made up of another Man's Substance, is an Horror and an Abomination to the Lord. He advises him to give over building that Church at the expence of the People, if he would not have that lofty Temple convince him of Injustice before God, and be a Monument, that shall cry eternally against him, and which shall require the restitution of what he hath taken from the Poor, and Vengeance for oppressing of them, l. 1. 37. We find also some Ceremonies of the Church taken notice of in St. Isidore's Letters. In his time the Bishop wished Peace to the People, and the Congregation answered, And with you also, l. 1. 122. The Deacons which ministred at the Altar wore a Linen Vestment, and the Bishops had a kind of a Cloak made of Woollen, which covered their Neck and Shoulders, which they put off when the Gospel began to be read. The first of these Habits, according to Isidore, denotes the Humility of Jesus Christ; and the second, represented the wandring Sheep, which the good Shepherd brings home upon his Shoulders, l. 2. 246. The Custom then was to allow Women to sing in the Church; but St. Isidore says, that they had abused that practice, by causing themselves to be admired for the sweetness and harmony of their Voice, and were no less blame-worthy, than if they sang prophane Songs, and that they ought to be forbidden singing in the Church for the future, l. 1. 90. Divorce was only allowed in case of Adultery. The Reason which St. Isidore gives for it, is this, that Adultery is the only Sin by which conjugal Faith is violated, and which brings into a Family the Children of Strangers, l. 2. 376. He could not bear those who asserted, that Comedies might be of good use to beget a detestation of Vice, and make Men more virtuous. The aim and design of Comedians, saith he, is clear contrary; and their Art hath no other end, than to hurt and corrupt good Manners, l. 3. 336. Those, who are pleased to see counterfeit Passions represented, ordinarily become passionate; it is then necessary to keep from going to Comedies; for it is easier to avoid the occasion, and to oppose the first approaches of Vice, than to stop the course of it, when it is once begun, l. 5. 433. He says, that a Person condemned by his Bishop ought no where to be received into Communion; but he observes, That altho' this were the regular course, yet many Bishops of his time had neglected it; and that was the reason, that the good Bishops dare not take upon them to correct their disorderly and vitious Clergy.

St. Isidore of Damiata.

Letters of Pious Advice and Instruction.

There never was in the Church a more strict, or free Censor of Manners than St. Isidore of Damiata. The Church of Damiata was then governed by a Bishop, called Eusebius, who sought his own advantage more than that of Jesus Christ. Altho' St. Isidore looked upon him as his Superior, yet he was not afraid of violating the respect due to him, by telling him with all the freedom imaginable, that he did not lead a Life as became a Bishop. He made no scruple to reprove him for his Vices, to write of them to his Friends, to discover them to the publick, that he might make him ashamed of them, and to lament the unhappiness of the Church of Damiata in having such a Bishop. In his other Letters, he speaks the same things for the most part; sometimes he accuses him of selling Ordinations, sometimes he reproves his Covetousness, sometimes he taxes his Pride and Ambition, and sometimes he suspects him to be guilty of living disorderly. In a word, he gives him every where the Character of a Bishop altogether unworthy of his Ministry. He hath no more regard to the reputation of his inferior Ministers. His Arch-deacon Pansophius, and his Steward, called Maro, are taxed with the Crimes of Symony and unjust Exactions. The Monks, Zosimus and Palladius, meet with no better Treatment; he describes them as Debauchees who led a lewd and disorderly Life. Another Priest, called Martinianus, who after the Death of Eusebius strove to get himself ordained into his place, is also accused of many Crimes by Isidore. He wrote also of him to St. Cyril to hinder him from ordaining him Bishop of Damiata. If we will take the pains to read the Letters which he hath written to the Persons already named, and to his Friends upon the same Subject, we shall find therein excellent Instructions for all Bishops. Particularly we may see against those that Hunt after Bishopricks, l. 1. 23, 28, 104. l. 2. 127. and many others against the Bishops, who conferr Ordinations for Money, l. 1. 26, 29. and others which we have cited in ſpeaking of Symony. Againſt proud and covetous Biſhops, and who make not a good uſe of the Revenues of the Church, l. 1. 38, 44, 57, 215. Againſt their lording and and tyrannical Humour, l. 2. 208, 209. He deſcribes the excellency of the Prieſthood, l. 2. 200. and preferrs it before the temporal Government; becauſe Biſhops govern the Soul, whereas Princes have Power only over the Body. He ſpeaks, in ſeveral places, of the neceſſary Qualifications of a Biſhop, and of the difficulty that there is in diſcharging that Miniſtry well, l. 1. 104, 151. l. 3. 216, 259. l. 4. 213. 145. He admoniſhes thoſe that deſire to be Biſhops, that they ought to purifie themſelves before they undertake to purifie others, l. 2. 65. He thinks, that there are two Things abſolutely neceſſary for a Biſhop, Eloquence and Holineſs of Life; that if theſe two go not together, 'tis impoſſible that a Biſhop ſhould do any good in his Place, l. 1. 44. l. 2. 235. l. 3. 259. That Gravity, and a Conſtancy in his Actions, ought alſo to be joyned with theſe two Virtues. l. 1. 319. l. 2. 290.

St. Iſidore of Damiata.

But St. Iſidore did not only uſe ſuch Admonitions and Reproofs towards his own Biſhop and Clergy to amend them, but alſo he dealt in the ſame manner with St. Cyril, Patriarch of Alexandria, in writing to him about the Troubles that happened at the Council of Epheſus. He accuſes him for acting too raſhly and fiercely, and tells him, that many of thoſe that were aſſembled at Epheſus, boldly aſſerted, that he ſought more to be avenged of his Enemy, than to ſettle the Orthodox Truth. He is, ſay they, a true Nephew of Theophilus, he hath the ſame Spirit and Behaviour; and as this laſt thundered out his Fury againſt the Bleſſed John, his Nephew hath done the ſame, altho' there be a great deal of difference between the Perſons accuſed, l. 1. 310. He wrote to him after the ſame faſhion in another Letter. The Examples of Holy Scripture, ſaith he, create in me ſuch an horror as obliges me to write to you. For whether I look upon my ſelf as your Father (as you call me) I am afraid leaſt if I do not admoniſh you, I ſhould be puniſhed as the High-Prieſt Eli was, for having not reproved his Sons. But if I conſider my ſelf rather as your Son, upon the Account of St. Mark, whom you repreſent, the puniſhment of Jonathan, who was ſlain, becauſe he did not hinder his Father from conſulting the Witch of Endor, is a Warning to me. Wherefore, to avoid my own and your Condemnation, I am obliged to admoniſh you to lay aſide the Diſputes now on foot, and not engage the Church of Chriſt in a particular and domeſtick Quarrel, and ſo raiſe a perpetual Schiſm in the Church under the pretence of Religion, l. 1. 370.

It was the Grief that St. Iſidore had, to ſee the Orthodox Biſhops divided among themſelves, that made him ſpeak thus. He imagined that St. Cyril's Raſhneſs was the Cauſe of it. He thought that he ſought to revenge an old Quarrel: And it appears likewiſe, that he ſuſpected him, not to have a thorough-ſound Opinion about the Incarnation, l. 1. 323. But, afterwards, being better informed, he approved his Doctrine, and exhorted him to continue ſtedfaſt in it, and not contradict himſelf, as it appears by Letter, 324. l. 1. St. Iſidore wrote not only to St. Cyril, to endeavour a Pacification between the Biſhops of the Council of Epheſus, but thought himſelf obliged to write to the Emperor Theodoſius. He adviſed him to go himſelf to Epheſus, to appeaſe the Troubles; and admoniſhes him, not to eſpouſe the Animoſities of either Side, nor ſuffer his own Officers to intermeddle with Matters of Doctrine, l. 1. 311. Thus did St. Iſidore, without leaving his Retirement, engage himſelf in the greateſt Affairs of the Church, and joyned with the Prayers, which he made to God for the Peace of his Church, the moſt effectual Counſels and Advice.

So that he was none of thoſe Monks who were contented to bewail their own Sins, and pray to God for others in ſecret, and who remain in perpetual Silence, without concerning themſelves with what happens, or having any Commerce with other Men. He found out a way to joyn the Love of Solitude with the Knowledge of what happens in the World; Piety and Silence with Charitable Advice and Admonitions; Mental Recollections with a continual Obſervation of others Actions: And, to ſpeak in one Word, all the Exerciſes of a Monaſtick Life, with the Care and Vigilance of a Paſtor. There were no Perſons, of whatſoever State and Condition they were, but he gave them Advice and Inſtructions about their Employments and Duties. We have already ſeen after what manner he gave them to Biſhops and Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, let us now take a view of ſome of them, which he gives to the Laity.

Advice to Kings. If you will obtain the Eternal and Incoruptible Kingdom, which God will give to thoſe who govern well here below, as a Reward, you muſt make uſe of your Power with Moderation and Goodneſs, and liberally diſpenſe your Riches to the Poor; for 'tis not a Prince's Power that ſaves him, but his Juſtice, Goodneſs and Piety: He cannot avoid being counted an Idolater, if he unjuſtly hoards up his Temporal Riches, without diſtributing them to the Poor, l. 1. 35. to Theodoſius.

Advice to Magiſtrates and Governors. They ought to think with themſelves, That the Time of exerciſing their Offices is ſhort; That Life it ſelf is not of long continuance; That the Rewards or Torments of another World are Eternal; That they ought to Adminiſter Juſtice freely to all the World, uſe their Authority with gentleneſs, and give no Man a juſt Ground of Complaint, l. 1. 31, 47, 48, 133, 165, 191, 208, 290.

St. Iſidore of Damiata.

Advice to Courtiers. Not to miſuſe the Favour of their Prince, but to employ it for the Good and Safety of the People, and to imitate Daniel, l. 1. 36, 47, 48.

Advice to Soldiers. Not to take too much upon them, to do no Violence nor Injuſtice, &c. l. 1. 40. 87. 297, 327.

Advice to Subjects. Jeſus Chriſt ſubmitted himſelf to the Laws of the Emperors, and paid Tribute, to teach us Obedience to Kings, and not exempt our ſelves from paying their Dues, upon the Pretence of Poverty, l. 1. 206, 408.

Advice to Women. If they would be commended as Judith, Suſanna or St. Thecla, they muſt imitate the Virtues of thoſe Illuſtrious Women, l. 1. 187. That Chriſtian Women ſhould modeſtly apparel themſelves, and that they ſhould not uſe the Adornings and Finery of the Women of the World. Upon this occaſion he relates a remarkable Story of a Young Woman, who coming into the Sight of a Young Man, who was extremely in Love with her, cured him of that fond Paſſion by preſenting herſelf before him with her Hair crop'd, and her Head covered with Aſhes, l. 2. 53, 145. He recommends Modeſty alſo to them, but more eſpecially to Widows, l. 1. 179.

Advice to Parents. Concerning the Education of their Children, l. 1. 316.

Advice to thoſe that take the Holy Sacrament with a defiled Conſcience, l. 1. 170.

Advice to Sinners. The moſt perfect State is not to ſin, but it is good to repent when we have ſinned, and to riſe again, as ſoon as may be, from our Fall. Since you are fallen from your firſt Eſtate, which is above your Strength, have a care that you do not neglect the ſecond means of gaining your Salvation, and take heed that Deſpair do not entirely ruin you, l. 1. 381. l. 2. 160. l. 3. 62. Yet the Hopes of Pardon ought not to encourage us in Sin, for it is much eaſier to preſerve Innocency than to reſtore it, foraſmuch as ſome Scar always remains after the Cure, and it can never be recovered but with much Pain, l. 3. 157.

Advice to a Phyſician, who lived wickedly. You profeſs a Science which requires a great deal of Prudence and Wiſdom, but you have a Spirit of Contradiction; you cure ſmall Wounds for others, but do not heal your own Diſtempers, which are very great and dangerous: If you will be a True Phyſician, begin to cure your own diſeaſed Soul, l. 1. 391, 437.

There are an infinite number of ſuch like Inſtructions in the Letters of St. Iſidore. They are full of Maxims of Piety and the Rules of a Spiritual Life. He, in ſeveral Places of them, recommends Charity, Humility, Vigilance, Holineſs, Modeſty, Sobriety, Patience, Contempt of the World, Repentance, Labour, Prayer, and other Chriſtian Virtues, of which he teaches the Practical Part. He renders the contrary Vices deteſtable, and propounds fit Remedies for us to apply to them. He principally inveighs againſt three Vices very common in his Time, Ambition, Covetouſneſs and Intemperance. Laſtly, All his Letters are full of moſt ſolid and profitable Chriſtian Maxims: This is an excellent one, which he often repeats; Our Lives muſt correſpond with our Words, and we ought to practiſe our ſelves what we teach others, for it not enough to ſay, but we muſt do what we ſay.

Letters concerning the Diſcipline and Life of the Monks.

As St. Iſidore profeſſed a Monaſtick Life, ſo 'tis to the Monks that the greateſt part of his Inſtructions, which we have already ſpoken of, are directed. He extols a Monaſtick State in general, l. 1. Let. 129. and gives the Deſcription of a true Monk, l. 1. 200, 298, 308, 319. He makes that eſtate to conſiſt principally in two things; In Retiredneſs and Obedience, l. 1. 1. The Apparel of the Monks, according to him, ought to be like St. John Baptiſt's; that is to ſay, of Hair, and their Food ought to be nothing but Herbs: But if they are not able to undergo ſo great Auſterities, they ought to live in that Way which the Biſhop commands them, and follow the Rules which he ſhall preſcribe them, l. 1. 5, 74. They ought not to live as they liſt, but put themſelves under the Government of ſome Superior, l. 1. 193, 260. They ought not to concern themſelves with worldly Affairs, nor maintain any Trade or Commerce with the World, l. 1. 25, 75, 92, 220. When any Man hath once embraced a Monaſtick Life, he ought to perſevere with Zeal, l. 1. 91, 110. Inconſtant and fickle Monks are blame-worthy, l. 1. 41, 173, 314, 318. They ought not to be allowed to live in Idleneſs, but they muſt be employed and labour, l. 1. 49. They may not read the Books of Profane Authors, nor affect to ſpeak or declaim elegantly, l. 1. 62, 64. I omit to ſpeak of the Practice of ſuch Chriſtian Virtues as he recommends to them, and of thoſe Vices which he reproves in ſome Monks of his Time, becauſe that were to repeat what we have already ſaid.

What

St. Isidore of Damiata.

What we have spoken of St. Isidore of Damiata, may suffice to inform us of his Style and Person: Nothing remains more to be spoken of but the Editions of these Letters, which I shall do in a few Words. The three first Books were translated into Latin by the Abbot Billius, and printed after his Death in Greek and Latin, at Paris in 1585. with a Collection of the excellent Observations of that Learned Man, as well upon St. Isidore as upon other Greek Fathers. Ritterhusius added a Fourth Book to these, and caused it to be printed with [the other Three, and] his own large Notes [upon all the Four Books] by Commelinus] at Heidelberg] in 1605. The Jesuite Schottus joyned a Fifth Book to them, which was printed in Greek at Antwerp in 1623. in Latin at Rome in 1624. and in Greek and Latin [illustrated with Notes, Glosses and Arguments] at Frankfort in 1629. They are all collected into one Volume, and printed in the last Edition at Paris, in 1638.

St. Isidore of Damiata.

JOANNES CASSIANUS.

J. Cassian.

Joannes Cassianus, a Native of Scythia (a), having devoted himself to God in his Childhood, withdrew himself into the Monastery of Bethlehem (b); afterwards, being desirous to attain the utmost perfection of a Religious Life he departed from thence, with another Monk named Germanus with whom he had contracted an intimate Friendship, to go into Ægypt and Thebais, to see the Solitaries and Monks of that Country, and gather some Advantage by their Example and Instructions. Having lived Seven Years (c) in that Conntry, and conferred with the most Spiritual and most eminent Abbots of those Quarters, they returned to their Monastery, as they had obliged themselves; and having discharged this Duty to their Ancient Brethren, they went from thence into the Desart of Scythia. It is probable, that the Contentions of the Monks of Ægypt with the Bishop of Alexandria forc'd them as well as many others, to retreat to Constantinople: But however that be, it is certain that they were at Constantinople when St. Chrysostome was banished, and that they were sent to Rome to carry the Letters of the Clergy of that City thither; containing the Complaints of the Violence which had been used against their Bishop, as we read in the Life of St. Chrysostome, written by Palladius. Germanus the Priest, saith he, and Cassian the Deacon, Persons of eminent Piety, who were for St. Chrysostome, came after Palladius, and brought Letters from all the Clergy of Constantinople, relating, how that their Church had suffered intolerable Oppression and Tyranny, their Bishop having been driven out by Force, &c. St. Innocent returning an Answer to this Letter, says also, That is was brought by Germanus the Priest and Cassian. It cannot rationally be said, That this Cassian is a distinct Person from this of whom we are speaking, since he not only bears the same Name, and hath a Companion of the same Name, but also because we understand by Cassian himself, that he was the Scholar of St. Chrysostome. Gennadius also takes notice, that he was ordain'd by that Holy Bishop. Afterward he was promoted to the Order of Priesthood, it is likely in the West, and never returned again into the East. But however that be, it is out of doubt that he spent the latter part of his Life at Marseills; where he founded two Monasteries, one for Men and another for Virgins: There he composed all the Works which he left us. He dyed under the Empire of Theodosius and Valentinian, about the Year Four hundred and forty. The first of his Works is his Institutio Monachorum, i. e, Instruction of Monks, divided into Twelve Books: The first Four which treat of the Habit and way of Living used by the Monks of Ægypt, are look'd upon by Gennadius and Photius as a distinct Treatise. The Eight last are so many Precepts against the Eight Capital Sins; nevertheless, it appears by the Preface and the Sequel, that Cassian intended these two Parts for one entire Work only. This Treatise is dedicated to Castor Bishop of Apta; who desiring to model the Monasteries in his Province, like to the Ægyptian, requested Cassian, who had conversed a long time with those Monks, to lay down a Platform of their way of Living; to be, as it were, a Pattern for the Western Monks. In the First he speaks of the Habits of the Ægyptian Monks and describes them much after this Manner. Their Habit was merely to cover their Nakedness, and secure them against the Injuries of the Weather: It had nothing extraordinary either in the Colour or Fashion, lest the singularity of it should give them an occasion to be Proud. They wore a Girdle about their Loyns, and a Cowle upon their Heads. Their Linnen Coats had short Sleeves, which reached no further than their Elbows, the other part of their Arm was naked. They had over their Habit a kind of Scapulat, and a little short Cloak, which came down no further than the Shoulders. They had also a kind of Safe-guard of Leather, which they used in bad Weather. They carried a Staff. They wore no Shoes. They had only single Breeches to save themselves from Heat and Cold, and those also they put off when they went to Celebrate, or Receive the Holy Sacrament.

J. Cassian.

De institutis Cœnobitorum.

In the 2d. Book, Cassian, to obviate the great diversity which was in the Monasteries touching the Multitude of Psalms, which were sung at Divine Service, relates the usages of the Monks of Ægypt and Thebais. First, he observes, that these Monks at their entrance into the Monastery, forsook all things, laboured with their Hands, and lived in obedience. He then speaks of the Divine Offices of the Monks of Egypt and Thebais: They recited their Evening-Service, and their Night-Service, the 12 Psalms. On Saturday and Sunday they read two Lessons, which, during the whole Lent, were both taken out of the New Testament: On other days, one out of the Old, and another of the New Testament. At the end of every Psalm they made a pause, and all the Monks rising up, made a Prayer with themselves; then they cast themselves flat on the Ground, and being risen again, they made another short Prayer, without singing the Gloria Patri, as is the custom in the West. The Psalms were not sung by the Monks in a Choir, but one of them sung them, and the rest, sitting in silence, hearkened to him; now and then he made stops, that they might lift up their Hearts to God. Divine Service being ended, they betook themselves to their Cells modestly and silently, and went to their Labours there. They who committed any Fault, were excluded the Service, and it was not allowed any other to pray for them. They did not kneel down, nor fast from Saturday-evening to Sunday-evening, nor from Easter to Whitsontide, following the ancient Custom of the Church.

In the 3*d*. Book he speaks of the Offices of the third, sixth and ninth Hours, in every of which they recited 3 Psalms. The first Office which Cassian calls the Mattins, was not used in Ægypt; but he tells us, that it was newly settled not only in the West, but also in his Monastery of Bethlehem. They that came to the Church which he calls an Oratory, after the first Psalm was ended, did not enter at all, but stayed at the Door till the rest came out, and then cast themselves flat on the Ground to beg pardon for their Sloth. In the Night-service it was allowed to go in, till the end of the second Psalm. Besides these Offices there were Vigils on Friday-night to Saturday, in which they rehearsed three Anthems and three Psalms. They never Fast in the East on Saturday, as they do at Rome. Cassian thinks, That this fast was appointed at Rome, because St. Peter fasted to prepare himself for the encounter with Simon Magus; but he adds, that such a Custom ought not to be established upon that Example. On Sunday they celebrated but one Mass only, to which they joyned the Offices of the third and sixth: They recited some Psalms before and after Dinner. At Supper, they contented themselves to make a short Prayer, because that was an extraordinay and unusual Meal among the Monks.

The 4*th*. Book contains the Qualifications required in that Person, who desires to be admitted into a Monastery. He that offers himself for this end, must remain at the Gate, and beseech the Monks many times to receive him. He

(a) A Native of Scythia.] Gennadius says plainly, That he was a Scythian. M. Holstenius and F. Norris endeavour to prove that he was a Frenchman; and this they pretend to do from ch. 1. conf. 24. but that Place doth not prove what they assert, nor destroy the Testimony of Gennadius, which is of great weight. Photius says, That he was a Roman, but he means it of the Place of his Abode, and the Tongue he wrote in. Honorius calls him an African, perhaps because he thought that Scythia was in Africa. Some say he was a Native of Scythia and born at Carthage, but this is without Ground. What some say, That he wrote too elegantly in Latin to be a Greek, is not to be regarded. It is very possible that a Greek, living among the Latins, might write Latin as well as he hath done: Besides, he lived in an Age, when almost all Learned Men were skilled in both Tongues.

(b) He withdrew himself into the Monastery of Bethlehem.] He says so himself in the Preface of his Institutions, dedicated to Castor; where speaking of his First Exercise in that Monastery; he says, A pueritia nostra constituti.

(c) Having lived Seven Years] In his First Conference, ch. 1. he tells us, That it was the Desire he had to visit the Monks, and profit by their Instructions, that made him undertake that Voyage: Germanus, with whom he travelled, had been longer in the Monastery than he; they always were very intimate. He relates, in his Conferences, the principal Discourses which they had with the most Spiritual and Religious all-a-long their Voyage, and the Places whither they went, in the seventeenth Conf. ch. 31. He says, That at the end of Seven Years they performed their Promise, which they made, of returning to the Monastery; and then went into the Desart of Scythia.

J. Caſſian. muſt give proofs of his Patience, Humility and Contempt of the World, and be tryed with Denyals and Affronts. They by no means will allow that he give his Eſtate to the Monaſtery into which he goes, for fear that afterward it ſhould give him an occaſion to exalt himſelf above the other Monks. They make him to lay aſide his former Garb, and the Abbot muſt give him another, to ſhew him that he ought to be entirely ſtripped of all. Nor will they immediately after admit him into their Society. They put him with an old Monk into an Apartment near the Gate, where they receive Gueſts; and when they had ſerved him a long while, they put him under the government of another Senior, who had the care of Novices; there they teach him to ſubdue his Paſſions and renounce his own Will. They oblige him to reveal all his Thoughts to this Senior, and exerciſe him with the meaneſt Works, to to try his obedience, they give him no other Food but boil'd Herbs with a little Salt: But Caſſian obſerves, that this auſterity in Eating is not practicable in the Weſt. Theſe Holy Monks are ſo ſubject to the ſound of the Bell, that they are obliged to leave whatſoever Work they are about, to go whither it calls them, although it be a Letter, They can poſſeſs nothing of their own. They make them do Penance for the leaſt Faults. They read in the Hall at Dinner-time. It is forbidden them to eat any where but in the Hall. They wait upon each other at Table. Laſtly they perform a blind obedience to their Superior, who commands them to do things which ſeem impoſſible. Caſſian relates ſome Examples which ſeem incredible, and it would be dangerous to imitate.

This is the Subject of the Four firſt Books of Caſſian's Inſtitutions, which Gennadius and Photius have looked upon as a diſtinct Work from the Eight laſt. And, indeed, theſe are upon another Subject. He teaches us, in them, to reſiſt the Eight principal Vices, with which Men are tempted. (viz.) Gluttony, Uncleanneſs, Covetouſneſs, Anger, Sorrow, Trouble, Vain-glory and Pride. In every Book he gives us the definition of theſe Vices, ſhews us the pernicious effects of them, propounds Examples to confirm it, how much they ought to be deteſted. He preſcribes Rules for the contrary Virtues, and teaches us fit Remedies to defend our ſelves from them. He maintains, that without Grace Man can do no good thing, nor reſiſt any Temptation; but he believes, that this Grace is given to all that uſe their Endeavours.

But Caſſian doth not think it enough to propound the Life of the Ægyptian Monks as an Example to the Weſtern, and propoſe Methods of reſiſting the moſt ordinary Temptations. He hath alſo collected the Inſtructions, which he had heard from the Mouths of the moſt Illuſtrious Abbots of thoſe Deſarts, in the Conferences he had with them. Caſſian hath made 24 Books of theſe, which he intitles, Collations or Conferences. The ten firſt are dedicated to Leontius Biſhop of * Frejus and Helladius the Preſident of the Abby built by Caſtor, who was dead. The firſt and ſecond contain the Diſcourſes of Moſes, Abbot of the Deſart of † Schete, in which, having ſpoken in general of the end of a Monaſtick Life, and the means of arriving at the end, he treats of the Spirit of Prudence. In the third the Abbot Paphnutius explains in what Particulars the forſaking of the world conſiſts, Germanus the Companion of Caſſian having put ſome Queſtions to him, touching the Abilities of the Free-will, he ſpeaks of the neceſſity of Grace, even for the beginning of Faith. In the fourth the Abbot Daniel ſhews of what uſe Temptations and the Motions of Concupiſcence are. He teaches us the means to reſiſt them; always owning, that without Grace all human Attempts and induſtry are to no Purpoſe, In the fifth, Serapion diſcovers the eight principal Vices, and teaches us fit Remedies to be applyed againſt them. In the ſixth, a Monk, who had a Cell between the Deſarts of Scythia and Nitria, endeavouring to explain the Queſtion which Caſſian had propounded, Why God did permit that the Monks be taken and put to Death by the Arabians? treats of the Happineſs of the Death of the Saints. The Abbot Serenus explains in the ſeventh Conference the various Temptations of the Devils, and the Stratagems which they make uſe of to draw the Soul of Man into Sin. They cannot force or conſtrain it, but they ſtir it up to evil. They do not certainly know the ſecret thoughts of Man, but gueſs at them by the Motions of the Body. Every Evil Spirit is Appointed to excite ſome paſſion, they know one anothers deſigns to do Man a Miſchief, yet they cannot poſſeſs him without the Divine permiſſion: The Vertue of the Croſs drives them away. They could not poſſeſs Mens Bodies, if they had not gotten ſome footing in the Soul, or God did not permit them to enter to puniſh ſome Faults. It is better to be tormented in our Bodies by the Devil, than to have the Soul ſubject to his Power by Vice. We ought to pity the Caſe of ſuch as are tormented by Devils; Serenus thinks it not reaſonable, that they ſhould be deprived wholly of the Communion, which is contrary to the ancient diſcipline of the Church. Laſtly, he makes ſome Obſervations upon the nature and differences of Devils, but he handles this matter more largely in the 18th. Conference where he ſpeaks of the Fall of Devils and the Sin of the firſt Man. He believes, that the Devils have ſubtile airy Bodies, and every Man hath a good and a bad Angel. In the two following Conferences is related the Diſcourſe of the Abbot Iſaac upon Prayer. This Holy Man having taught us how we muſt prepare our ſelves for Prayer, diſtinguiſhing it into 4 ſorts as the Apoſtle St. Paul doth, Supplications, Prayers, Interceſſions, and giving of Thanks, he ſhews for what Perſons every one of theſe Prayers is neceſſary, and the fitteſt Seaſons when we need them. He afterwards, expounds the Lord's Prayer, and from thence paſſes to private Prayers which proceed from the bottom of the Heart, which are often accompanied with Tears, and an aſſurance of being certainly heard. The ſecond Conference is prefaced with a relation of the Troubles raiſed among the Monks by the Paſchal Letters of Theophilus, written againſt the Error of the Anthropomorphites. Caſſian tells us, that the greateſt part of the ancient Monks explaining theſe Words of Geneſis in a groſs Senſe, Let us make Man in our Image, and in our Likeneſs, imagined that God had a Body like ours, and ſo did repreſent him to themſelves in their Prayers.

The Biſhop of Alexandria had a cuſtom of publiſhing on what Day Eaſter ſhould be celebrated every Year. And this he ordinarily did on the Feaſt of Epiphany; upon which, according to his remark they not only kept the Feſtival of Chriſt's Baptiſm, but alſo his Nativity in Egypt. Having given notice in his Church, in his Sermon, he made it known to the Churches and Monaſteries of Ægypt by his Letters, which were called, Paſchal Letters. Theophilus having taken an occaſion to write in one of theſe Letters againſt the Error of theſe Monks, they are extreamly diſturbed at it, and all the Monks of the Monaſtery of Schete, except Paphnutius, treated their Archbiſhop as an Heretick, and undertook to confute his Letter. Theſe good Monks had accuſtomed themſelves to repreſent God in the figure of a Man, and they could not free themſelves from this Imagination which was ſo ſtrongly engraved in their Minds, that an old Man named Serapion, (who was convinced of his Error by the Abbot Paphnutius) and a certain Deacon of Cappadocia called Photinus, going to Prayers, and not repreſenting God to himſelf in a bodily Shape, as before, fell to Weeping and Crying, Oh miſerable Man that I am! They have taken away my God, inſomuch that I know not how to adore and pray unto him more! this having paſſed after the firſt Conference which Caſſian and Germanus had had with the Abbot Iſaac, they thought at their return to find him full of the fancy of the Abbot Serapion, and asked him what he would do, ſince ſo Holy a Man was fallen into ſo groſs an Error? The Abbot Iſaac having anſwered them, that that Error was a Relick of Paganiſm which the Devil ſtill preſerved in the Minds of many ignorant Perſons; adds, that thoſe who are perfect and well inſtructed have no ſuch thing for the object of their Prayers, the only end of which is ſpiritual Love, which hath nothing carnal. Afterwards he recommends a very uſeful practice to them, which is to ſay every Moment and in all the Actions of Life, this ſhort Prayer of the Pſalmiſt, O God, haſte thee to help me, make haſte, O Lord, to deliver me. He ſpeaks in the laſt place of the way to avoid diſtractions, and to reſtrain the thoughts from wandring.

The ſeven following Conferences are dedicated to Honoratus the Abbot of * Lerins, who was after ordained Biſhop of † Marſeilles in 426.

The three firſt contain the Diſcourſe of the Abbot Chæremon. In the firſt he treats of the State of Perfection, and the way to attain it: Charity is the principal. In the ſecond he ſpeaks of Chaſtity, and the means of obtaining it. The third is that famous Conference of the Protection of the Divine Aſſiſtance, wherein he treats of Grace and Free-will. Theſe are the Principles, which Caſſian lays down in it under the Name of the Abbot Chæremon. 1. He ſuppoſes that Grace is the ſource not only of our Good Actions but alſo of our Good Thoughts. He adds, that this Grace is always preſent with us, and ſometimes goes before the beginning of our good deſires, but always follows them: That the Free-will is much impaired by the Sin of the firſt Man, but is not utterly extinguiſhed: That there remain in us ſome knowledge of Goodneſs and Seeds of Virtue: That Grace is given to perfect this Knowledge, and ſtrengthen theſe Beginnings: that although Man can naturally chuſe good, yet he hath need of Grace to accompliſh it: That this Grace goes ſometimes before the deſires and firſt motions of the Will, but moſt commonly follows them: That theſe two things being uſually mixt together, it is hard for us to know whether God ſhews us Mercy, becauſe we have Good inclinations in our Hearts, or whether God's Mercy is precedent to thoſe Motions: That it is ſafeſt to ſay, That ſometimes Grace inclines the Will to Good, as it did in the Converſion of St. Paul and St. Matthew, but there are ſome Occaſions when it follows it, as it happened in the Converſion of Zacchæus, and the Good Thief: That Man may of himſelf have a deſire to be converted, and the beginning of Repentance and Faith: That he may Pray, ſeek a cure, ſend for the Phyſician, reſiſt Temptations; but he can't be cured, he can't be juſt he,

* Forum Julii.

† Scetis, Soz.

* Lerina, an Iſland, adjoyning to France.

† Maſſilia.

J. Caſſian.

J. Cassian. he can't be perfect, and he can't be a perfect Conqueror without Grace: That this Grace is a Free Gift, altho' God never denies it to those that are laborious on their Part: That we ought not to believe that no good proceeds from Man: The good we do, depends partly on Grace, and partly on Free-will. These are the Principles which Cassian delivers in his 13*th.* Conference under the Name of the Abbot Chæremon, which have given Prosper an occasion to write against him, in defence of St. Austin's Doctrine which Cassian seemed to oppose in this Conference.

The 14*th.* Conference is a Discourse of the Abbot Nestorius touching Knowledge and spiritual Sciences. The 15*th.* is another of his Discourses about the Miracles done by the Anchorets. Having discoursed upon them for some time, he makes two reflections, (viz.) one is, that Humility is to be preferred before the Power of doing Miracles: The other is, that it is more for our advantage to banish Vice from our Hearts, than Devils from the Bodies of others.

The 16*th.* is a Discourse of the Abbot Joseph about Friendship grounded upon Charity, Humility, Kindness and Christian Patience. In the 17*th.* the same Abbot desiring to persuade Germanus and Cassian not to return to their Monastery in Palæstine, although they had promised it, undertakes to demonstrate by several Examples taken out of Scripture, that it is sometimes lawful and profitable to lye. The seven last are written to four Abbots after the Ordination and yet before the Death of Honoratus, that is to say, between the Years 426. and 429.

Ἀνεξιθρ. Ἀναχωρ. The 1*st.* which is the 18*th.* speaks of the several sorts of Monks; the Abbot Piammon is made to speak it. He distinguishes the Monks into three sorts: 1. Cœnobites, who lived in common under an Abbot, imitating the Life of the Apostles. 2. Anchorets, who after they have been instructed and educated in the Monasterys, withdraw into the Desarts. The Authors of this Order, were St. Paul the Hermite, and St. Anthony. And 3. Sarabaites, who pretended to retire from the World, and joyned themselves together by two or three in a Company, to live after their own Humour, not being subject to any Man. He looks upon these last as a corruption of the Monastick State, rather than a distinct Order. He adds to these a 4*th.* sort of Monks, made of those who being not able to endure the Monastick Life in a Convent, retreated alone into certain Cells to live more at liberty. This Discourse concludes with some Instructions about Humility and Patience, and against Envy. The Abbot John, who speaks in the following Conference, having been an Anchoret, had betaken himself to a Monastery. It was therefore demanded of him, which of the two Orders was to be preferred? He thought the Life of the Cœnobites to be best for those who are not absolutely perfect; he shews that none but those who have attained to a degree of eminent Perfection, are capable of living an Hermite's Life.

The 20*th.* Conference is a Discourse of the Abbot Pinuphius about true Repentance. It consists in his Judgment in never committing those Sins of which we repent, or which our Consciences accuse us of: Also we ought to believe, that our Sins are pardoned, when we have renounced our Passions and our Desires of this World. It is good for a Man to call to mind his Sins at the beginning of Repentance, but he must afterwards forget them. There are many other ways of blotting out Sin, besides by Baptism and Martyrdom; Charity, Sorrow, Confession, Alms-giving, Prayers, &c. are means of obtaining Remission. If we are ashamed to confess our Sins to Men, it is sufficient to acknowledge them before God; which ought to be understood of ordinary Sins. When our greater Sins are remitted, and we feel no more the Motions nor Desires to commit them, we must quite forget them. But we must not do so with little Sins, into which we fall every day; and therefore must repent of them daily.

The 21*st.* Conference is the Abbot Theonas's. He describes his own Conversion, and relates, how he left his Wife against her Will to retire himself into a Monastery. But Cassian is careful to advertise us, that he doth not propound this Example as lawful to be imitated. Lastly, the Question is put, why the Monks observe no Fasting-days from Easter to Whitsuntide? For resolution of this Question, he lays it down, that Fasting is in it self a thing indifferent, and not always convenient to be used; and maintains, that it is an Apostolick Tradition not to fast in those days of Joy. This Question gives an occasion for another, why Lent, in some places, is kept six Weeks, in others seven, since neither way, if we take away Saturday and Sunday, it is not of forty days continuance? Theonas answers, that the 36 days of Lent contained in the 6 Weeks, make the tenth part of the Year which is Holy to God. That those whose Lent is seven Weeks long, have 36 Fasting-days, without counting Saturdays and Sundays, because the Fast of the Holy Saturday, which they continue without interruption to Easter-Sunday, may well pass for two: That those, who keep a six weeks Lent only, fast on Saturday. In sum, that that time is called Quadragesima, altho' we Fast but 36 days, because Moses, Elias and Jesus Christ fasted 40 Days: That the Perfect are not tyed to this Law, which was ordained for those only who spend all their Lives in Pleasure and Delights, that being forced by a Law they may at least spend that time in God's Service. But as to those who give their Life entirely to God, this Law was not intended for them, they are freed from paying these Tythes. Upon this ground, he affirms, that there was no Lent observed in the Primitive Church, and that it was established for no other reason but because of the negligence of the Faithful. Lastly, Theonas concludes, that it is Love that makes the Precepts of the Gospel lighter and easier to be born than those of the Law. About the end, Germanus asks him, why those who fast much, do find themselves often troubled with the Temptations of the Flesh? the resolution of this Question is put off to the next Conference, where he treats of Nocturnal Pollutions, which happen either through immoderate Eating, or through Negligence, or lastly, by the craft of the Devil. These last are no Sin: and if the judgment of this Abbot may be followed, they need not hinder us from approaching the Holy Sacrament, altho' we ought to receive it not without much dread, and believing our selves unworthy: That we must be truly Holy, that we may approach it; but it is not necessary to be without Sin, because then no Body may receive it, since none but Jesus Christ is free from all Sin. In the 23*d.* Conference the same Abbot explains this Text of St. Paul, The good that I would, I do not; and the evil that I would not, that I do; and some other places of like nature. He holds, that we must understand them of St. Paul and the Apostles, and not of Sinners. For the explication of them, he says, that the Good which Man cannot do, is absolute Perfection, and a total freedom from Sin. He adds, that those that aim at a State of Perfection, often fall themselves, drawn away by the motions of the Flesh and Passions, and therefore acknowledge the necessity of Grace. He owns, that Concupiscence is an effect of Adam's Sin, which hath brought Mankind into Bondage. That Jesus Christ came to deliver him from it, and that he hath done it, by restoring him again his Liberty entire, and not by clogging it. That altho' we have the knowledge of Goodness, and desire spiritual and celestial Goods, the Flesh often pulls us down to the Earth, and fills us with earthly desires, which do not indeed hurry good Men into enormous Sins, but yet make them fall into venial Sins, and so the most Holy and Just Men do truly call themselves Sinners, and desire of God every day the pardon of their Offences. That it is almost impossible to avoid all Sin even in our Prayers, either through distraction or carelessness; but yet these Sins ought not to discourage us from receiving the Communion. Germanus and Cassian having declared to the Holy Old Man Abraham, that they had a desire to return into their own Country, alledging that they might do much good there both by their Example and Exhortation. This Holy Abbot diverts them from this Design, and tells them plainly, that it was nothing but an hankering Mind, that they had to the World. He then enlarges upon the necessity of retirement, and an entire separation from the World. He speaks also of the Mortification of the Senses, and Lusts of the Flesh, which renders Jesus Christ's Yoke pleasant and easie to be born. He confesses, that we must allow our selves sometimes Recreation. Lastly, he proves, that those who have renounced the World entirely, enjoy Riches, Pleasures and Honour, infinitely more real and substantial than those that Worldings enjoy, and that so the Promise of Jesus Christ, which gives all those, who leave any thing for him, hopes of receiving an hundred fold, is accomplished in them, even in this present World.

J. Cassian.

Cassian having finish'd this Work before the Year 429. was resolved to continue silent, and write no more; but he was over-persuaded by St. Leo, who was then Archdeacon of Rome, to write a Treatise upon the Incarnation, against the Heresy of Nestorius, which then began to spread it self; in which he confutes the first Sermon of Nestorius. This Work is divided into seven Books. In the First, having compared Heresy to an Hydra, he makes a Catalogue of the principal Heresies: And, insisting upon the Pelagian Heresy, he observes, that the Error of those who hold, that it was not a God, but a Man that was born of the Virgin Mary, was taken from the Principles of the Pelagians. Leporius was the first Author of that Erroneous Doctrine, and preached it to the French, but retracted it in Africa. In the second and third Book he proves, that Jesus Christ is God and Man, and the Virgin may be called the Mother of God. In the fourth he endeavours to shew, that there is but only one Hypostasis or Person in Jesus Christ. In the fifth he comes to a close Examination of the Error of Nestorius: He confutes his Theses, and shews, that the Union of the two Natures in one Person alone, makes it lawful to attribute to the Person of Jesus Christ, whatsoever agrees to both Natures. In the last Place, he proves, that the Union of the two Natures is not a Moral Union only, nor a Dwelling of the Divinity in the Human Nature as in a Temple, as Nestorius asserts; but it is a real Union of the two Natures in one Person. In the Sixth he falls upon Nestorius with the Creed of the Church of Antioch, where he was brought up, taught and baptized. Some have needleſsly enquired, by what Council of Antioch that Creed was made. Caſſian ſpeaks of the Creed which was uſually recited in the Church of Antioch, and not of a Creed compoſed by any Council of Antioch. But we muſt not forget here what Caſſian obſerves, that the Creed (* Symbolum) is ſo called, becauſe it is a ſhort Collection of all the Doctrines contained in Holy Scripture. He urges Neſtorius extreamly with the Authority of the Creed of his Church, which contained the Faith which he had embraced when he was baptized, and which he had always profeſſed. 'If you 'were, ſaith he to him, 'an Arian, or a Sabellian, and I 'could not uſe your own Creed againſt you, I would then 'convince you by the Authority of the Teſtimonies of Holy 'Scripture, by the Words of the Law, and by the Truth 'of the Creed acknowledged by all the World. I would 'tell you, that tho' you had neither Senſe nor Judgment, 'you ought to yield to the Conſent of all Mankind, and 'that it is unreaſonable to preferr the Opinions of ſome 'particular Men before the Faith of the Church. That 'Faith, ſay I, which having been taught by Jeſus Chriſt, 'and preached by the Apoſtles, ought to be received as the 'Word and Law of God. If I ſhould deal thus with you, 'what would you ſay? I was not brought up in this Faith, 'I was not ſo inſtructed, my Parents, my Maſters taught 'me otherwiſe, I have heard another thing in my Church, 'I have learned another Creed, into which I was baptized: 'I live in that Faith of which I have made Profeſſion from 'my Baptiſm. You would think that you had brought a 'very ſtrong Argument againſt the Truth upon this Occa'ſion. And I muſt freely own, 'Tis the beſt Defence that 'can be uſed in a bad Cauſe. It diſcovers at leaſt the Ori'ginal of the Error: And this Diſpoſition were excuſable 'if it were not accompanied with Obſtinacy. If you were 'of the ſame Opinions which you had imbibed in your In'fancy, we ought to make uſe of Arguments and perſua'ſions to bring you from your Error rather than ſeverity 'to puniſh what is paſſed; but, being born, as you were, 'in an Orthodox City, inſtructed in the Catholick Faith, 'and baptized with a true Baptiſm, we muſt not deal with 'you as an Arian or a Sabellian. I have no more to ſay 'but this, follow the Inſtructions you have received of your 'Parents, depart not from the Truth of the Creed which 'you have learned, remain firm in the Faith which you 'have profeſſed in your Baptiſm.

J. Caſſian.

'Tis the Faith of this Creed which hath gained you ad'mittance to Baptiſm; 'tis by that that you have been 'regenerated; 'tis by this Faith that you have received the 'Euchariſt and the Lord's Supper. Laſtly, I ſpeak it with 'Sorrow, 'tis that which hath raiſed you to the Holy Mi'niſtry,' to be a Deacon and Prieſt, and made you capable 'of the Epiſcopal Dignity. What have you done? into 'what a ſad Condition have you caſt your ſelf? By loſing 'the Faith of the Creed, you have loſt all; the Sacraments 'of your Prieſthood and Epiſcopacy are grounded upon the 'Truth of the Creed. One of theſe two things you muſt 'do; either you muſt confeſs, that he is God that is born 'of a Virgin, and ſo deteſt your Error; or if you will not 'make ſuch a Confeſſion, you muſt renounce your Prieſt'hood, there's no middle way; if you have been Ortho'dox, you are now an Apoſtate; and if you are at preſent 'Orthodox, how can you be a Deacon, Prieſt or Biſhop? 'Why were you ſo long in an Error? Why did you ſtay 'ſo long without contradicting others? Laſtly, he exhorts 'Neſtorius to reflect upon himſelf, to acknowledge his Er'ror, to make Profeſſion of the Faith into which he was 'baptized, and have recourſe to the Sacraments, That they 'may regenerate him by Repentance (they are Caſſian's very 'Words) as they have heretofore begat him by Baptiſm.' With this Diſcourſe he mingles Arguments againſt the Error of Neſtorius, whom he undertakes to confute in the laſt Book, by anſwering the Objections which he propoſed, and by alledging the Teſtimonies of the Greek and Latin Church againſt him. He concludes with a Lamentation of the miſerable Condition of Conſtantinople, exhorting the Faithful of that Church to continue ſtedfaſt in the Orthodox Faith, which had been ſo learnedly and eloquently explained to them by St. Chryſoſtome. He ſeems to be much troubled for the Miſery of that Church. 'Altho' I am very little 'known, ſaith he, am of no worth, and dare not rank my 'ſelf with the great Biſhop of Conſtantinople, nor aſſume the 'Title of a Maſter, I have the Zeal and Affection of a 'Scholar, having been Ordained and Preſented to God by 'St. John of bleſſed Memory. And altho' I am far diſtant 'from the Body of that Church, yet I am united in Heart 'and Spirit, which makes me to ſympathize in her Grief 'and Sufferings, and pour out my ſelf in Complaints and 'Lamentations.' This and the foregoing Place teach us, that this Treatiſe of Caſſian's was compoſed before the Depoſition of Neſtorius, or at leſt before it was known in the Weſt. They alſo give us ground to conjecture, that the Reaſon why St. Leo impoſed this Task upon him, to write againſt Neſtorius, was this, that being known at Conſtantinople to be St. Chryſoſtome's Scholar, his Work might have more Weight, and be more effectual than if any other had written on the ſame Subject.

* ἁ συμβάλλειν, to joyn together, &c.

J. Caſſian.

The Inſtitutions of Caſſian, ſaith the learned Photius, are very uſeful, eſpecially for thoſe who have embraced a Monaſtick Life. It may likewiſe be ſaid, that they have ſomething ſo Powerful and Divine, that the Monaſteries which obſerve that Rule are flouriſhing, and make themſelves eminent for their ſingular Virtues; but they that do not obſerve it have much-a-do to uphold themſelves, and are always near a Diſſolution: And indeed of all the Rules for Monks there are none in my Judgment that are more Uſeful, Spiritual, and tend more to Perfection and true Devotion. He meddles not with Actions and Obſervances of little conſequence. He inſiſts upon Subſtantials, and the Ends of a Monaſtick Life, by explaining the principal Virtues, which they ought to practiſe, and diſcovering the moſt dangerous Temptations in which they are likely to be engaged, and by giving them Rules to avoid and reſiſt them. He never delivers his own private Thoughts and Imaginations about it, but he makes Obſervations, and delivers Rules and Maxims taken out of Holy Scripture, and backed with an infinite Number of Holy Teſtimonies. This is it that makes them generally eſteemed by all thoſe who have written of a Religious and Spiritual Life. His Conferences themſelves, although they be in my Opinion much inferior to his Inſtitutions, have been commonly read by the Monks. St. Benedict, Caſſiodorus, S. Joannes Climacus, Rabanus, St. Gregory, Petrus Damianus, St. Dominick, St. Thomas, and ſome other Founders of Orders, have recommended the Reading of them. Nevertheleſs, this very Work, ſo much praiſed, commended and eſteemed by theſe Holy Men, hath been ſtrongly oppoſed by St. Proſper, in a Book made on purpoſe, as containing Opinions contrary to the Doctrine of St. Auſtin concerning Grace, and the Strength of Free-Will. It is eaſy to judge, becauſe we have ſaid, that 'tis the Thirteenth Conference which he principally diſputes againſt. It is true, Caſſian doth not deliver theſe Principles in his own Name. The Abbot Chæremon pronounces them, but it is loſt Labour to make uſe of that Excuſe to defend Caſſian; for as Proſper obſerves, 'Tis Caſſian that makes him ſpeak, and who relates this Diſcourſe, and ſufficiently evidences that he approves and fully follows the Opinion of that Abbot. Beſides, it is certain that Caſſian was one of the Clergy of Marſeills, who diſcovered, that St. Auſtin in defending the Church's Cauſe againſt the Pelagians, had puſhed things too far. This was the Reaſon that induced Pope Gelaſius to reckon the Works of Caſſian among the Apocryphal Books. Some affirm, that he changed his Opinion, otherwiſe St. Leo would not have invited him to write againſt Neſtorius: But this is a Conjecture for which they bring no Reaſon, and which doth not appear probable in the leaſt. Caſſian finiſhed his Conferences in 429. He wrote his Books of the Incarnation in 430. Is it credible, that he could be brought from his Error in ſo ſmall a Time? Have we any Recantation extant? Doth St. Proſper any where mention it? Is it ſpoken of in any Author? But, ſay they, is it likely that St. Leo would intreat a Man who was in an Error, and who had publiſhed an Hereſy, to write in the Defence of the Church? This Objection would have ſome probability, if the Opinion of Caſſian concerning Grace had been look'd upon as a Condemned Hereſy: And if Caſſian, and thoſe that were of the ſame Judgment with him, had been declared Hereticks. But St. Proſper himſelf owns, that there was no ſuch thing; but, on the other hand, that thoſe who did not fully approve of St. Auſtin's Doctrine were in the Church and of the Church, were eminent Men, preferred to the Church-Dignities, endued with much Learning, and made a great ſhew of Virtue and Piety; that they were generally eſteemed and acknowledged virtuous Men: That Caſſian was a Man of Worth and Learning. Laſtly, That theſe Perſons not being ſevered from the Church, we ought to bear with their Judgment, and not deſpair of their Amendment. This is what St. Proſper himſelf ſpeaks of Caſſian, and thoſe who were of the ſame Sentiments. After all this, may we count them for Hereticks, ſince their greateſt Adverſary owns that they were not ſo? So that nothing hinders but that St. Leo might deſire Caſſian to write againſt Neſtorius, although Caſſian were always of the ſame Opinion which he delivered and approved in his Conferences. Nothing hinders but that we may give him the Title of Bleſſed and Saint, which ſeveral Authors have freely beſtowed on him, and which ſeems to be acknowledged at Marſeills.

The Style of Caſſian's Books is ſuitable to the things that he treats of, if we believe Photius; for, beſides the Elegancy, it is very fit to inſinuate into the Mind the Maxims which he propounds, and alſo to perſuade Men to follow them: He orders the whole with ſo much Art and Prudence, that the Second Book, i. e. the Eight laſt Books of Inſtitutions contain not only Moral Inſtructions, but alſo fit Motives to allure to Virtue, and to terrify and affright, ſo as to ſtir Men up to Repentance. All that have ſpoken of Caſſian agree, that he had a very free Elocution: But there is nothing Lofty nor Great in his Style. He wrote in Latin, as it appears both by the Style and his Prefaces. There is ſome probability that his Works were tran-

J. Cassian. translated into Greek, since Photius had read them, and does not say that they were written in Latin. St. Eucherius abridged them, as Gennadius observes in his Book of Ecclesiastical Writers, ch. 63. After him Victor, an African, undertook to take out what was contrary to the Doctrine of St. Austin, and add to it what he thought wanting in it. Cassiodorus is Witness of this Fact, and says, that he expected this Book; which perhaps, was the cause that Ado attributed this Correction of Cassian to him. We find the Extracts of Cassian in the Fourth Book of the Lives of the Fathers, published by Rosweid but it is not known who was the Collector of them.

The Twelve Books of Institutions were printed at Lyons in 1516. And with the Paraphrases of Dionysius Carthusianus, at Basil in 1559. And at Colen in 1540. His Conferences also were published at Basil in 1559. And his Seven Books of the Incarnation reprinted in 1571. Ciaconius procured them to be printed all together, the First Edition is at Rome in 1590. [1580. It was also printed at Rome in 1611. in Octavo.] The Second at Lyons in 1606. Gucquius, a Divine of Lovain put out a New Edition of them at Antwerp in 1578. Since Alardus Gazæus, a Benedictine Monk of the Abby of St. Vaast at Arra, caused them to be printed with long Commentaries [of his own and others.] The First Impression was made at Doway in 1616. [Two Volumes in Octavo,] the Second at Arras in 1628. [Folio,] the Third at Paris in 1642. by Conterenus.

J. Cassian.

St. NILUS.

St. Nilus. ST. Nilus, a Governor of Constantinople, and Scholar of St. Chrysostome, having withdrawn himself from the World, from living with his Wife, with his Son Theodulus, betook himself to a Solitary Life, in the Desart of Sinai. He suffered there an inhumane Persecution by the Incursions of the Barbarians; who put to Death many of those Monks, and carried his Son Theodulus captive. He flourished under the Emperors Arcadius and Theodosius, and lived to the Empire of Marcian; in the beginning of which he died, about the Year 451. (a).

The Works of this Holy Religious Man, known and esteemed by the Ancients, have been printed several Times as well by themselves as in the Bibliotheca Patrum, and not long since were published in Greek and Latin, by the Care of Suarez, at Rome [1673.]

The First is a Treatise of the Monastick Life, which had been translated already by Zinus, and was printed at Venice, with some other Works of the same Author, anno 1657. and since put into the Bibliotheca Patrum. St. Nilus, in this Tract, reproves the Vices and Disorders of the Monks of his Time which he describes in a very smart manner. He condemns those who were ambitious to be Superiors and Governors of others, not having acquired by long Exercise such Virtues as were necessary to discharge that Office well. He also gives them many very useful Precepts and Instructions, which he delivers by Allegories. He exhorts the Religious to renounce their Estates wholly, and all worldly Pleasures, and to practise the Virtues that are becoming Monks, recommending in an especial manner Retirement and Solitude. This Treatise is written with much Fervor and Acuteness, and is full of very Judicious Observations. What he says in the beginning concerning the Rise, Perfection and Decay of the Monastick State, is well worth our Consideration. Having shewed, that neither the Heathens nor the Jews had any true Philosophers nor perfect Sages; That Jesus Christ is the First who manifested to Men the true way of Virtue and Wisdom, and that the Apostles and First Christians imitated their Master in all things, and following his Steps, have given us Examples of a most Wise and Regular Life and Conversation. He adds, that the Zeal of Christians, who should follow that Example, being cooled, some Persons have taken up a Resolution to abandon the perplexing Business of the World, and the Tumults of the Cities, to retire themselves in Solitude; that these Persons have exactly imitated the Apostles, in curbing their Passions and renouncing the Riches and Pleasures of the World, in contenting themselves with meer Necessaries, in living in great Union, and having all things in Common; but that at length this Profession, so Holy in the Original, had degenerated by degrees, and was now become clear another thing. That the present Professors of it disgraced their State, and the Memory of their Predecessors by their Disorders and Irregularities.

The Second Treatise dedicated to the Monk Agathius, is intituled Peristeria, from the name of a noble Lady, whom Agathius had propounded to St. Nilus, as an eminent Example of Virtue and Piety, in an Age which he affirmed to be as Corrupt as his. This Treatise contains in it several moral Considerations about Temperance, Humility, Prayer, Contempt of the World, and the Obligation of doing Alms. He describes the miserable condition of the Worldly-minded Man, when he comes to the Point of Death. He advises them that are Rich, to distribute to the Poor their Estates, rather than bequeath or leave them to their Heirs. He bewails the Misery of those, who being at the Point of Death, think of nothing but Worldly Business. He derides the Folly of those Persons, who give the Poor Legacies after their Death, but enjoy their Estates as long as they live, without bestowing any thing on them. He inveighs against the Luxury, Covetousness and Injustice of the Rich Men of his Time. The rest of his Discourse is about the Life of Good Men, and the Temptations, Persecutions and Misfortunes, which they must endure. And he gives us several Famous Examples of this taken from the Old and New Testament.

St. Nilus.

The Third Treatise of St. Nilus, is a Discourse of Voluntary Poverty, dedicated to a certain Deaconess of the Church of Ancyra, called Magna. It treats at large on the Happiness of those who have forsaken their worldly Possessions for the Service of God. He commends that Estate, and recites many Passages of Holy Scripture in praise of it, but many of them do not prove what he designs. He also recommends Obedience, Concord and Humility.

The following Discourse is a Sermon of Morality; whose Subject is no special Matter and in which there is nothing remarkable.

The Manual of Epictetus, which follows in the Roman Edition, is nothing like the Works of St. Nilus. He that published this Edition affirms, that this Manual was extracted out of Epictetus's Works by St. Nilus; but he brings no Proof of it: And Simplicius assures us, that it was an Arian that made this Manual. We have already observed, that the Book call'd Pacho, and another Dogmatical Discourse, belong to Evagrius Ponticus.

The Treatise which begins at Page 377. is upon this Question, viz. Whether the Life of the Anchorites or Hermites, which St. Nilus also calls Hesycasts, or Quietists, who dwell in Solitude, is to be preferred before the Life of those Religious who dwell in Cities. This is a very Curious Question, about which the Judgment of the Spiritual Men is much divided. St. Nilus takes the affirmative for the Hermites, but many others as he confesses, were of a contrary Opinion. There are Reasons of both sides: They who preferr the Religious who live in Communities in Cities before the Anchorites, say; That they have more Worth, because they meet with more Opposition, whereas they that live in Solitude, being at Quiet, and not subject to Temptation, have not so much Virtue. St. Nilus answers to this Reason, which seemed very plausible; That there are as many Temptations in Solitude as in Cities, and that the Reason why some Persons argue so, is, because they mind outward Sins only, not considering that there are infinite Temptations and Spiritual Sins, which encounter us as well in Privacy as Cities. The Reason which St. Nilus brings for his Opinion is, that those who are in Cities are exposed to Danger, and can with more difficulty preserve their Virtue, being continually assaulted with irregular Passions and Motions. He supports this Opinion with Comparisons and Examples.

The * First Treatise to Eulogius is a Discourse of an uncertain Argument, which contains useful Counsel and Advice for Monks. The † Second is an Opposition of Vices to Virtues.

*Tractatus Ascaticus.
†De vitiis, quæ sunt virtutibus opposita.

The Treatise of the Eight Vices is of the same Nature. There are two that bear that Title, both attributed to St.

(a) HE died about the Year 451.] It is certain, that he lived under Arcadius; and that he was likewise a Recluse from that Time, since he wrote two Letters to that Emperor, about the Banishment of St Chrysostome, which happened in 405. which are Letter 279. lib. 3. and 265. lib. 2. He must needs be pretty ancient, since he had been Governor of Constantinople. He was about Fifty Years Old when the Monastery of Sinai was afflicted by the Incursions of the Barbarians, as he himself says, Now this must needs happen about the Year 410, or 411. He could not then live to the Empire of Mauricius, which did not begin till the Year 583. Wherefore we must correct the Menologies, where it is said, That he lived under, or, to the Empire of Maurice, and put the Name of Marcian instead of that of Maurice. Allatius affirms, That he lived in the Sixth Age, because in Ist. 70. lib. 1. directed to Tribunus Zexarius, he proves, That the Kingdom of the Jews is destroyed for ever, because there have passed Five hundred Years since the Death of Jesus Christ, and yet it hath not been re-established, nor have the Jews had any Help. But St. Nilus doth not precisely say, that the Five hundredth Year was passed, but that it drew near; ἐπὶ λοιπὸν πεντακοσιοστὸν ἔτος. That is to say, Lo! it draws apace to Five hundred Years. Four hundred Years are quite pass'd, and we are going on in the Fifth Age. We have placed this Author after Isidore and Cassian, because he hath written upon the same Matters.

St. Nilus.

Nilus: The firſt is that which is meant here, which was tranſlated by Zinus, and hath been publiſhed by F. Combefis and M. Bigotius; who hath joyned to it a very ancient Verſion which he found at Florence. The other Treatiſe, which is Tranſlated into Latin by Billius, among the Works of St. John Damaſcene, hath been publiſhed by Cotelerius in Greek, in his laſt Volume of the Monuments of the Greek Church. I believe that the firſt is the Original of St. Nilus, and that this laſt was made by ſome other, who hath taken his Senſe and Expreſſions from this Saint and ſeveral others.

To theſe Treatiſes may be joyned the Diſcourſe of Evil Thoughts, or of the Temptations of the Devil; where he preſcribes the means of Conquering them. Photius makes mention of a Treatiſe of St. Nilus concerning Prayer, divided into One hundred fifty and three Chapters or Sentences: They are very uſeful Directions or Maxims to learn to pray well. They were put out in Latin by Turrian. The greateſt part of the Sentences, from page 543, to 575. are rather Evagrius's than St. Nilus's, or perhaps both of them; for theſe ancient Monks had ſuch particular Sentences and Thoughts, which they would often repeat, which were common to them with many others. Moreover, the greateſt part of theſe Collections of Sentences, for the uſe of the Monks, were made by mean and obſcure Monks, who writing down the Sentences which they had learned from their Maſters, or taken from their Works, did put, in one Collection, the Sentences and Maxims of ſeveral Perſons, inſomuch that we cannot tell exactly to what Author the greateſt part of theſe Sentences belong. There are alſo in the Bibliotheca Patrum Two hundred twenty nine Sentences in Greek and Latin attributed to St. Nilus, which are of the ſame Nature with thoſe before-mentioned, publiſhed by Turrian, and printed at Florence in 1578. in Greek, and at Antwerp in 1590. in Latin, and in ſeveral other Places, as at Colen, Baſil, Hamburgh in 1614. at Naples in 1604. with the Commentaries of Paul Minerva, a Dominican, who attributes theſe Sentences to another Nilus, a Biſhop and Martyr, but he gives us no proof of it. This Volume of St. Nilus's Treatiſes concludes with a Sermon of this Author's upon theſe Words of the Goſpel, But now he that hath a Scrip let him take it, &c. To which may be added ſome large Fragments of two Sermons upon the Feaſt of Eaſter, and three other Sermons upon Pentecoſt, recited by Photius in the Two hundred and ſeventy ſixth Volume of his Bibliotheca.

These are all the Works of St. Nilus contained in the Edition printed at Rome in 1683 [1673.] to which we muſt add the Seven Narrations of the Perſecutions of the Monks of Sinai, publiſhed by F. Pouſſinus, and printed at Paris in 1639 (Quarto,) with a Diſcourſe of the ſame Author, in the praiſe of one named Albinianus. There is a Commentary upon the Canticles, which is ſaid to be taken out of St. Nilus, Gregory Nyſſen, and Maximus, but theſe ſort of Works are of no great Authority. St. Nilus hath written a Book Of Contrition, of which he ſpeaks in the eleventh Epiſtle of the third Book of his Letters: And he obſerves, in the beginning of his Book Of Repentance, that he had ſpent ſome Labour upon the Pſalms. Sixtus Senenſis ſaith, That he made a Commentary upon Job, but I can find no Body elſe that makes mention of it. There are alſo ſome other Treatiſes about the Monaſtick Life, in the Libraries, bearing St. Nilus's Name, which are not yet publiſhed, as the Manual of Repentance, The Monk's Dial, &c. The Seventh Council, Act. 4. cites ſome of his Letters, which the Iconaclaſts, had alledged for themſelves. Some of his Sentences alſo are to be ſeen in the Scala Paradiſi of St. John Climacus, and in other modern Greek Authors.

Albinianus a Monk of Nitria. Cave.

Only the Letters of St. Nilus remain to be ſpoken of, which are very numerous. F. Pouſſinus hath publiſhed 335, [355. Cave,] of them out of the Florentine Library, which were printed in Greek and Latin in Quarto [at Paris] in 1657. And ſince that time Allatius hath put out a far greater number from the Manuſcripts of the Vatican Library. He hath divided them into four Books, turned them into Latin, and cauſed them to be printed at Rome, in Folio, anno 1668. [with a Diſſertation of Nilus.]

The greateſt part of theſe Letters are Papers, which contain Moral Sentences, Precepts, Inſtructions, Reproofs, and Explications of the Doctrines of the Church, and of ſome Texts of Holy Scripture. They are written with much Ingenuity; the Sentences are Witty and Noble, and the Style is very fine. He ſpeaks to the Perſons of Quality, and Dignitaries of the Church, though his Superiors, with a great deal of Freedom. He inſtructs his Inferiors with much Love: He reproves Sinners with a Conſtancy that hath nothing ſharp and cruel: He ſays nothing diſagreeable to the Condition of the Perſon to whom he writes, or to the things he treats of. He is ſerious when he ought to be ſo: He derides handſomely when the Subject requires it: He uſes pleaſant or ſmart Terms, according as the Perſons are with whom he has to do. In a Word; He never recedes from the Character which he ought to have, but all-along a free Air and a wonderful Readineſs of Speech is diſcernable in him. There a great many of his Letters which manifeſt his Learning and Knowledge. He explains the Myſteries of Religion very elegantly, He confutes the Hereticks neatly. He relates ancient Hiſtories, and gives very Spiritual Explications to ſome Places of Scripture. He makes many curious and ſolid Remarks. Laſtly, it may be ſaid, That his Letters are as a Magazine, of an infinite number of excellent and fine Thoughts upon all ſorts of Subjects. He explains the Myſteries of the Trinity againſt the Arians and Macedonians; and of the Incarnation, againſt the Appollinariſts, in ſeveral of his Letters. In ſome of them he derides the Error of the Valentinians: In others he ſcoffs at the Vanity of Paganiſm. He ſaith, in the Forty fourth Epiſtle of the firſt Book, that the Bread and the Wine of the Sacrament after the Words of the Prieſt are no longer common * Bread and Wine, but the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt. He adds, in the One hundred forty and fourth Letter, that the Chriſtians were † nouriſhed with this Body and Blood: He commands them to receive it in a ſtate of Holineſs; and to ſhew with what Reverence it ought to be approached. He tells us in the Two hundred ninety and fourth Letter of the ſame Book, that St. Chryſoſtome, celebrating the Divine Myſteries, ſaw the Angels aſſiſting the Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons at the Diſtribution of the adorable Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt. He often recommends Penance. In the Two hundred forty and third Letter of the third Book, he admoniſhes a Prieſt, not to deal too roughly with a Perſon who had confeſſed his Sin publickly; and adviſes him to give him Abſolution, not requiring any other Penance; not that he thought that he ought always ſo to deal with Offenders, for, on the contrary, he acknowledges that it is good and neceſſary for a Sinner to faſt, watch, to lie on the Ground, to cover himſelf with Sack-cloath and Aſhes; and laſtly, to perform rigorous Penance: But he requires that it be remitted, for the ſake of thoſe who are not able to endure thoſe Auſterities, and that Abſolution be given them immediately after the Confeſſion of their Crime. He obſerves upon that occaſion, that a Prieſt ought to be active, to plant the Vine of the Lord, and ſlack to pluck it up. He diſlikes the cruel Treatment of Sinners, leſt thereby they be driven to Deſpair. In the One hundred and ninetieth Letter of the ſecond Book, he reproves a Biſhop who would not receive Hereticks into the Church: And to render him inexcuſable, he relates a Story, which he ſays happened in the Apoſtles time to one Carpus a Biſhop, who having uſed too much Rigour toward the Younger ſort, who had ſinned was rebuked miraculouſly. He ſpeaks of the Uſefulneſs of the Sign of the Croſs, and commands Chriſtians to make it often, in Letter Eighty ſeven, Book One, and in Letter Three hundred and four, Book Two. In Letter Sixty four, Book Four, inſcribed to Olympiodorus, and recited in the Second Council of Nice, he blames this Lord, that he had cauſed the ſhapes of Beaſts, and other ſtrange Figures to be painted upon the Walls of the Church. He tells him, that we may only paint the Croſs in the Chancel, and round the Church place Pictures of the Hiſtory of the Old and New Teſtament, that thoſe that cannot read may learn the Hiſtory of the Bible. The Iconoclaſts had falſified this Paſſage; and whereas it is ſaid in that place, that we may paint Pictures, they put inſtead of it, We muſt white-over the Walls of the Church. The Laſt Letter contains the Relation of a Miracle done by the interceſſion of a Martyr called Plato, who had freed the Son of a certain Monk of Mount Sinai from the Captivity he was in; an Hiſtory which proves that the Interceſſion and Invocation of Saints was in uſe at that Time. I have forgotten to obſerve what St. Nilus maintains in Letters Two hundred ſixty and nine, and Two hundred and ſeventy, Book One; that Mary, the Mother of Jeſus Chriſt, was always a Virgin, before, after, and in her Delivery. He exhorts Men to labour, yet acknowledges, that all our Labour is of no uſe, without the aſſiſtance of God. That theſe are the Principal Points of Doctrine, which may be gathered out of St. Nilus's Letters. There are an infinite Number of Moral Points, which it would be too long to recite particularly. It may ſuffice to ſay, that he commends Charity, Peace, Vigilance, Mortifications, Watchings, Obedience, Humility, Alms-giving, and other Chriſtian Virtues. He gives alſo many uſeful Counſels to thoſe who profeſs a Religious Life, and who may be very ſerviceable to Superiors; as alſo to thoſe who are charged with the Government of others: read upon this Subject, Letter Three hundred and three, Book Three, and Letter One, Book Four. In ſeveral Places he Extolls the State and Condition of the Monks, and obſerves very well, in Letter One, that Princes and great Perſonages are obliged to deſire the Help of their Prayers to obtain the Graces they ſtand in need of. Among all the Excellencies that we have taken notice of in St. Nilus's Letters, there are ſome falſe Notions, forced Allegories, impertinent Compariſons, and Apocryphal Stories. This, for example, is laughed at by St. Jerome, and that with good reaſon. He ſays, in Letter Two, Book One, That Palæſtine was the Place of Adam's Habitation; that he dyed in Mount Calvary; and that from thence it had that Name; for Men wondering to ſee a bare Skull

St. Nilus.

*Not common but holy Bread † becauſe ſtill Bread and Wine.

St. Nilus. Skull in that Place, called the Place Calvary. St. Jerome says fitly; That that Exposition is plausible, and pleases credulous People, but is by no means true. Favorabilis interpretatio, & mulcens aurem populi, non tamen vera: Yet Origen, St. Ambrose and St. Epiphanius, in Hær. 46. agree to it. But St. Jerome's Opinion, who assures us, that 'twas the Place of Execution of Malefactors, is much more probable. St. Nilus.

The Author of the Confessions of Faith, attributed to RUFINUS.

The Author of the Confessions of Faith, &c. F. Sirmondus published, in 1650. a long Confession of Faith, which bears the Name of Ruffinus, and which Joannes Diaconus hath attributed to him, that was a Priest of Aquileia. But this learned Jesuit, at the same Time assures us, that it cannot be his, because it expressly contradicts the Doctrine of Origen, which Rufinus never condemned. In the Manuscripts of the Abby of Corby, Pelagius is said to be the Author of that Writing which he published under Rufinus's Name.

F. Garner hath also put out since another Confession of Faith, much shorter than the former, made up of twelve Anathemas, which is found at the beginning of the Collection of Pieces composed by Marius Mercator. This also condemns the Opinions of Origen, and particularly that of the Pre-existence of Souls, which the Priests of Aquileia never would condemn: So that this cannot be Rufinus of Aquileia's, no more than the former. Nevertheless it appears to be him to whom it is commonly attributed, and not another Rufinus, as F. Garner affirms. 1. Because the Author, who hath preserved it, hath put it at the end of Anastasius's Letter to Rufinus of Aquileia. 2. Because the same Author tells us, that it is this Rufinus which is spoken of in Anastasius's Letter by this Title, Incipit fides ejusdem Rufini: Here begins the Sum of Rufinus's Faith. 3. Because it is said of the Author of that Confession of Faith, that he held and defended heretofore the Doctrines which he now condemns. This agrees to Rufinus, who had defended the Opinions of Origen. 4. Because the Opinions of Origen condemned in that Confession of Faith, are the very same that Rufinus is accused to have held, and about which he defends himself in his Apology to Pope Anastasius, and in his Invectives against St. Jerome. It is true, he doth not condemn them in those Places, as it is noted in that Profession of Faith; nor will I ascertain you that it is infallibly Rufinus's of Aquileia, but I say it belongs to him to whom it is attributed; for I am apt to believe, that it is a Form of Confession of Faith which Pope Anastasius made for Rufinus of Aquileia to sign.

As to the First Confession of Faith, 'tis certainly the Work of some Pelagian, for he directly opposes Original Sin: He maintains, That Infants are born without Sin: That they are not baptized for the Remission of Sin, since they are innocent, and that those that die without Baptism are not condemned to Eternal Torments. He owns, that the First Man had not died if he had not sinned; but he affirms, that he was created Mortal, and that Death, Griefs and Pains, which are the effects of Sin, are profitable for Man; which come very near the Opinions of Julian, whom F. Garner makes the Author of the Translation of this Writing, for it is noted at the end, that it was translated out of Greek into Latin. This proves to us, that the Author of this Confession was a Greek, or at least, that it was made in the East. We can say nothing more of the Author of this Confession.

F. Garner affirms, that it is certainly one Rufinus's, altho' it be not the Priest's of Aquileia, but another Rufinus, whom he believes to be he that was Pelagius's Master, of whom Cœlestius speaks in the Council of Carthage; That he had heard of Rufinus the Holy Priest, who maintain'd at Rome with Pammachius, That the Sin of the first Man did not descend to his Posterity. It hath ever been thought that this Rufinus was the Priest of Aquileia, and indeed St. Jerome says in several Places, That Rufinus was the Fore-runner of Pelagius and his Adherents. But F. Garner maintains, that it is another Rufinus of whom Cœlestius speaks; and he says likewise, that it is he that St. Jerome sent to Rome in the Time when he had the Contests with Rufinus of Aquileia, of whom his last complains in this Apology to Pope Anastasius. The Author of the Confessions of Faith, &c.

There is no doubt but that this Rufinus condemned the Opinions of Origen, and that he contended with the Priest of Aquileia, because he defended them: But we do not see that he maintained the Doctrine of Pelagius touching Original Sin. Let us consider the Reasons which F. Garner brings, to shew that the Master of Pelagius and Cœlestius is a different Person from the famous Rufinus of Aquileia. 1. The Master of Pelagius was a Syrian, but the Priest of Aquileia was an Italian, according to the Testimony of M. Mercator. 2. This same Author speaks of the Master of Pelagius, as a Man little known, one Rufinus, saith he. 3. The Priest of Aquileia came to Rome under Syricius; the Master of Pelagius came not till the Popedom of Anastasius, according to the Testimony of the same Author. 4. The Master of Pelagius sojourned with Pammachius; the Priest of Aquileia was none of this great Man's Friends; but on the contrary it was Pammachius that put St. Jerome upon writing against Rufinus. 5. The Master of Pelagius taught at Rome, that there was no such thing as Original Sin; the Priest of Aquileia was gone when this Doctrine was preached. 6. When St. Jerome accuses the Priest of Aquileia of being the Fore-runner of Pelagius, he speaks of no other Doctrines but those of Apathy and Sinlessness. 7. Paulinus, who disputed against Cœlestius, in the Council of Carthage, doth not retort upon him, that that Rufinus, whom he cited, had been condemned, which he undoubtedly would have done, if he had heard him speak of the Priest of Aquileia. 8. Cœlestius speaks of one Rufinus, as then alive; the Priest of Aquileia was then dead. 9. Lastly, Rufinus, cited by Cœlestius, was in the Communion of the Church; the Priest of Aquileia was excommunicated from it. These Reasons are not incapable of Reply, and it may be said that many of them are too subtle.

That which amazeth me most is that which Cœlestius says, that Rufinus, who denied Original Sin, abode with Pammachius; for what likelihood is there that he should lodge with one of his greatest Adversaries, and one of the best Friends of St. Jerome? the rest are weaker; for Rufinus having dwelt in Palæstine for near thirty Years, and coming from that Country, when he taught his Doctrine to Pelagius, Marius Mercator might say, that he was a Syrian, and that he first brought that Doctrine to Rome; and so much the rather, because this Author had a Design to demonstrate that this Doctrine came from the East. It is true that Rufinus came to Rome at the end of the Popedom of Syricius in 397. but he staid there some time in the Popedom of Anastasius. Cœlestius doth not say, that he, of whom he speaks, was then alive. If Paulinus did not object his Condemnation, if he passed for a Man, who died in the Communion of the Church, it was because he was not looked upon in Africa as an Heretick, or an excommunicate Person. There is then nothing of Difficulty in any of the Objections, but concerning the abode with Pammachius, but perhaps Cœlestius was mistaken, or Rufinus was after reconciled to Pammachius. Nevertheless, it cannot be denied but that the Opinion of F. Garner hath much probability in it. For this cause I have set down his Reasons, that it may be left to the Reader to judge.

POSSIDIUS.

Possidius. THis Deacon of Africa, and Scholar of St. Augustine, hath written the Life of his Master in a plain Style, and hath joyned to it a Catalogue of his Works. We have nothing more to note about this Work, besides what we have written of it in the Life and Works of St. Augustine. Possidius.

URANIUS.

Uranius. URanius the Priest, a Scholar of St. Paulinus, hath also written the Life of his Master, in a Letter, directed to Pacatus. This Letter hath been published by Surius, by F. Chifflerius; and Lastly, in the last Edition of St. Paulinus. The Style of it is plain, clear and elegant: This is all the Goodness it has in it. Uranius.

St. COELESTINE.

S.Cœleſtine

ST. Cœleſtine was choſen Biſhop of Rome after the Death of Boniface, in the beginning of * November, in 423. This Election was made without contending and diviſion; and he governed the Church of Rome peaceably, till April Anno 432. The Buſineſs of Neſtorius, and the aſſembling the Council of Epheſus have made his Popedom famous, and given him occaſion to write ſeveral Letters, of which we ſhall deferr to ſpeak, till we come to the Hiſtory of the Council of Epheſus, where they have a more fit Place; ſo that we have nothing more to ſpeak of here, ſave three Letters, which have no relation to the Buſineſs of Neſtorius.

* September 16.

The firſt was written in 431. after the Death of St. Auſtin, and is addreſſed, To Venerius Biſhop of Milan, Leontius Biſhop of Frejus, and ſome other of their neighbouring French Biſhops, who tolerated and alſo favoured thoſe who oppoſed ſome of the Opinions of St. Auguſtine, concerning Predeſtination and Grace: St. Proſper and Hilarius, Scholars of St. Auſtin, and cloſe Adherents to his Doctrine, finding themſelves the weaker Side among the French, went to Rome, to complain to Pope Cœleſtine; 'That the Prieſts 'of their Country were ſuffered to raiſe Diſputes and Diviſions in the French Church, and to Maintain, that St. 'Auſtin and his Scholars had promoted Opinions contrary 'to the Truth.' Cœleſtine blames the Biſhops, 'Who ought, 'ſaith he, to hinder theſe Diſputes, and not allow theſe 'Perſons to take upon them to teach: That the Silence 'which the Biſhops kept, upon this occaſion, might paſs 'for a kind of Approbation: That it was enough to declare 'their own Opinions, not to ſuffer others to ſpeak; ſo 'that upon ſuch like occaſions Silence is a ſtrong Preſumption, becauſe the Truth could not but oppoſe it ſelf to 'Error, if Error it ſelf did not pleaſe. Laſtly, that the Biſhops themſelves were guilty of the Error which they favoured by their Connivance and remaining in Silence.' He admoniſhes the Biſhops, in the next Place, 'To reprove 'thoſe who vented their new Doctrines, contrary to the 'Opinions of St. Auſtin. Let them not be permitted, 'ſaith he, to ſpeak for the future according to their own 'Fancy: Let not Novelty be ſo bold as to oppoſe Antiquity: Let thoſe unquiet Spirits not trouble the Peace of 'the Church: 'Tis your Buſineſs to keep your Churches 'quiet. Let thoſe Prieſts know, that they ought to be ſubject to you: Let thoſe that do not teach the Truth, know, 'that they ought to learn, and not pretend to teach. What 'Power have you in your Churches, if they are Maſters to 'teach what they pleaſe? But it is no Wonder, adds St. 'Cœleſtine, if they are not afraid to attempt ſuch things a'gainſt the Living, ſince they dare aſſault the Memory of 'our Brethren after their Death. We have always had St. 'Auſtin, of bleſſed Memory, in our Communion, whoſe 'Life and Merit is very well known; his Fame hath not 'received the leaſt Blemiſh, and his Knowledge is ſo well 'known, that my Predeceſſors have looked upon him as 'one of the moſt excellent Doctors of the Church. All 'Orthodox Chriſtians have ever thought well of him; he 'hath been generally honoured and reverenced through the 'whole World. Reſiſt therefore the Enemies of his Memory, whoſe Number increaſeth every Day. Suffer not 'thoſe Religious Perſons who defend him to be afflicted 'and perſecuted: He that is attacked by ſuch a Novelty, 'ſuffers in the Cauſe of the Univerſal Church. Shew, that 'thoſe that diſpleaſe us diſpleaſe you; which you will ap'pear to us to do, if having impoſed Silence upon ſuch Of'fenders, you cauſe that there be no future Complaints 'upon this Account.

To this Letter of St. Cœleſtine is uſually joyned a Collection of the Deciſions of the Popes, Cœleſtine's Predeceſſors, and of the Councils of Africa, upon the principal Points touching Grace and Free-will, intituled, The Authorities or Sentences of the ancient Biſhops of the Holy Apoſtolick See, concerning Grace and Free-will. It is alſo called, Rules of the Holy Apoſtolick See: But the moſt common Name which is given it, is, Articles or Aphoriſms about Grace. This Writing is cited under the Name of St. Cœleſtine, in the beginning of the Sixth Age; for Dionyſius Exiguus, hath put it into his Collection, among the Decrees of this Pope: And Petrus Diaconus, writing to St. Fulgentius about the Year 519. cites a Paſſage of it, as taken out of the Decrees of this Pope. Creſconius Biſhop of Africk, who wrote towards the end of the ſame Age, attributes it alſo to St. Cœleſtine. And ever ſince it hath always been cited under the Name of this Pope, as by the Church of Lyons, by Hincmarus, by Lupus of Ferrara, by Remigius of Lyons, by Ivo Carnutenſis, and many others. It is very probable, that it is this Collection of Teſtimonies, of which Pope Hormiſdas ſpeaks in his Letter to Poſſeſſor, written in 520, where he ſays, that tho' it is eaſily known, what is the Doctrine of the Church of Rome touching Grace and Man's Free-will, by the Writings of St. Auſtin, yet he hath more expreſs and plain Articles in his Church-Regiſtry, which he will ſend him, to whom he writes, if he hath them not, and thinks it neceſſary. S.Cœleſtine Theſe Authorities ſeem to prove very ſtrongly, that this Collection is the Work of Pope Cœleſtine. Yet this Opinion is oppoſed by ſo many Conjectures, that almoſt all the Criticks in theſe latter times have abandoned it. 1. It is affirmed, that theſe Aphoriſms are not of the ſame Style with the Epiſtle of St. Cœleſtine. 2. This Epiſtle, concluding with theſe words, Deus vos incolumes cuſtodiat, Fratres chariſſimi, the Lord preſerve you in Safety, dear Brethren. Altho' St. Cœleſtine doth not ſay, that he added nothing more, yet it is not credible that theſe Articles were any part of it, or were added by way of Poſtſcript. 3. The Author of theſe Sentences doth not ſpeak as a Pope, he doth not give his Judgment or Advice with Authority: He declares, that he had no other deſign but to collect the Judgments of the Biſhops of the Holy See, or of the African Councils, which the Holy See had made hers by her Approbation. 4. Speaking of the Popes, he always calls them the Biſhops of the Holy Apoſtolick See, without giving them the Name of his Predeceſſors, which no Biſhop of Rome would have omitted. 5. St. Proſper bringing the Deciſions of the Popes concerning Grace and Free-will againſt Caſſian, cites fitly St. Cœleſtine's Letter, but ſays nothing of theſe Sentences; Is it credible that he would have forgot them, if they were this Pope's? This was a moſt decretory Piece. Photius and Vincentius Lirinenſis make mention of this Letter of St. Cœleſtine, but ſpeak nothing of the Aphoriſms of Grace. Beſides, is it credible, that Vincentius Lirinenſis would have cited St. Cœleſtine's Letter for the defence of the Semipelagian Party, if this Pope had condemned them ſo manifeſtly? 6. If we conſider the manner how theſe Aphoriſms are inſerted in the Dionyſian Code, we ſhall eaſily gueſs, that he did not attribute them to Pope Cœleſtine, as ſome think; for altho' he puts them at the end of his Letter, yet he diſtinguiſhes them by this Title: Here begin the Authorities of the Biſhops of the Holy See, concerning Grace. And the ſame Remark is added to the end, Here ends, &c. Theſe are the Conjectures which may balance the Authorities which ſeem to prove that this Collection is St. Cœleſtine's. And by theſe have the Criticks been obliged to ſearch out ſome other Author of them, than this Pope, and having found none to whom this Work agrees better than St. Proſper, many have confidently attributed it to him, altho' they have neither MSS, nor ancient Author for them. It is true, that they quote a Paſſage of Hincmarus, taken out of a Book he made againſt this Expreſſion, Trina Deitas, the three-fold Godhead, where he ſays, that St. Proſper by the Order of St. Cœleſtine did confute and overthrow the Hereſie which began to ſpread among the French, as well by the Authority of Scripture as by the Doctrine of St. Auſtin. They ſuppoſe, that it is of this Writing that Hincmarus ſpeaks, and conclude from thence, that it was St. Proſper that wrote it by the Order of St. Cœleſtine. But this Proof doth not ſeem to me to be ſolid: 1. Becauſe Hincmarus could not be a very good Author of a Fact of this nature. 2. Becauſe the ſame Hincmarus attributes the Aphoriſms to St. Cœleſtine. 3. Becauſe 'tis not certain, that the Work ſpoken of in that place is the Collection of Authorities, nor is it indeed certain that he ſpeaks of any particular Work. 4. If he ſpeaks of any particular 'tis likely to be ſome other, for what he ſays of it, that St. Proſper did overthrow the Hereſie which began to ſpread among the French, by the Authority of Holy Scripture and the Doctrine of St. Auſtin, doth not agree to our Aphoriſms, in which the Author contents himſelf to relate the Deciſions of the Popes and Councils, without diſputing with the Enemies of St. Auſtin, and where not ſo much as one Paſſage of St. Auſtin, is alledged. But ſay they, it can't be ſaid, that any other Work of St. Proſper was written by the Order of Cœleſtine. It appears by his Works themſelves that he wrote them as a private Author, and as a Perſon who defended the Doctrines he thought true, without condemning any Man. It cannot therefore be ſaid, that it was by the Order of the Pope, and as Hincmarus ſays, Ex delegatione Pontificis, by the Pope's Commiſſion, that he wrote them. There is none but the Aphoriſms that it agrees to; he ſpeaks therefore of theſe. This is the ſum of the Objection. They confirm it by a Paſſage of St. Proſper taken out of his Anſwers to the Objections of Vincentius, where he ſays, that he recites the very words of the Faith and Opinions, which he defended againſt the Pelagians by the Authority of the Holy See. Propoſitis ſigillatim ſexdecim capitulis ſub unoquoque eorum Senſus noſtri & Fidei, quam contra Pelagianos ex Apoſtolicæ Sedis Auctoritate defendimus, verba ponemus; Having propounded ſixteen Heads ſeverally, we will ſet down under every one of them the words of our Senſe and Faith, which we have defended by the Authority of the Holy See. Which referrs, ſay they, to the Aphoriſms of Grace written againſt the Pelagians. It may be anſwered to all this, that they take the words of Hincmarus too ſtrictly, and perhaps St. Proſper's too.

The

S. Cœlestine

The first never affirmed, that St. Prosper had an expres's Command from St. Cœlestine to write some particular Work about Grace. His meaning only is, that this Pope had approved what he wrote for the defence of St. Austin's Doctrine; and this is evident from St. Cœlestine's own Letter. St. Prosper boasts so of defending St. Austin's Doctrine by the Authority of the Holy See, because he was certain, that it was approved by the Holy See, and that the Semipelagians would destroy the Principles which he had established against the Pelagians. In sum, it is not necessary to understand the Passage of the Preface of the Answer to the Objections of Vincentius, of any preceding work. It referrs much more naturally to the same Work of the Answer to Vincentius, as the Passage entire will manifest. Propositis igitur sigillatim sexdecim capitulis sub unoquoque eorum Sensus nostri & Fidei, quam contra Pelagianos ex Apostolicæ sedis auctoritate defendimus, verba ponemus, ut qui paululum se ad legenda hæc dignati fuerint occupare, evidenter agnoscant impiarum profanarumq; opinionum nullum cordibus nostris inhæsisse vestigium, & blasphemias quas perspexerint nostra professione damnari, in earumdem repertoribus censeant debere puniri; Having propounded sixteen Heads severally, we set down under every one of them the words of our Sense and Faith, which we have defended by the Authority of the Holy See, that they who will condescend to busie themselves a little in reading these things, may openly acknowledge, that there are no Footsteps of those impious and prophane Opinions in our Hearts, and may judge those Blasphemies which they see condemned in our Confession, worthy to be punished in the Inventors of them. The sequel of this Discourse makes it evident, that when St. Prosper says, that he reported the true Doctrines, which he defended against the Pelagians by the Authority of the Holy See, he speaks of the same things, which he says in his Answers to Vincentius, and not of those, which he hath spoken of in another Work. He doth not send his Reader to what he hath written else-where, but he exhorts him to read the Answers which he gives to the Objections of Vincentius, to know what is the true Doctrine approved by the Holy See which St. Austin and his Scholars defend against the Pelagians. It must be confessed then, that there is no probability that he speaks in that place of the Aphorisms attributed to St. Cœlestine.

But they bring yet other Reasons to fasten them upon St. Prosper. They say, that 'tis his Style; that no Person, at that time, had a fitter opportunity to make this Collection than St. Prosper; that 'tis his Doctrine; and lastly, that there is so great an agreement between the Opinions and Expressions of the Author of these Aphorisms and St. Prosper's, that 'tis hard not to acknowledge him the Author of them. And this a Modern Critick pretends to prove, by comparing the Aphorisms with some Passages of St. Prosper's Works. F. Quesnel also finding in St. Leo's Works some Expressions like to those which are met with in these Aphorisms, scruples not to attribute them to this Father*; which shews how the Judgments of Learned Men do sometimes differ about the likeness of Style. These two Criticks, who had both of them read St. Leo, St. Prosper and the Aphorisms well, the one finds no two things more like than the Style of the Aphorisms and St. Prosper's; the other can find no resemblance between them, and thinks he perceives some Lines more like in St. Leo's Works. They both produce Words and Expressions of their Author like those of the Capitula. But to speak the Truth, it is very hard in so short and incoherent a Work, as these Aphorisms are, to find out the Author certainly by the meer consideration of the Style.

* [And therefore hath printed them at the beginning of this Edition of St. Leo's works at Paris, 1675.]

As for my self, I have much-a-do to leave the Testimony of the Ancients, who attribute the Aphorisms to Pope Cœlestine. It is certain, that they relate to his Letter, that they were framed at the same time, and evidently given to St. Prosper; and from that time there hath been a Copy of them preserved in the Registry of Rome; that an hundred years after they were quoted under the Name of this Pope, and have ever since continued under his Name to this our Age.

But perhaps it may be said, that it was not St. Cœlestine that composed them himself, but he caused them to be framed, either by St. Prosper, who was the Pope's Secretary, as some say, or St. Leo, whom the Office of Archdeacon of the Church of Rome, seems to have engaged in that Business. But these are bare Conjectures, which not being supported with the Testimony of any Author worthy of Credit, cannot be of any great weight. And, besides, if it were true, that St. Cœlestine himself did not compose these Aphorisms, but caused them to be framed by some other, yet they may lawfully be attributed to him always, since it is confessed, that they were framed by his Order; that he approved them, and sent them with his Letter; and lastly, that he caused them to be put into the Registry of the Church of Rome, as an Authentick Monument of his Doctrine.

The Reasons which they alledge to shew the contrary, prove well enough, that these Aphorisms are no part of this Pope's Letter, nor are a solemn definition of the Roman Bishop; but they do not evince, that they are not Precepts of Instruction composed by this Pope, or at least by his order, upon the account of which he wrote his Letter, and perhaps sent them with it. This is most probable in this Matter. S. Cœlestine

St. Prosper and St. Hilary seeing that the Doctrine of St. Austin was openly opposed in France, and that he was accused of going too far, went to Rome to implore the Pope St. Cœlestine to take it into his Protection. The Pope did two things: The first was to write to the Bishops, that he might oblige them to stop the Discourse of those that defamed the Doctrine of St. Austin. The Second was, to make a Collection of the Principles approved by the Authority of the Holy See, that he might draw some Consequences from them against those who did not approve St. Austin's Doctrine, altho' they condemned Cœlestius and Pelagius, and professed to hold the Decisions of the Holy See against their Error.

The first of these Articles imports, that all Men have lost their Innocency in the Person of Adam, and their natural ability of doing good, and that no Man can be delivered out of this profound Abyss of Perdition by the strength of his Free-will, if he be not raised by the Grace of the God of Mercy.

The second imports, that no Man is good of himself, if God, who is only good, doth not communicate his goodness to him.

The third is, that no Man can conquer the Temptations of the Devil and the motions of the Flesh, if he doth not receive continual assistance from God, and if he have not the Gift of Perseverance: Which ought to be understood also of those who have been renewed by the Grace of Baptism.

The fourth is, that no Man knows how to make use of his Free-will, but by the Grace of Jesus Christ. These three Articles are confirmed by the Testimony of St. Innocent.

The Fifth is, that all the Good Righteous Men do ought to be referred to the Glory of God, because no Man can please him but by the Gifts of his Grace. Pope Zosimus and the Council of Africa have also delivered this Maxim.

The Sixth is, that God acts after such a manner in the Free-will of Man, that the Holy Thoughts, Pious Intentions, and all the good Motions of his Will proceed from him. Pope Zosimus also suggests this Principle.

The seventh Aphorism contains the Decrees of the Council of Carthage, which hath determined the absolute necessity of Grace to do good.

The eighth makes use of the Prayers of the Church, to shew, that all the Good that we do from the first Motion of Conversion to our final Perseverance, is the effect of the Grace of Jesus Christ.

The ninth shews, that the Exorcisms and Sufflations which the Church useth before Baptism, to drive away evil Spirits, are a clear Proof of the necessity of Grace to deliver us from the Tyranny of the Devil.

He concludes these Principles, that God is the Author of all the good Motions, good Actions, and all the Virtues by which we tend to him from the beginniug of the Faith, insomuch that he goes before all our Deserts, and makes us will and do that which is good.

He adds, that the Divine Assistance doth not deprive us of our Free-will, but it delivers it, and dispells its former darkness; of crooked and perverse it makes it right, of distempered it renders it sound, and instead of Ignorance and Error it implants Wisdom and Prudence. 'For the Goodness of God is so great, saith he, That he is willing to 'look upon his own Gifts as our Merits, and to give an 'eternal Reward for those good Works, of which he is 'the Author. He makes us to will, and to do what pleaseth him, and he leaves not those Graces useless, which 'he hath wrought in us. Lastly, he declares, that in respect of the deep and perplexing difficulties, which may arise from the Questions who have been formed and have 'been treated on by those which have opposed the Hereticks, 'he dare not really contemn them, but that he thought it not necessary to stay there, because it is sufficient to acknowledge the Grace of Jesus Christ, to the Efficacy and Merit of which all the good which we do ought to be attributed, it is sufficient to hold whatsoever is conformable to the definitions of the Holy See, which he believes so true, that he scruples not to assure us, that whatever 'is contrary to these Rules is not Catholick and true 'Doctrine.

It may be demanded what the Author of these Aphorisms means by these deep and perplexing difficulties. Some affirm, that they are Questions which relate to the Efficacy of Grace and Gratuitous Predestination. But it seems evident to me that the Author of these Aphorisms lays down the first Doctrine in many of his Articles, and supposes the other, which makes me to think that he means some other Questions, which St. Austin hath disputed on in his Works against the Pelagians; as when he asks, Wherein consisteth Original Sin? After what manner is it propagated to the Posterity of Adam? What is the Original of the Soul? What is the Punishment of Children which die unbaptized? In what consisteth Concupiscence? And many other Difficulties of that Nature, which have been treated on by St. Auſtin. I do not affirm for all that, that the efficacy of Grace and gratuitous Predeſtination are Articles of Faith, and I believe we may truly enough own, That the Author of thoſe Aphoriſms did look upon them as implicity contained (if I may uſe that Term) in the Deciſions of the Popes and Councils of Africa. Beſides, it being certain, as it is, that the Adverſaries of the Doctrine of St. Auſtin did principally oppoſe thoſe two Points, this Author, whoſe purpoſe it was to confute them could not but maintain that Doctrine. To be convinced of this, we need only read the Objections of Vincent, and the Anſwers of St. Proſper, which will diſcover that all the Objections of the Adverſaries of St. Auſtin devolve themſelves upon theſe two Points, and that his Scholars maintain them, as having a neceſſary Relation to the Doctrine of the Holy See, againſt the Pelagians.

S. Cœleſtine

The ſecond Letter of St. Cœleſtine, ought to be ſet before this, of which we have already ſpoken, ſince it was written in the Year 428. It is directed to the Biſhops of the Provinces of Vienna and Narbonne. He tells them in the beginning of this Letter, that he could wiſh that he had cauſe to rejoyce with them for the good Order he did obſerve in their Churches, rather than be obliged, as he is, to tell them the Grief that he hath, becauſe they did things contrary to the Diſcipline of the Church; but being appointed by God to watch over his Church, he is obliged by his Charge to reſtrain all evil Practices, and order what ought to be obſerved; for his Paſtoral Care ought to have no Bounds, but is extended to all Places, where the Name of Jeſus Chriſt is known.

The firſt Practice which he reproves, is that of ſome Biſhops, who apparelled themſelves after a particular manner in wearing a Cloak and a Girdle. The thing ſeems in it ſelf to be indifferent, but Cœleſtine finds the fineſt Arguments in the World to condemn that Uſage. 'We muſt, 'ſaith he, make our ſelves remarkable for our Wiſdom, 'Prudence, and Purity, not by our Garb and Cloathing. 'We muſt teach the Faithful, and give them a good Ex'ample by our Lives, and not impoſe upon them by out'ward Shows. We ought not to ſeek how to pleaſe their 'Eyes, but to fill their Minds with Divine Precepts.' Nevertheleſs he doth not blame thoſe who cloathed themſelves ſo in the Places where ſuch a Cuſtom was ſettled, but thoſe who through a Superſtitious Affectation would change and alter the manner of Cloathing which was then in uſe.

The ſecond Diſorder concerns the Adminiſtration of Penance. There were among the French ſome ſevere Rules of the ancient Church Diſcipline, which obliged them to deny Abſolution to Sinners, who requeſted it at the Point of Death: St. Cœleſtine condemns that Rigour, and maintains that they ought not to deny Abſolution to Sinners at any time, when they demand it.

The third reſpects the Qualifications of thoſe who may be ordained Biſhops: St. Cœleſtine complains, that Lay-men were made Biſhops, not having paſſed through the inferior Orders. Which, tho' it was contrary to the Rule, and againſt all Reaſon; yet he adds, That they were not contented to ordain Lay-men, but it happened likewiſe, that they did chuſe ſuch Perſons for Biſhops as were guilty of open Crimes. He gives an Example of one named Daniel, who having been Head of a Monaſtery of Virgins in the Eaſt, was come to retire himſelf in France. All the Monaſtery where he lived, accuſed him of ſcandalous Crimes, and ſent the Informations of them to St. Cœleſtine, who diſpatched a Letter by Fortunatus the Deacon to the Biſhop of Arles, in which he ſummoned this Man to his Council, to anſwer to the Heads of Accuſation brought againſt him. but at the ſame time when the Pope cited him he was ordained Biſhop. St. Cœleſtine diſcovers how much that Buſineſs troubled him: He blames him that had ordained him, and ſcruples not to ſay, That he had loſt his Epiſcopal Dignity himſelf, by beſtowing it upon a Perſon ſo unworthy. Laſtly, he exhorts the Biſhops to whom he writes, to obſerve the Diſcipline of the Church exactly, which was not unknown to them, becauſe many among them had lived ſometime at Rome. But to put them in Mind, he preſcribes them ſome Laws, which he thought moſt neceſſary.

S. Cœleſtine

The firſt, that every Province ſhould ſuffer it ſelf to be governed by its Metropolitan, and that no Biſhop attempt any thing out of his own Province.

The ſecond, that when a Biſhop is to be choſen, the Clergy of the ſame Church, whoſe Deſerts are known, and who have already merited well, be preferred before Clergy-men, who are Strangers and unknown.

The third, that a Biſhop be not impoſed upon any Perſons againſt their Conſent, but that the Votes and Agreement of the Clergy, People and Magiſtrates be followed.

The fourth, that no Clergy-man be choſen out of another Dioceſs, when there is any in the ſame Church which may fitly be ordained.

The fifth, that none be ordained Biſhop who hath been married twice, or hath married a Widow; which he ordains as a Rule not only for the future, but he requires, that the Ordinations already made, in prejudice of this Law, be looked upon as unlawful Ordinations, which may not be allowed in Force.

As to that Daniel, whom we mentioned above he commands, that he ſhall be ſeparated from the Communion of the Biſhops, until he be freed from his Accuſation before him. And as to the Biſhop of Marſeilles, who was accuſed of being an Acceſſary in the Death of his Brother, he leaves the Judgment of him to the Biſhops, to whom he directed that Letter.

The third Letter of St. Cœleſtine, written to the Biſhops of Apulia, and Calabria, begins with a general Advertiſement to all Biſhops; which imports that it is not allowable for any Biſhop to be ignorant of, nor do any thing contrary to the Laws of the Church; for, ſaith he, in what a Caſe ſhall we be, if Liberty be allowed to private Men to change the form of the Holy Decrees, according to the Will and Fancy of the People?

Upon this Ground he forbids them to Ordain ſuch Lay-men Biſhops as the People demand. He adviſes the Biſhops, not to follow the Peoples Judgment in this, but to oppoſe themſelves Courageouſly againſt what they deſire, when 'tis contrary to the Rules. This Letter is dated, July 19th. in the Year 429.

This Pope writes in an earneſt and cloſe away. His Style is full of Sentences and intricate.

St. CYRIL Patriarch of Alexandria.

St. Cyril of Alexandria.

S. Cyril Nephew (a) of Theophilus Biſhop of Alexandria, was ordained in his Place (b), three Days after his Death, Octob. 16. anno 412. The Biſhop of Alexandria had already gotten a great Authority and Power in the City, and exerciſed it with a great deal of Majeſty: St. Cyril was ſo far from remitting any thing of this Authority, that he ſought all Opportunities to confirm and enlarge it. He was no ſooner made Biſhop, but he baniſhed the Novatians, and deprived their Biſhop Theopemptus of all he had. A little time after, the Jews having committed ſome outrages upon the Chriſtians of Alexandria, St. Cyril having put himſelf at the Head of his People, went to aſſault the Synagogue of the Jews, took them away from them, and drove them out of the City, and ſuffered their Eſtates to be plundered by the Chriſtians. This Action much diſpleaſed Oreſtes, Governor of the City, who was already much troubled to ſee that the Biſhop of Alexandria, had an Authority, which extremely leſſen'd the Governor's. This began to put all things in confuſion, and rendered them profeſſed Enemies. They had each of them their Party, and as the People of Alexandria are naturally very ſeditious, this Diviſion cauſed frequent Skirmiſhes in the City. One Day, as Oreſtes went in his, Coach, he was encompaſſed with Five hundred Monks who ſallied out of the Monaſteries, to revenge the Quarrel of their Biſhop; they purſued him, wounded him with the Blow of a Stone, and had ſlain him, if his Guards had not come to his Aſſiſtance, and the People had not ſtop'd their Fury. Oreſtes cauſed one of theſe Monks to be apprehended, named Ammonius, and examined him upon the Rack, with ſo great ſeverity, that he died in the Torments. St. Cyril honoured him as a Saint, and publickly commended his Zeal and Conſtancy. There was at that Time in Alexandria a famous Heathen Philoſopheſs, named Hypatia, whoſe Fame was ſpread ſo far, that they came from all parts to ſee her, and conſult her. Now becauſe Oreſtes went often to ſee her, it was imagined, that it was ſhe that cheriſhed him in the Averſion which he had towards the Biſhop. Some of the Seditious, headed by a certain Reader *, ſet upon her, as ſhe returned Home, dragged her through the Streets, and cut her in a Thouſand Pieces. This Story is not only related by Socrates, but is alſo atteſted by Damaſcius, who in the Life of Iſidore, the Philoſopher, deſcribes the Tragical Death of this Illuſtrious Woman, and accuſeth St. Cyril to be the Author of it. But we muſt not believe that Hiſtorian. St. Cyril was no ways concerned in

St. Cyril of Alexandria.

* Named Petrus.

(a) NEPHEW.] Socrates, l. 7. c. 5. Theodoret, l. 5. c. 35. Iſidore of Damiata, l. 1. ep. 310. Alypius, in a Letter which he wrote to him, t. 3. Conc. p. 788. ſay, that Theophilus was his Uncle. Nicephorus thinks that it was by his Father's-ſide, but Facundus, c. 2. l. 4. and Epiphanius ſcholaſticus hiſt. trip. c. 25. ſay, that St. Cyril was his conſobrinus, i. e. the Son of Theophilus's Siſter.

(b) Ordained in his Place.] After the Death of Theophilus, which happened Octob. 13. 412. There was a great Conteſt about the Election, ſome ſtood for Timotheus the Arch-deacon, others named St. Cyril: this laſt carried, although the * Captain of the Army in Ægypt was againſt him.

* Abudatius dux militum Ægypti.

her

St. Cyril of Alexandria.

her Death. They were some seditious Persons, who took the Opportunity of the Division between him and Orestes, to commit this cruel and bloody Murther.

The Contest with Nestorius was that which made St. Cyril so very eminent: This Bishop of Constantinople having delivered in his Sermons, that we ought not to give the Virgin Mary the Name of Mother of God, gave great Scandal in the Church; some of his Homilies being brought into Ægypt, and there causing great Disturbances among the Monks. St. Cyril wrote a Letter to them; in which he maintained, That the Virgin Mary ought to be called the Mother of God. Nestorius knowing that St. Cyril had written against him, declared openly, that he looked upon him as his Enemy, and would not have Communion with him. St. Cyril wrote a very courteous Letter to him, yet without approbation of his Doctrine. Nestorius also returned him a civil Answer, but without retracting his Opinions. They also wrote two other Letters to each other, wherein they disputed of the Question in Controversy, but without coming to an agreement; yet these Writings which passed pro and con between them exasperated their Spirits. The Business was brought before St. Cœlestine. St. Cyril fortified with his own Authority, proceeded against Nestorius, and composed Twelve Anathemas against his Doctrine which became a fresh Subject of Contest. The Eastern Bishops disapproved them. Lastly, the Quarrel grew so great that a General Council at Ephesus was forced to be called, to quench the Flame. St. Cyril presided in it, and was much crossed in his Designs: but this is not the place to write that History, which shall be found at the end of this Tome. We must here betake our selves to St. Cyril's Works. They have been collected together, and printed in Greek and Latin at Paris, in 1538. in Six great Volumes in Folio, by the Care of Johannes Aubertus, Prebendary of † Laudunum, President of the College of the same Name, and Regius Professor.

† Laon.

The first contains Seventeen Books, of the Adoration and the Worship of God in Spirit and Truth, Translated by Antonius Agellius, a * Theatin Priest of Naples; who caused them to be printed at Lyons and Rome, and his Book called Glaphyra, or a curious and elegant Commentary upon the Five Books of Moses, which are Translated by the Jesuit Schottus [and printed by themselves at Antwerp 1618.]

a Theatin

* [One of the Order of the Theatins, a Sect of Priests in great credit in Clem. vii's time.]

The 17 Books of God's Worship in Spirit, are composed in form of a Dialogue, The design of this Work is to shew, that all the Law of Moses, as well as the Precepts, and all the Ceremonies which it prescribes, being understood aright, relate to the adoration of God in Spirit and in Truth, which the Gospel hath discovered. To prove this Proposition, he seeks out all the Allegories in the Histories of the Old Testament. In the first Book he shews, That that which happened to Adam, Abraham and Lot, teaches Men how they fall into Sin, and after what manner they may raise themselves again. The Pleasure which allures them, is figured by the Woman, by the delights of Ægypt, and by earthly good Things: The Grace of our Saviour by the calling of Abraham, by the Protection which God vouchsafed to Lot, by the care which he takes of his People; Lastly, Repentance, flight from Sin, love of Virtue by the Actions of the ancient Patriarchs. In the second and third, he makes use of several places of the Law to shew, that the Fall of Man could not be repaired but by the coming of Jesus Christ; That he alone can deliver him from the lamentable Consequents of Sin, which are Death, the tyranny of the Devil, an inclination to Evil and Concupiscence. Lastly, That he alone can redeem and justifie Man. He finds Baptism and Redemption by Jesus Christ figured in many places of the Law and Prophets. In the fourth he uses the Exhortations, Promises and Threatnings laid down in the Law to incline Christians whom Jesus Christ hath redeemed, to follow their Callings, renounce Vice and embrace Virtue. In the fifth he affirms, that the Constancy and Courage of the Ancients in suffering Evils and opposing their Enemies, is a figure of the Strength and Vigour with which Christians ought to resist their Vices and irregular Passions. In the sixth he demonstrates, that the Law commands the Worship and Love of one God only, and that it hath condemned all Superstitions and Prophaneness contrary to that Worship. In the two following Books, he also prescribes Charity towards our Brethren and Love towards our Neighbour. In the ninth and tenth he finds infinite resemblances between the Tabernacle and the Church. The Priesthood of the Old Law, the Consecration of the High Priests, the Sacerdotal Vestments, the Ministry of the Levites, &c. furnish him with abundance of Matter for Allegories, which he treats of in the three following Books. The Prophane and Unclean Persons under the Law, who were shut out of the Tabernacle and Temple, are the figure of Sinners, which ought to be expelled out of Churches, and do teach us, that none but those that are pure may present themselves before God. Clean and Unclean Beasts are the subjects of some Allegories: These are the subject of the fourteenth and fifteenth Books. Lastly, the Oblations and Sacrifices of the Law are Types of the Spiritual Oblations which we ought to offer to God; and the solemn Festivals of the Jews denote to us the Celestial Rewards: This is the subject of the two last Books. It is easy to judge, by what we have said, how mystical a Work this is, and how full of allegorical and unusual Explications. He must needs have an inexhaustible Fund of them to furnish out seventeen Books so long as these are, which are all-a-long carried on with continual Allegories.

St. Cyril of Alexandria.

His * Glaphyra upon the Pentateuch are not less full of Mystical Notions: In them he referrs to Jesus Christ and his Church all that is said in the Pentateuch. There is not any History, Circumstance or Precept which he applies not to Jesus Christ or the New Testament. These sorts of Commentaries are of little use, for they help nothing towards the literal Explication, they teach little Morality, they prove no Doctrine, all passes into Metaphysical Considerations and abstract Comparisons, which are not proper either to convince Unbelievers, or edify the Faithful.

* [Printed alone in Latin at Paris, in 1605. and in Greek and Latin, by A. Schottus, at Antwerp in 1618.]

The long Commentary upon Isaiah, which is contained in the second Tome, is much more rational: St. Cyril therein applies himself to the literal Sense of this Prophet, and doth not digress so much from the natural Sense, to find out Jesus Christ, because the Prophecy of Isaiah agrees more naturally to him. This Commentary is divided into Six Parts. The same Judgment may be given upon the Commentary upon the Twelve Prophets; in which also he sets himself to the literal Explication, so that there is a great deal of difference between the Commentaries of this Father upon the Prophets, and his Writings upon the Pentateuch. M. Simon doth not think so, but having spoken of the Commentaries of this Father upon the Pentateuch, as a Work purely allegorical, he adds, that he passes over in silence his Commentaries upon the Prophet Isaiah, because this Father is very uniform in his Method. But whosoever will give himself the trouble to read any Place of his Commentaries upon Genesis and Exodus, and compare them with some other Place of his Commentary upon Isaiah or the Minor Prophets, he will find in them a very considerable difference.

The Commentaries upon the Gospel of St. John, which make up the fourth Tome, do explain also the Letter and Connexion of the Gospel; but he now and then intermixes with it some Theological Questions. And because those which concern the Trinity, come in naturally in the Gospel of St. John, he ordinarily treats of them in proving the Divinity, Consubstantiality and Equality of the Son of God. He also speaks of the Divinity of the Holy Spirit, and observes that it proceeds from the Son, and takes his Nature of the Son. Sometimes he proves that the Law was Figurative, and that Salvation and Grace are passed from the Jews to the Gentiles. There is also a Chapter in it about Liberty and Man. These are the principal Points he treats of. This Commentary is very long, and divided into twelve Books. We have only some Fragments of the seventh and eighth. The fifth and sixth are not extant in this, no more than then in the preceding Editions. But Jodocus Clictovæus, a Doctor of Paris, who hath translated this Commentary of St. Cyril, hath composed four Books, to supply those that are wanting; which hath given occasion to some Authors to quote them as St. Cyril's: It is true, that they are almost all taken out of the ancient Fathers, but 'twas * Clictovæus that collected them, not St. Cyril.

* [But he affixed them to St. Cyril, as that Father's, and not made by himself.

The fifth Tome of St. Cyril's Works, hath two Parts, which make two Volumes. The first contains his Thesaurus, and Dialogues upon the Trinity and Incarnation, and the second is made up of his Homilies and Letters.

His Thesaurus is a Work upon the Trinity, in which he lays down Thirty five Propositions about the Divinity and Consubstantiality of the Son and Holy Spirit; which he proves exactly after the manner of the Schools, by Texts of Scripture, upheld and supported by Arguments and Syllogisms in Form, which he uses to subdue the Arians and Eunomians, and to retort upon them those Testimonies of Holy Scripture, which they commonly alledged. He propounds their Objections in the same manner, and answers them with the like Subtilties.

Georgius Trapezuntius hath published a very imperfect Version, or rather a Latin Abridgment of this Book; in which he hath taken out, changed and added several things, and quite inverted the Order of St. Cyril. But since Vulcanius Brugensis hath made a faithful Translation, which was published at Basil in 1576. There can be no doubt that this Work is St. Cyril's, since Photius had read it, and described it to be such as we have in the 136*th*. Volume of his Bibliotheca.

St. Thomas often quotes a Passage in favour of the Court of Rome, as being taken out of the second Book of St. Cyril's Thesaurus, which is not to be found entire in that Work: But we need only to read it, and we shall be satisfied that there was never any such, nor never could be found there. This is the famous Passage, as he cites it: We must remain as Members in our Head, in the Apostolick Throne of the Roman Bishops, from whom we ought to request whatsoever is necessary to be believed and held, having a particular Respect for him, and enquiring of him about all Things, becauſe it belongs to him to reprove, correct, order, diſpoſe things, looſe in his ſtead, who hath founded him, and given him a fulneſs of Power, him alone and not any other, to whom all the Faithful are obliged by Divine Right to be ſubject, and whom the Princes of the World ſhould obey. Who of all the Greek or Latin Fathers ever ſpake thus? Who of them ever flattered the Biſhop of Rome at this rate? But how is it poſſible for it to enter into the Theſaurus of St. Cyril, which is nothing elſe but a contexture of Texts and Arguments upon the Trinity? What coherence hath our pretended Paſſage with that Subject? What doth this Phraſe mean, That we may remain as Members in our Head, which is the Apoſtolick Throne of the Roman Biſhops? Did ever any Author ſpeak any thing like it? To whom doth he ſpeak theſe Words? And of whom are they ſpoken, That we may remain Members, &c. Are they the Biſhops of Ægypt that ſpeak them? Could it find a Place in a Theological Treatiſe of one Father only?

St. Cyril of Alexandria.

St. Thomas is the Firſt that cited this Paſſage; and we know with how much careleſneſs, and with how little Judgment he quotes the Works of the Fathers. It likewiſe appears, that he had never ſeen St. Cyril's Theſaurus, becauſe he quotes the ſecond Book of that Work, which was never divided into Books. Urban IV. hath alledged it after St. Thomas, but upon the Credit of that Author. In the Council of Florence St. Cyril's Theſaurus is quoted in general, but when it was ſeaſonable to produce this Paſſage, there is nothing ſaid of it. All this makes it evident, that neither this Paſſage nor another like it cited by the ſame St. Thomas, in his Catena upon St. Matthew, as being in St. Cyril's Theſaurus, which is not found there no more than the former, are not, nor can be this Father's, nor are taken out of his Theſaurus. I wonder that F. Labbe ſhould openly profeſs himſelf a Defender of theſe two ſuppoſititious Paſſages.

The Style of St. Cyril's Dialogues is not ſo rough and ſcholaſtick as that of the foregoing Book. There are ſeven of them upon the Trinity, and two upon the Incarnation. He proves in theſe laſt, that Jeſus Chriſt is one only Perſon, made up of the Humane and Divine Nature. At the end of this Volume we find ſome clear Reſolutions upon the Myſtery of the Incarnation, where he anſwers the Objections which were propounded to him. Photius ſpeaks of this little Book, in the One hundred ſixty and ninth Volume of his Bibliotheca.

To this Treatiſe may be joyned, a Diſcourſe of the Orthodox Faith to Theodoſius; the Treatiſe addreſſed to the Empreſſes, the Sermon which is annexed to it, which are in the ſecond Part of this Tome: In them he proves, that Jeſus Chriſt is God, and that all the Properties of the Divine Nature may be attributed to him. To prove this he makes uſe of a great number of Texts of Holy Scripture, and the Teſtimonies of ſome Fathers. Theſe Treatiſes are alſo in the Acts of the Council of Epheſus.

Paſchal Homilies are not peculiar to St. Cyril. It was the Cuſtom of the Biſhops of Alexandria, whom the Council of Nice had particularly charged with the care of publiſhing Eaſter-day; I ſay, it was the Cuſtom to declare it in Alexandria by a ſolemn Diſcourſe. Theophilus, St. Cyril's Predeceſſor had made that Uſage very famous, and St. Cyril kept it up with a great deal of Splendor, ſo that ſo long as he was Biſhop, there paſſed not a Year but there was a Sermon, at the end of which he gave notice of the beginning of Lent, and of Eaſter-day. Of the Thirty which he made we have Twenty nine. The ordinary Subject of theſe Sermons was the Uſe and Advantage of Faſting, and the way how Chriſtians ought to fit themſelves for the celebration of Feſtivals. In them alſo he ſometimes exhorts the Faithful to joyn Alms-giving and Charity, with Faſting. He ſpeaks in ſome of them of Double-mindedneſs. In many of them he treats of the Trinity and Incarnation, againſt the Arians and Neſtorians. He ſometimes ſpeaks alſo againſt the Jews and Idolaters. Theſe Sermons are flat and tedious; they are nothing elſe, almoſt, but a contexture of Texts of Scripture, which he mingles with myſtical Explications.

There are alſo here ſome other Diſcourſes of this Father, which are for the moſt part againſt the Error of Neſtorius. The firſt and ſecond are entirely upon that Subject. They were preached at Epheſus. The third is a ſmall Diſcourſe, which he made after the Sermon of Paul, Biſhop of Emeſa, about the time that the Oriental and Ægyptian Biſhops were reconciled to each other. The fourth and fifth are two Sermons, preached at Epheſus againſt Neſtorius. The ſixth is againſt John Biſhop of Antioch. The ſeventh is a Diſcourſe, which he delivered alſo at Epheſus, when he was impriſoned. The eighth is upon the Transfiguration. The ninth is upon the Lord's Supper: In this he ſpeaks very ſtrongly for the Preſence of the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt in the Euchariſt, as well as in his Commentary upon St. John's Goſpel. The tenth is a Diſcourſe in praiſe of the Virgin Mary, preached at Epheſus. The eleventh upon the Feaſt of the Purification. The twelfth upon the Feaſt of Tabernacles. The laſt is upon the Day of Judgment. Theſe Sermons are written in a cloſe Style, and more ſententious than the former. They are full of Points, Alluſions and Jinglings of Words. There is alſo a ſhort one upon the Incarnation, which is extant in Latin only.

St. Cyril of Alexandria.

Almoſt all his Letters concern the Hiſtory of the Council of Epheſus, and the Diſputes which St. Cyril had with John Biſhop of Antioch, and the other Eaſtern Biſhops; for which Reaſon it is that we intend to ſpeak of them, when we come to treat of the Council of Epheſus, where they are inſerted. Nevertheleſs, there are five or ſix at the end, which relate to other Matters. The firſt is the Letter of Atticus, Biſhop of Conſtantinople to St. Cyril; wherein he exhorts him to put the Name of St. Chryſoſtome into the Diptychs, among the Biſhops that died in the Communion of the Church, as he had done by the Example of Alexander Biſhop of Antioch. St. Cyril returns him this Anſwer, that he diſapproved his Action, being contrary to the Decrees of the Council of Nice, and that John, Biſhop of Conſtantinople, having been degraded in his life-time, by the Judgment of the Church, he could not put him among the Biſhops in the Communion of the Church, after his Death: That what he had done had given great Offence in all the Provinces of Ægypt. He takes notice, that they were counted but Six, viz. Ægypt, Auguſtamnicum, Arcadia, Thebais, Libya and Pentapolis. The third of the Letters, of which we are ſpeaking, is written to Domnus Biſhop of Antioch. Athanaſius, Biſhop of a City belonging to the Patriarchate of Antioch, although far diſtant from that City, being offended by ſome of his Clergy, who would expel the Stewards out of his Church, againſt his Conſent, made his Complaint to a Synod held in Conſtantinople, where St. Cyril was: But ſince Athanaſius was not ſubject to the Juriſdiction of the Biſhops of that Synod, they would not judge of his Cauſe. But St. Cyril wrote in his behalf to Domnus, relating to him the Trouble which this Biſhop unjuſtly ſuffered, and deſiring him to conſtitute Judges, who might ſummon the Stewards accuſed, and their Accuſers, and condemn the Guilty. He tells him, that the Metropolitan was miſtruſted by the Biſhop, and that the City, of which he was Biſhop, was far from Antioch. Theſe Circumſtances are remarkable, for otherwiſe the Judgment of it did in the firſt Place appertain to the Metropolitan, or if he were excepted againſt, to the Patriarch. In this Example we ſee, 1. The Authority of Patriarchs over their Patriarchate. 2. The Antiquity of making ſuch Perſons Judges as were near to the Accuſed and Accuſers. 3. How exactly the Biſhops of one Patriarchate kept themſelves within the Bounds of their own Juriſdiction, without meddling in others. 4. That this Caution did not hinder them from helping Perſons afflicted and perſecuted, which fled to them, but yet only by Interceſſions for them, without attempting any thing contrary to the Laws of the Church.

The next Letter, written to the ſame Domnus, furniſhes us with another Proof of this Epiſcopal Charity. Another Biſhop, belonging to the Patriarchate of Antioch, named Petrus, was deprived of the Government of his Church, and likewiſe plundered of all his Goods. This Biſhop, who was very aged, complained heavily of this Condemnation, and maintained that he was unjuſtly thruſt out of all: Domnus writing to St. Cyril and Proclus, gave this Prelate the Name of a Religious and Holy Biſhop. St. Cyril takes occaſion from hence to write in his Favour, and ſhew Domnus, that if this Biſhop deſerved to be deprived of his Church, he alſo deſerved to loſe the Name of Biſhop. He then admoniſhes Domnus to pacify the Complaints of this Biſhop, and to ſuffer him to appear before him and his Suffragan-Biſhops, to be judged there according to the Cuſtom. He deſires him alſo to give him the Liberty to reject thoſe Biſhops, which may be ſuſpected by him; for, ſaith he, although we do not believe that any Biſhop is an Enemy to his Brethren; nevertheleſs, to remove all Pretences of Complaint againſt the Sentence, which ſhall be given, it is convenient, that thoſe whom he ſuſpects ſhould withdraw themſelves. As to the Money that had been taken from him, St. Cyril thinks, it ought to be reſtored to him, for two Reaſons: 1. Becauſe he ought not to be deprived after ſuch a manner. 2. Becauſe it is an Abuſe to demand an Account, as they do, of the Revenues of the Church, of the Biſhops: It is ſufficient that they cannot diſpoſe either of the precious Veſſels or Lands. The management of the Revenues ought wholly to be truſted to them. Laſtly, whereas it might be ſaid, that this Biſhop had given a Writing, in which he had renounced his Claim to his Church, and ſo was not to be received again; St. Cyril anſwers, that he did not give it voluntarily, but it was extorted from him by Force and Threatnings; and ſince it was ſo, ſuch Acts of Abjuration ought not to be regarded, nor ought Biſhops to be ſuffered to give them; for if they are worthy of their Miniſtry, they ought not to renounce it; if they are not worthy, they ought not to be deprived by a Renunciation, but by a Canonical Sentence.

The laſt Letter contains a Preſcription, directed to the Biſhops of Libya and Pentapolis, to prevent a Diſorder, which the Monks of Thebais complained of. Some Perſons, newly married, had a deſire to be ordained Clerks or Prieſts Priests, and the Bishops very easily admitted them, without obliging them to renounce their Marriage: Others who had been expelled out of the Monasteries for their Debaucheries, found means also to get themselves ordained, and then got into Monasteries again, where they would celebrate the Holy Sacraments, and perform the sacred Functions of the Ministry; which occasioned so great Scandal, that those that knew them would neither be present, nor communicate at their Ministration. St. Cyril, to put a Stop to this Scandal, ordered, that every Bishop, before he ordained a Clergyman, shall inform himself of his Life, if he be married or not, how long since, and how long he hath departed from his Wife; whether he hath not been driven out by his Bishop, or expelled some Monastery; and that he shall not ordain him, unless he find his Conversation unblameable; for, saith he, this is the only way of discharging our Duty, and preventing that the Holy and Venerable Mysteries be not profaned by the Impurities of the Ministers. He adds a Rule concerning those, who being separated from the Church, or Catechumens, fall into a mortal Disease; and orders, that according to the Custom they should be allowed the Communion and Baptism. This Tome concludes with a Letter of St. Cyril to the Bishops of Africa, when he sent them an Authentick Copy of the Canons of the Council of Nice.

St. Cyril of Alexandria.

The sixth Tome begins with the five Books against Nestorius; in which he confutes what Nestorius had written against the Name of the Mother of God, given to the Virgin, and against other such like Expressions. He recites Nestorius's Words, and in answering to them labours to convince him of Error and Imposture. Of Error, because he divides Jesus Christ into two, and denies the Union of the two Natures in one Person only: Of Imposture, in attributing to the Orthodox such Opinions as they never thought on, accusing them of Teaching, that the two Natures in Jesus Christ are mingled and confounded, and that the Divinity is made subject to Humane Infirmities. He maintains, that the two Natures remain in Jesus Christ without Mixture or Confusion, but are united in so strict an Union, that what only agrees to God may be predicated of Man, and what agrees only to Man, of God; altho' the Properties of the Humanity may not be attributed to the Godhead, nor the Attributes of the Godhead to the Manhood.

Next to this Treatise follow the Writings made by St. Cyril for the Defence of his twelve Anathemas. The first contains an Explication of the twelve Propositions; in which he rejects the bad Sense that might be put on them. The second is an Apology for the Anathema against the Objections of the Oriental Bishops. The third is an Answer to what Theodoret had written against these Anathemas. Lastly, the Apology of St. Cyril to Theodosius it put here; but we shall speak more largely elsewhere of these Treatises.

The Books against the Emperor Julian ought to have gone before these, we have spoken of, because 'tis one of St. Cyril's Principal Works: It is dedicated to Theodosius the Emperor, and divided into ten Books.

In the first he proves, by the Testimony of the Ancient Historians, and most learned Philosophers, that the Jews Religion is much more ancient and rational than the Greeks: That the History of Moses is true, and that the Greeks have taken all their best Expressions out of the Jews Books. In the next Place he undertakes to confute the Books of Julian closely, and answers all his Objections. He recites them at length, and then answers them. It seems he confuted only the first Book, in which that Apostate assaults the Christian Religion in general. He begins with a Comparison of the Jewish and Heathen Religion, and of the Books of Moses and Plato, and Extols his Philosophy above the Laws of that Prophet. Next, he opposes the Christian Religion, and propounds some trivial Objections against the History of the Gospel. Lastly, he makes use of the Jewish Religion and Books to overthrow the Christian Religion. The Objections which he brings are weak and idle, but he makes them look well by the fine and pleasant Management of them. St. Cyril discovers the weakness of them, and disperses them entirely. He also often opposes the Heathen Religion, and establishes the Christian. This Work is written with a great deal of Elegancy, but it is nothing so finely written as Julian's altho' it be very learned and solid.

The Treatise against the Anthropomorphites, is written against those silly and dull-witted Monks; who asserted, That these Words of Genesis, Let us make Man in our image, and in our likeness, ought to be understood of Man's Body, because they did not conceive that there was any Spiritual Essence, but imagined that God himself was Corporeal. St. Cyril wrote to Cœlosyrius, in the Letter which is set before the Body of this Work, to stop the Course of this impertinent Doctrine, and to forbid the Monks to argue about a Matter so far above the reach of their Understandings. He reproves other Monks also, who thought that the Eucharist had no vertue to sanctify, when it was kept from One Day to Another. He condemns also the Monks, who did not follow their Labours, pretending that they gave themselves wholly to Prayers, and so used Pretence of Piety to defend their Sloth and Idleness: He asks them, whether they are more perfect than the Apostles? And whether they would enjoy a more Happy Condition than they? He tells them, that the Church doth not receive them, who live as they do; that it is good for Solitaries to pray continually, but that ought not to hinder their Labours, that they be not chargeable to others. Lastly, He admonishes Cœlosyrius not to suffer the Meletians to receive the Sacrament among the Orthodox, if they have not abandoned their own Sect, to unite themselves with the Church, and have not given evident Signs of their Conversion.

St. Cyril commands Cœlosyrius to publish these Rules in the Monasteries of Mount Calamon, where some Monks were infected with these Errors. At the same time he sent him a Treatise, in which he answers the Objections which these Monks propounded, and solves the Difficulties which they had cunningly framed: Nevertheless he observes, that it is hard to resolve these kinds of abstruse and subtle Questions, and that all that can be done is only to bring such Conjectures as may in some measure satisfy.

The First is concerning the Breath of Life, which God breathed into Adam, after he had formed him: Is it his Soul, or a Breath different from the Soul? Is it a Part of the Divine Essence, or some created Being? St. Cyril maintains, that 'tis not the Soul of Man, nor any Creature, but it is the Holy Spirit it self which is given Man for his Sanctification. This Opinion is not very probable.

It is demanded in the second Question, How Man was created in the Image of God? St. Cyril answers, by the Holy Spirit, for by Sin he hath lost that Similitude, and hath recovered it again by Jesus Christ.

The third is, whether the Angels were made in the Image of God? St. Cyril affirms it.

In the fourth, it is enquired, whether there be any difference between the Image and the likeness of God, and he saith that there is none.

The fifth is upon an abstracted Conceit, viz. Whether Man is the Image of God, or the Image of the Image of God the Father, that is to say, of the Word. He answers, that he is the Image of the three Persons in the God-head.

In the sixth it is demanded, whether the Souls of the Blessed receive any perfection? St. Cyril answers, that it will not have a more perfect Nature, but it will act more perfectly, because it will be delivered from Concupiscence, Ignorance and Vice, and be filled with the Holy Spirit.

The seventh Question is, why all Men are subject to Death, and Sin, upon the account of Adam's Transgression and why all those who are purified and sanctified by Jesus Christ, do not communicate the Fruits of their Sanctification to their Posterity? St. Cyril answers that we are not punished as having sinned with the First Man, but because he being become Mortal by his Sin, hath transferred that Curse to all his Posterity: That Jesus Christ had redeemed and delivered us all from Death, but that no Man though he be Sanctified, can communicate that Sanctification to his Posterity, because it comes from Jesus Christ, who only sanctifies us. 'Tis by Jesus Christ that every Man receives Remission of his Sins, and 'tis by him that all Men in general are delivered from Death.

In the eighth Question it is enquired, Whether, when Ezekiel saw the Bones of the dead to be joyned together, and resume the Form of a Man; Whether it was, I say, a real Resurrection, or only a Figure of the general Resurrection? St. Cyril is for the latter.

The ninth is, whether Jesus Christ added any thing to the Flesh of Man when he was united to it? St. Cyril answers, that Jesus Christ, by his Incarnation, hath granted several Graces to the Humane Nature; that he hath restored to Man, the Image and Likeness of God, which was defaced by Sin; That he hath revived the Divine Characters of Justice and Holiness, and perfected them; that Adam had Ability and Freedom to do good, but he was defective in his Actions and the Effect, whereas those who live in Jesus Christ are Just and Holy in the Effect, and in their Actions.

In the tenth he teacheth, that by the assistance of God we may repulse and weaken the motions of Concupiscence, but cannot root them out in this Life.

In the eleventh he maintains, that the Holy Sacrament must not be celebrated but in the Churches of the Orthodox, and they that do otherwise break the Law.

The twelfth Question is very Metaphysical; It is demanded, whether God can make that which hath happened not to be? Whether he can make a common Harlot to have been always a Virgin? St. Cyril says, that we must not set Bounds to the Power of God, but neither may we attribute to him a Power of doing things Absurd and Contradictory, and that it is good not to move such sort of Questions: That, in Sum, God cannot make that which hath hapenned, not to have have happened; or a common Prostitute to have always been a Virgin, because he cannot make a Lye Truth; yet it is not a sign of his Impotency, but an effect of his Perfection.

The thirteenth is against those who dare affirm, that Jesus Christ as God, was ignorant of the Day of Judgment.

St. Cyril of Alexandria.

St. Cyril proves, that that cannot be, becauſe under this Title he hath created all things; he is the Council and Will of the Father, and knows all his Purpoſes: From hence he concludes, that when it is ſaid, that he knoweth not the Day of Judgment, it ought to be underſtood of Jeſus Chriſt, conſidered as Man, becauſe under that Title he is ſubject to all the imperfections of humane Nature, Sin only excepted.

The fourteenth, how this Sentence ought to be underſtood; The Word was made Fleſh: By the Word Fleſh, St. Cyril, ſays, the Scripture underſtands the whole Man; as when it ſaid in the Prophets, That God pours out his Spirit upon all Fleſh; and all Fleſh ſhall ſee the Salvation of God.

The fifteenth is againſt thoſe who aſſert, that every Man receives his Reward immediately after his Death, before the Reſurrection; and to prove it they make uſe of the Parable of Lazarus and Dives. St. Cyril maintains, that the Judgment ought not to be paſſed till after the Reſurrection; and that it is abſurd to ſay, that the Good or Sinners have received their Reward already: And that what is ſaid of Lazarus and Dives, is a Parable which ſignifies only, that Mercileſs Rich Men ſhall one Day be grievouſly puniſhed. This doth not at all agree with the particular Judgment and Bleſſedneſs of Souls after Death.

The ſixteenth, how the Angels, if they have no Bodies, can have any Carnal Knowledge of Women, as it is ſaid in Geneſis? St. Cyril anſwers, that they are not Angels, which are ſpoken of in Geneſis, but the Poſterity of Enos, who had Commerce with the Daughters of Cain: And for this Reaſon it is that four Interpreters, who have tranſlated this Place after the LXX. have rendred it, Sons of the Mighty, or Princes, and not Sons of God; That, in Sum, it is a great Weakneſs to think, that the Angels can have Children.

The ſeventeenth and eighteenth are againſt thoſe who affirm, that the Perſon of the Son being made Man, and deſcending to the Earth, was not united to his Father, nor did inhabit in Heaven.

In the nineteenth St. Cyril explains his Opinion about the Incarnation, and holds, that it may be ſaid, that the Fleſh of Jeſus Chriſt did miracles, becauſe the Word, and Man being united in the ſame Perſon, and in the Son only, both the Divine and Humane Operations may be attributed to him.

In the twentieth it is ſaid, That Jeſus Chriſt is aſcended into Heaven, with the Fleſh, which was united to him; but for all that, it cannot be ſaid that the Body of Jeſus Chriſt was mingled with the Trinity.

In the twenty firſt he treats alſo of this nice Queſtion, In what Senſe the Fleſh of Jeſus Chriſt may be ſaid to do Miracles? and explains it by this Example; although it be the Soul that moves the Body in all its Operations, yet we call it the Action of the Body, as well as of the Soul. The ſame may be ſaid of the Miracles which the Word doth by his Humanity.

In the twenty ſecond he ſays, that the Humane Nature in Jeſus Chriſt was ſubject to Sin certainly, becauſe he came to deliver Man from Sin.

The Twenty third Queſtion is this, why the Word was not made Man at the beginning of the World? Why ſtaid he till theſe laſt Times? St. Cyril anſwers, that he acted the Part of a good Phyſician, who does not undertake the Cure of a Diſeaſe in its beginning, but waits till the Diſeaſe plainly diſcovers it ſelf. So did the Word wait till the Sins and Wickedneſs of Man had fully manifeſted themſelves.

The twenty fourth imports, that the Head of the Infernal Dragon ſhall not be entirely broken till after the Reſurrection. This puts me in mind of the Title of a very fantaſtical Book, A Treatiſe of the broken Head of the Infernal Dragon. I believe the Author had not read this Place of St. Cyril.

The twenty fifth, is a very obſcure Compariſon, between the Flame that appeared to Moſes in the Flaming-Buſh, and the Myſtery of the Incarnation.

In the twenty ſeventh he ſaith, that Zacharias was ſlain between the Temple and the Altar, for ſuffering Mary to enter into that Place, where the Virgins only had a Right to enter.

The laſt explains, in a few Words, the Cauſes of the Joy, which the Angels ſhewed at the Birth of Jeſus Chriſt.

The following Treatiſe about the Holy Trinity, is written by an Author more modern than St. Cyril, altho' it comes very near his Doctrine, and his Method, and Principles, but it is eaſy to diſcern that he lived after the Riſe of the Hereſy of the Monothelites, for he throughly diſcuſſes this Queſtion, whether there are two Wills and two Operations in Jeſus Chriſt. He confutes thoſe that hold the contrary, and explains the Senſe of the Ancients, who taught, that there was in Jeſus Chriſt but one Incarnate Nature, and one Operation as God-man.

St. Cyril of Alexandria.

The Collection of Expoſitions upon the Old Teſtament is not wholly taken out of the Works of St. Cyril only, but alſo of St. Maximus, and ſeveral other Interpreters: So that it muſt not be looked upon as St. Cyril's Work.

Balthazar Corderius publiſhed 19 Homilies upon Jeremiah, printed at Antwerp (in Greek and Latin) in 1648. [Octavo] which bear the name of St. Cyril *. As for the Moral Fables put out by the ſame Author in 1631. under the name of St. Cyril, they belong to a Latin Author. The 16 Books upon Leviticus, which were heretofore among St. Cyril's Works, are Origen's. It is nothing to the purpoſe, that ſome have doubted, whether the Treatiſe of the Adoration in Spirit be St. Cyril's, ſince it is his Style, and Photius attributes it to him. Nor is there greater reaſon to doubt of the Letter to Cœloſyrius, nor of the other Works of which we have ſpoken.

[* But are found to be Origen's, Cave.]

He made Commentaries upon all the Prophets, but they were never yet printed: His Commentary upon St. Matthew, cited ſeveral times in the 6th. and 7th. General Councils, and that upon the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, cited by Theodoret, are loſt. If we may believe Caſſiodorus, he made Commentaries upon all the Books of Holy Scripture. Gennadius mentions two Treatiſes of St. Cyril's, which we have not, viz. A Treatiſe of the Defect of the Synagogue; And a Book of Faith againſt the Hereticks. The ſame Author aſſures us, that he compoſed divers Treatiſes upon various Subjects, and a great number of Homilies, which the Grecian Biſhops got by Heart to preach to the People. So that tho' the Works of St. Cyril, which we now have, make up at preſent 7 great Volumes, yet we ſhould have ſeveral others, if we had all that he hath written. It is very wonderful, that a Biſhop of ſo great a See as that of Alexandria, buſied with ſo many Affairs, and engaged in ſo great a Conteſt as that with the Eaſtern Biſhops was, ſhould have time to compoſe ſo many Works. But St. Cyril was wonderfully ready at Compoſing, and applyed himſelf to a way of Writing, which it is eaſy to furniſh out, for either he copyed out Texts of Scripture, or made large Diſcourſes, or expounded Allegories. It is eaſy to make great Works of this Nature in a little time, eſpecially, when we beſtow no time to poliſh our Diſcourſe nor keep it within certain bounds, and we reſign up our Hand and Pen entirely to all the Notions that come into our Heads. After this manner did St. Cyril write, and he was ſo much accuſtomed to this way of Writing, that he had, as Photius obſerves a Style altogether particular, which ſeemed contrary to others, and in which he extremely neglected the exactneſs and cadency of his Expreſſions. He had a Subtle and Metaphyſical Genius, and readily ſpoke the fineſt Logick. His Wit was very proper for ſubtle Queſtions, which he had to do with upon the Myſtery of the Incarnation. He held the See of Alexandria 32 years, and died in 444.

There were divers Collections of St. Cyril's Works in Latin, before the Edition in Greek and Latin at Paris, Anno 1638. *. The firſt was at Baſil in [1546. in 4 Tom. by Georgius Trapezuntius, and again, in] 1566. The ſecond, at Paris [by Gentian Hervet in 2 Tom.] in 1573. The third, by Sonnius at Paris in 1605, which is the largeſt. There are ſeveral of his Treatiſes printed by themſelves in Greek and Latin, as the Treatiſe of the Worſhip of God in Spirit and Truth, publiſhed by Agellius, and printed at Rome in 1588. That of the Orthodox Faith in Greek and Latin, by Beza in 1570. His Writing againſt the Anthropomorphites, put out by Vulcanius, and printed at Amſterdam in 1605. The Commentaries upon the 12 ſmall Prophets [in Greek and Latin] at Ingolſtadt in † 1607. The Treatiſe againſt Neſtorius in Greek and Latin by Agellius at Rome * in 1607. The Books againſt Julian in Greek and Latin by Borbonius at Paris, in 1630. Some ſmall Tracts in Greek by Meurſius. His Paſchal Homilies by Andrew Salmatias at Antwerp, in 1618. The Book of the Trinity in Greek and Latin, by Wegelinus at Ausburg in 1604, and 1608. And ſeveral Letters and Treatiſes among the Councils.

[* By the care of Johannes Aubertus, in Tom. 7.]

† 1605. Cav.

* 1608. Cav.

There is a Lexicon, and a Treatiſe of Animals, which bears the Name of St. Cyril, but it is certainly ſome other Cyril, not the Patriarch of Alexandria.

MARIUS MERCATOR.

Marius Mercator.

THis Author remained a long time in obſcurity. The ancient and modern Compoſers of Bibliothecas have ſpoken nothing of him. His Works have been but lately recovered. He began to write in St. Auſtin's Life-time, who aſſures us in his 193*d.* Letter, written in 418, that M. Mercator, to whom it is directed, had made a Treatiſe againſt the New Hereticks; that is to ſay, againſt the Pelagians. St. Auſtin ſpeaks of him, him, as a Man of Worth and Learning. It is probable he was an Italian (a), and he seems to have been but a meer Layman (b).

Marius Mercator.

Marius Mercator.

This Man was one of the most zealous Adversaries of the Hereticks of his time, and especially of the Pelagians, whom he pursued vigorously, publishing Memoirs against them, and Collections of Pieces to discover their Errors, and bring them to Condemnation.

The first Work which he composed, was a Discourse against the Opinions of the Pelagians, in which he hath collected several Texts of Holy Scripture, as St. Austin tells us in his 193*d*. Letter. We have not this Work unless it be the Hypognosticon, which bears the name of St. Austin, as we have guessed in the first part of this Tome of our Bibliotheca, p. 256.

The second is an Historical Commentary against Cœlestius, which he first made in Greek to publish at Constantinople, which he presented to the Emperor Theodosius, Anno 429. (c), that he might inform the Eastern Christians of the Condemnation of Cœlestius and his Followers. The Title of this Commentary discovers the time, occasion, and the effect of it. Thus it is expressed; A Copy of the Commentary, which Mercator published in Greek against Cœlestius, and which he not only gave to the Church at Constantinople, and disposed to several Persons of Piety, but also presented to the Emperor Theodosius in the Consulship of Florentius and Dionysius, and which he afterwards translated out of the Greek into Latin; which Commentary having discovered the Errors of Cœlestius, was the Cause that Julian, and his Companions who defended them was banished from Constantinople as well as Cœlestius, by the Emperor's Edict, and afterward condemned in the Council of Ephesus, by the Judgment of 275 Bishops.

Commonitorium super nomen Cœlestii Dr. Cave.

This Commentary is an Abridgment of the History of the Condemnation of the Heresie of Pelagius. Mercator tells us therein, that Cœlestius, a Scholar of Pelagius, being come from Rome. where he had been almost 20 years, went to Carthage, where he was accused by Paulinus a Deacon of St. Ambrose, of several Errors, contained in 6 Articles which he transcribes; That the Bishops of Africk had condemned them in a Synod, and had enjoyned Cœlestius to Anathematize them; that he thought it convenient to appeal to the Bishop of Rome, but neglecting to prosecute the Appeal, he came to Ephesus, where he procured himself to be ordain'd Priest; That from thence he passed to Constantinople in the time of Atticus, but being known, he was driven from thence by that Bishop, who wrote circular Letters against him; That Cœlestine seeing himself thus thrust out went to Pope Zosimus, and pretending to condemn the Articles which were charged upon him, he obtained Letters in his favour directed to the Bishops of Africk. But these Bishops having given Zosimus information in writing of all that had passed, Cœlestius, who would not perform what he had promised, durst not appear before Zosimus again, and so withdrew himself from Rome. Whereupon Zosimus condemned him by a long Writing, which contained the Articles of Cœlestius, and all the Story of his Condemnation. Mercator next speaks of the Errors of Pelagius, Master of Cœlestius, which he relates in the very words of Pelagius taken out of his Commentary upon St. Paul's Epistles. He adds, That these Errors having been condemned by Zosimus's Letter sent into all parts, and confirmed by the Consent and Subscriptions of the Bishops of other Countries. Julian and his Associates who would not sign them were banished out of Italy by the Imperial Law and deposed by the Decrees of the Synods, and that some of them having acknowledged their Error were received and confirmed by the Holy See.

Mercator adds, that Pelagius and Cœlestius had been already condemned by Innocent Zosimus's Predecessor; and to prove it he goes back to the Original of the cause of the Pelagians. Pelagius, saith he, retired into Palæstine after the taking of Rome. His Writings falling into the Hands of some Bishops, they found many things in them contrary to the Catholick Faith, and they sent them into Africa, where they were read and examined in three Councils, who wrote them to the Holy See. The Bishop of Rome condemned these Books, and excommunicated Pelagius and Cœlestius. Pelagius was also accused to a Synod held at Jerusalem, but he escaped that Condemnation which he deserved by deceiving the Bishops with his Subtleties and Shifts. He was condemned in a second Synod, wherein Theodotus Bishop of Antioch was President, as the Letter written in the Name of this Bishop, and Praylus Bishop of Jerusalem, convinces us. He then recites the particular Errors of Pelagius condemned in this Synod, and ends his Commentary with an earnest request to Julian and his Adherents to condemn Pelagius and Cœlestius, who have been convicted of so many Errors.

Marius Mercator.

The third Work of M. Mercator is another Commentary against the same Hereticks written after the Death of St. Austin. In it he describes the Original of the Error of Pelagius, of which he makes some Syrians, and principally Theodorus of Mopsuesta, the Authors. He adds, that Rufinus who was a Syrian also, who brought it first to Rome, not daring to publish it there, taught it to Pelagius * an English Monk, who inserted it in his Commentaries upon St. Paul. That Cœlestius, a Person of Quality and Wit, but who was born an Eunuch, had joyned himself to Pelagius, and had comprized his Doctrine in 6 Articles, which he dispersed among the People. That altho' his Errors had been condemned, Julian had undertaken to defend them in large Books, to which St. Austin had opposed long and effectual Answers. That after he had read these Works, he had also made some short Observations upon the Writings of Julian, which he had collected and made publick to satisfie the desire of Pientius the Priest. He chiefly opposes 4 Errors of Julian in it. 1. That Concupiscence is not the consequent or effect of the Sin of the first Man, but it is natural to Man. 2. That Death entred into the World by the Sin of Adam, but that it passed upon other Men only, because they imitate the Sin of Adam. 3. That the Sin of the first Man hath not descended to his Posterity. 4. That Baptism pardons the Sins of those who have them; and as for Infants that have none, it perfects their Natures by the Gifts of Grace. M. Mercator recites the Passages of Julian, where he expressly lays down these Propositions, and then confutes them by close Notes, in which he mixes sharp and biting Expressions against Julian. He passes not over any suspicious Sentence; and whereas he uses the word Innovation for Renovation, he blames him for it, tho' St. Austin hath made use of both. He observes, that the Orthodox do not assert, that Sin is natural to Man, but that Original Sin cleaves to the corrupted Nature of Man. He shews him, that he contradicts himself in saying, that Death passed upon all for Adam's Sin, and yet it hath Dominion over them only who imitate his Transgression. Lastly, he proves by all that is said in Holy Scripture concerning the Redemption of Jesus Christ and of Baptism, that it necessarily supposes, that all Men, yea, Infants themselves, are in Sin, before they are renewed and regenerated by that Sacrament.

[* A Welsh Man.]

M. Mercator is not contented to oppose the Authority of the Church against Julian and the Pelagians, but he also brings the Testimony of Nestorius against them, who received them so well, and wrote in their favour to Pope Cœlestine, and sent a consolatory Letter to Cœlestius. Next he produces with the 3 Letters of Nestorius written for them, the Extracts of 4 Sermons preached by that Bishop in the presence of the Pelagians, wherein he affirmed, 1. That the fall of Adam hath been the cause of all the Miseries to which the nature of Man is subject, and of the bondage by which it hath been brought under the Tyranny of Satan. 2. That Jesus Christ is come to redeem Man from his Sins, to blot out the Hand-writing that was against him, and set him at liberty. 3. That it is by the Sacrament of Baptism that he works these things, and that Catechumens are always subject to the Curse of Sin, till they have received this Sacrament. The third of these Sermons is in Greek, among the Works of St Chrysostome, of Savil's Edition, Tom. 7. And F. Garner hath caused it to be printed with the Extracts of Marius Mercator.

Marius Mercator.

But because Julian might brag, that Theodorus of Mopsuesta Bishop of Cilicia was for him, M. Mercator undertakes to shew, that this Bishop had Heretical Opinions about the Incarnation. And to prove it, he translates a Creed attributed to Theodorus of Mopsuesta; and at the end annexes an Observation, shewing, that the Doctrine contained in that Creed is Heretical; and that it supposed, that Jesus Christ is made of two Natures, and not of two Natures united in one and the same Person. He confutes that Error, and proves the Doctrine of the Church by Texts of Holy Scripture.

(a) AN Italian.] F. Garner was of that Opinion, but the conjecture upon which it was grounded, was weak. F. Gerberon thought he was an African, and M. Baluzius was of this Mind. The whole Letter of St. Austin, published by the Benedictins, clears the Matter. For it appears by the beginning that M. Mercator lived at Rome with St. Sixtus and Cœlestine, to whom St. Austin wrote at the same time the two foregoing Letters, which he sent with this last by the same Bearer.

(b) A meer Lay-man.] He was neither Bishop nor Priest when St. Austin writ this Letter to him, for he gives him no Title of Honour, tho' he calls him his Son. Nor was he any thing more when he presented his Memoir to the Council of Ephesus. Lastly, in his Book to the Priest Pientius, he speaks as a Man inferior to him to whom he wrote. Tu quoque, venerande Presbyter Pienti, jussisti, parui imperaris. Thou also, O Reverend Priest Pientius, hast commanded, and I have obeyed.

(c) Anno 429.] All this is taken from the Title of this Memoir. Nevertheless there is a doubt concerning the year, for it is not manifest whether it were in 429. that this Memoir was presented or translated. But he speaks in the Body of the Work of Theodoret Bishop of Antioch, who died in 428. as a Bishop deceased; and in the Title it self he speaks of the condemnation of Cœlestius in the Council of Ephesus, as a thing done; which proves plainly, that he translated it in the year 431.

Marius Mercator.

He demonſtrates alſo in another Writing the agreement there is between the Error of Neſtorius and of Paulus Samoſatenus.

And for the more full Conviction of Neſtorius and his Followers, he rehearſes long Extracts of Neſtorius's five Sermons, a Letter to St. Cyril, and the Extracts of his Books, and he oppoſes to them the two Letters of St. Cyril to Neſtorius, and a third Letter of the ſame Perſon to the Clergy of Conſtantinople.

He alſo examines the Aphoriſms of Neſtorius oppoſed to St. Cyril's, and when he hath confuted them in order, he delivers briefly the Faith of the Church concerning the Incarnation, and diſcovers the different Errors of thoſe that have oppoſed it. For the confirmation of what he was about to propound, he produces out of the Acts of the Council of Epheſus, whatſoever is moſt direct and convincing againſt the Hereſie of Neſtorius. He joyns to this a Tranſlation of St. Cyril's two Apologies made for the defence of his Anathema againſt the Orientals. He endeavours to render the Doctrine and Perſon of Theodoret odious, by reciting the Extracts of his Treatiſes and Letters. He treats him as an Heretick and a wicked Man, altho' he owns, that he did at laſt approve of St. Cyril's Doctrine, tho' he would not condemn Neſtorius. He relates a Fragment of the Council againſt Domnus of Antioch, where Theodoret is accuſed to have ſpoken againſt the Memory of St. Cyril, ſaying, that the Ægyptians Hereſie was buried with him. And from hence he concludes, that Theodoret ought to be condemned as well as Theodorus and Neſtorius. And to convince Theodorus of Error and Hereſie, he recites ſome Fragments of his Books againſt St. Auſtin, to which he joyns ſome Extracts out of his Maſter Diodorus. He accuſeth Ibas Biſhop of Edeſſa to have publiſhed this Blaſphemy; I do not envy Jeſus Chriſt his Divinity, becauſe I can become ſo as well as he, for he is of the ſame nature with my ſelf. He quotes a Paſſage taken out of a Sermon of this Author, which contains nothing like it. He adds to all this, an Extract of a Sermon of Eutherius Biſhop of Tyana, which he affirms to have been of the ſame Judgment with Neſtorius, and concludes this Collection with a Reflection againſt the Neſtorians and Eutychians, which are two contrary Hereſies equally rejected by the Orthodox. He hath brought againſt both of them ſome Teſtimonies taken out of the Sermons of John Biſhop of Tomi, a Province of Scythia, but they are not to be found at preſent in the Collection of Mercator's Works. This Concluſion diſcovers, that this Collection of Pieces was made after the Hereſie of the Eutychians was known by that Name, i. e. after the Council of Chalcedon, which was held in 451. Nevertheleſs the reproachful manner, after which he ſpeaks of Theodoret, who was received in that Council would make us believe, that this Collection was compiled ſome time before, but that we know that there were always ſome Perſons, who would never forgive Theodoret for quarrelling with St. Cyril.

There is alſo at the end of Marius a Tranſlation of theſe following Pieces. The Letter of Neſtorius to St. Cœleſtine, a Synodical Letter of St. Cyril againſt Neſtorius, and the Scholia of the ſame Father upon the Incarnation againſt Neſtorius. Theſe Pieces ought to be joyned to the preceding.

Marius Mercator.

M. Mercator is no very eloquent Author, nor indeed do ſuch Works as he compoſed require much Eloquence: It is enough in ſuch ſort of Memoirs and Collections, that they be exact and faithful. He tranſlated the Greek elegantly and faithfully. His Style is not intricate, but hath nothing noble or lofty, and degenerates into Childiſhneſs, when he undertakes to confute others of his own Head. His Collection hath been of great Uſe in the Latin Church; and we ſee that Facundus and Pelagius the ſecond have uſed his Tranſlation.

There are two Manuſcripts of the Works of this Author, the one in the Vatican, the other in the Library of the Church of * Beauvais. F. Labbe printed the Hiſtorical Commentary of M. Mercator firſt, in his Edition of the Councils [Tom. 2.] and deſigned to have publiſhed the reſt of the Works of that Author; But dying before he had performed his Promiſe, F. Garner, his Fellow-Jeſuit, publiſhed them [with his own large and learned Commentaries, at Paris] in 1673. But he has changed the Order in which his Works were put, in the two Manuſcripts, hath added many other Pieces to them, and increaſed the Bulk of the Volume much, by long Notes, and a great number of Diſſertations upon the Hiſtory of the Pelagians and Neſtorians.

* Cæſaromagus, Bellovacum, a City of Picardy in France.

At the ſame time F. Gerberon, a Benedictine, put out under the borrowed Name of Rigberius, the Commentary againſt Julian, the Tranſlation of † the Sermon of Theodorus of Mopſueſta, with his Preface, the two Letters againſt Neſtorius; and the Treatiſe of a Neſtorian, he did not put in the firſt Hiſtorical Memoir, becauſe it was printed already in the ſecond Tome of the Councils, by F. Labbe. This Edition of M. Mercator is very ſmall, in Twelves, printed at Bruſſels in 1673. His Notes are not ſo long as F. Garner's, but they are full as uſeful and learned.

† Creed, Dr. Cave.

It is eaſy to ſee that theſe Editions were defective, for F. Garner's was not ſo much an Edition of M. Mercator, as a great Commentary upon the Hiſtory of the Pelagians, and Neſtorians; F. Gerberon's contained but a ſmall part of his Works: Beſides, neither of them had conſulted the Manuſcripts exactly, F. Garner contenting himſelf to follow that of Beauvais, and F. Gerberon that of the Vatican. Theſe Reaſons induced M. Baluzius, who hath taken ſo much Pains all his Life-time, to clear and reſtore the Eccleſiaſtical Antiquities, to publiſh a new Edition of Mercator's Works, in which he printed the Text, as it is in theſe two Manuſcripts before mentioned, and explains, by ſhort Notes, thoſe Places which have any Difficulty in them, without digreſſing into common Places upon the Hiſtory or Doctrine of the Hereticks, which are ſpoken of in M. Mercator's Works. This Edition was put out at Paris in 1684. by Francis Mugvet, in Octavo.

ANIANUS.

Anianus.

ANianus, a Latin Author, a Deacon of a City called Celeda (a), was one of the Defenders of Pelagius (b). St. Jerome tells us, that he wrote Books againſt his Letter to Cteſiphon; in which he maintains, by large Diſcourſes, the Doctrines which Pelagius taught. He tranſlated fifteen Homilies of St. Chryſoſtome, viz. the eight firſt upon St. Matthew, and ſeven Sermons of the Praiſes of St. Paul; and hath put, at the beginning of theſe Tranſlations, two Letters, the one to Orontius, the the other to Evangelius: In which he declares himſelf openly againſt the Scholars of St. Auſtin, to whom he gives the Name of Traducians. The ancient Tranſlation of St. Chryſoſtome's Homilies to the * Neophytes, which was made, as St. Auſtin obſerves, in his firſt Book againſt Julian, ch. 6. by a Scholar of Pelagius, may be attributed to him. This Author was well ſkilled in Greek, and wrote Latin well enough: St. Jerome accuſes him for uſing Jingling Words, verbis tinnulis, & emendicatis; This appears chiefly in two Letters which ſerve as a Preface to the Tranſlation of St. Chryſoſtome's Homilies. He flouriſhed in the beginning of the Fifth Age; but we muſt not confound him, as Sigbert hath done, with him that wrote the Theodoſian Code, in the Time of Alaricus, at the beginning of the Sixth Age.

Anianus.

* Novices.

(a) Of a City called Celeda.] St. Jerome in ep. 79. to St. Auſtin, calls him Celedenſis. It is not known where this City is; ſome think that it is Celene, a City of Campania. We have ſtill a Letter of St. Jerome's to Mark Biſhop of Celeda.

(b) Of the Defenders of Pelagius.] Janſenius affirms, that he was Pelagius himſelf, who took the Name of Anianus; but this Conjecture is falſe. The Prefaces to the Tranſlation of St. Chryſoſtome's Homilies, make it evident, that Anianus is a real Author. St. Jerome ſpeaks the like of him, and ſays, that he defends the Blaſphemies of another Perſon, that is to ſay, of Pelagius. It is true that he defends in his Work ſuch Doctrines, as he would not acknowledge in the Synod of Dioſpolis; but there muſt needs be ſome Defect in the Text of St. Jerome, Quicquid enim in illa miſerabili Synodo Dioſpolitana dixiſſe ſe denegat, in hoc Opere profitetur: Whatſoever he denied in the wretched Synod of Dioſpolis, that he had ſaid, he aſſerts in this Work. We ought to add, or underſtand, the Name of Pelagius, and read, Pelagius dixiſſe ſe denegat: Pelagius denies that he had ſaid Pelagius was a Prieſt. The Author of the Books againſt St. Jerome, and of the Tranſlation of St. Chryſoſtome's Sermons, was a Deacon only; is not there more reaſon to confound him, as Baronius has done, with Valerian or Julian.

JULIAN

JULIAN.

Julian. JUlian, born in Apulia (a), about the Year 386. the Son of Memor or Memorius, (b), who is thought to have been Bishop of Capua, and Julienna, married the Daughter of Æmilius, [Bishop of Beneventum,] named Ja. Afterwards he became a Clergy Man. He was a Deacon when St. Austin wrote his thirtieth Letter to his Father: Where he gives a Commendation of Father and Son. He was ordained (c), in 416. by Pope Innocent, Bishop of Eclane, (d), a City situated between Campania and Apulia. So long as this Pope lived, Julian did not discover his Opinions, but soon after his Death, he declared himself for the Doctrine of Cœlestius and Pelagius. Gennadius assures us, that before this he passed for one of the most learned Doctors of the Church, but he doth not take notice of any of his Works in particular, and 'tis not certain that he had then composed any. However that be, we have none of his Works but what might have been composed before he declared himself against St. Austin; But we have considerable Fragments of the Writings which he made against the Church.

In the Popedom of Zosimus he began to maintain the Opinions of Cœlestius, in his Discourses which he held at Rome. He then set himself to cry down, by Writing, the Doctrine of St. Austin, and the Church, concerning Original Sin.

The first thing he did was, to write in his own Name to Pope Zosimus. We have some Fragments of this Letter in M. Mercator. Not long after he addressed a second Letter to him in the Form of a profession of Faith, written in the Name of ten Bishops of that Age: F. Garner hath put out this. Julian owns, that he was the Author of it, as well as of that which was directed in the Name of the same Bishops, to Rufinus, Bishop of Thessalonica, 'Tis this which St. Austin recites, in his three last Books to Bonifacius. These Letters were written in 418.

The first Book of St. Austin, concerning Concupiscence and Marriage, falling into the Hands of Julian, he wrote, in 419. Four Books, dedicated to Turbantius, against the first Book of St. Austin: A little after he was banished out of Italy, by the force of the Emperor's Edict, and was compelled to retire into the East. He went into Cilicia, to find Theodorus of Mopsuesta; and there made, if we may believe M. Mercator, eight Books, dedicated to Florus, Bishop of Beneventum, against the second Book of St. Austin, concerning Concupiscence and Marriage. Sometime after he withdrew from Cilicia, and, if we give credit to what Mercator says, he was condemned, after his Departure, in a Synod of the Province of Cilicia. It may be, he returned into Italy, but being again banished from thence, he retreated to Constantinople; where he was rejected by Atticus, and afterwards by Sisinnius. But Nestorius, a Scholar of Theodorus, being chosen Bishop of Constantinople, favoured them, and sent two Letters in their behalf to Cœlestine. At this Time it was that M. Mercator presented his Memoir against Cœlestius, Julian, and his Companions; and obtained thus much by his Sollicitations, that they were banished from Constantinople. They went to the Council of Ephesus, where they were received by John Bishop of Antioch: But the Council condemned them, and confirmed all that had been done against them in the West; so that Julian always remained excluded from the Church, and banished from Italy. He used his utmost Endeavours to gain entrance into them under Pope Sixtus, but all in vain. Gennadius says, that he died under Valentinian, i. e. before the Year 455. after he had given all his Estate to the Poor, to relieve them by that means in a Famine, and so drew over several Persons to his Party. Some hold, that he was in Sicily, where he spent the last part of his Life in teaching a School, and that this inscription was put on his Tomb.

Here lieth in Peace JULIAN an Orthodox Bishop.

Which Epitaph was to be seen in the Ninth Age. These are the Words of Julian, of which we are now coming to speak. Julian.

Some Fragments of the Letter to Zosimus, in M. Mercator, lib. subn. c. 6. n. 10. &c. 9. n. 3. He owns, in these Fragments, that Death entred into the World by the Sin of Adam. A long Profession of Faith, published by F. Garner, in Dissert. 5. Par. 1. of the Works of M. Mercator. This Profession of Faith hath Four Parts. The first contains the Articles of the Creed explained; among which he placeth the Necessity of Baptism for all Ages. The second is an Abridgment of his Doctrine about Grace and Free-Will: Which may be reduced to five Propositions. 1. That Man is absolutely free to do Good or Evil. 2. That to do Good, he hath need of Grace, but that Grace is never wanting to him. 3. That the Nature of Man is good and perfect. 4. That there is no such thing as natural Sin, or by whatever Name else it may be called. 5. That the just Men of the Old Testament were justified by their Works, and by Faith in Jesus Christ. The third Part rejects the Errors of the Arians, Sabellians, Eunomians, Macedonians, Apollinarists, and Novatians, to whom are joyned the Jovinianists, such as assert, that Man justified by Baptism can never sin. Next, he comes to the Manichees, with whose Errors he confounds the Doctrine of the Orthodox, which he exposes after an odious Fashion. 'They, saith he, who 'defend natural Sin, affirm, that the Devil is the Author of 'Marriages; That Children that are born of them are Chil-'dren of the Devil; That all Men are born in his possessi-'on; That the Son of God did not begin to pour down his 'Graces upon Men but from the time of his Incarnation; 'That Sins are not entirely forgiven by Baptism; That the 'Saints of the Old Testament are dead in a State of Sin; 'That Man is necessitated to Sin; That Sin cannot be a-'voided, even with Grace. Lastly, he condemns the gross 'Errors of the Pelagians, viz. Those, who said, that Men 'can avoid Sin without the help of God; that Infants ought 'not to be baptized, or that other Terms ought to be used 'in baptizing them; That they, who are born of bapti-'zed Parents have no need of the Grace of Baptism; That 'Mankind died not by Adam, and is not raised by Jesus 'Christ.' In the last part, the Bishops in whose Name this Profession was written, declared to Zosimus, that if he still persists to molest them, they will appeal to a fuller Synod; That they could not sign a condemnation passed against the absent, but were ready to suffer the worst rather than forsake Justice and Truth. He ends with a Passage of St. Chrysostome's Sermon to the Novices.

The Letter of Julia and other Bishops to Rufinus of Thessalonica, is recited almost entire in the 3 last Books of St. Austin to Boniface. It contained the Heads of the Accusations which we have delivered in speaking of that Treatise of St. Austin.

The first Book to Turbantius is recited entire in the second Book of St. Austin of Marriage and Concupiscence. There are Fragments of three other Books in the six Books of St. Austin against Julian. Lastly, all the five Books of Julian, to Florus, are copyed out whole in the six Books of St. Austin's imperfect Work.

Beda makes mention also of the three Books of Julian, * A Treatise of Love, A Commentary upon the Canticles, and, A Book of † Constancy. It appears by the Fragments which Beda hath taken out of those Works, that he delivers the same Principles in them, as in his other Books; That we are absolutely free to do good or evil; that the love of Man inclines him naturally to do good; and, that Man is not born in Sin. He cites in his Last Book a little Treatise of St. Chrysostome, which bears this Title, No Man is hurt but by himself.

* This is a kind of Prefatory Discourse to the Commentary upon Canticles, and so not a distinct Book.

† De bono Constantiæ.

Lastly, some attribute to Julian the Translation of the Profession of Faith, which bears the Name of Rufinus, but they bring no Proof of it.

(a) Born in Apulia.] St. Austin, lib. 6. op. imperf. c. 18. non enim quia te Apulia genuit: Because Apulia brought thee forth. Fulgentius says, that he was a Person of Quality.

(b) Memorius.] St. Austin, in let. 30. Paulinus in the Epitaph of Julian, M. Mercator. This last upbraids Julian, as unworthy to be the Son of Memor and Julienna, and treats him as a Bastard. He also observes, that he had two Sisters, the Ancients do not tell us of what City Memorius was Bishop.

(c) Ordained.] M. Mercator says, that it was St. Innocent that ordained him. In 408. he was no more than a Deacon. He was young, but it is probable that he was Ordained before 416. for Innocent died in 417.

(d) Of Eclane.] Some have read Celane, but it is Eclane. The Testimony of Mercator fully determines this Point of History. This City was near the Lake Ampsanctus, between Campania and Apulia, distant from Beneventum about Twenty Miles: It is called at this Time Fringent.

NESTORIUS.

Nestorius. NEstorius Born at Germanica a City of Syria, brought up and baptized at Antioch, withdrew himself into a Monastery of Euprepius, which was in the Suburbs of that City. He was ordained Priest by Theodorus, and in a little time acquired a very great Reputation by his way of living, and by his Sermons. Sisinnius Archbishop of Constantinople being dead in 427. the Ambition which the Clergy of that City had to obtain the Government of that Church, made the Emperor to resolve not to suffer any of them to be chosen Bishops, and Nestorius.

Neſtorius. to cauſe a Clergy-man of ſome other Church to be choſen, notwithſtanding the Pains that were taken to procure it by ſome, for Philip [of Sida], and by others, for Proclus, he caſt his Eyes upon Neſtorius, choſe him *by common conſent, cauſed him to come from Antioch, and three Months after his Election he was ordained, and put in poſſeſſion of the See of Conſtantinople in the Month of April in the year † 428.

*It ſeems abſurd, when 'tis ſaid, the People deſired others. And Socrates ſays, that Siſinnius was choſen by conſent of all but not Neſtorius, for he was choſen rather againſt than by the conſent, of all.

†A great miſtake in Chronology for Atticus died Octob. 427. Siſinnius was Arch-biſhop almoſt 2 Years as Socrates tells us, l. 7. c. 28. Neſtorius was ordained 3 Months after Siſinnius's Death, ſo that he could not be in poſſeſſion of the Patriarchate till near 430. and yet Dr. Cave agrees with Du Pin.

In his firſt Sermon, which he made in the preſence of the Emperor, he declared the deſign he had to make War with the Hereticks, ſpeaking boldly to the Emperor; Sir, Free the Earth from Hereticks, and I will give you Heaven; joyn in the War againſt them with me, and I will aſſiſt you againſt the Perſians. Altho' the hatred which many of the People had for the Hereticks, made them approve of this Diſcourſe; yet the wiſer ſort, ſaith Socrates, condemned the Pride and Fierceneſs of it, and were amazed to ſee a Man before he had taſted, as he ſays, the Water of the City, declare, that he would perſecute thoſe who were not of his Opinion. Theſe Threatnings were followed with a ſuitable effect; for five days after his Conſecration, he attempted to demoliſh the Church where the Arians, tho' ſecretly, celebrated their Aſſemblies, and reduced them to ſo great deſpair, that they ſet it on Fire themſelves, which being conſumed, the Flame took the Neighbouring Houſes. This Fire ſtirred up an unuſual Diſorder, and from that time he was called, An Incendiary. He did all he could to vex the Novatians, but the Emperor ſtopt his Fury. He exerciſed alſo ſo great Severities againſt thoſe People of Aſia, Lydia and Caria, who kept the Feaſt of Eaſter upon the xiv day of the Moon, that many Murthers happened by them at Miletum and Sardis. He perſecuted alſo the Macedonians, and took their Churches from them. He did not ſpare ſo much as the Pelagians; but at length prevailed with the Emperor to make a Law againſt all Hereticks. He brought the Memory of St. Chryſoſtome into Veneration. He lived in a very regular and ſtrict manner, and applyed himſelf diligently to the Duties of his Miniſtry. In a word, he might have paſſed for a great Saint, if he had not engaged himſelf to maintain an Opinion, which made him condemned as an Heretick. Which came this way to paſs.

He had brought from Antioch a Prieſt called Anaſtaſius, for whom he had a very particular eſteem, and whom he made uſe of in all Affairs of Importance. This Anaſtaſius preaching one day in the Church, ventured to ſay, Let no Man call Mary the Mother of God; Mary was a Woman, and God cannot be born of a Woman. This Propoſition gave great offence among the People, who accuſed this Prieſt of Impiety. A Biſhop called Dorotheus confirmed the Opinion of Anaſtaſius, by ſaying Anathema to all that call the Virgin the Mother of God; and Neſtorius himſelf, diſcourſing upon this Queſtion in his Sermons, took his Prieſt's part, and always rejected the Name of the Mother of God.

The People being accuſtomed to hear this Expreſſion, were much inflamed againſt their Biſhop, being pertuaded, that he revived the Error of Paulus Samoſatenus aud Photinus, and believed, that Jeſus Chriſt was a meer Man. The Monks declared themſelves openly againſt him, and ſeparated themſelves from his Communion. The People, and ſome more conſidering Men followed their Example, inſomuch that in a ſhort time the Church of Conſtantinople was in a ſtrange confuſion; a Monk preached againſt his Biſhop; Euſebius, afterward Biſhop of Dorylæum, made a ſolemn proteſtation againſt his Doctrine. Proclus Biſhop of Cyzicum did preach 3 Sermons againſt him; and all the ancient Clergy of Conſtantinople oppoſed Neſtorius; yet he ſtill maintain'd what he delivered, and made ſeveral Sermons more upon that Subject. His Party made a Collection of them, and ſent them into Ægypt, which falling into the Hands of the Monks of thoſe Parts, raiſed Diſputes among them. This obliged St. Cyril Biſhop of Alexandria, to write a large Letter to them, in which, having acknowledged, that he had much rather not meddle with ſuch ſubtle Queſtions, which are above the reach of humane underſtanding, he declares againſt Neſtorius's Opinion; and ſhews, by ſeveral Reaſons, that the Virgin Mary may be called the Mother of God. Neſtorius having ſeen this Writing of St. Cyril's which was diſperſed up and down Conſtantinople, and much confirmed his adverſe Party, complained greatly of this carriage of St. Cyril. But he excuſed himſelf in a Letter written to Neſtorius, exhorting him to confeſs, that the Virgin Mary may be called the Mother of God. Neſtorius anſwered him with much Civility, but did not approve of that Term. St. Cyril wrote a ſecond Letter to him, to which Neſtorius returned an Anſwer, but did not fully approve of St. Cyril's Expreſſions about the Incarnation. He likewiſe wrote againſt the Letter which St. Cyril had ſent to the Monks of Ægypt, altho' Anaſtaſius declared at Conſtantinople, that he held nothing which was not in that Writing of St. Cyril; ſince he himſelf owned, that no Council had uſed the Term of the Mother of God. I will not in this place relate what paſſed in the Conſequence of this Buſineſs; how it was carryed to the Council of Epheſus; after what manner Neſtorius behaved himſelf there; how he was condemned, and what was the Concluſion; becauſe I ſhall be obliged to do this in ſpeaking of the Acts of the Council of Epheſus. I ſhall content my ſelf to obſerve, that after the ſentence of this Council, Neſtorius never durſt return to Conſtantinople, but hid himſelf in his ancient Monaſtery at Antioch, from whence he was taken four years after, in 435. by the Emperor's Order, and baniſhed to Oaſis. But the Barbarians having taken and deſtroyed that City, he was obliged to go into Thebais to the City of Panopolis, where he was not ſuffered to remain long; yea, he was ſo often removed from place to place, that he died in his Journey, being mortally bruiſed by a fall. Evagrius, who relates theſe Accidents, tells us, that he met with an Author who aſſured him, that before Neſtorius died, his Tongue was eaten with Worms, as a puniſhment of the Blaſphemies which it had uttered. But he brings no confirmation of this Circumſtance, which may well be thought an invention of this Anonymous Author, becauſe it was commonly ſuppoſed, that all Hereticks had a Tragical End. Neſtorius.

Neſtorius had a great freedom of Speech, and Gennadius aſſures us, that he had compoſed a great number of Treatiſes and Diſcourſes before he came to Conſtantinople. We have none of theſe firſt; but there remain a great number of Fragments of his Sermons preached at Conſtantinople, and ſome whole Sermons alſo, with ſome Letters and other Works; of which this is the Catalogue.

A Fragment of his firſt Sermon that he preached at Conſtantinople, recited by Socrates, lib. 7. chap. 29. of his Hiſtory.

Some Latin Fragments of 4 Sermons preached at Conſtantinople before Julian and the other Pelagian Biſhops, in which he delivers Principles contrary to their Errors. Theſe Fragments are recited in Latin by M. Mercator in F. Garner's Edition, Part 1. pag. 73. and in M. Baluzius's pag. 119. The third is perfect in Greek among the Works of St. Chryſoſtome, Tom. 7. of Savil's Edition, p. 301. and with a Latin Tranſlation in M. Mercator by F. Garner, pag. 85. Part 1.

The firſt Sermon which he made to maintain what Anaſtaſius the Prieſt had aſſerted, is tranſlated whole almoſt by M. Mercator, and confuted by Caſſian.

He preached ſeveral other Sermons upon the Myſtery of the Incarnation, of which a Collection was made at the ſame time. Out of this Collection the Orthodox took ſeveral Extracts to diſcover his Doctrine. And for this Reaſon it is, that when they cite them, they ordinarily ſet down the Sheet. We have four Collections of theſe Extracts. The 1ſt. is that which was preſented to the Council of Epheſus by Petrus Diaconus, Act. 1. Conc. Tom. 3. p. 520. The 2d. is M. Mercator's, where the Extracts are only in Latin in Baluzius's Edition, p. 109. The 3d. is taken out of St. Cyril's Books of Contradictions againſt Neſtorius; and the laſt is compoſed of the Extracts of Neſtorius, recited in the other Works of St. Cyril. F. Garner hath taken the pains to have theſe Collections printed in the 2d. part of his Edition of M. Mercator from p. 95. to p. 112. He hath alſo attempted to reſtore theſe Sermons by putting theſe Extracts together, and by adding other Fragments to them, to bring them into their natural Order.

After the Sermon of Providence he hath put that De Theognoſia or of the knowledge of God which he frames out of ſeveral paſſages quoted by St. Cyril, and in the Council of Epheſus, Part 2. pag. 8. Theſe follow.

Some Fragments of a Sermon againſt the Macedonians and Arians, taken out of the Books of St. Cyril and the Extracts of the Council of Epheſus. This Sermon is cited by Arnobius Junior, in his Diſpute againſt Serapion, which may convince F. Garner that he hath put two Sermons into one, ſo hard it is to put theſe Fragments exactly together.

A Sermon of the Incarnation againſt Proclus. It is recited in Latin by M. Mercator in the Edit. of F. Garn. par. 2. pag. 26. of Baluz. p. 70.

Another Sermon againſt the ſame Perſon taken out of the Extracts of St. Cyril, and of the Council of Epheſus, by F. Garn. p. 29.

Another Sermon upon theſe words, Conſider Jeſus Chriſt the Apoſtle and High-Prieſt of our Profeſſion, ibid. p. 30.

A Sermon againſt thoſe, who upon the account of the Union of the two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt do render the God-head Mortal, or the Manhood Divine. This is a large Treatiſe rehearſed entire in Latin by M. Mercator, of which alſo we have ſome Extracts in St. Cyril and the Council of Epheſus, in F. Garn. Edit. p. 34. Baluz. p. 56.

A Frag-

Neſtorius.

A Fragment of a Sermon upon Judas againſt the Hereticks taken out of St. Cyril's Books againſt Neſtorius, and M. Mercator's Collection of Fragments, by F. Garn. p. 65.

A Fragment of a Sermon upon theſe Words of Jeſus Chriſt in St. Matth. c. 5. v. 23. If thou haſt ought againſt thy Brother; taken out of the Council of Epheſus and M. Mercator's Collection, p. 66. ibid.

A Fragment of a Sermon againſt the Macedonians, recited in the Council of Epheſus, and tranſlated by M. Mercator, ibid. p. 67.

Another Fragment of Sermons recited in the Council of Epheſus and by M. Mercator, of F. Garn. Ed. p. 68. of Baluz. 109. &c.

A Sermon of Neſtorius when he had received St. Cœleſtine's Letter, and the Bill of complaint which was made by St. Cyril, tranſlated and recited entire by M. Mercator in the Edition of F. Garn. p. 85. and Baluz. p. 74.

Another Sermon preached the next Sunday, recited alſo in Latin, by M. Mercator, F. Garn. Ed. p. 93. of Baluz. p. 87.

The Fragments of two Sermons taken out of the Collection, intituled, Of the Illuſtrious Inſtitution, recited in the 6th. Council, Tom. 6. of the Councils, pag. 318.

Theſe are all his Sermons. His other Works are,

His firſt Letter to St. Cyril in Greek and Latin in the Council of Epheſus, part 1. ch. 7. p. 316.

The ſecond Letter to St. Cyril, ibid. ch. 9. p. 321.

Two Latin Letters to St. Cœleſtine, ibid. ch. 16. and 17. pag. 349, and 351. and in M. Mercator of F. Garner's Edit. part 1. pag. 65.

A Letter to Alexander Biſhop of Hierapolis, of which there is a Fragment in the 6th. Council, pag. 319.

A Conſolatory Letter in Latin to Cœleſtius related by M. Mercator in F. Garner's Edition, part 1. pag. 71. Baluz. p. 65.

The Anathematiſms of Neſtorius oppoſed to thoſe of St. Cyril in the Acts of the Council of Epheſus, part 1. ch. 29. p. 424.

The Letter of Neſtorius to John Biſhop of Antioch before the Council of Epheſus, in Lupus's Collection, p. 15. with a Sermon at the ſame time. ibid. p. 17.

The Declaration of Neſtorius, wherein he puts a good Senſe upon what he had delivered in his Sermons, ibid. p. 23.

His Letter to the Emperor concerning what paſſed at Epheſus in the beginning of the Council, ibid. pag. 30.

A Letter of Neſtorius to Scholaſticus the Emperor's Eunuch, written from Epheſus, ibid. 43. Theſe 4 laſt Letters are alſo in M. Baluzius's new Collection of Councils, and in the laſt Tome of Theodoret, of F. Garner's Edition.

A Letter to the Præfectus-Prætorio of Antioch, about the Order he had received, commanding him to retire into a Monaſtery, ibid. pag. 68.

Three Letters of Neſtorius written in his Baniſhment, of which Evagrius recites ſome Fragments in lib. 1. of his Hiſtory, ch. 7.

If we enquire diligently into theſe Writings, to know what was Neſtorius's Doctrine about the Incarnation, we ſhall find, 1. That he rejected the Error of Ebion, Paulus Samoſatenus and Photinus, and elegantly condemns the Error of thoſe who dare affirm, that Jeſus Chriſt was but a meer Man. 2. He maintains in expreſs Terms, that the Word was united to the Humane Nature in Jeſus Chriſt, and that this Union was moſt intimate and ſtrict. 3. That theſe two Natures being united together make but one Chriſt, one Son only, and likewiſe one Perſon only made up of two Natures. 4. That the Properties of the Humane and Divine Nature may be attributed to this Perſon; and that it may be ſaid, that Jeſus Chriſt was born of a Virgin, that he ſuffered and died; but he always denyed that it might be ſaid, that God was born, ſuffered or died; and herein conſiſted his Error, for by reaſon of the Hypoſtatick Union of the Divine and Humane Nature, the Properties of the two Natures, of which it is compounded, may not only be affirmed of the Perſon, but it may alſo be ſaid, that God is born, hath ſuffered and is dead; and that the Man ought to be adored, is become immortal, impaſſible, &c. altho' it cannot be ſaid, that the Divinity is born, is dead, or hath ſuffered; or that the Manhood may be worſhipped, is immortal or impaſſible. Neſtorius

Neſtorius.

Neſtorius did not only reject the laſt Expreſſions, uſed by the Eutichians and Appollinariſts, but he rejected the firſt, which uſage had introduced into the Church, and would not own that it might be ſaid upon the Account of the Union of the Divine and Humane Nature in Jeſus Chriſt that God is born, hath ſuffered or is dead. From this Principle it follows, that he muſt reject the Term of the Mother of God; for if it may not be ſaid, that God is born, it can't be ſaid, that the Virgin Mary is the Mother of God. He owned, that ſhe might be called the Mother of Chriſt, i. e. of the Perſon made up of the two Natures, but he could not underſtand, how ſhe could be called the Mother of God.

This Term, as we have ſeen, was the original of the Quarrel. It was in uſe in the Church, and all the World was offended to hear it condemned by Neſtorius and his Followers. The People immediately believed, that he did not acknowledge the Godhead in Jeſus Chriſt, ſince he would not endure that his Mother ſhould be called the Mother of God. But the more Learned knew well enough, that his Error conſiſted not in that Point, but in this; that by condemning this Expreſſion, he deſtroyed the Union of the two Natures in one Perſon only, and ſeemed to allow of a moral Union only between them. The Compariſons which he made uſe of, did incline them to believe that he was of that Opinion; for he ſaid, that the Humanity was in Jeſus Chriſt, the Temple, the Habit, the Veil of the Divinity; and compared the Union of the two Natures to the Union of Husband and Wife. Whence they concluded, that he allowed of no other Union between the two Natures, but an Union of Operation and Will, and not a real, ſubſtantial Union, notwithſtanding the Proteſtations he made, that there was but one Chriſt, and but one Perſon. It is true, that Neſtorius's obſtinacy in rejecting the Term of the Mother of God, and other Expreſſions of like Nature, which are conſequent upon the ſubſtantial Union of the two Natures, made Men think that he did not acknowledge the Hypoſtatick Union of the two Natures, although he never durſt affirm but that there were two Perſons really diſtinct in Jeſus Chriſt, nor openly diſcover that he allowed only a Moral Union between the two Natures. He likewiſe declared, that the Terms of the Mother of God diſturbed him, upon no other account, but becauſe he believed that they eſtabliſhed the Error of Arius and Apollinarius, who confounded the two Natures. But in that he was miſtaken, and his Obſtinacy in refuſing to approve an innocent Term, and to receive the Expreſſions which confirmed the Union of the two Natures in one Perſon, were a lawful and a ſufficient ground to condemn him, and a Proof of his evil Intention. This his Friend, John Biſhop of Antioch, confeſſes in the Letter, in which he exhorts him to receive the Term of the Mother of God: Where he tells him, that though he was perſuaded that his Doctrine was Orthodox, his obſtinate refuſal to acknowledge that the Virgin is the Mother of God, might give cauſe to ſuſpect that he was in an Error. Nor can we doubt but this Biſhop did at length acknowledge that Neſtorius was in an Error, and that his Obſtinacy deſerved Puniſhment, ſince he forſook him, and would not ſuffer him in his Dioceſs. Theodoret defended him a long time, but he was at laſt forced to condemn him, as we ſhall ſee in the ſequel: And indeed what poſſibility was there to defend him, when his moſt intimate Friends acknowledged him to be blameworthy.

The Fragments of Neſtorius's Works confirm the Judgment which the Ancients have given of his Style and Diſpoſition. It appears, by what we have ſaid, that he ſpake with Freedom and Elegancy; but that his Genius was mean, which had little Loftineſs or Nobleneſs of Wit. All the Grace of his Sermons conſiſted in Deſcriptions, Metaphors and Apoſtrophes, which are dry and inſipid. In ſum, they are very good Senſe, and the Notions ſeem very rational, his Error excepted. He had but little Learning or Knowledge, but what he knew he ſet it out to the greateſt Advantage.

JOHN Biſhop of Antioch, ACACIUS of Beræa, and PAUL of Emeſa.

John Biſhop of Antioch, &c.

THeodotus, Biſhop of Antioch, being dead, in 427, had for his Succeſſor one named John, who was not known till after his Ordination, upon the occaſion of the Conteſt which he had with the Orientals, againſt St. Cyril of Alexandria. He was ſummon'd to the Council, but came not at the Day appointed; and finding that St. Cyril had held a Council without him, he called another Council of the Biſhops of his Party, condemned St. Cyril, and excommunicated the Biſhops who with him had condemned Neſtorius, undertook his Defence, and perſiſted till the end of the Council in this Reſolution, ſo that the Eaſt and Ægypt were ſome time divided: But at laſt Peace was made, and the Eaſtern Biſhops abandoned Neſtorius, and profeſſed the Orthodox Faith, yet would not approve the Anathema of St. Cyril. All this gave John Biſhop of Antioch occaſion to write ſeveral Letters. We have ſome of them in Greek and Latin, in the Acts of the Council of Epheſus, and ſeveral others in Latin, in the Collection of F. Lupus. There is alſo one of his Sermons in the Acts of the Council of Epheſus, p. 375.

John Biſhop of Antioch, &c.

John Biſhop of Antioch, &c.

Acacius, Biſhop of Beræa, was alſo one of the principal Defenders of the Eaſtern Party. He was elder (a) than John Biſhop of Antioch, and had a great ſhare in all that paſſed in that Buſineſs; but he always loved Peace. During the Council of Epheſus, he abode at Conſtantinople, where he did the Eaſtern Biſhops no harm; for 'twas he that adviſed the Emperor to confirm the Depoſition of Cyril and Neſtorius. After the Council, during the great Diſſentions, St. Cyril never durſt break with him. It was to him that he ſued to make up a Peace. He compoſed the Propoſitions, and at length brought it to a Concluſion. We have One of his Letters to St. Cyril, in the Acts of the Council of Epheſus, Tom. 3. of the Councils, p. 382. and two Letters to the Biſhop of Alexandria in F. Lupus's Collection, p. 109, and 188. John Biſhop of Antioch, &c.

Paul Biſhop of Emeſa, who ſupplied the Place of Acacius in the Council of Epheſus, was alſo very inclinable to Peace: 'Twas he that concluded it with St. Cyril, who prepared the Form of Faith which was to be approved on both Sides, and who made two Sermons upon the Peace. We have theſe Monuments in the Acts of the Council of Epheſus, Tom. 3. of the Councils, p. 1089, and 1096, and a Letter of his to Anatolius, in the Collection of F. Lupus.

(a) HE was elder.] He was the Scholar of the famous Anchorite Aſterius, and had for a very long Time profeſſed a Monaſtick Life, in a Monaſtery, in a Village near Antioch. He was ordained Biſhop in the Year 378, and died in the Year 436.

The Biſhops of NESTORIUS's Party.

Biſhops of Neſtorius's Party.

THere were other Biſhops, who were more addicted to the Party and Doctrine of Neſtorius than thoſe of whom we have already ſpoken, who would by no means hear of a Peace, and whom the Ægyptians would not have included in it. Becauſe we have ſome of their Letters, we will take notice of them in this Place.

Meletius of Mopſueſta, Succeſſor of Theodorus, who was depoſed in the Council of Epheſus, and baniſhed. We have eleven of his Letters in the Collection of F. Lupus. Dorotheus, Biſhop of Martianople, depoſed in the ſame Council, and expelled out of the Council of Conſtantinople; There are four Letters of his in the ſame Collection. Alexander Biſhop of Hierapolis, the Author of four and twenty Letters, which are found in the ſame Collection. Zenobius Biſhop of Zephyria in Cilicia, and ſome other Biſhops, of whom we will ſpeak afterward, who would never be comprehended in the Peace, and therefore were depoſed and baniſhed. Biſhops of Neſtorius's Party.

EUTHERIUS Biſhop of Tyana.

Eutherius Tyanæus.

Eutherius Biſhop of Tyana, of all the Biſhops of the Party of Neſtorius, hath left us the moſt conſiderable Monument. It is a Work which hath gone a long Time under the Name of Athanaſius, which Photius attributes to Theodoret; but M Mercator, who is more to be credited than Photius, cites it under the Name of Eutherius of Tyana. In the firſt Place, he deſcribes, in the moſt odious manner, the Perſecutions which he pretends were prepared for thoſe of his Party to ſuffer. Theſe are his Words: 'It is ſaid that our Enemies will not content 'themſelves to go on in their old Courſes, to work the 'Ruin of the Simple and Unwary, but that they have a 'Deſign boldly to attempt whatever they pleaſe, being ſup'ported by the Authority of the Sovereign Power, that they 'will force others to be of their Opinions: that they will 'require Obedience to their Commands immediately, and 'deliver them to Juſtice that do not perform them; that they 'will bring them to Puniſhment, brand ſome with Diſ'grace and baniſh others; that they will frame falſe Ac'cuſations againſt them, and deprive them thereupon of 'their Dignities and Offices. I do not mention the Bonds, 'Priſons, Diſgraces and Torments which they ſhall ſuffer, 'and the tragical Sights of thoſe which they will put to 'Death. And that which is moſt to be lamented is this, 'that the Biſhops are the Authors of this Tragedy. O pro'phane Compulſion! O intolerable Juſtice! When they 'begin to celebrate the Holy Myſteries, or to teach the 'People, they have in their Mouth this heavenly Speech, 'Peace be with you all. Nothing is ſo urgently command'ed in Holy Scripture as Gentleneſs and Kindneſs; 'Why then do they condemn us without taking Cogni'zance of our Cauſe? Why do they reject that which they 'do not know to be falſe? Why do they give the Name 'of Force to their Outrages? Why do they conceal their 'Cruelty under the Shadow of falſe Zeal? Why do they 'cover their deteſtable Politicks with the Name of Wiſdom? 'What Tragedian is there that can deſcribe theſe Things 'in a Style doleful enough? The Lamentations of Jeremiah 'would not ſuffice to deſcribe ſo great Evils.

From hence we may ſee, that it is not a late Invention, for Perſons who are not willing to forſake their Errors, to make thoſe Charitable Severities which are made uſe of to recover them, to paſs for inſupportable Violences and unheard of Cruelties; by aggravating them and repreſenting them in ſuch an odious manner, as is proper to ſtir up Indignation.

The Principles which he lays down in the following Part, are very agreeable with thoſe of the Proteſtants. In the firſt Article he oppoſes thoſe, who will have it determined, where the Truth is, by the Judgment of the greater Number. 'Je'ſus Chriſt ſaith he, is the Truth (as Tertullian hath a long Time ſince affirmed) 'and 'tis he that we ought to conſult. 'This being ſo, are they not to be pitied who judge of the 'Force and Authority of a Doctrine only by the Number 'of thoſe who approve it; without conſidering that our 'Lord Jeſus Chriſt choſe ignorant and poor Men, whom 'he made uſe of to convert all the World. He required, 'that Millions of Men ſhould yield themſelves up to the 'Doctrines of theſe twelve. Thus hath the Truth always 'triumphed, although it were among the ſmalleſt Number, 'and whoſoever he be, that deſpairing to prove what he 'affirms to be true, flies to the Authority of the Multitude, 'he confeſſes himſelf vanquiſhed. The great Number may 'affright, but cannot perſuade: There are but few that ſhall 'be ſaved. St. Stephen, Phineas, Lot and Noah had the 'Multitude againſt them; yet who had not rather be on 'their Side than on that, which did oppoſe them? 'Tis 'not, ſaith the ſame Author, that I bear not a due reſpect 'to the Multitude; but it is to that which proves what it 'teacheth, and not to that which will not ſuffer us to exa'mine and ſearch out the Truth: 'Tis to that which doth 'not condemn with Severity, but correct with Gentleneſs; 'not to that which loves Novelties, but to that which pre'ſerves the Truth, which they have received from their 'Anceſtors. But what is this Multitude which you object 'againſt me? It is the Throng of Men corrupted by Flatte'ries and Priſons: 'Tis the Number of ignorant Men, who 'have no Underſtanding to guide them: It is a crowd of 'weak and fearful Men, who ſuffer themſelves to be con'quered: They are the Souls which preferr the Pleaſures 'that Sin affords us in this Life, which are momentary, 'before Eternal Life and Glory: So that when you object 'to me this Multitude, to gain Credit to a Lye, you do but 'diſcover the extent of Wickedneſs, and the great Num'ber of the Miſerable. Eutherius Tyanæus.

The ſecond Chapter is of like Nature with this firſt. In it he oppoſes thoſe who maintain, that it is needleſs to ſearch the Holy Scripture that we may know what we ought to believe, either becauſe it is ſufficient for every one to believe what his own Reaſon teacheth him; or, becauſe in ſearching for the Truth in Scripture, we meet with more Obſcurity and Uncertainty. Our Author cannot approve of this Advice: For he ſaith, 'That being perſuaded of the 'Truth of the Myſteries, and truſting in the Help of Jeſus 'Chriſt, who hath promiſed to thoſe who ſeek after the 'Truth that they ſhall certainly find it, he ſeeks after the 'Truth in the manner that he ought, he ſhall find it with'out miſtaking, that he puts himſelf into a Condition of 'proving what he teacheth, of inſtructing the Faithful, con'futing Hereticks, and convincing himſelf of the Truth, 'and confirming the Doctrines, ſo as none can doubt of 'them. Would you have me, ſaith he, neglect the Study 'of Holy Scripture? whence then will you have Know'ledge neceſſary to ſupport your Faith? It is dangerous 'for this Life to be ignorant of the Roman Laws, and 'tis 'no leſs dangerous for another Life to be ignorant of the 'Oracles of our Heavenly King. The Scripture is the 'Nouriſhment of the Soul: Suffer not then the inward 'Man to die with Hunger, by depriving him of the Word 'of God. There are too too many who inflict mortal 'Wounds upon the Soul; ſuffer them to ſeek Medicines 'for their Maladies and Griefs.

'But there are, ſay you, things which paſs our Under'ſtanding: I own it, but the Scripture teaches us, that we 'muſt ſearch, and that there are things that we cannot com'prehend: And as it would be a kind of Impiety to deſire 'throughly to comprehend them, ſo it is to have a kind of 'Contempt for the Divine Truths, to lay aſide wholly the 'ſearch into them: Every one ought to know what it is he 'adores, as it is written, We know what we worſhip: But it

Eutherius Tyanæus.

'it is a Madness to enquire how much? After what manner? By what means, and where we must adore him? In sum, they who discourage others from reading and studying the Holy Scripture, under a Pretence, that they ought not to dive into Things too profound, do it because they are afraid that they should be convinced of their Errors by it. So when they find themselves pressed by convincing Testimonies of Holy Scripture, they give a Sense clear contrary to the Words; and if they find but one Word which can be brought to their Opinion, although it be nothing to the Sense of the Place, they must use it as an invincible Demonstration.' We must own that these Principles are not ill, although Men may offend in the Application they make of them.

Eutherius Tyanæus.

In the other Chapters he answers the Objections which the Ægyptians made against the Eastern Bishops, and oppose some of their Expressions; such as these: The Word hath suffered in an impassible manner: The Word hath suffered in the Flesh. He hath delivered several Expressions agreeable to those of Nestorius.

In sum. He hath written with much Elegancy and Reason. This Work is a Doctrinal Treatise, and not a Collection of Sermons. It is in Tom. 2. of Athanasius's Works under the name of that Father, and since it hath been printed at the End of Tom. 5. of Theodoret's Works put out by F. Garner [at Paris in 1684.] There are also some of this Bishop's Letters in F. Lupus's Collection.

THEODOTUS Bishop of Ancyra.

Theodotus of Ancyra.

THeodotus Bishop of Ancyra a City of Galatia, whom Gennadius calleth Theodorus, was one of the greatest Adversaries of Nestorius. He was present at the Council of Ephesus, where he couragiously delivered his Opinion against him. Gennadius says, that he made a Treatise on purpose to confute him, and that Work was very Logical, but that it was not sufficiently grounded upon the Authority of Holy Scripture, but lays down several Arguments before he comes to Scripture-proofs. This description agrees well to the two Sermons of Theodotus upon the Feast of the Nativity, preached in the Council of Ephesus, and which are recited in the Acts of that Council, where he proves, by several Arguments, that Jesus Christ is God and Man, and that it is truly said, that God is born of a Virgin.

There is also a 3*d*. Sermon preached at Ephesus upon St. John's day, where he likewise speaks against the Error of Nestorius. The beginning of it is remarkable, wherein he compares a Bishop to a Physician, Error to a Disease; And says, that as a Physician cuts of putrified and gangrened Members to prevent the spreading of the Disease into the other parts; so Bishops are obliged to cut off the Members of the Church, but yet they ought not to do it but with regret, and in cases of necessity, when there is no other remedy left sufficient, and proper to effect the Cure.

He hath also a 4*th*. Treatise upon the same Subject, which was published [at Paris] in 1675. [in Twelves] by F. Combefis out of a MS. copyed by Holstenius *. It bears this Title, An Exposition of the Nicene Creed, but it is a confutation of Nestorius grounded upon the Nicene Creed. In it he makes mention of 3 Books, which he had written concerning the Divinity of the Holy Spirit.

[*It had been published by Card. Barberinus at Rome in 1669. Octavo.]

Theodotus of Ancyra.

The Iconoclasts having quoted a Testimony of Theodotus Bishop of Ancyra against Images, Epiphanius maintained in the 7*th* Council, Act 6. that that place was supposititious. And to prove it invincibly, he says, that he had collected all the Works of that Author, but never met with the Passage which they alledged. And then gives us the following Catalogue of them, viz. Six Books against Nestorius dedicated to Lausus: The Exposition of the Nicene Creed: A Sermon upon the Feast of the Nativity: Another upon the Purification: Another upon Elias and the Widow: Another upon St. Peter and St. John: Another upon the Lame Man, who lay at the Gate of the Temple: Another upon him that had received the Talents: And, lastly, upon the two blind Men. Altho' Epiphanius makes mention here of several of Theodotus's Works which we have not, yet we cannot say, that he forgot none. Nicephorus attributes to him a Sermon upon the Virgin and St. Simeon. Some think, that it is the 4*th* Sermon among Amphilochius's, which bears his Name in a MS. in Cardinal Mazarini's Library. F. Combefis who published Theodotus's Exposition upon the Nicene Creed, assures us, that he had 4 Sermons more of this Author, and, among others, that upon the Purification of the Virgin Mary cited by Epiphanius.

The Style of this Author is short and concise, full of subtle Interrogations and cogent Arguments. He speaks like a Logician or Controvertist, rather than like an Orator or Preacher. There is nothing very remarkable in his Writings, but we may observe in them a great deal of Artifice and Subtilty.

The Orthodox Bishops of St. Cyril's Party.

Orthodox Bishops of St. Cyril's Party.

THese Bishops of St. Cyril's Party have written in the defence of the Church.

Acacius Bishop of Melitene made a Sermon in the Council of Ephesus, which is in the Acts of the Council, Tom. 3. of the Counc. p. 839. and wrote a Letter to St. Cyril, which is in F. Lupus's Collection.

Memnon Bishop of Ephesus hath written a Letter to the Council of Constantinople, which is found in the Acts of the Council of Ephesus, p. 762.

Rheginus Bishop of Constantia in Cyprus made a Discourse in the Council upon the deposition of Nestorius, ibid. p. 577.

Maximian chosen in his place, wrote a Letter to St. Cyril, which is also in the Acts of the Council of Ephesus, p. 1061.

Orthodox Bishops of St. Cyril's Party.

Lastly, To these Bishops may be joyned two Priests, the one called Alipius a Priest of Constantinople, who wrote a Letter to St. Cyril, which is recited in the Acts of the Council, p. 785. and Charisius a Priest of the Church of Philadelphia, who presented a Petition to the Council of Ephesus, with a Form of Faith recited in the Acts of the Council, p. 673.

St. SIXTUS III.

St. Sixtus III.

SIxtus, a Priest of the Church of Rome, was a long time one of the greatest Ornaments of the Roman Clergy. We understand by the two Letters which St. Austin wrote to him in 418. that he was a Protector of Pelagius and his Adherents who therefore had given out a Report that he was of their Opinion; but when they were condemned by Zosimus, he was one of the first that pronounced an Anathema against them: That he wrote a short Letter to Aurelius Bishop of Carthage, in which he assures him, that he was not of Pelagius's Sentiments; and that he afterward made a larger Book, in which he explained his Opinions more amply, which were consonant to those of the Bishops of Africa, and contrary to the Errors of the Pelagians. We have neither this Letter nor this Writing, but this Story, and the manner in which St. Austin writes to Sixtus, shews us sufficiently how he was already looked upon in the Church of Rome. So that it is no wonder, that after the Death of St. Cœlestine which happened in 432. he succeeded him in the See of Rome. The Eastern Churches were then divided about the Condemnation of Nestorius. St. Cyril and the Ægyptian Bishops maintained what was done against him. John Bishop of Antioch, and the other Oriental Bishops would not receive him, they excommunicated and condemned one another, and the Church was in danger of falling into a lamentable Schism, if the Prudence of St. Sixtus had not contributed to the Peace, which was concluded in the time of his Popedom. St. Cyril sent two Bishops to Rome in the Name of the Council, to incline the Pope to approve what he had done, and to declare himself openly against the Orientals. These two Bishops, called Hermogenes and Lampelius, at their arrival found St. Cœlestine dead, and Sixtus in his place. This Pope graciously received these Messengers, approved what was said in the Council of Antioch concerning the Faith, and the Condemnation of Nestorius. But as to John Bishop of Antioch and the Orientals, he ordered, that if they would acknowledge and approve the Faith of the Council, they ought to be received. This he wrote to St Cyril and the other Bishops in two Letters, which M. Cotelierius hath published in Greek and Latin, in his 1*st*. Tome of the

St. Sixtus III.

St. Sixtus III.

Monuments of the Greek Church p. 42, and 44. And Mr. Baluzius hath put them in his new Collection of Councils, p. 658.

These Letters had very good ſucceſs, and prepared their Minds for Peace. As ſoon as it was concluded, St. Cyril ſent St. Sixtus the News of it, who ſhewed a great deal of Joy at it, and immediately wrote to St. Cyril and John Biſhop of Antioch, to aſſure them, that he did joyn with them in their Re-union. We have theſe two Letters at the end of the Acts of the Council of Epheſus, p. 1175, and 1178. He wrote to St. Cyril, that at that time when he was much troubled for the condition of the Eaſtern Churches, he was greatly pleaſed to hear by his Letters, that all the Members of the Church were again united in one Body, excepting him only who was the Cauſe of all the Miſchief; that he had imparted this good News to the Biſhops of his Synod which was aſſembled upon his Birth-day. He adds, that John Biſhop of Antioch had never followed the Errors and Blaſphemies of Neſtorius; that he had only ſuſpended his Judgment, and that he ought to rejoyce that he had at laſt declared himſelf for the right ſide; That it was an excellent Work to bring over ſo great Biſhops, and that he thought it well done by himſelf, that he had not acted raſhly in that affair, but had waited till the Vine of Jeſus Chriſt brought forth uſeful and pleaſant Fruit: That St. Cyril ought entirely to forget the Injuries which the Oriental Biſhops had done him, in pronouncing the Sentence of Condemnation againſt him; that he had ſuffered undeſervedly to render the Truth victorious. Laſtly, he tells him, that he expected that the Clergy of John Biſhop of Antioch's Party ſhould write to him.

He ſhews the ſame Joy to John Biſhop of Antioch, and diſcovers the ſame Diſpleaſure againſt Neſtorius. He praiſes him, that he made an elegant Profeſſion of the Faith of the Church, and rejected Novelty to apply himſelf to the Ancient Doctrine.

Altho' theſe two Letters are both dated the ſame Day, which is Sep. 15. 433. yet the Letter to John ought to bear date ſome Days after the Letter to St. Cyril. St. Sixtus III.

The 3*d*. Letter to the Oriental Biſhops aſcribed to St. Sixtus is an evident Forgery made up of Paſſages taken out of the 8*th*. Council of Toledo. St. Gregory the Great, Felix III. Adrian, the Theodoſian and Juſtinian Codes, and it is in great part in the 3*d*. Epiſtle attributed to Fabian, which is the Work of Iſidorus Mercator, as well as this. This Letter is written about an Accuſation, which it pretends was brought againſt St. Sixtus by Baſſus, who had been Conſul, from which he was cleared in a Synod, and Baſſus was condemned. This Story is related in the Pontifical, and we have the pretended Acts of that Council, but the very reading of them will fully ſatisfie us of their Falſhood. They have the ſame Date with the Letter, that is to ſay, they are dated in the Year 440. ſome Days after St. Sixtus's Death. Although the Author of the Pontifical places this Accuſation in the 11*th*, year of St. Sixtus's Popedom, the Name of one of the Conſuls is changed. The Acts themſelves are nothing but an heap of Impertinencies and Fables. The Acts of the Condemnation of one Polychronius pretended to be Biſhop of Jeruſalem, given at Rome, is of the ſame ſtamp. There was no Biſhop of that Name at that time. The Date of theſe Acts agrees with the Pontificate of Leo, and yet they ſay he was condemned under Sixtus. They ſpeak alſo of a Siege of Jeruſalem, which is imaginary, but if all theſe things did not, the reading of theſe Acts would diſcover the Forgery.

We muſt not then give any Credit to the Acts of the Condemnation of Baſſus. We are not ſure that ever he accuſed St. Sixtus III. this Fact not being related by any credible Author; ſo that it is not Probable, that the whole Story is fabulous. Sixtus III. died in the Month of March, in the year 440.

PROCLUS.

Proclus.

Proclus was yet very young, when he was made a Reader of the Church of Conſtantinople. The Eccleſiaſtical Offices did not hinder him from following his Studies, and eſpecially applying himſelf to Rhetorick. He was afterwards Secretary to Atticus Biſhop of Conſtantinople, by whom he was ordained both Deacon and Prieſt. After whoſe Death ſome pitched upon him to ſucceed him, but the Votes of the People were for Siſinnius, who ordained Proclus Biſhop of Cyzicum. The Inhabitants of that City not being willing to accept of him, becauſe they would not ſo apparently acknowledge the Juriſdiction of the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, he was forced to continue at Conſtantinople, where he got a great reputation by his Preaching. After the death of Siſinnius, he had a great many Votes for him. But to appeaſe the heats which were among the Clergy of Conſtantinople, it was reſolved to chooſe Neſtorius a Prieſt of Antioch. After his Depoſition, Proclus was propounded a third time to be Biſhop of Conſtantinople, and he had been elected, if ſome Perſons of great Credit had not repreſented it as contrary to the Canons, which forbid the Tranſlations of Biſhops. Wherefore he was rejected that time alſo, and Maximian was choſen; but at laſt he arrived at that Dignity, to which he had been deſigned ſo many times, and was ordained Biſhop of Conſtantinople, after the Death of Maximian, Anno, 434. in the Month of April. He enjoyed that See peaceably to his death, which happened in 446.

The Sermons of this Author have been publiſhed at Rome, by Vincent Riccard in Greek and Latin, in 1630. and were inſerted by F. Cambefis in the firſt Tome of his Auctuarium to the Biblioth. Patrum, [at Paris in 1648.]

There are 20 of them, the 1*ſt*, 5*th*, 6*th*. are upon the Virgin Mary. In it he extolls almoſt only her Title of the Mother of God. The 2*d*. and 3*d*. are upon the Incarnation. The 4*th*. is upon the Nativity of Jeſus Chriſt: This is near akin to the 2*d*. Sermon of Theodotus Biſhop of Ancyra. The 7*th*. is upon the Theophany, or the Baptiſm of Jeſus Chriſt, which is in the Acts of the Council of Epheſus. The 8*th*. upon the Transfiguration of our Saviour. The 9*th*. upon the Feaſt of Tabernacles. The 10*th*. upon Holy Thurſday and againſt Covetouſneſs. The 11*th*. upon the Paſſion. The 12*th*. upon the Reſurrection. The 13*th*, 14*th*, and 15*th*. upon the Paſſover. The 16*th*. upon Pentecoſt. The 17*th*. upon St. Steven the Protomartyr. The 18*th*. is a Panegyrick upon St. Paul. The 19*th*. is on St. Andrew. The laſt, is a Latin Fragment of a Sermon in the Praiſe of St. Chryſoſtome. Proclus.

Theſe Sermons are written in a conciſe and ſententious Style, full of Antitheſes, Interrogations, Exclamations and Points. The Notions are ſtudied and ſubtle, but are of little Uſe and Inſtruction. He ſpeaks the ſame thing an hundred ſeveral ways, and gives it abundance of different Turns. This ſort of Compoſure requires a great deal of Labour and Application, and manifeſts the Wit and Livelineſs of the Speaker. But it is of little uſe to the Auditors; it diverts them, and ſometimes delights them, ſo long as they hear this ſtudied Diſcourſe, but ordinarily they go away from it, neither more knowing nor better affected; and they are ſcarce gone, but they forget all that has been ſaid to them; for theſe pleaſant ways of ſpeaking, which delight us only for the Curiouſneſs and Delicacy, make not any impreſſion upon the Mind nor Heart, and leave nothing behind them but a general Reminiſcence, that they were much pleaſed with what they heard, but know not why. This is a true Character of Proclus's Sermons, who was mighty ſucceſsful in this kind. By this he ſhews what he could have done, if he had made choice of a better Style, or had had the good luck to have lived in a time when Men had better Judgments.

CAPREOLUS.

Capreolus.

Capreolus Succeſſor of Aurelius in the See of Carthage, ſent in 431, his Deputies to the Council of Epheſus with a Letter, which is ſet down in the Acts of that Council. We have alſo a little Treatiſe which he wrote in anſwer of Vitalis and Conſtantius, Chriſtians of Spain, who had conſulted him, whether it might be ſaid, that God is born of a Virgin. In it he proves this Truth, by ſhewing, that there is but one Perſon in Jeſus Chriſt, and confuting thoſe that are of a contrary Judgment. He ſpeaks in this Treatiſe of the Condemnation of Neſtorius, and of his Hereſy in the Council of Epheſus; to which he ſays, that he ſent his Deputies. It is very remarkable, that the 2 Spaniards apply themſelves to Capreolus, to deſire of him, what they ought to believe in ſo important a Point as this is, and that they do it in the moſt ſubmiſſive Terms. What would not the Divines of the Court of Rome ſay, if this Conſultation had been addreſſed to the Biſhop of Rome? What Conſequences would they not draw from ſuch a Conſultation in favour of the Pretenſions of the Court of Rome? This Treatiſe was publiſhed by F. Sirmondus, and printed by Cramoiſy [among Opuſcula Veterum at Paris] in 1630. in [Octavo]. [It is alſo in Bibl. Patr. Tom 7. Capreolus.

ANTONIUS

ANTONIUS HONORATUS Bishop of Constantina in Africa.

Antonius Honoratus Bishop of Constantina in Africa.

WE have a Letter of this Bishop directed to one named Arcadius, who was banished for the Faith by Gensericus King of the Vandals. He exhorts him to suffer patiently for Jesus Christ, and propounds to him several Examples of Holy Scripture to encourage him to persevere in his Sufferings with Constancy, that he may obtain the Crown of Martyrdom, which he gives him an assurance of, if he continues firm in the Faith. This Letter is short, and full of lively and cogent Notions and Expressions. In the end he brings some comparisons to explain the Mystery of the Trinity. It is found in the Biblioth. Patrum [Tom 8.] [and in Baronius's Annals in the year 437.] it was written about the year 435.

Antonius Honoratus Bishop of Constantina in Africa.

VICTOR of Antioch.

Victor of Antioch.

THis Victor, a Priest of Antioch, hath made a Commentary upon the Gospel of St. Mark, which hath been translated into Latin, and published by Peltanus. It is thought this Author lived in the beginning of the Fifth Age*, or towards the end of the Fourth, for he says, upon the thirteenth Chapter of St. Mark, that in his time some Remains of the Temple of Jerusalem were to be seen. He says also in the same place, that there were yet some Christians, who put off Baptism to the End of their Life. In the next Chapter he speaks of the Heresy of the Novatians, as of a Sect then in being.

* And accordingly Dr. Cave placeshim in A. C. 401.

He observes in his Preface, that several Authors had written upon the Gospels of St. Matthew and St. John; That very few had bestowed their Labours upon St. Luke, but he could never meet with any that had written upon St. Mark, although he had exactly run over the Catalogues of the Works of the Ancients. He adds, that for this Reason he took up the Resolution to collect what the Doctors of the Church had upon divers Places of this Gospel, and composed a short Explication upon it. He says afterwards, that St. Mark was also called John and that his Mother was that Mary, with whom the Disciples abode at Jerusalem, of whom mention is made in the Acts. That it was he who accompanied St. Barnabas, and afterwards joyned himself with St. Peter: That he wrote his Gospel at Rome, at the Desire of the Faithful of that City. St. Matthew had written his Gospel some time before.

Victor of Antioch.

This is what this Author says of St. Mark in the Preface of his Commentary. In his Commentary he applies himself to the Explication of the Letter and History, which he clears by very solid and judicious Notes and Observavations. This Commentary was printed with that of Titus Bostrensis upon St. Luke, at Ingolstadt in 1580. and put into the Bibliotheca Patrum [Tom. 4]

VICTOR of Marseilles.

Victor of Marseilles.

CLaudius Marius Victor, or Victorinus, a Rhetorician at Marseilles, hath made a Commentary upon Genesis beginning at the Creation, and ending at the Death of Abraham. It was divided into three Books, dedicated to his Son Ætherius. It is evident that it was composed by a Christian, and an Orthodox Person: But since prophane Learning was the Principal Employment of this Author, and he was not instructed by any able Teacher in the Knowledge of Holy Scripture, this Work was very weak. He died under the Empire of Theodosius and Valentinian. This is taken out of Gennadius, Chap. 60. The Work of this Author which is extant * in the Bibliotheca Patrum [Tom. 8.] is a Poem in Latin Heroicks, and contains a Narration of the History of Genesis to the Death of Abraham. The Style of it is harsh, and the Verses are rough, but the Sense is Noble, and the History well explained. There are at the end of it some Verses of the same Author, against the corruption of the Manners of his Time.

Victor of Marseilles.

* It also is printed by it self at Paris in 1560. in Octavo.

SEDULIUS.

Sedulius.

COelius *Sedulius, a Christian Poet, composed, under the Empire of Theodosius II. and Valentinian III. about the Year 430. an Heroick Poem, of the Life of Jesus Christ: It is intituled, Opus Paschale. A Paschal Work, because that Jesus Christ is our Passover. It is divided into five Books; the first begins at the Creation of the World, and runs through the most remarkable Histories of the Old Testament. The three others contain the Life of Jesus Christ. This Work is dedicated to an Abbot called Macedonius. It hath been reviewed and published by † Turcius Asterius. Arator, Cassiodorus, Fortunatius and Gregorius Turonensis, mention it as an excellent Poem. He put it himself afterward into Prose, [and adding it to the former four in Verse, made the Work to contain five Books;] we have them both with an Acrostick Hymn, which contains the Life of Jesus Christ in short. This Author had a Genius, the Style of his Poem is Noble and Great, his Notions are Poetical, and his Verses very Passable. It is not necessary to advertise [the Reader,] that this Sedulius is different from him who made the Commentary upon all St. Paul's Epistles, which is nothing properly but an Extract of the Commentaries of others. Since he quotes Authors much later than the Poet Sedulius, and among others St. Gregory the Pope, and Venerable Bede. It is evident that he lived a long time after. This is he who was an Englishman and Co-temporary with Bede.

Sedulius.

* By Nation a Scotchman

† Consul in 494.

The Poem of Sedulius hath been printed by Aldus Manutius in 1502 at Basil [in 1528, 1534. and with the Notes of Antonius Nebrissensis] in 1541. and hath been put into the Bibliotheca Patrum [Tom. 6.]

PHILIPPUS SIDETA.

Philippus Sideta.

THis is the Relation which Socrates gives us of this Author, and the Judgment he passes on him: Philip of Side, a City of Pamphylia, boasted, that he was the Father of Troilus the Sophist, a Native of the same City. Being but a Deacon, he conversed much with St. Chrysostome, and was afterwards ordained Priest. He was very laborious and diligent in the Studies of good Learning, and had made a great Collection of Books of all Sorts. He composed several Works in an Asiatick Style, for he confuted the Books of Julian, and composed the History of Christianity, divided into thirty Books: Each Book was parted into divers Sections, insomuch that there were in all near a thousand. The Argument of every Section is as large as the Section it self. He gave this Book the Name of a Christian History, and not of an Ecclesiastical History, and collected in this Work many Curious and Learned Observations that he might seem a great Philosopher. He speaks often of Theorems of Geometry, Astronomy, Arithmetick and Musick. He spends much Time and Pains in describing Islands, Mountains, Trees and several other things of little Importance: By these Means he hath made his Book very great, and, in my Judgment, useless, both to the Ignorant and Learned; for the Ignorant take no notice of the Ornaments of this Discourse, and the Learned condemn the vain Repetitions: Nevertheless, let every one give what Judgment he pleases of this Work. All that I shall say of it is this, that he inverts the Order of Time; for after he has related what passed in the Time of Theodosius, he ascends to the Time of Athanasius, and there often changes the natural Order of things.

Philippus Sideta.

Because he hoped to have been ordained Bishop of Constantinople in the room of Atticus, he takes the Liberty, in his History, to rail against the Ordination of Sisinnius, who was preferred before him, and reports very scandalous things of those who chose and ordained him.

Photius, who had read some part of this Work of Philip of Side, says much the same things of it, and passes the same Judgment upon it, in Code 35. of his Bibliotheca. 'I Philippus Sideta.

'have read, ſaith he, the Work of Philip of Side, intituled, 'The Chriſtian Hiſtory, which begins at the Creation of the 'World, and goes on as far as the Story of Moſes. Some-'times he treats of Things very ſhort, and ſometimes more 'copiouſly. The firſt Book contains twenty four Sections, 'and the twenty three others a like Number. Theſe are 'all we have ſeen. He is full of Words, but they are nei-'ther pleaſant nor elegant; but on the contrary are flat, 'and ſoon tire the Reader. We find in it a greater Show 'of Learning than Profit. He puts in many things into his 'Hiſtory, which are impertinent. Inſomuch that he that 'ſees this Work, would never call it an Hiſtory, but a 'Miſcellaneous Treatiſe, he makes ſo many needleſs Di-'greſſions. He was Con-temporary with Siſinnius and 'Proclus Biſhops of Conſtantinople: He often ſpeaks againſt 'the Former, in his Hiſtory, being diſpleaſed, becauſe be-'ing in the ſame Dignity, and in the ſame Church, Siſin-'nius was prefer'd to the Patriarchate before him, although 'he thought himſelf more Eloquent than he.' The Judg-ment which theſe Authors give of this Work, may make us not be troubled much at the loſs of it. [Niceph. Calliſtus quotes a Fragment of it.]

Philippus Sideta.

PHILOSTORGIUS.

Philoſtorgius.

Philoſtorgius, born in Cappadocia, about the Year 388, the Son of Carterius and Eulampia, undertook to write an Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, but being brought up in Arianiſm, and engaged in the Eunomian Par-ty *, his Work is rather a Panegyrick of theſe Hereticks, than an Hiſtory: Therein he openly declares againſt the Or-thodox, he ſlanders them, blames them, and abuſes them all-a-long it; on the contrary, he praiſes, at a venture, all the Arian Party. Aetius, according to him, was the great-eſt Man that ever was: He and Eunomius were the Reſto-rers of the Faith. Euſebius Biſhop of Nicomedia, Theophilus Biſhop of the Indies, and ſeveral Arian Biſhops, are the Saints that have done Miracles. In it the Semi-Arians meet with little better Treatment than the Catholicks. He blames the Deportment of Eudoxus, and deſcribes Acacius, as a cunning Impoſtor. St. Gregory Nazianzen is the only Per-ſon of the Orthodox whom he doth not abuſe. He cannot likewiſe forbear commending St. Baſil's Eloquence. In ſum, he is full of Falſities, Lyes and Calumnies againſt the Or-thodox Biſhops; and he hath written with ſo much partia-lity that we cannot ſafely believe any thing he ſays: Yet there are many things that may be uſeful to the Church. He gives ſeveral Examples of God's Providence. He com-mends Faſting and Continency. He approves of the Wor-ſhip of Martyrs, and the Reliques of Saints. He ſays, that the firſt Book of Maccabees is of greater Authority than the ſecond. He wholly rejects the third. His Style is plea-ſant and elaborate. He makes uſe of Poetical Expreſſions and choice Words very fitly. He is very happy in applying of Tropes and Emphatical Words; which would render his Diſcourſe very fine and pleaſing, if he uſed them mo-derately, and did not run the hazard of extraordinary and forced Expreſſions, which make it dull and flat. His Diſ-courſe is ſet out with ſo great variety of Figures, that it becomes thereby obſcure and tedious. He hath, very often very proper and Significant Words.

Philoſtorgius.

His Hiſtory is divided into twelve Books; it begins with the Controverſy between Arius and Alexander, that is to ſay, in 320. and ends at the Time when Theodoſius the younger admitted Valentinian III. into a Share of the Im-perial Government with him, who was the Son of Placi-dia and Conſtantius, about the Year 425. Every Book be-gins with one of the Letters of his own Name.

This Hiſtory of Philoſtorgius was had in ſo great Deteſta-tion among the Orthodox, that 'tis no wonder it has not been preſerved entire to our Times: But we have an A-bridgment of it in Photius, and ſome Extracts taken out of Suidas and other Authors. Jacobus Gothofredus, a learned Lawyer, firſt publiſhed them, with his Tranſlation and large Notes. This Book was printed at Geneva in 1634*. Since, Mr. Valeſius having reviewed this Abridgment by the Ma-nuſcripts, and corrected the Text in ſeveral Places, hath cauſed it to be printed with the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of Theodoret and Evagrius [at Paris in 1673].

* Hence called Athens.

* In Quarto, Dr. Cave.

NONNUS.

Nonnus.

Nonnus, a Chriſtian Poet, of the City of Panopolis in Ægypt, is reckoned among the Authors of the fifth Age, though it be not exactly known at what time he flouriſh'd*. All that can be ſaid is, that he lived after St. Gregory Nazianzen, but is more ancient than Juſtinian, ſince Agathias, who lived in the Time of this Emperor, quotes him in his fourth Book of the Gothick Wars. His Style and Manners are ſuitable to the Authors of the fourth Age. He hath made a Paraphraſe upon St. John's Goſpel in Verſe, in a ſwelling and lofty Style. Al-dus Manutius firſt publiſhed the Greek Text, in the begin-ning of the former Age, [in 1508. at Rome.] Several Ver-ſions have been ſince made of it, which were printed with the Text, at Lyons in 1590. at Frankfort in 1541. and at Heidelberg in 1596. Heinſius having ſpent much Pains up-on this Work put out a new Edition of it [with his own Exercitations upon it] at † Amſterdam in 1627. There was alſo another Edition at Paris by Cramoiſy in 1623. 'Tis alſo in the Bibliotheca Patrum, printed [at Paris] in 1624. [It was alſo printed at Leyden in 1598. in Octavo, with Nan-ſius's Notes.]

Nonnus.

* Dr. Cave placeth him in A. D. 410.

† At Leyden Dr. Cave.

This Author alſo hath compoſed another Poem in the ſame Style, but upon a very different Subject. It is divided into forty eight Books, called Dionyſiacks, containing the fabulous Expeditions of Bacchus [written while he was an Heathen, printed in Greek at Antwerp in 1569. in Quarto, in Greek and Latin at Hanover in 1605. in Octavo, among the Greek Poets at Geneva in 1606. and with Cunæus and Scaliger's Notes at Hanover in 1610.]

SOCRATES.

Socrates.

Socrates was born at Conſtantinople in the beginning of the Empire of Theodoſius. He ſtudied Grammar un-der the two famous Grammarians Helladius and Am-monius, who had withdrawn themſelves from Alexan-dria to Conſtantinople. After he had finiſhed his Studies, and for ſome time had profeſſed the Law, he undertook to write the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, from the Year 309. where Euſebius ends, and continues it to the Year 440. He there relates, in 7 Books, the great Events which happened in the Church from the Converſion of Conſtantine. This Hiſtory is written, as Mr. Valeſius obſerves, with a great deal of Judgment and Exactneſs. His Exactneſs appears, in his be-ing induſtrious to conſult the Original Records, the Biſhops Letters, the Writings of the Authors of his own time, of which he often gives us an Extract in his Hiſtory. He is alſo careful to ſet down exactly the Succeſſion of Biſhops, and the years in which every thing was tranſacted, and he deſcribes them by the Conſuls and Olympiads. His Judg-ment appears in the Reflections and Obſervations, which he makes now and then, which are very judicious and im-partial. We may ſee in the 22*d*. Chap. of the 5*th*. Book, an Example of the diligent Enquiry he had made about the Diſcipline of the Church. He there treats of the Diſpute on what day the Feaſt of Eaſter ſhould be celebrated, and remarks very judiciouſly, that there was no juſt reaſon to diſpute a thing of ſo little Conſequence with ſo much heat; that it was not neceſſary to follow the cuſtom of the Jews; that the Apoſtles had no general Rule for the keeping of Feſtivals, but they were brought into the Church by uſe only; that they had left no Law concerning the time when Eaſter ſhould be celebrated, and that it was only for the ſake of the Hiſtory that it is related, that Jeſus Chriſt was crucified in the Feaſt of Unleavened Bread; that the Apoſt-les did not trouble themſelves to make any Orders about Holy-days, but their only deſign was to teach Faith and Virtue; that the Apoſtles having decreed nothing concern-ing the celebration of Eaſter, it is no wonder if the Churches did not unanimouſly agree about it; after he hath brought down the Quarrel from Victor to the Council of Nice, he adds ſome Heads about the different Ceremonies of the Church. He finds great Differences about the Lent-Faſt. The Romans, ſaith he, content themſelves to faſt three Weeks, Saturday and Sunday excepted. The Chriſtians of Illyria and Achaia, as alſo thoſe of Ægypt, faſt ſeven Weeks before Eaſter, and have given the Name of Lent to all that ſpace of time. Others begin ſeven Weeks before, but faſt no more than three Weeks, each conſiſting of five Days, leaving out two Fortnights in which they do not faſt at all; and yet they alſo call their Faſt by the Name of Lent. Nor is there only a diſagreement about the number of Faſting-days, but alſo about the Abſtinence it ſelf. For ſome eat no living Creature, others eat nothing but Fiſh, others admit of Fowls, which were created out of the Wa-ters, as it is ſaid in Geneſis. Some abſtain from the Fruits of Trees and Eggs. There are ſome that eat nothing but Bread, others abſtain from that alſo. Laſtly, there are ſome who allow themſelves not to eat till after three a Clock in the Afternoon, but they make no difficulty to eat all ſorts of Meat. There are an infinite number of like Practices, differing in different Churches, of which each labours to give a Reaſon. There is no leſs difference about the days for the ſolemn Aſſemblies of the Faithful. All Churches, excepting thoſe of Rome and Alexandria, celebrate the Holy Myſteries on Saturday. The People of Ægypt and Thebais have their Meetings on the ſame day, but they do not receive the Euchariſt as the others; for after they have feaſted themſelves, they communicate in the Evening. At Alexandria they meet on Wedneſday and Saturday to hear the Holy Scripture read, and to perform the Divine Worſhip, but they do not receive the Sacrament. In this Church of Alexandria likewiſe they chooſe their Singers and Readers promiſcuouſly out of the Catechumens or Faithful. In Theſſaly, if a Clergyman, who is Married, lies with his Wife after Ordination, they deprive him of his Office. In the Eaſt, the Clerks and Biſhops themſelves abſtain from their Wives, but it is of their own Accord, and without being obliged to it by any Law; and there are many who have had Children by their Wives, while they were Biſhops. It is ſaid, that Heliodorus Biſhop of Trica, who when he was young made ſome Amorous Books, was the Author of this Cuſtom, which hath obtained not only in Theſſaly, but alſo in Macedonia and Achaia. In Theſſaly they baptize upon Eaſter-day only. At Antioch the Site of the Church is contrary to others, the Altar not being turned toward the Eaſt, but toward the Weſt. In Theſſaly and at Jeruſalem, as ſoon as the Lamps are lighted, they betake themſelves to their Prayers. At Cæſarea in Cappadocia, and in the Iſle of Cyprus, the Biſhops and Prieſts at the ſame time interpret Holy Scriptures. Laſtly, it is hard to find any two Churches exactly agreeing in their Ceremonies. The Prieſts do not preach ot Alexandria. This Cuſtom began in the time of Arius, who troubled the Church by his Sermons. They faſt every Saturday at Rome. The Cauſe of theſe differences, and many others proceeds from the Cuſtoms eſtabliſhed at ſeveral times by the Biſhops, which being received and authorized by their Succeſſors, have obtained the force of a Law.

Socrates.

of

Socrates.

It may be that Socrates is miſtaken in ſome of theſe Articles, and that he hath taken the Error of ſome particular for the practice of the Univerſal Church; but this is a ſign that he was curious, and that he had made very exact Obſervations and Diſquiſitions touching the Diſcipline of the Church. He had at firſt compoſed the two firſt Books of his Hiſtory upon the Credit of Rufinus, but afterwards having diſcovered by reading the Works of St. Athanaſius, that that Hiſtorian had omitted the principal Circumſtances of the Perſecution, which that valiant Defender of Chriſt's Divinity had ſuffered, he amended the two firſt Books. As for the five laſt, he compoſed them as well upon the Credit of Rufinus and ſome other Authors, as from the Records of the Church, and the relation of thoſe that had been Witneſſes of the things, or from what he had ſeen himſelf. But all this hath not ſecured him from falling ſometimes into very conſiderable Faults, as when he confounds Maximian with Maximin; when he aſſures us, that there were five Biſhops condemned in the Council of Nice for having refuſed to approve the Confeſſion of Faith, altho' it appears by a Letter of the Council clearly, that there were but two, viz. Theonas and Secundus; when he attributes the three Confeſſions of Sirmium to the ſame Council, altho' they were made by three ſeveral Councils, and he hath committed ſome other Faults of leſs Conſequence. Socrates.

It cannot be denied but he ſpeaks very well of the Novatians, and that he had a great kindneſs for that Sect, for he is curious in making a Catalogue of their Biſhops; he commends them, relates what they have ſaid and done, and owns that he hath a particular Eſteem for them. In his Opinion, Novatian is a Martyr, and the Novatians are a very Religious People, who have not altered the Faith, their Practices and Cuſtoms are not to be ſlighted, and the greateſt part of Men reject them for no other reaſon, but becauſe they are Lovers of a looſer Church-diſcipline. This is all that perſuades the World that Socrates was a Novatian. Notwithſtanding this he always gives us the Name of the Church and the Orthodox; he reckons the Novatians among the Schiſmaticks, l. 6. c. 20. and 23. which makes it apparent, that he was not a through Novatian, altho' he had a good Opinion of their Sect, and did believe perhaps that they might be ſaved; being perſuaded, as he was, that they had preſerved the ancient Diſcipline, and that the difference which was between them and the Orthodox, was not in Matters of Faith.

The Style of Socrates is plain and eaſie. He hath nothing of an Orator, and keeps himſelf within the bounds of a ſingle Narration, which is not adorned with the Elegancies uſual among Hiſtorians, but which hath nothing in it obſcure or intricate. He produces long Quotations to prove the Matters of Fact, which he relates. The ſame Authors who tranſlated the Hiſtory of Euſebius, have alſo tranſlated Socrates and Sozomen's; for which reaſon it is to no purpoſe to repeat their Verſions and Editions in this place.

SOZOMEN.

Sozomen.

HErmias Sozomenus lived at the ſame time with Socrates, was of the ſame Profeſſion, and undertook a Work of the ſame Nature. He was of a good Family, a Native of a City in Palæſtine, called Bethelia near Gaza. His Grandfather having been converted by a Miracle of Hilarion's, applied himſelf to the ſtudy of Holy Scripture, and converſed very much with the Monks of his own Country. Sozomen was brought up among them, and had imbibed a very great eſteem for that Order. This he plainly diſcovers in his Hiſtory, where he gives an high commendation of a Monaſtick Life, and enlarges himſelf very much upon the Actions, and Manner of living uſed among thoſe Solitaries. This is almoſt all that is conſiderable, which he addeth to the Hiſtory of Socrates, for he begins and ends at the ſame time. I ſay, that that's all he hath added, becauſe I am perſuaded that he wrote after Socrates. For beſides, that he was then a Lawyer, when he compoſed his Hiſtory, and by conſequence was younger than Socrates, who had left off that Profeſſion, it is viſible enough that he follows the Relation of Socrates, to which he adds or changes ſome things now and then; alſo he is ordinarily put after Socrates. Theſe Additions have made his Hiſtory larger, and obliged him to divide it into nine Books. Sozomen.

His Style is more florid and elegant than Socrates's, but he is not ſo judicious an Author. He hath inſerted ſome things into his Hiſtory, which are not agreeable to it. He is guilty of all the ſame Faults that Socrates is, and is himſelf fallen into more groſs ones. As when he ſays, that Pope Julius not being able to go to the Council of Nice by reaſon of his great Age, he ſent Vito and Vincentius; although 'tis certain that that Council was held under Pope Sylveſter. He confounds the Ordination of Gregory by the Church of Alexandria, with the Intruſion of George. He hath been very negligent in ſetting down the Catalogues of the Biſhops of the great Sees. He hath placed Romanus in the number of the Patriarchs of Antioch, although he was no more than a Deacon. He makes the Popedom of Julius to laſt 25 Years, whereas it continued but fifteen Years, and puts his Death after Gallus's, although it happen'd two Years before. I omit to ſpeak of many more Faults in this Author. His Hiſtory is dedicated to Theodoſius the Younger.

THEODORITUS.

Theodoret.

* Hiſtoria Religioſa, or Philotheus.

THeodoritus was born at Antioch, in the Year 368. His Birth was accompanied with Miracles before and after, which he himſelf relates in his Religious Hiſtory: * For if we may believe him, his Mother was cured of an incurable Diſeaſe, which ſhe had in her Eye, by a Monk called Peter. It was by the Prayers of another Religious Man, called Macedonius, that God granted her to conceive a Son, and bring him into the World: And it was by the Prayers of the firſt of theſe two Holy Monks that ſhe was preſerved from Death after her Delivery. Her Husband and Son felt alſo the Effects of the Deſerts of this Holy Man, being often healed of their Diſtempers by the touching of his Girdle. Theodoret.

After ſo great Favours, which God had ſhewn to this Infant, who can in the leaſt doubt but that his Parents ought to devote him to God, who had given him to them (a)?

(a) Devote him to God, &c.] Hence he was called Theodoret, either becauſe he was given by God, or devoted to God. Euſtathius and Suidas obſerve, that we ought to read and pronounce his Name Θεοδωρήτος, Theodorit, and not Θεοδώρητος, Thodoret. The Ancients call him Θεοδώριτος, and the Manuſcripts write him ſo; notwithſtanding Uſage hath corrupted the Latin Name, and made him called Theodoret. The more Learned indeed call him always Theodoret, but if we ſhould call him Theodoret in the French, it would not be known what we mean. The Greek do not give him the Name of Saint, becauſe he hath written againſt St. Cyril, and the Fifth Council hath imprinted a Mark of Diſgrace upon his Memory.

Theodoret. His Mother had engaged her ſelf to it, when the Holy Anchorite promiſed her a Son; which ſhe performed by putting him into the Monaſtery of St. Euprepius, when he was but ſeven Years Old; where he learned the Sciences, Religion and Piety. He had for his Maſter Theodorus of Mopſueſta, and St. John Chryſoſtome, and for his Fellow-Scholars John, afterwards Biſhop of Antioch, and Neſtorius, who was not long after preferred to the See of Conſtantinople. The Biſhops of Antioch having knowledge of his Learning and Virtue, admitted him into Holy Orders; yet did he not, upon that account, change either his Habitation or manner of Life, but found out a way to reconcile the Exerciſes of a Religious Life with the Function of a Clergy-man. After the Death of his Father and Mother, he diſtributed his whole Inheritance to the Poor, reſerving nothing at all of it to himſelf.

The Biſhoprick of Cyrus being become vacant about the Year of Chriſt 420 (b). The Biſhop of Antioch ordained Theodoret againſt his Will, and ſent him to govern that Church. Cyrus is a City of Syria, in the Province of Euphrateſia, which was a Country unpleaſant and barren, but very populous: There were eight hundred Villages which were ſubject to that Biſhoprick. The Inhabitants commonly ſpake the Syriack Tongue, few of them underſtood Greek, they were almoſt all poor, rude and barbarous; many of them were engaged in prophane Superſtitions or in ſuch groſs Errors; as rendred them more like Heathens than Chriſtians. The Learning and Worth of Theodoret ſeemed to qualifie him for a greater See; yet he remained in this, and diſcharged all the Offices of a good Biſhop. He cleared his Dioceſs from Barbariſm and from Errors, which were predominant among them. He converted eight Villages, infected with the Hereſy of the Marcionites, and planted the true Faith in two other Towns, where there was none but Arians and Eunomians. In a word, he utterly extirpated Hereſy out of his Dioceſs, yet not without much Labour, and running the Hazard of his Life, for it coſt him ſometimes ſome of his Blood, being often purſued with Showers of Stones, and almoſt killed by the Infidels; ſo that in him we have the Picture of a good Shepherd, who layeth down his Life for the Sheep. But the Goodneſs of Theodoret extended it ſelf much farther. He prevented the Churches of Phœnicia from falling into Error; and being called to Antioch by the Patriarch of that great See, he preached there with Applauſe and Benefit. Let no Man think that he Courted this Employment, or ſought an opportunity to leave his Dioceſs, to reſide in a more civilized City, he went not to Antioch but with regret, in obedience to the Commands of his Patriarch, and the Laws of the Church; which condemn a Biſhop who comes not to the Synod of his Patriarch, when he is cited thither: Yea, he was ſo exact in that Point, that he aſſures us, that he had the good Luck, not to leave his Dioceſs to go to Antioch, above five or ſix times under three Patriarchs, viz. under Theodotus, John and Domnus, and that by their expreſs Order only. He governed his People with ſo much gentleneſs that he gained the Love of all the World. All the time that he was Biſhop, he never had any Suit at Law with any Perſon: No Man brought an Action againſt him, nor did he the like againſt any Man. He was ſo very careleſs of his own Gain, that he kept nothing for himſelf but ſome plain Garments, with which he was cloathed. Neither he himſelf nor his Domeſticks would receive any thing of any Man: Neither himſelf nor his Clergy did ever appear at the Judgment Seats. He employed but a very ſmall part of the Church-Revenues to maintain himſelf very frugally, and gave the reſt to the Poor, or employed it for the erecting ſome publick Buildings, neceſſary for the City of Cyrus. He ſet up Cloyſters, raiſed two Bridges, repaired the Baths, and conveyed Water, by a Conduit, into the City. He requeſted of the Empreſs Pulcheria, that ſhe would releaſe the Inhabitants of the Country of Cyrus from a Tribute which was very grievous to them. He provided a Phyſician for the City. In fine, he laid out all he had for the common Good. He was not only a Benefactor to his own People, but his Charity extended it ſelf to Strangers: A Lady of Carthage, named Mary, who had been taken and ſold by the Vandals, being brought to Cyrus, taſted of the effects of his kindneſs, for he fed her at the expence of the Church, and having purchaſed her Liberty, ſent her home to her Father. He relieved alſo another Woman, who had been forced to make her eſcape out of Africa, and leave all her Eſtate there, and recommended her to other Biſhops his Neighbours. As he had been brought up among the Monks, ſo he had a very particular Love for the Solitaries; he went often to viſit them, recommended himſelf to their Prayers, and ſhewed that he had a very great Regard and Reſpect for them. He celebrated the Holy Myſteries by the Hands of his Deacon, in favour of Maris the Monk, who had been Twenty ſeven Years in Solitude, without being preſent at the Celebration of the Sacrifice; but this was a particular Act of Theodoret. Nevertheleſs, we muſt conſider the manner how he managed himſelf in the Affairs of the Church and Religion, in which he had a greater Share than any other Biſhop of his Time. Theodoret.

Although John Patriarch of Antioch, appeared at the Head of the Eaſtern Biſhops, yet it may be ſaid, that the whole Party were principally ſwayed by the Counſels of Theodoret, who was, as it were, the Soul and Spirit of it. It was by his Counſel that John wrote at firſt to Neſtorius, to receive the Term of The Mother of God. It was he that undertook to confute the Anathematiſms of St. Cyril, and accuſed them of Hereſy. In the Council of Epheſus he was one of the moſt earneſt Defenders of the Party of the Orientals, and he held a conſiderable place among the Deputies, which they ſent to the Court, where he maintained their Cauſe with Courage. Being returned from Antioch, he exaſperated things more, by cauſing them to confirm what they had done againſt St. Cyril and Memnon, and by compoſing Five Books againſt St. Cyril. When a Pacification was propounded, he acknowledged indeed, that the Letter, which St. Cyril had written, contained Orthodox Doctrine, but he would have them condemn his Anathematiſms, and not be obliged by any means to ſubſcribe the Condemnation of Neſtorius.

When a Peace was concluded between John Patriarch of Antioch, and St. Cyril, he was diſpleaſed that Neſtorius was forſaken. He oppoſed the Peace for ſome Time, but at laſt entered into it, and wrote a very obliging Letter to St. Cyril, wherein he praiſed his Treatiſe, De Capro Emiſſario, Of the Scape Goat: He received Thanks from that Biſhop, and ever after they had a Correſpondence by Letters, and after his Death he quotes him, with much Honour, among the Fathers of the Church. I am very ſenſible, that ſome Men moved by the Teſtimony of Liberatus, pretend, that Theodoret made a Third Party different from both the Orientals, and St. Cyril, which he calls by the Name of Acephali, but it is a falſe Aſſertion, which confutes it ſelf, ſince there never were any other Acephali known but thoſe who were in the Error of Eutyches. Beſides, it appears, by the very Confeſſion of Theodoret, writing to Dioſcorus, and by the Courſe of his Hiſtory, that he was joyned in Communion not only with the Eaſtern, but alſo the Weſtern and Ægyptian Biſhops. Nevertheleſs, there was always a certain Antipathy between the Eaſtern and the Ægyptian Biſhops, and principally between Theodoret and St. Cyril. They had ſome Difference upon the account of the Remembrance of Theodorus of Mopſueſta, and they always continued in a kind of Defiance one of another. The Death of St. Cyril did not put an End to the Quarrel, for Dioſcorus, his Succeſſor, declared himſelf openly againſt Theodoret, and cauſed him to be excommunicated in his Church, through the Accuſation of certain Monks come from the Eaſt: But Domnus Biſhop of Antioch ſtood up in his Defence: Flavian Biſhop of Conſtantinople, acknowledged him to be an Orthodox Biſhop: But Dioſcorus having the Authority to call a General Aſſembly at Epheſus, in which he did what he pleaſed; he therein depoſed Theodoret, in his Abſence, and without Hearing, after he had been forbidden by the Emperor to go to the Synod. Theodoret ſeeing no Body that could defend him in the Eaſt, Domnus having ſubſcribed his Condemnation, and Flavian being dead, after he had been unjuſtly depoſed by the Synod of Dioſcorus: He ſeeing, I ſay, himſelf unlikely to find any Support ſtrong enough in the Eaſtern Church, had recourſe to Pope Leo, beſought his Help, and conſulted him, Whether he thought him obliged to yield to the Sentence, that had been pronounced againſt him, and deſired him at the ſame Time to demand a new Synod, and he wrote himſelf to Patricius Anatolius to endeavour to obtain it of the Emperor. St. Leo having no regard to the Judgment of Dioſcorus, received his Deputies favourably, and continued Communion with him. He demanded, that all things ſhould remain in the ſame ſtate that they were before the Judgment of Dioſcorus; and that he would hold a General Council to re-examine the Caſe of Flavianus and Eutyches. He could not obtain this of Theodoſius, but Marcian, his Succeſſor, had regard to their Remonſtrances, and aſſembled a General Council at Chalcedon, where Theodoret was preſent. In the Firſt Seſſion the Imperial Commiſſioners ſaid, that Theodoret might enter; the Biſhops of Ægypt, Illyria and Palæſtine were againſt it; the Eaſtern Biſhops on the contrary, and thoſe that were ſubject to the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, maintained, that he ought to be received; and cryed out, that the Ægyptians ought to be turned out. After great Clamours on both Sides, it was allowed that Theodoret ſhould take his Seat in the Synod, in (b) About the Year 420.] In his Letter 81. to Nomus the Conſul, he ſays, that he had then been Biſhop, twenty five Years. He ſets down the ſame time in his eightieth Letter to Eutrechius. Nomus was Conſul in 445. out of which, if we take 25 Years, the remainder will be 420. But in the 113*th* Letter, written to St. Leo, after the Conventicle of Epheſus, in 449. he ſaith, there were 26 Years ſince he was Biſhop. This will prove but only, that he was ſo in 423. The difference is of ſmall conſequence.

conſi-

consideration that St. Leo had admitted him into his Communion, and judged him worthy of his Bishoprick. This was ordained only for the present, and without Prejudice to either Party, and with an entire Reservation of their Actions, upon the Heads of Accusation, which they had propounded one against the other. This Business was brought to a Determination in the Eighth Session of the Council, in which a Definitive Sentence was passed in favour of Theodoret. Here is a particular acccount how the whole Business was transacted. Some Bishops (it is probable they were the Ægyptian Bishops, who were the Accusers of Theodoret) required that he should pronounce Anathema against Nestorius. Theodoret answered, that he had presented Petitions to the Emperor and St. Leo. The Bishops replied, that there was no need to read any thing more, let him but pronounce Anathema against Nestorius. Theodoret returned Answer, that (praised be God) he had always been nourished, and brought up in the true Faith by very Orthodox Persons; that he had always taught the Orthodox Faith; that he did condemn Nestorius, Eutyches, and all other Persons, who held any Opinions that were not sound. Those Bishops that were not his Friends, would not be satisfied with this Declaration, but still required, that he should pronounce distinctly Anathema against Nestorius, against his Doctrine and Followers. Theodoret answered, that above all things he desired, that they would be perswaded that he had no Design of staying in a great City, that he was not ambitious of Honours, and that he was not come thither for that End; That he was come meerly to clear himself from that Calumny, which they had nourished of him, and to justify himself to be Orthodox; That he did pronounce Anathema against Nestorius, Eutyches, and all other Persons, who believed that there were Two Sons of God. The Bishops here interrupted him, and pressed him to say Anathema to Nestorius, and to those of his Judgment. Theodoret, who was afraid that by condemning Nestorius clearly and absolutely, he should seem to disapprove the Opinions of the Ægyptians, whom he thought Eutychians, answered, that he would not say Anathema to Nestorius till he had made a Profession of what he believed. As he began to say, I believe then, he was interrupted by his Adversaries, who cryed out tumultuously, He is an Heretick, He is a Nestorian, away with this Heretick. Theodoret seeing himself born down by tumultuous Cries, was obliged to pronounce Anathema against Nestorius, and all those who did not confess that the Virgin Mary is the Mother of God, or who divided the only Son of God into two. He adds, that he did subscribe the Form of Faith, and St. Leo's Letter, and that he was of the same Judgment. Then the Imperial Commissioners, accepting his Speech, declared there remained nothing more of Difficulty in reference to the Person of Theodoret, since he had pronounced Anathema to Nestorius, had been received by St. Leo, had subscribed the Form of Faith agreed upon by the Council, and the Letter of St. Leo, and that the Council had no more to do but to confirm Pope Leo's Act by their Judgment. After this Declaration all the Bishops cryed out, Theodoret is worthy to hold his See: And after many other Acclamations of that nature, the chief of them gave their Voices separately, and all the others followed their Judgments, insomuch that the Commissioners pronounced, that, according to the Judgment of the Holy Council, Theodoret should remain in the possession of the Church of Cyrus. He returned thither soon after the Council, and passed the rest of his Life in quiet, composing his Commentaries upon the Holy Scriptures. He died in peace, in the beginning of the Reign of the Emperor Leo, in 457, or 458. in the Seventieth or Eightieth Year of his Age. But his Enemies, after his Death, revived the Accusations, that they had formed against him in his Life-time, and contrary to the Judgment of the Council of Chalcedon, used all their Endeavours to obscure his Memory. The Ring-leaders of this Faction designed it against the Council it self, and did not attack the Memory of Theodoret with any other Design, but that they might give a Blow to the Council it self. But they had insensibly drawn over many Orthodox Persons to their Opinion, and being upheld by the Authority of Justinian the Emperor, they brought about their Undertaking, by causing his Writings to be condemned in the Council, which they account the Fifth General Council. But notwithstanding the Judgment of this Council, many of the Orthodox have always defended, and do still defend his Person and Writings. But this is not a convenient Place to treat of this Matter, of which I shall speak afterward. This sufficeth to have advertised you, that Theodoret met with as bad Usage, almost, after his Death, as he had while he lived.

Theodoret.

Of all the Fathers, who have composed Works of different kinds, Theodoret is one of those who hath been very lucky in every one of them. There are some who have been excellent Writers in Matters of Controversie, but bad Interpreters. Others have been good Historians, but naughty Divines. Some have good success in Morality, who have no skill in Doctrinal Points. Those, who have applied themselves to confute the Pagan Religion by their own Principles and Authors, have ordinarily little knowledge in the Mysteries of our Religion. Lastly, It is very rare for those, who have addicted themselves to Works of Piety, to be good Criticks. Theodoret had all those Qualities, and it may be said, that he hath equally deserved the Name of a good Interpreter, Divine, Historian, Writer of Controversies, Apologist for Religion, and Author of Works of Piety. But he hath principally excelled in his Compositions upon the Holy Scripture. He hath out-done almost all other Commentators in that kind according to the Judgment of the learned Photius. 'His Language, saith the same 'Author, is very proper for a Commentary; for he explains 'in proper and significant Terms whatsoever is obscure and 'difficult in the Text, and renders the Mind more fit to 'read and understand it, by the pleasantness and elegan-'cy of his Discourse. He doth not weary his Reader by 'long Digressions, but on the contrary he labours to instruct 'him ingeniously, clearly and methodically, in every thing 'that seems hard. He never departs from the Purity and E-'legancy of the Attick Tongue, if there be nothing that 'obliges him to speak of abstruse Matters, to which the 'Ears are not accustomed. For it is certain, that he pas-'ses over nothing that needs Explication, and it is almost 'impossible to find any Interpreter who unfolds all man-'ner of Difficulties better, and leaves fewer things obscure. 'We may find many others who speak elegantly, and ex-'plain clearly, but we shall scarcely find any who have 'written well, and have forgotten nothing which hath 'need of Illustration, without being too diffuse, nor with-'out running out into Digressions, at least, such as are not 'absolutely necessary for clearing the Matter in Hand. Ne-'vertheless this is what Theodoret has observed in all his 'Commentaries upon Holy Scripture, in which he hath 'wondrously well opened the Text by his Labour and 'diligent Search.

Theodoret.

There are two sorts of Works of Theodoret upon Holy Scripture. The one is by way of Question and Answer, the other is a Commentary, wherein he followeth the words of the Text. The eight first Books of the Bible, that is to say, the Pentateuch of Moses, the Books of Joshua, Judges and Ruth; the Books of Kings and Chronicles are explained after the first manner, the other are expounded by Commentaries.

The first of these Works is intitul'd, Εἰς τὰ ἄποχα τῆς θείας γραφῆς κατ' ἐκλογὴν, which is translated thus; Of some select doubtful Questions of Holy Scripture; but may be better translated, Select Questions upon the difficult places of Holy Scripture. It is written by way of Question and Answer. The Question propounds the difficulty, and the Answer resolves it. This is the last of the Works of Theodoret. He composed it at the desire of Hypatius, as he tells him in the Preface, where he observes, that there were two sorts of Persons who raise difficulties out of the Holy Scriptures; the one do it with a wicked Intent, to find in the Holy Scriptures Falsities or Contradictions; but others do it with a design to inform themselves, and learn that which they demand. Theodoret undertakes to stop the Mouth of the former, by making it appear, that there is neither Falsity nor Contradiction in Holy Scripture, and to content the latter by satisfying all their Doubts, so that the Intent of this Work is not so much to explain the Literal Sense of Holy Scripture, as to answer the Scruples that might rise in the Mind by reading the Text.

There are some of the Questions which are very useless, and which do not naturally come into the Mind. As for Example, he demands in the first Question, why the Author of the Pentateuch did not make a Discourse upon the Being and Nature of God, before he spake of the Creation? Few Men would make that Doubt. Theodoret says, that he condescended to the Weakness of those he had to instruct in speaking first of the Creatures which they knew, that he might make known the Creator to them, for he hath sufficiently discovered the Eternity, Wisdom and Bounty of that Being, in composing a History of the Creation; and lastly, because he spake to Persons who had already some Idea of him, since Moses had spoken already in Ægypt in his Name, and had taught them that he is what he is, a Name that signifies his Eternity. The following Questions are concerning the Angels. He pretends, that Moses hath not spoken of their Creation for fear they should be taken for Gods. He teaches, that they are created and finite Beings; that they keep their place in the Universe; that they are appointed to defend the People and Nations; and likewise, that every Person hath his Guardian Angel; that they were created at the same time with the World, tho' it may be said, that their Creation was before that of Heaven and Earth. After these Preliminary Questions, which serve only for the explication of the Text, he resolves others that serve to clear the Text. One of the Principal is upon these words. The Spirit of God moved upon the Face of the Waters. 'Some, saith he, believe, that it is the Holy Spi-'rit who animated the Waters, and made them fruitful; 'but I am of Opinion, that it is the Air, which is called 'in this place the Spirit of God. For having said, that God 'created the Heaven and Earth, and made mention also of Theodoret.

‘ the Waters under the Name of the Abyſs, he ought ne-‘ ceſſarily to ſpeak of the Air, which is extended upon the ‘ Surface of the Waters even to the Heaven. And it is for ‘ that reaſon that he makes uſe of the Term, it moved, which ‘ ſhews the Nature of the Air.’ Theodoret propounds alſo a multitude of other Queſtions that are curious, ſuch as theſe that follow: Whether there be one only Heaven, or many? He ſeems to admit of no more than two. He is not contented to give Solutions of his own, but ſometimes he relates other Mens, as upon that famous Text of Geneſis, where it is ſaid, that Man was made in the Image and Likeneſs of God. He cites ſome Paſſages out of Diodorus, Theodorus of Mopſueſta and Origen, to prove that it ought to be underſtood of the Soul of Man, and he quotes them alſo, tho’ but ſeldom, upon ſome other Queſtions, if yet theſe Citations have not been added to the Text of Theodoret, which is ſo much the more probable, becauſe they are not to be found in the Manuſcript of the King’s Library. That he may give the true Senſe of Scripture, he hath recourſe often to the Verſions of the ancient Greek Tranſlators, and likewiſe to the Hebrew Text, which he read in the Hexapla of Origen, and in the Interpretation of Hebrew Words by that Father. He doth not at all ſearch into the Allegories, but applies himſelf to the explication of the Letter and the Hiſtory, and ordinarily he pitches upon the moſt plain and natural Senſe. As for Example, when he explains what is meant by the Tree of Life, and the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil, he thinks it enough to ſay that theſe Names were given them upon the account of the Effects which they produced, that the one preſerved Life, and the other made Man to know what Sin was. To make it evident why our firſt Parents were not aſhamed of their Nakedneſs, he ſaith, that they were like Infants being not yet defiled with Sin. In ſum, that Cuſtom did take away or diminiſh Shame, as we ſee in Seamen, who being accuſtomed to be Naked, are not in the leaſt aſhamed when they ſtrip themſelves; and as it is the faſhion in Baths, without which it would make ſome Impreſſion. He believes not, that Man was created Immortal; but he ſays, that God did not paſs the Sentence of Death upon him till after he had ſinned, that he might beget in him a greater hatred of Sin. He ſaith, that Adam being driven out of Paradiſe, was ſent into a place not much diſtant from it, that the ſight of the place might put him in mind of his Sin. He quotes Theodorus, who thought, that by the Cherubims which were placed at the Gate of Paradiſe, they ought not to underſtand Angels, nor any Spiritual Eſſences, but Apparitions and Phantoms, which had the ſhape of Ghaſtly Creatures. He doubts not, but that Enoch was tranſlated alive into ſome place to preach the Reſurrection, but that no Man ought to trouble himſelf to know where it is. The Sons of God of whom it is ſaid, that they had familiarity with the Daughters of Men, are not, according to the Judgment of Theodoret, Angels, but the Poſterity of Seth, who marryed themſelves to the Daughters of the Generation of Cain, of whom were born thoſe great Men to whom they gave the Names of Giants. The reaſon why the firſt Patriarchs lived ſo long a time, was, that Mankind might be multiplied, and for that reaſon it was, that they married ſo many Women. In the Queſtions upon Exodus, he maintains, that it was God and not an Angel which appeared to Moſes in the Flaming Buſh. He enlarges himſelf much upon theſe words, The Lord hardned the Heart of Pharaoh, that he might prove, that it was Pharaoh himſelf that hardened his own Heart, againſt all the Admonitions and Chaſtiſements of God, who treated him with Goodneſs and Mercy in ſparing him. And in explaining in what Senſe God may be ſaid to harden his Heart, he brings this familiar Example: The Sun is ſaid to melt Wax and harden Clay, altho’ there is but one Vertue only in it, which is to make hot; by the ſame Goodneſs and Patience of God, two contrary Effects are wrought, the one is profitable to ſome, and the other renders others guilty; which is as much as to ſay, that it converts ſome and hardens others. As Jeſus Chriſt hath declared in his Goſpel, when he ſays that he came, That thoſe that ſee not, might ſee; and that they which ſee, might be made blind. The deſign of Jeſus Chriſt was not to make thoſe blind, who could ſee, for he wills, that all Men ſhould be ſaved, and come to the knowledge of the Truth, but he notes by this what happened. For Man being a free Agent, they who have believed ſecure their Salvation; but on the contrary, they who believe not, are themſelves the Authors of their own Damnation. It is in this Senſe that Judas, who could ſee as he was an Apoſtle, became blind; ’tis in this Senſe alſo that St. Paul, who was blind, received his ſight; ’tis in this Senſe likewiſe, that the Jews are blinded and the Gentiles ſee; yet the World may not be deprived of the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, becauſe ſome Men make an ill uſe of it. Altho’ Theodoret ſeldom expounds any Allegories, he cannot avoid doing it ſometimes. In ſpeaking of the Jewiſh Paſſover, he there diſcovers the Relation it has to the new Law, which he unfolds in a very natural way. The Sacrifices and Ceremonies of the old Law afford him Subjects of Allegory in his Queſtions upon Leviticus. He alſo referrs many to Morality, and draws Inſtructions for Mens manners out of the greateſt part of the Ordinances of Leviticus and the Book of Numbers. He hath made many ſuch like Reflections in his Queſtions upon Deuteronomy. He confines himſelf more to the Hiſtorical and Literal Senſe in his Queſtions upon Joſhua, Judges and Ruth, which make up the Octateuch, and in thoſe which he hath compoſed upon the four Books of Kings and two Books of Chronicles. Theſe laſt are a ſecond part of his Work, and have a ſpecial Preface, in which he obſerves after what manner the Books of Kings and Chronicles were compoſed. Theſe are his Words. ‘ There were, ſaith he, many Pro‘ phets who have left us no Books, and whoſe Names we ‘ learn out of the Hiſtory of the Chronicles. Every one of ‘ theſe Prophets wrote ordinarily what happened in their ‘ time. For this reaſon it is, that the firſt Book of the Kings
‘ is called by the Hebrews and Syrians, the Prophecy of ‘ Samuel. We need only to read it, and we ſhall be con‘ vinced of the Truth of this. They, then, that compoſed
‘ the Books of Kings, wrote them a long time after from ‘ theſe ancient Memoirs. For how could they that lived
‘ in the time of Saul or David, write that which happened ‘ afterward under Hezekiah and Joſiah? How could they ‘ relate the War of Nebuchadnezzar, the Siege of Jeruſa-
‘ lem, the Captivity of the People and the Death of Nebu-
‘ chadnezzar? It is then viſible, that every Prophet wrote
‘ what paſſed in his time, and that others making a Collecti-
‘ on of their Memoirs have compoſed the Books of Kings?
‘ And after theſe, came other Hiſtoriographers, who made
‘ a Collection of what the firſt had forgotten, of which they ‘ compoſed the two Books of Chronicles.’ This is the manner in which Theodoret thinks, that the Books of Kings and Chronicles were compoſed. We will not ſtay longer to ſpeak in particular of thoſe Queſtions which may be eaſily run over. The Tranſlation of the Queſtions upon the Octateuch was made by Johannes Picus Preſident of the Inqueſts of the Parliament of Paris, who firſt publiſhed them in 1558, [at Paris.] Gentian Harvet Canon of Rheims, tranſlated the Queſtions upon the Chronicles and Kings.

Theodoret.

The Commentary of Theodoret upon all the Pſalms is an excellent Work. He ſaith in the Preface, ‘ That he had al‘ ways a deſign to beſtow his Labour upon the Book of ‘ Pſalms, it being a Book which of all the Books of the ‘ Bible is moſt in uſe among the moſt pious Perſons, and ‘ principally among the Religious. That the Pſalms being ‘ continually in the Mouths of the Faithful that ſing them,
‘ it would be a thing of great advantage to make them eaſy
‘ to be underſtood, that they might receive a double bene‘ fit by their Prayers. That this reaſon had cauſed him to ‘ take up a Reſolution to begin his Commentaries upon ‘ Holy Scripture with that Book; but his Friends having ‘ demanded of him ſome Commentaries upon other Books
‘ of Holy Scripture, he was obliged to ſatisfie them, before
‘ he compoſed this Commentary. In ſum, that it ought not ‘ to be imagined that his Labour would be unprofitable, ‘ becauſe others had written before him upon the ſame
‘ Subject (d), that having read many Commentaries, he did ‘ find ſome of them full of tedious Allegories; and others
‘ did ſo much apply the Prophecies to the Hiſtories of their ‘ own time, that they ſeemed rather to be made for Jews
‘ than Chriſtians: That he had endeavoured to avoid the ‘ two oppoſite Extremes by referring to the ancient Hiſto-‘ ries, what at preſent agreed to them, and not applying to ‘ other Perſons (as the Jews do to cover their own Infide‘ lity) the Prophecies that are to be underſtood of Jeſus ‘ Chriſt, and what is ſpoken in the Pſalms concerning the ‘ Church and the Preaching of the Goſpel: That he had ‘ avoided the prolixity of Others, and had gathered into a ‘ few Words what was profitable. That he firſt gave ‘ the ſubject of every Pſalm, and then proceeded to the ‘ Interpretation of the Text: That we ought to know a‘ bove all things, that a Prophecy is not deſigned only to ‘ fortell what ſhall happen, but alſo to be an Hiſtory of ‘ what is preſent and paſt, ſince Moſes hath written an ‘ Hiſtory of the Creation not from the Records of Men,
‘ but by the Inſpiration of the Spirit, that he therein de‘ clares the things that happened in his time, as the Plagues
‘ of Pharaoh, and the Manna: And, laſtly, that he hath ‘ foretold things to come, as the coming of Jeſus Chriſt,
‘ the diſperſion of the Jews, and ſalvation of the Gentiles:
‘ That David alſo, who is the firſt that wrote after Moſes,
‘ ſpeaks of the Benefits that God had beſtowed upon Men
‘ a long time before, and foretells what ſhould come to paſs
‘ in after Ages: That his Pſalms do not only contain Pre‘ dictions, but Inſtructions and Precepts: That he ſome-
‘ times lays down Morals and ſometimes Doctrine: That ‘ he ſometimes bewails the calamities of the Jews, and in ‘ other places promiſes Salvation to the Gentiles: But that

(d) Others had written before him, &c.] Thoſe, whom he hints by the by without naming them, are, Apollinarius, whoſe Commentaries were full of Allegories: Theodorus of Mopſueſta, who was too much pleaſed with the Explications of the Jews; and St. Chryſoſtome, whoſe Commentaries are too large.

‘ he

Theodoret. ‘ he foretells the Sufferings and Reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt ‘ in ſo many places and ſo many ways, that whoſoever ‘ reads them with attention will find them eaſily: That ‘ ſome did believe, that David was not the Author of all ‘ the Pſalms, but there were ſome that belonged to other ‘ Perſons: And in this Senſe they explained the Inſcriptions, and attributed ſome to Jeduthun, others to Ethan, ‘ and others to the Sons of Care and Children of Aſaph, ‘ whom the Hiſtory of the Chronicles tells us, were Prophets. As for me, ſaith he, I will affirm nothing concerning it: For what is it to me, whether all, or only ‘ ſome part of them be David's, ſince it is evident, that ‘ they were all written by the Inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt? ‘ We know that David was a Prophet, and that the Hiſtory ‘ of the Chronicles gives the Name of Prophets to the other. ‘ Now the Office of a Prophet is to ſpeak as the Spirit ‘ gives him utterance; as it is written in the Pſalms, My ‘ Tongue is as the Pen of a ready Writer. Nevertheleſs he ‘ thinks it ſafeſt to follow the Judgment of the greateſt ‘ number, who attribute them to David.’ He ſpeaks then of the Inſcriptions of the Pſalms, and ſays, it is great raſhneſs either to reject them wholly or to change them, ſince they have been received in the time of Ptolomy, tranſlated by the LXX, together with the Holy Text which had been reveiwed and confirmed by Ezra. He undertakes afterwards to give the meaning of them. The word Diapſalma, according to ſome, notes an Intermiſſion of the Inſpiration of the Holy Spirit; according to others, a change of the Prophecy; and in others Judgment, a different Pſalm. Aquila hath tranſlated the Hebrew word Ever, a Particle, which in that place ſignifies a connexion of that which follows with what went before. But Theodoret, after he hath related the different Opinions of others, will not recede from the Tranſlation of the LXX, and will have it that the word Diapſalma denotes the change of the Song, altho' he will not have this Explication received as abſolutely certain, confeſſing, that none can know the true Senſe of that Term, but he who compoſed the Pſalms, and he to whom it ſhall pleaſe God to reveal it. He, in the laſt place, obſerves, that the Pſalms are not ranked according to the order of time in which they were made, ſince there are ſome of the latter Pſalms, which relate to the Hiſtories, which went before thoſe of which he ſpeaks in the Former. As for example, the 3*d*. is upon Abſolom, and the 141*ſt*. upon Saul. He believes, that the diſorder is not David's, but theirs who have diſpoſed the Pſalms, into the form they now are.

F. Garner hath publiſhed in his Supplement, which he made to the Works of Theodoret, another Preface upon the Pſalms attributed to Theodoret, but 'tis evident that 'tis none of his, ſince the Author therein promotes things which do not agree with what Theodoret ſays in his laſt. There are likewiſe ſome Fragments of his Commentary upon the Pſalms, recited by him in it, which belong to ſome more Modern Author, who quotes the Words of Theodoret's Commentary, and adds to it other Authors, or his own proper Opinions.

Theodoret follows in his Commentary the Method which he hath preſcribed in his Preface. He expounds, in few Words, the Senſe of every Verſe of the Pſalms. After he hath ſhewn the differences of the Verſions of Theodotian, Symmachus and Aquila, and ſometimes alſo of the Hebrew Text, he explains the Senſe of the Words, and applies them to the Hiſtory or Prophecy to which they relate. This Commentary hath been tranſlated by Antonius Caraffa, and dedicated to the Cardinal of the ſame Name.

The Explication of the Song of Songs is the laſt Book of the firſt Tome of Theodoret's Works, It is certain that he had written upon this Book of the Holy Scripture, ſince he ſays expreſſly ſo in his Preface upon the Pſalms; by which it appears, That the Commmentary upon the Canticles was his firſt Work upon the Bible. But there is ſome reaſon to doubt whether this Commentary which has been tranſlated by Zinus, is really Theodoret's. Theſe Conjectures ſeem to prove, that it is not his. 1. The Author of the Commentary ſaith, in the Preface, that he had an abundance of Buſineſs in the City, in the Field, in the Army; and that he had the charge of both Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Affairs. This doth not in the leaſt agree to Theodoret, who had paſſed all his Life in a Monaſtery, and who never concerned himſelf in any Affairs of War. 2. He ſpeaks of St. Chryſoſtome as a Perſon then alive. ‘ John, ſaith he, who hath to this preſent time ‘ enlightened all the World by the torrent of his Eloquence. 3. He confutes very ſtrenuouſly the Opinion of Theodorus of Mopſueſta, for whom Theodoret always had much reſpect. It may be alſo objected, that theſe Commentaries are longer than Theodoret's; that this Commentary is not cited in the Catenas, as the other Comments of Theodoret are; that the only Paſſage which is cited, as being a Commentary of Theodoret in one of his Works, is not found in this Commentary; and that Theodoret doth not quote this Book to juſtifie the Purity of his Faith, although it was extremely ſuitable to prove it. On the other ſide, there were ſome Reaſons which ſeem to prove it evident enough, that this Work is Theodoret's. 1. It bears the Name of Theodoret in two MSS. which Zinus and F. Sirmondus uſed. 2. Pelagius II. or rather St. Gregory in his Letter to the Biſhops of Illyria, ſaith, that Theodoret hath reproved the Opinion of Theodorus of Mopſueſta in his Paraphraſe upon the Book of Canticles, by concealing his Name, which is all that the Author of the Preface to this Commentary hath done. But there is ſtill ſomething more: Pelagius II. cites the words of this Preface, as being Theodoret's, inſomuch, that it is not to be doubted, but that in the time of this Pope, this very Commentary was looked upon to be certainly Theodoret's. 3. The Author of this Commentary in his Preface explains a Text of Ezekiel, where Jeruſalem is compared to a Lewd Woman, after the ſame manner that Theoret expounds it in his Commentary upon that Prophet. 4. This Commentary is very like the other Commentaries of Theodoret; it is the ſame way of Expoſition, and the ſame Style. Laſtly, the Conjectures which are brought to prove, that this Commentary is not his, do not appear very convincing. The firſt, which ſeems to be ſtrongeſt, is of little Conſequence. For Theodoret having compoſed this Work when he was firſt made a Biſhop, he was then buſied in many Affairs both Eccleſiaſtical and Civil; and it may be Military, becauſe the Diſorders which his Dioceſs was in, forced him to implore the Help of the Magiſtrates and Governors to protect him from the Aſſaults of the Rabble, which he underwent ſeveral times, as the Hiſtory of his Life informs us. It may alſo be underſtood of the Wars, which the Country was then threatned with. The ſecond Objection would be unanſwerable, if it were certain, that the Author ſpeaks of St. Chryſoſtome as a Perſon then living and of the Sermons which he preached viva voce. But what he ſays, may very well be underſtood of the Writings of that Father. It is of his written Sermons, and not of his Preachings viva voce, that it may be ſaid that they enlightned the Whole Earth. For his Writings had been diſperſed throughout all the World, his Preachings had gone no farther than thoſe, who were there where he preached. As to Theodorus of Mopſueſta, the Author of that Commentary ſhews, that he had a reſpect for him in not mentioning his Name. It is true, that he ſmartly reproves his Opinion about the ſignification of the Song of Songs. But why ſhould not Theodoret do ſo, not being of his Judgment, ſince he could not follow him without abandoning all the other Fathers, and rendring his Commentary, which he was about to compoſe, wholly uſeleſs? He doth not ſpare him more in his Preface upon the Pſalms. For 'tis he which he attacks without naming him, when he ſays, that ſome Commentators had explained the Pſalms after a Judaical manner. The other Conjectures are of no force at all, Theodoret is a little more large in this Commentary than in ſome others, but not more than in that which he made upon the Prophet Daniel, and thoſe two Works being the firſt Fruits of his Labour, 'tis no wonder if they were not ſo compact. In ſum, his character and manner of expounding Holy Scripture are very diſcernable in it. The Authority of the Catenas is of no great weight, for we know that the Names of the Fathers are ſometimes confounded in them, and often the beſt ſort of Expoſitions are omitted. It is eaſy to put the name of Theodoret for Theodore. In fine, Theodoret hath not alledged all the Places, which might be brought to juſtifie him, but only the Principal. So that there is nothing to prove that this Commentary upon the Canticles is not his, and the Proofs which are produced to confirm it, are much ſtronger than thoſe which are made uſe of to overthrow it. The Preface is Theodoret's Style, and like his other Prefaces. After he hath ſpoken of his Various Buſineſſes, and implored the Illumination of the Holy Spirit, he ſpeaks in general of the ſubject of this Book. He confutes thoſe who underſtand it of the Love of Solomon with Pharaoh's Daughter or the Shunamite, and oppoſes to the Perſons of this Opinion, not only the Authority of the Holy Fathers who have ranked this Book among the divinely inſpired Writings, and have judged it worthy to be receiv'd in the Church as ſuch; but alſo the Teſtimony of the Holy Spirit it ſelf, which inſpired Ezra to revive the Books of the Holy Scripture which had been burnt in Manaſſes's time, and entirely loſt in the Captivity. Now the Song of Songs is one of thoſe Books, which Ezra hath written without the help of any Copy by the Inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt only. And how could he do this, if it contained nothing in it but a deſcription of the paſſionate Love of a Creature? ‘ It is not then without reaſon, ſaith he, that the ‘ Holy Fathers have reckoned it among the Sacred Volumes, ‘ and many of them have explained it in their Commentaries, or cited it with great Praiſe in their Writings? For ‘ not only Euſebius of Palæſtine, Origen of Ægypt, the glorious Martyr St. Cyprian, and ſome other Fathers beſides, ‘ who were more ancient and nearer to the Apoſtles, but ‘ alſo thoſe who have ſince gained credit to the Church, ‘ have acknowledged this Book for a Divine Work. St. Baſil explaining the beginning of the Proverbs, both the St. ‘ Gregories, one of whom was the Brother the other the ‘ Friend of St. Baſil; Diodorus, that excellent Defender of ‘ of the true Religion; John, whoſe Diſcourſes do inſtruct ‘ the whole World at this Preſent, and all that have followed them, are of his Judgment. Is it lawful to contemn

Theodoret.

Theodoret.

‘ theſe great Men to follow private Opinions? Is it reaſo-‘ nable to forſake the Teſtimony of the Holy Spirit to ‘ hearken to the Surmiſes of Men? But leaſt it ſhould be ‘ thought, adds Theodoret, that we are not ſollicitous to ‘ undeceive our Adverſaries, being contented, that we are ‘ our ſelves perſuaded of the Truth, Let us ſee what is it
‘ that might cauſe them to fall into Error, and endeavour to ‘ cure it by Remedies taken out of Holy Scripture. In read‘ ing of this Book, and finding therein theſe words, Per‘ fumes, Lilies, Fruits, Kiſſes, Lettices, Eyes, Thighs, and ‘ many other Expreſſions of that Nature, they have ſtop-
‘ ped at the Letter without diving into the hidden and Spi‘ ritual Senſe. But they ought to conſider, that in the Old ‘ Teſtament there are many figurative Expreſſions, which ‘ have a clear different Senſe from that which the Terms
‘ do properly and naturally ſignifie. As for example in ‘ Ezek. c. 17. the King of Babylon is deſcribed by an Ea‘ gle, his Power by the Wings of that Bird, and his Armies by
‘ the Talons. Jeruſalem is there called Lebanon, the Cedars
‘ are the Inhabitants. Nor do the Chriſtians only thus ex-
‘ pound this Text, but the Jews themſelves. In the Pro‘ phet Zachariah, c. 11. 1. Jeruſalem is alſo underſtood un‘ der the name of Lebanon, the King of Babylon under that ‘ of Fire, the Cedars are the Nobles and great Men, the ‘ Pines are thoſe of a middle condition; there are an infi‘ nite number of ſuch like expreſſions. But to uſe an Ex‘ ample which hath a nearer reſemblance to the ſubject we ‘ are upon; God addreſſing himſelf to the Nation of the ‘ Jews, ſpeaks to it as to a Woman, and uſes the ſame
‘ Terms that Solomon doth. Read but Ezek. 16. and you'll ‘ find there Breaſts, Thighs, Hands, Noſtrils, Ears. He ‘ ſpeaks alſo there of Beauty, Love, Embraces, which Things ‘ nevertheleſs ought not to be underſtood according to the ‘ Letter. There are like places in Jeremiah, Iſaiah, and in all
‘ the other Prophets. We do nothing extraordinary then
‘ when we underſtand the Song of Songs ſpiritually; and ‘ ſo much the rather, becauſe the Apoſtles have expounded
‘ who is the Bridegroom and the Spouſe ſpoken of in this ‘ Book. Jeſus Chriſt himſelf is called the Bridegroom, the ‘ Spouſe is his Church, her Companions are the Souls
‘ which are not yet perfect enough to be Spouſes of Jeſus
‘ Chriſt; they that converſe with the Bridegroom are either
‘ the Prophets or Apoſtles or rather the Angels.’ Laſtly, Theodoret obſerves, that the three Books of Solomon are as ſo many Degrees of aſcent to Perfection; that the Proverbs teach Morality, Eccleſiaſtes the vanity of worldly Things, and the Canticles the Myſtical Union of Chriſt and his Church, and that's the reaſon that this Book is put in the laſt place. He believes, that Solomon hath learned a part of what he ſays from the Books of his Father, who hath given an Idea of it in Pſalm 44. He will not that this Book be put into the Hands of young and weak People; and he ſays, that none ought to be allowed to read it but ſuch as have good Wit, and can comprehend the Spiritual and hidden Senſe. Laſtly, he admoniſhes us that he hath taken many things out of the Works of the Fathers which have written before him, yet does not account himſelf a Thief for that, becauſe it is a Priviledge allowed to thoſe that ſucceed them, to make uſe of what they have ſaid. He tells us, that he added many things; that he abridged what was too long, and enlarged what ſeem'd too ſhort in others.
He makes a concluſion with a Petition to thoſe who enjoy his Labours without any Toyl, that they would pray for him in Recompence; and if they find not his Commentary very exact, he requeſts them to accept at leaſt, his Labour in good part, and amend what they find wanting in it.
This Preface alone gives ſufficient Evidence, that this Work is Theodoret's. It is divided into four Books. He explains the Text with reſpect to the Senſe, as he had obſerved in the Preface.

Theodoret hath alſo made Commentaries upon all the Prophets, as he declares it in his 82. Letter to Euſebius, Biſhop of Ancyra. We want none of them but that upon Iſaiah, of which we have ſome Fragments taken out of the Catenas, collected by F. Sirmondus: But although much Credit is not to be given to Writings of that ſort, I ſee no cauſe to fear but what he hath taken from them is Theodoret's. As to the Commentaries upon Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, Daniel, and the twelve Minor Prophets, they are all entire in Greek and Latin, in the ſecond Volume of Theodoret's Works. The Commentary upon Daniel was compoſed firſt in 426. The Comment on Ezekiel was next. The Explication of the Twelve Minor Prophets followed this. This was no ſooner ended but he undertook to explain Iſaiah: and after he had finiſhed that, he wrote upon Jeremiah, and concluded all his Works upon the Prophets, with the Explication of the Lamentations, as he himſelf tells us at the end of his Commentary upon that Holy Book. In this Commentary he keeps to his ordinary Method, explaining in a few Words, very clearly and intelligibly, the Literal and Hiſtorical Senſe of the Holy Text, without departing from it through Allegories or Moral Digreſſions. The Tranſlation of the Comment upon Jeremiah, was made by Picus, Preſident of the Inqueſt: Upon Ezekiel and Daniel, by Gabius: and upon the twelve Minor Prophets, by one named Ægidius of Albiga, [or Albigenſis.]

Theodoret.

The Commentary upon all the Epiſtles of St. Paul, excells all the Commentaries of Theodoret for their Solidity and Elegancy: He therein explains the Text of that Apoſtle in a very plain and natural way: He compoſed it after the Council of Epheſus. Theodorus of Mopſueſtia and St. John Chryſoſtome, having already made excellent Commentaries upon thoſe Epiſtles, it might ſeem inconſiderately done to undertake to make a new one: This Theodoret himſelf excuſes in his Preface; and after he hath, according to his uſual Cuſtom, invoked the Aſſiſtance of God's Holy Spirit, he owns that he hath done nothing, almoſt, but abridged the Commentaries of others. He next obſerves the Order, in which, he believes, that the Epiſtles of St. Paul were compoſed; for he doth not think that they are ranked according to the Order they were written. This Commentary is literal. He follows exactly the Explications of St. Chryſoſtome, which he does no more, often, than abridge, by cutting off the Moral Obſervations. This Commentary is the firſt Work of the third Tome. It hath been tranſlated by Gentianus Harvet.

The Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of Theodoret, which is divided into five Books, is a kind of Supplement, to Socrates and Sozomen, as being written after theirs (a), about the Year 450 (b). He hath not brought it down to that time. It begins where Euſebius ends, i.e. at the Riſe of the Arian Hereſy in 322 or 323, and ends in 428, (c), before the beginning of the Hereſy of Neſtorius. Photius thinks the Style of Theodoret's Hiſtory much more agreeable to his matter than Sozomen and Socrates's: For it is, ſaith he, clear and ſublime, and hath nothing Superfluous: But he uſeth too bold Metaphors, which are ſometimes altogether extravagant. He hath had no great Care to obſerve the Years in which thoſe things happened which he relates, but he hath taken pains to collect and copy out, in his Hiſtory, Original Pieces, as the Letters of the Synods, Emperors and Biſhops, and hath made mention of ſome remarkable Circumſtances which Socrates and Sozomen have not ſpoken of. He gives us a more exact Hiſtory of the Arians than they do. He deſcribes many Particulars, which thoſe two Hiſtorians have taken no notice of, and he diſcovers many things concerning the Churches and Biſhops of Antioch which had remained in Oblivion, if he had not preſerved the Memory

(a) After theirs.] Caſſiodorus, Theodorus Lector and Photius, name Theodoret laſt of theſe three Eccleſiaſtical Authors. Theodoret corrects ſome of their Errors; he clears the Hiſtory of S. Athanaſius, and relates a great many things which concern the Eaſtern Church, which the other two Authors had not reported; particularly what concerns Meletius, Flavian, Euſebius of Samoſata, and other Oriental Biſhops. This ſeems to be the meaning of that which he hath written in the beginning, that his Deſign is to write τῆς ἐκκλησιαστικῆς ἱστορίας τὰ λειπόμενα, the remaining part of Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, although it may be underſtood of the Continuation of Euſebius.

(b) About the Year 450.] Theodoret, in his 82*d*. Letter to Euſebius, written in the Year 445. making a Catalogue of his Works, doth not mention his Hiſtory. It is manifeſt that he wrote it after the Council of Epheſus, ſince he ſpeaks, l. 5. c. 36. of the Tranſlation of the Reliques of St. Chryſoſtome, made in 438. He ſpeaks of the Conteſts which were raiſed in the Church about the Incarnation, and ſeems to take notice of the Doctrines of Eutyches, l. 5. c. 3. He wrote it before the Death of Theodoſius, which happen'd on July 29. 450. becauſe he ſpeaks of that Emperor, as then reigning, l. 5. c. 36. In the ſame Book, c. 35. he counts Thirty Years from the Martyrdom of Abdas, which is put in 420.

(c) Ends in 428.] Gennadius ſaith, that he continued it to the Time of the Emperor Leo, and that he had done it in Ten Books: This would make us believe that we have loſt the five laſt; but there is no likelihood that he hath compoſed more than five. He declares in the End of his fifth Book, that he hath ended his Hiſtory the[illegible]. Evagrius ſaith, in the beginning of his, that the Hiſtory of Theodoret ends at the Empire of Theodoſius the Younger, at the time of the Death of Theodorus, and juſt when Siſinnius was made Biſhop. Photius ſays the ſame thing. Laſtly, no Man ever ſaw theſe five laſt Books. It is true, that Theodorus, in his Collections, l. 2. cites Theodoret in the Buſineſs of Petrus Mongus and Calendion. St. John Damaſcene, in his third Book of Images, cites ſome Places of the Hiſtory of Theodoret which are not to be found there; but they are miſtaken, for by their account Theodoret muſt have lived till he was an hundred Years old. Their Words have given occaſion to ſome to conjecture, that there was another Theodoret, the Author of an Hiſtory, younger; and F. Garner pretends that it was a Biſhop of Alindes in Caria, who aſſiſted at the Council of Conſtantinople under Mennas: But this ſeems to me very doubtful; we had better ſay, that theſe two Authors, who in other Matters are not exact, are miſtaken in this.

mory of them. He hath committed ſome Faults (d); but Baronius being prejudic'd againſt him, reproves ſome Places of Theodoret's Hiſtory, where that Father hath not at all departed from the Truth (e). Yet this is much more tolerable than to accuſe him as a Modern Author does, that he hath compoſed his Hiſtory for no other end but to abuſe the Orthodox, and to make a Compariſon between Neſtorius and St. Athanaſius, and St. Chryſoſtome, and between St. Cyril, and Euſebius of Nicodemia and Theophilus. There appears no ſuch thing in Theodoret's Hiſtory, but, on the contrary, he ſhews a great Averſion to all Hereſies, a great Zeal for Religion, a great Love for the Church, and a great Reſpect for all the Holy Biſhops, who have defended the Faith, and a great Eſteem for all Men who lived well. This Hiſtory hath been printed in Greek at Baſil, 1536 *. Eight Years after Rob. Stevens printed it at Paris [with the other Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtorians, in Greek]. F. Sirmondus hath put it in the ſecond Volume of his Edition of Theodoret's Works. And laſtly, M. Valeſius cauſed it to be printed, after he had corrected and compared it with the Manuſcripts, according to his uſual Exactneſs. There are five different Tranſlations into Latin. 1. By Epiphanius Scholaſticus, which Caſſiodorus makes uſe of in his Tripartite Hiſtory. 2. By Camerarius, printed in 1537. 3. By Chriſtophorſon. 4. By F. Sirmondus. The laſt by M. Valeſius, which is the beſt and moſt exact. M. Preſident Cauſinus hath turned the Hiſtory of Theodoret out of the Greek into French, ſetting a learned Preface before it; in which he defends his Memory againſt thoſe that have attacked it. This Moderation is much more commendable than the Paſſion of another Author, who ſeems to have diligently read Theodoret only to diſparage him, to repreſent his moſt innocent Actions ill, and to interpret what he hath ſpoken Orthodoxly in a bad Senſe.

[* 1535. Dr. Cave.]

[* Hiſtoria Religioſa Dr. Cave.]

The Hiſtory, intituled Philotheus, or * the Monaſtick Life, contains the Life, and Praiſes of thirty famous Eaſtern Monks, whom Theodoret had ſeen, or whoſe Actions and Virtue he had learned of thoſe that had ſeen them. He compoſed it about the Year 440. The famous James of Niſibis is the firſt, who lived a great part of his Life in the Mountains, having no Retreat in the Winter but Caves and Dens, nor any other Shelter in Summer but the Woods. He fed upon nothing but Herbs, or the Fruits of wild Trees, nor had other Cloathing than the Skins of Beaſts. After he had paſſed ſome Years in that Solitude, he was obliged to leave it, againſt his Will, to take care of the Church of Niſibis, of which he had been choſen Biſhop; but this Change made no alteration in his Way of Living, nor cauſed him to lay aſide his Auſterities. He did a great number of Miracles, but that which is remarkable in them, that Theodoret relates, is this, that they have all a good End, either to puniſh Sin, or to convince of the Truth. He puniſhed the Impudence of certain Virgins, who diſcovered themſelves before him, in making the Fountain dry where they waſhed their Linen, and by making their Hair white. He made the Injuſtice of a Judge's Sentence manifeſt, and cauſed him to revoke it. Certain Beggars bringing one of their Companions, who pretended himſelf dead, that they might gain ſome Alms upon the account of Burying him, and addreſſing themſelves to St James of Niſibis, he beſtowed an Alms on them, and betook himſelf to his Prayers for that pretended dead Man. But God ſo permitted it, that he died indeed, inſomuch that after this Holy Man was gone from them, his Companions were aſtoniſhed to ſee that he anſwered them no more: Immediately they returned to him again, by whoſe Prayers their Cheat had been ſo ſeverely puniſhed, and confeſſed their Fault to him. He pardoned them, and reſtored the Dead Man to Life by his Prayers. Theodoret alſo attributes the ſudden Death of Arius the Heretick to his Prayers. But he is miſtaken in ſpeaking that of Alexander Biſhop of Alexandria, which agreed only to Alexander Biſhop of Conſtantinople. The laſt Miracle that Theodoret relates is of the wonderful Preſervation of the City Niſibis, which was near being taken by Sapores King of Perſia.

The ſecond Monk, of which he ſpeaks in that Hiſtory, is Julianus Sabas, a Monk of Oſroene, who lived a long Time in a Den, eating nothing but a little courſe Bread, made of Millet, and that but once a Week. All his Delight was to ſing Pſalms. Many Perſons reſorted to him in the Deſart, and ſubmitted themſelves to his Diſcipline; inſomuch that in a little Time he had a great many Religious Perſons under his Conduct; who all remained in that Cave, and had no other Room but a little Pantry to keep the Herbs in, which they eat. He ſent them every Morning two by two into the Deſart, and commanded them to rehearſe by Turns fifteen Pſalms of David. He that rehearſed them ſtood up, the other heard them upon his Knees. In the Evening they all returned again to the Cave; and after they had reſted themſelves a little, they again ſang Praiſes to God. Theodoret relates many Miracles of Julianus, and inſiſts particularly upon the Voyage he had made to Antioch, under the Emperor Valens, at the requeſt of Acacius Biſhop of Beræa, to confirm the Orthodox of Antioch againſt the Arians.

Theodoret. Theodoret.

Marcian deſcended of a Noble Family of the City of Cyrus, retired into the Deſart. He did eat every Day, about Evening, a quarter of a Pound of Bread, accounting it more convenient to eat every Day, without ever fully ſatisfying his Hunger, than to faſt many Days, and afterward eat his Fill. He had for his Scholars Euſebius and Agapetus. The firſt had the Government of many Religious Perſons, who withdrew themſelves into the ſame Solitude, where he was. The latter went to Apamæa, and there made alſo many Monks. It appears by the Hiſtories which Theodoret relates of Marcian, that he had an holy Mind. He did what he could to conceal the Miracles he wrought, and did leſs than he could have done. When theſe five Biſhops, viz. Flavian of Antioch, Acacius of Beræa, Euſebius of Chalcis, Iſidorus of Cyrus, and Theodorus of Hierapolis came to viſit him, he remained a long time ſilent, and when they were urgent with him to talk with them, he ſaid, God himſelf ſpeaks to us every Day, both by his Creatures and by the Holy Scriptures; he admoniſhes us what we ought to do, he threatens and exhorts us, but we do not profit thereby; how then can the Diſcourſes of Marcian be of any Advantage? He would not ever endure that theſe Biſhops ſhould ordain him. Another Monk, named Avitus, being come to ſee him, after he had entertained him a long time, he cauſed Supper to be got ready, after the * ninth Hour, and invited the Solitary to eat with him. This Hermite told him, that it was his Cuſtom not to eat till the Sun was down; and that he ſometimes ſtaid two or three Days without eating. Marcian deſired him, for once, to wave that Cuſtom, for his ſake, becauſe being of a weak Body, he was not able to ſtay till the Sun was down. This Requeſt prevailing nothing with Avitus, he ſat him down to Supper, ſaying, that he was very ſorry that Avitus had taken ſo much Pains to viſit a Perſon ſo intemperate. Avitus having anſwered him, that he would rather eat of his Meat than ſuffer him to ſpeak in that manner. He ſays unto him, we have no Cuſtom more than you to eat before the Sun is down, but we are ſenſible that Charity ought to be preferred before Faſting, for that is commanded, but Faſting is left to our own Liberty. Now we ought to preferr the Law of God before any private Inſtitutions. He engaged another Monk called Abraham, to follow the Diſcipline decreed by the Council of Nice, concerning the Celebration of Eaſter. He hated all Hereticks, but moſt of all the Apollinariſts, Sabellians and Euchaitæ. Having underſtood that many Perſons had built Oratories to interr their Bodies therein, after their Death, he engaged his Scholar Euſebius, by an Oath, to bury him in a Place, where no Body knew for a long Time where he was. Euſebius executed his Order faithfully, and no Body knew where the Body of this Holy Monk was, till after all the other Oratories were conſecrated by the Relicks of the Martyrs.

[* Three a Clock in the After-noon.]

In the Fourth Chapter Theodoret deſcribes the Virtues of Euſebius, and his Colleague Marcian, and of their Scholars, who had dwelt near Antioch.

In the fifth he deſcribes the Life of Publius, a Native of the City Zeugma, the Head of many Monks, which he cauſed to take up their Abode in the ſame Monaſtery. As his Society was made up of Greeks and Syrians, he made the Divine Service to be ſung in Greek and Syriack. Theodoret alſo ſpeaks in this Chapter of Theotimus and Apthonius, the Succeſſors of Publius.

The Hiſtory of old Simeon is full of extraordinary Events. He conducted the Jews by the Lyons; he put out a fire ſent from Heaven, which had taken a Village. He undertook a Voyage from Mount Sinai; by the way he found a Man in a Cave, who had dwelt there a long time, and was fed by a Lyon, which brought him Dates: Simeon continued a whole Week in Prayer upon Mount Sinai, without taking any Food, after which he heard a Voice

(d) Some Faults.] Here are ſome Examples of them: He places the Death of Arius among the Circumſtances of the Council of Nice, l. 1. c. 14. He makes Euſebius of Nicomedia Succeſſor to Alexander in the See of Antioch, ibid. c. 16. He relates the Election of Euſebius of Caſarea, to fill the See of Antioch, after the Death of Eulalius, c. 21. He makes S. Athanaſius's Exile to continue five Months longer than it did, l. 2. c. 1. He fixes the Ordination of St. Ambroſe in the beginning of Valentinian, altho' it did not happen till 370. l. 4. c. 5. He commits a like Fault almoſt in relating the Sedition of Antioch, after the Murder of Theſſalonica. He miſtakes in the Number of the Biſhops of the Council of Sardica. He counts 250. l. 2. c. 7. when they were no more than 170. He confounds the Seige which the Perſians laid before Niſibis in 350. with that which they laid there in 359, l. 5. c. 3. He ſays, that Paulinus refuſed the Agreement which Meletius offered him, as it appears by the Letters of the Biſhops of Italy, l. 4. c. 30. He is alſo miſtaken ch. 8. ibid. where he hath written, that Maximus was Ordained Biſhop of Conſtantinople by Timotheus, whereas it was his Succeſſor Peter that ordained him.

(e) Baronius being prejudiced, &c.] Theodoret puts the Depoſition of Euſtathius Biſhop of Antioch in 330. Baronius reproves him, but he is miſtaken, for Euſebius confirms the Opinion of Theodoret. Baronius accuſes him further, for being too Favourable to Meletius and Flavian, but 'tis rather the Cardinal, who was too much incenſed againſt them.

Theodoret. which bad him eat, and he found three Apples which he did eat. But being returned he built a Monaſtery. Palladius, the Friend of Simeon, made a dead Man tell him who ſlew him.

Aphraates the Perſian, profeſſed a Monaſtick Life, but ſpent a great part of his Life at Antioch, in oppoſing the Arians. It ſeems very ſtrange that he performed a Miracle, to cure the Emperor's Horſe, by giving him Water to drink, on which he had made the Sign of the Croſs, and rubbing his Belly with conſecrated Oyl.

Petrus, a Native of Galatia, lived fourſcore and nineteen Years, and paſſed ninety two of them in the Exerciſes of a Monaſtick Life: His firſt Years he ſpent in his own Country, and came into Paleſtine to worſhip Jeſus Chriſt, in the very Place where he died for us. From thence he went to Antioch, where he ſhut himſelf up in a Tomb, drinking nothing but Water, and eating Bread only, and that but once in two Days. He freed many that were poſſeſſed with Devils, and healed many diſeaſed; among others, the Mother of Theodoret, who was troubled with a Diſtemper in her Eyes, after he had adviſed her no more to adorn or paint her ſelf. He cured her alſo of a dangerous Sickneſs, which ſhe had after Child-Bearing.

Theodoſius, a Monk of Cilicia, was forced, by the Excurſions of the Barbarians, to retreat to Antioch. The moſt remarkable Things in his Life are his continual Labours and Mortifications. He was interr'd in the Tomb of Aphraates, and had for his Diſciple Helladius, who after he had paſſed ſixty Years in the Exerciſes of a Monaſtick Life, was Ordained Biſhop of Tarſus.

Romanus imitated the Life of Theodoſius. He abode near Antioch, lived upon nothing but Bread and Water, loaded himſelf with Chains, lying on the bare Ground. He was a very pious Man, and did many Miracles.

Zeno, an Officer of the Emperor Valens, forſook the Court, to paſs his Life in a Tomb near Antioch, without fire, without a Bed, without Houſhold Goods. He came on Feſtivals and Sundays to the Church, and there heard the Inſtructions of the Biſhops. and approached the Holy Table. He diſpoſed one part of his Eſtate to the Poor, while he was alive, and left the reſt to Alexander his Biſhop, to be diſtributed as he pleaſed.

Macedonius the Monk lived forty Years in Solitude, near Antioch, eating nothing but Barly-bread. Towards the end of his Life, he began to eat ordinary Bread, fearing to render an account to God concerning his Death, if he did not do whatſoever was neceſſary for the Preſervation of Life. Flavian having cauſed him to come to Antioch, upon pretence of an Accuſation, ordained him Prieſt without his Knowledge. When the Maſs was over, ſome Body telling him of it, he was very angry with all that aſſiſted, but chiefly with Flavian, ſo that they had much-a-do to pacify him: And, on the next Lord's Day, when they invited him to come to the Feaſt, he replied to thoſe that came to intreat him, would you make me a Prieſt the ſecond Time: They had a great deal of Trouble to perſuade him that it could not be done again, and it was a long time before he would come to Antioch. For all this Simplicity he was not wanting, in his Endeavours, to prevent the Execution of thoſe Orders, which the Emperor had given againſt the People of Antioch, being provoked that they had beaten down his Statue. That which he ſays thereupon to the Captain, who was to execute the Orders, is very Divine. We can eaſily enough, ſaid he, raiſe thoſe brazen Statues again which we have beaten down, but 'tis not in the Emperor's Power to raiſe the Dead: Can it then be reaſonable for him to deſtroy the Images of the Living God for Statues of Braſs and Copper? Theodoret afterwards relates many Miracles of this Monk.

Theodoret paſſes over in ſilence a great number of other Monks at Antioch, that he may ſpeak of thoſe of his own Country, Cyrus. The firſt is Maiſymas, whom he makes Governor of a ſmall Borough. He never changed his Habit, contenting himſelf to ſtitch the Pieces on to it again, as was torn. It is ſaid, that he had two Veſſels, one of Corn, the other of Oyl, which were never empty, although he was always giving out of them to the Poor.

Acepſimas was an Hermite of the ſame Province, who paſſed ſixty years in one Cell, without ſeeing or ſpeaking to any Man. They carried him Lentils and Water, which he took through a Hole, made ſloping that no Man might ſee him. He uſed ſometimes in the Night to go out to ſeek Water; one Day he was met by a Shepherd, who believing him to be a Wolf, flung Stones at him, but his Hand and the Boughs kept them off from him. Another time a certain Perſon had the Curioſity to get upon a Tree, that he might ſee what this Hermite did in his Cell, but he became ſuddenly lame in half his Body, and could not be recovered till the Tree was cut down by his means. Acepſimas having foreſeen his own Death, opened his Cell fifty Days before his Death, and ſuffered himſelf to be ſeen by all that would viſit him. His Biſhop being come to him, ordained him Prieſt, by impoſing his Hands upon him in his Cell. He ſuffered him, becauſe he had but a few Days to live. There was alſo in the ſame Country an Hermite, eminent for Virtue, called Maro, who did a great many Miracles, and was the Author of the Monaſtick Life, in the Country of Cyrus. Theodoret. But he was not more admirable than Holy Abraham, who converted a Village, and was afterwards ordain'd Biſhop of Carræ, without leſſening at all the Auſterities or Practices of the Monaſtick Life. His Reputation for Holineſs was ſo great, that the Emperor ſent for him to Conſtantinople. He propounds alſo Examples of ſingular Virtue, in three Hermites of the ſame Region, Euſebius, Salamanus and Maris. This laſt having been a long time abſent from the Celebration of the Holy Myſteries, deſired Theodoret to celebrate them; he did ſo, and cauſing the Holy Veſſels to be brought, he offered the Holy Sacrifice by the Hands of the Deacons, who miniſtred to him at the Altar.

All thoſe whom Theodoret hath ſpoken of hitherto, were dead when he wrote; theſe Ten which follow were yet alive. He enlarges upon the Life of a certain Monk called James, who was one of his Friends. He recounts many Apparitions which the Devil made uſe of to trouble him. There is in that Place a very remarkable thing concerning Relicks: Theodoret had received, with a great deal of reſpect, ſome Relicks, which were ſaid to be St. John Baptiſt's, the Apoſtles and Prophets. This Hermite doubting whether thoſe which were reported to be St. John Baptiſt's, were not ſome Martyrs of that Name, would not receive them with the other: He was thereupon reproved, in a Viſion, and ſaw St. John Baptiſt, who aſſured him that they were his; and he deſired Theodoret to bring them to him.

I paſs over ſome other Monks, of whom Theodoret ſpeaks in the following Chapters, to come to the famous St. Simeon Stylites, whoſe Life Theodoret hath written with a great deal of exactneſs. He was of Cilicia, and had kept Sheep in his Youth; but being at Church one Day, and there having heard the Goſpel, where it is ſaid, Bleſſed are they that mourn, he withdrew himſelf into the Monaſtery of Euſebius Ammianus, but becauſe he uſed ſuch wonderful Auſterity, which the other Religious Men could not undergo, they expelled him. He retired into a Ciſtern, from whence they fetched him, repenting that they had driven him out ſo: But he did not continue with them long, but he went to a Village called Telmeſſus, where he ſhut himſelf up in a little Houſe. He was deſirous to paſs the Lent without Eating or Drinking; and having propoſed it to Baſſus, who was preferred to the Office of viſiting many other Churches, he gave him Advice not to undertake a thing which might be the Cauſe of his Death: Notwithſtanding, he ſhut himſelf up, with Ten Loaves and a Pitcher of Water, and paſſed Forty Days without touching them; And when Baſſus being returned at the End of the Time, came to him, he found all the Loaves whole and the Pitcher full, and Simeon lying on the Grouud, ſenſeleſs: After he had moiſtned and waſhed his Mouth with a Sponge, he gave him the Sacrament, by which being ſtrengthned, he raiſed himſelf up, and came to eating again by little and little, yet from that Time he paſſed all other Lents without Eating. He remained Three Years in his Cell, and then removed from thence to the Top of a Mountain, where he tyed himſelf with a Chain of Thirty Cubits long: But Meletius, or rather ſome other Biſhop of Antioch (for Theodoret muſt needs be miſtaken, Meletius being dead a long Time before) telling him, that he need not cumber himſelf with the Chain, he brake it, yet did not go from the Place to which he had confined himſelf. His Fame having drawn an infinite number of People of all Nations to come to ſee him, and to be very earneſtly deſirous to touch him, he thought upon this Device, that he might avoid the Multitude, to get up upon a Pillar; inſtantly he was upon one of Ten cubits Cubits, afterwards he raiſed it to Twelve, then to Twenty two, and preſently after, ſays Theodoret, he is on a Pillar of Thirty ſix Cubits high. Theodoret approves of ſuch a Life, which appeared extraordinary, and which ſome diſallowed, although an infinite Number of Men highly reverenced him, and came in Multitudes to receive his Bleſſing. He gave them Inſtructions, compoſed the Differences that were among them, foretold what ſhould befal them, and often wrought Miracles. He ordinarily continued his Prayers till the Ninth Hour, and did not admit any to Audience who came to ſee him, till after that Hour. Laſtly, he took care of the Affairs of the Church, oppoſed the Jews and Hereticks, wrote to Emperors, Governors and Biſhops, to admoniſh them of their Duty.

If this manner of Living, by remaining in the Poſture of ſtanding upon a Mountain for ſo many Years, ſeem incredible, that of Two other Hermites, who ſhut themſelves up in Places, where they were forced to continue always ſtooping, and bowed down, is not leſs admirable. This Poſture, in my Judgment, is more inconvenient than that of Stylites. The Two Monks which uſed this Poſture were Baradatus and Thalalæus. Theodoret writes their Lives in the Twenty ſeventh and Twenty eighth Chapters. He makes an end with propoſing the Examples of certain Women, who had embraced a Monaſtick Life. Marana and Cyra dwelt in a Cell near Beræa, if we may call that Place a Cell which was incloſed with Four Walls, without any Covering, where they paſſed their Life in the Injury of the Theodoret. the Weather. They wore long Garments, which covered all their Bodies, and were loaden with Chains. Domnina. made her a little House in a Garden; she was covered with Hair-cloth, went every Day to Church, and eat nothing but Lentils. Theodoret saith, that in his Time there were a great number of Virgins consecrated to God, not only in the East but in Ægypt, Palæstine, Asia, Pontus and Europe, who either lived in common or by themselves, practising the Exercises of a Monastick Life. That in Egypt there were Monasteries, which had Five thousand Monks in them. He concludes his Book with a Request to those, whose Lives he hath written, not to contemn him, though he comes short of their Virtue, that he might have also a share in their Glory. A Modern Author accuses this Opinion of Rashness, Impatience and Arrogance, but I do not believe that he can find many Persons that have so little Equity, as he hath shewed himself to have, in judging after this manner.

This History contains many things very remarkable, concerning the Discipline of that Time. By it we may see, that there was a great deal of Honour given to the Saints; that they were invoked; that Men expected help by their Prayers; that their Relicks were sought after with great earnestness; that they believed very easily in them; that they attributed a great deal of Vertue to them; that they did many Miracles, and were very credulous; that they were fully persuaded that the Saints enjoyed Eternal Happiness immediately after their Death; that they were with Jesus Christ and his Angels; that they prayed for the Dead; that they visited the Holy Places, as Mount Sinai, and the Holy Land. As to the Monks and Hermites, it appears that they practised excessive Austerities: It was most ordinary with them not to eat, but a very little dread, to drink nothing but Water, to fast all their Lives, and that sometimes many Days together, to be exposed to all the Injuries of the Air, to load themselves with Chains, to make long and tedious Journeys, to put themselves into unnatural and inconvenient Postures, to lye on the bare Ground, to be cloathed with course and unseemly Garments, to wear Hair-Cloth, to have neither Bed nor Table, nor any other Houshold-stuff, to pray continually, to mortifie all the Senses, to abstain from all Pleasures, to keep Silence, to shut themselves up in a narrow place, to stand or bow down always, &c. But among these Austerities, there is nothing spoken of Whipping; it seems this was not used, unless for the punishment of Monks, who had offended. There were few of the Monks that were in Holy Orders. They had a great Antipathy against that Dignity, insomuch that some Bishops conferred it on them against their Consent: Nevertheless, many were brought out of their Privacy and their Monasteries, to be raised to the Episcopal Seat: Usually when they were Bishops, they kept the same way of Living. Some Monks were a long time without hearing the Mass, preferring a continual Retreat, before the Presence at the Holy Sacrifice; others came every Sunday to Church. This History of Theodoret is written in a swelling Style, rather in the form of a Dialogue than an History. He often compares the Anchorites with the Patriarchs and Prophets.

Although the Epistles of Theodoret be placed at the end of the third Volume, after his Treatise called Philotheus, yet we shall speak to them, when we have treated of the Works, which make up the fourth Volume. The first is a Work which he hath named * Eranistes or Polymorphus, because he intends to write against certain Persons, whose Error was deduced from the Principles of many Sects of Hereticks, wholly different from each other. Although the Heresy of Eutiches was not yet broken out, when he composed this Work, for it was made before the Year 448 (f), yet he there assaults the Opinions which that Monk maintained, and which were common in Ægypt and many Monasteries. He holds, that they come near the Impiety of Simon Magus, Cerdo and Marcion, in attributing to Jesus Christ the Divine Essence only: That they departed not far from the Principles of Valentinus and Bardesanes, in asserting, that the Divine Essence did only pass through the Virgin, without taking any thing of her Nature. And lastly, that they said with Appollinarius, that there was but one Nature in Jesus Christ. These are the Doctrines which he attacks in the three Dialogues, which make this Treatise. He shews, in the first, that the Divinity of the Word hath not been changed. In the second, that the Union of the Divine with the Human Nature is made without any Confusion of the two Natures. In the last, that the Divinity of the Son remained impassible. This is that which hath made him give to each of these Dialogues a Title agreeable to its Subject. The first is named Immutable, the second without Confusion, the third Impassible. He ends with a fourth Part, wherein he propounds many Arguments against the three Errors which he opposes.

[* This Book was printed by it self in Greek, at Rome, in 1547. In Greek and Latin, with Beumler's Notes at Zurich in 1593. In Greek at Leipsic in 1568.]

(f) Before the Year 448.] Theodoret speaks of this Treatise, in his sixteenth Letter to Irenæus, and eighty third to Dioscorus. The first was written in 448. and the second in 449. before Dioscorus was condemned; it was then precedent to these two Letters, but yet was made after the Death of St. Cyril, whom he there cites among the Fathers, whose Authorities he produces, and in the Time when the Quarrel, which broke out upon the Account of Eutyches, began to be formed.

In the first Dialogue, after he hath distinguished between Substance and Hypostasis, and shewn, that Hypostasis in the Usage of the Church denotes a Person; he examines in what Sense the Word was made Flesh, and makes it appear, that it cannot reasonably be said, that the Divinity hath been changed into the Nature of Flesh. He overthrows this Error by Texts of Holy Scripture, out of which he makes very subtile Arguments, and by express Testimonies of Holy Fathers of the Church, from St. Ignatius to St. Chrysostome. He adjoyns also some Passages of Apollinarius, which the force of the Truth hath wrung from him, in explaining this Text of the Gospel, the Word was made Flesh, after an orthodox manner. Theodoret.

In the second he makes use of the same Arguments, to prove that the two Natures which are united in Jesus Christ remain distinct without Confusion or Mixture. He produces several Examples after what manner the Two Natures are united without being mingled and confused; and a great number of Testimonies of Holy Scripture which prove that the Qualities and Proprieties of the Humane Nature are preserved entire in Jesus Christ, even after the Resurrection. He afterwards produces the Tradition of the Greek and Latin Fathers, among whom he quotes Theophilus and St. Cyril.

In fine, he shews, in the last Dialogue, that it can't be said, that the Word hath suffered, although we add, likewise in the Flesh; because altho' it be true, that Jesus Christ hath suffered according to the Humane Nature, yet those Sufferings may not be attributed to the Divinity. He maintains, that the Scripture never attributes the Sufferings to the Word of God, but only to the Person of Jesus Christ. He joyns also the Tradition of the Fathers to his Authorities and Arguments.

The last part of this Work is a Collection of very strong Arguments, which he uses utterly to beat down the three Errors which he hath resisted in the Dialogues.

The Style of this Work is clear and plain. Theodoret explains in it many obscure Difficulties in a very intelligible and grateful way. He propounds his Arguments in a good Order, and conceals not the Exceptions or Reasons of his Adversary, but forces him out of his last Hold, and at length brings him over to the Truth, after such a manner as that he seems compelled to it by the Proofs which he hath urged against him. He nevertheless sometimes uses Texts of Scripture improperly, and draws from them far-fetch'd Consequences; brings Comparisons not always just, Proofs not over solid, and Reasonings not very convincing. The Tradition of the Fathers which he alledges against the three Errors he opposes, are of very great force. The passages he relates are decisive, and very well chosen.

The Doctrine which he confirms, is as Orthodox, as that which he opposes is contrary to the Faith of the Church. And, in my Judgment, they do him a great deal of wrong, who pretend, that he designs to introduce Nestorianism, and that he allows only a moral Union of the two Natures in Jesus Christ. On the contrary, there is hardly a Page in which he doth not acknowledge, that the Word was made Man, that Jesus Christ is both God and Man; that the two Natures are united in one only Person; that there is but one Christ, one Son. But say they, Theodoret, in his last Dialogue, rejects such Expressions as are consequent upon the Hypostatick Union, for he is against the Phrases; God hath suffered, God is dead, God is risen; which are most true in the Sense of the Orthodox. It is then truly said, that he opposes, at least indirectly, the Hypostatick Union. But if they consider well, Theodoret rejects not these Expressions but in the bad Sense that they are capable of, and as they understand them of the Divine Nature it self. He opposes these Expressions in the Reduplicative Sense, God hath suffered as God; and in the abstract Terms, the Divine Nature, the Divinity hath suffered. But he owns, that the Person, who hath suffered was God, although he could not suffer as God, but as Man. 'Jesus 'Christ, saith he, is not a meer Man, he is both God and 'Man. We have often made profession of it, but he hath suf-'fered as Man, not as God.' This is the Doctrine of Theodoret in his Dialogues. It is so true, that this Work was of Orthodox Principles, that the most zealous of his Party found fault, that he had cited Theophilus and St. Cyril, but had not mentioned Diodorus and Theodorus of Mopsuesta, so that Theodoret was obliged to justifie himself in this Point, which he did in the 16*th*. Letter to Irenæus; wherein he tells us, that he did it not because he was not willing to make use of any Witnesses suspected by his Adversaries. Also Theodoret alledges that Book in his Letter to Dioscorus, as a proof of the Purity of his Faith, and of the respect that he bore to the Memory of Theophilus and St. Cyril. Had he been well advised to quote St. Cyril, with so much Commendation, if he had opposed his Opinions as Heretical? In ſum, there never were any but Eutychians, who have condemned this Work of Theodoret. 'Twas by their Craft, that Theodoſius baniſhed him by his Edict, in which he approves the Doctrines and Outrages, that Dioſcorus and Eutiches had ſet on foot in the ſham Council of Epheſus. But the Emperor Marcian revoked that Decree, and tho' afterwards they quarrelled with Theodoret upon the Account of the Writings which he compoſed againſt St. Cyril, yet we never ſaw him attacked for his Dialogues. Theodoret.

The 5 Books of Heretical Fables *, are a no leſs Authentick Proof of the Learning, than Faith of Theodoret. He compoſed them ſometime after the Council of Chalcedon at the deſire of Sporatius an Officer of the Emperor, who was Conſul in 452. He gives us in 5 Books, an Abſtract of the Doctrines of the Hereticks, to which he oppoſes in the laſt an Abridgment of the Orthodox Doctrine of the Church.

[* Theſe Books have been Printed alone in Greek at at Rome, 1568.]

The firſt Book contains an Hiſtory of the Hereſies, which have oppoſed the Divinity, by admitting many firſt Cauſes. All the Hereticks believed, that the Son of God took the Humane Nature in appearance only. He begins with Simon and ends with the Manichees. In the ſecond, he ſpeaks of thoſe who did truly acknowledge that there was but one firſt Cauſe, but make Jeſus Chriſt to paſs for a meer Man. This Sect of Hereticks begins with Ebion, and ends with Marcellus of Ancyra, and Photinus. The third Book contains the Hiſtory of thoſe Hereticks, who had other Errors, ſuch as the Nicolaitans, Montaniſts and Novatians. The fourth Book deſcribes the new Hereſies of Arius, Eunomius, and ends with thoſe of Neſtorius and Eutiches. It is doubted, whether the Chapter which concerns Neſtorius, where that Heretick is ſo much inveighed againſt, be really Theodoret's. F. Garner believes, that it is a forged Piece, and brings many plauſible Conjectures to prove it. He ſaith, firſt, that if we compare what the Author of this Chapter ſays of Neſtorius, with what Theodoret hath written of him, we ſhall be convinced that it can't be his; for Theodoret hath always excuſed Neſtorius, he hath always ſpoken honourably of him, he never condemns him but with regret. On the contrary, the Author of this Chapter declares himſelf againſt him, and treats him with all poſſible Severity. If you will believe him, Neſtorius was an Inſtrument of the Devil, and the Scourge of Ægypt, he hath overthrown quite the Myſtery of the Divinity and Humanity of the only begotten Son of God under a falſe ſhow of Piety. He was an Hypocrite, who ſtudied nothing but to get himſelf a great Name, and get the Affection of the People by a ſhow of Religion. He was no ſooner poſſeſſed of the Epiſcopal Power in the Imperial City, but he changed the Sacred Authority into a Tyrannical Government, and abuſing his Power by an unbridled Liberty he made known the Impiety of his Heart, and pronounced publickly Horrid Blaſphemies againſt the Son of God. In a Word, he was a Man who had blotted out of his Memory the Doctrine of the Apoſtles and their Holy Succeſſors.

Secondly, the Author of this Chapter ſeems contrary to Theodoret, not only touching the Doctrine of Neſtorius, but alſo about the Circumſtances of his Life. The Author of this Fragment ſays, that he knows not what was the Education of Neſtorius. Theodoret knew well, that he had been the Scholar of Theodorus. He ſaith further, that Neſtorius had changed his abode before he came to Antioch. Theodoret knew that he had lived in the Monaſtery of St. Euprepius, and likewiſe that he had been baptized at Antioch. He adds, that Neſtorius had ſhewn in the beginning of his Epiſcopacy, after what manner he ought to manage himſelf, and ſpeaks of him as a contemptible Man; Theodoret, on the other ſide, ſpeaks of him always as a very Learned and Holy Perſonage.

Thirdly, Theodoret having promiſed, that all the Hereſies of which he hath ſpoken in the former Books, ſhould be confuted by him in the 5th, doth not count the Neſtorians among thoſe Hereticks who were in an Error, concerning the Incarnation.

Fourthly, this Chapter ſeems not to be Theodoret's Style. It is ſwelling, figurative, full of aggravations. The beginning ſeems to be nothing to the purpoſe, and diſagreeabe to the following part of the Hiſtory.

Fifthly, this Chapter is taken out of the Letter to Sporatius, which contains, beſides this Hiſtory, a long refutation of the Doctrines of Neſtorius. Now this Letter is an evident piece of Forgery, for, 1. 'Tis a Writing which hath no form of a Letter, as being without beginning or end. 2. Why ſhould Theodoret write a Letter to Sporatius at that time, when he dedicated a Book of Hereſies to him? 3. The Author of this piece directs his Speech to Neſtorius, but uſes the Phraſes of St. Gregory Naz. 4. 'Tis not Theodoret's Style. 5. 'Tis quoted by no ancient Author. 'Tis then a forged piece, from whence in all probability the whole Hiſtory of Neſtorius is taken, and put into the Book of Heretical Fables, where Theodoret has not ſpoken of that Hereſie. Some Perſon ſeeing that he ended this Work with the Hereſie of Eutiches, and that he had ſaid nothing of Neſtorius's, thought he might take that place, which bore the Name of the ſame Author, to make a kind of Supplement to the Books of Heretical Fables. Theodoret.

Laſtly, if the Fragment and the Letter to Sporatius were Genuine, how comes it to paſs, that it was not alledged by thoſe that defended his Memory, at the time of the 5th. Council? Why did not Facundus and Liberius cite it? How is it, that St. Gregory being deſirous to prove, in his Letter, that he wrote in the name of Pelagius II. to the Biſhops of Iſtria, that Theodoret had been Orthodox in his Opinions ever ſince the Council of Chalcedon, hath brought no Arguments ſo Authentick as this would have been? Theſe are the Conjectures which ſeem to be very ſtrong; notwithſtanding 'tis very hard to believe, that this Chapter ſhould be added to the Text of Theodoret, and ſo much the rather, becauſe Leontius, Photius, and the Abbot Theodorus acknowledged it to be Genuine, and theſe two laſt have produced it likewiſe to juſtifie him. The Conjectures which are alledged againſt the truth of this paſſage, are not ſufficient wholly to determine it. The firſt were of ſome conſequence, if that Work had been written before the Council of Chalcedon, but ſince it is certain that it was written after Theodoret had ſolemnly curſed Neſtorius, it might be well enough that he had changed his diſpoſition in relation to him. 'Tis certain, that as favourable as he had been to him, he diſliked him, becauſe he never would acknowledge the name of the Mother of God, which the Ancients had given the Virgin. Since he hath cited St. Cyril as one of the Fathers of the Church, altho' he had at other times condemned him, why might he not alſo blame Neſtorius after he had heretofore commended him? The different diſpoſition that he was in, made him ſpeak differently. It was the Intereſt of Theodoret, after he had anathematized Neſtorius, to deſcribe him in that ſort as he doth in his Treatiſe of Hereſies, as it was before for his honour to excuſe him as well as he could. As to the difference of Circumſtances which is obſerved between that which is ſaid of the Life of Neſtorius in that place, and what Theodoret ſays, 'tis a thing that deſerves no ſtay upon it, 'tis ſo eaſily ſolved. When he ſays here, that he knows not what was his firſt Education, he ſpeaks not of the time when he was under the Inſtruction of Theodoret, but of his firſt Inſtructions that he received from his Parents. And although he knew, that he had abode in the Monaſtery of St. Euprepius, he could not know the Journies he had made before he came thither to retire. As to that which he ſays of his Temper and Government, he never ſpeaks elſewhere to the contrary. He hath ſpoken ſome things more honourably of him; in other places he excuſes him; here he blames him and ſpeaks of him as others, either becauſe he hath changed his Opinion in reference to him, or becauſe he thought himſelf obliged to ſpeak ſo, that he might free himſelf from the ſuſpicion, that ſome had againſt him, or to make it appear that he did ſincerely anathematize him.

The third Conjecture is weaker than all the reſt. Theodoret in his laſt Book doth not name all the Hereſies, of which he had ſpoken in the former. He contents himſelf to lay down the Principles which are contrary to their Errors. Among theſe Principles, there are things as well againſt the Hereſie of Neſtorius as againſt the Errors of other Hereticks. He ſpeaks not againſt the Hereſie of Eutyches in this laſt Book, although he hath ranked it among the Hereſies in the firſt Book. The Style of this place is not ſo different from Theodoret's, as he imagines, but on the contrary it may be ſaid, that it hath a great ſimilitude and likeneſs to the other Chapters of that Work. The 5th. Objection ſhews us well enough, that it is incongruous to make a Letter to Sporatius into a Chapter of Theodoret's Treatiſe of Hereſies, which was dedicated to Sporatius. But this doth not prove, that this Chapter is ſuppoſititious, nor that it hath been taken out of that forged Letter. But on the other ſide, 'tis probable, that 'tis through Miſtake, that the name of a Letter is given to an Extract taken out of a Treatiſe of Theodoret to Sporatius, to which a Diſcourſe taken out of ſome other Works of Theodoret's was joyned. So that it may be ſaid, that this Chapter of the Book of Hereſies is genuine, and that it was this which gave an occaſion to forge the Letter of Theodoret to Sporatius. A Concluſion drawn from a negative Argument is not very convincing. The Defenders of Theodoret have not cited all the places which might be alledged in his Juſtification, and we have not all that was then ſaid for him. St. Gregory did not know all his Works. It is ſufficient that we ſee, that at length this place has been cited by Authors worthy of Credit, as an undoubted Work of this Father.

I will not undertake to relate in this place what Theodoret hath ſpoken in particular of every Hereſie; for then I muſt tranſcribe all his Treatiſe. He hath related the Errors of the Hereticks in a way very ſhort clear and eaſy. He hath gathered what he ſays touching the Ancient Hereticks, out of St. Juſtin, St. Irenæus, St. Clement of Alex., Origen, Euſebius of Paleſtine and Phœnicia, Adamantius, Rhodon, Titus, Diodorus and Georgius. Theſe are the Authors which he cites in his Preface. He ſpeaks nothing of Epiphanius, nor of the Latin Authors which have written an Hiſtory of Hereſies Theodoret. Hereſies. He is more exact and judicious than they, yet he is not without ſome faults. He hath not put the Pelagians nor Origeniſts in his Liſt of Hereticks. He obſerves at the end of his third Book, that the greateſt part of the ancient Hereſies were of ſhort continuance, that they had but few Followers, that they ſpread themſelves but into few Provinces, and there was ſcarce any Man that made Profeſſion of them; whereas all the World was full of Chriſtians, who made Profeſſion of the Orthodox Faith according to the Promiſe which God had made to his Church.

The laſt Book contains an Explication of the Faith of the Church, oppoſite to the Errors of the Hereticks, of which this is the Sum. There is but one firſt Cauſe of all things, viz. God the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. This God is eternal, ſimple, and incorporeal, infinitely good and juſt, omniſcient and almighty. The Son is begotten of the Father before all Worlds. He is not created, but equal to his Father, and of the ſame Subſtance, eternal and almighty as well as he. The Holy Spirit received his Exiſtence from the Father. He is neither created nor begotten, but he is God, and of the ſame nature with the Father and the Son. Theſe three Perſons are no more than one and the ſame God, who hath created Heaven and Earth, Matter it ſelf, and all the Beings which are in the World. The Angels alſo are Creatures, but we muſt not think that they are of a carnal Nature like ours, nor ſubject to the ſame Paſſions. They are Immortal and Spiritual. God hath created Millions of them. Their Buſineſs is to ſing the Praiſes of God; yet he believes that there are ſome who are charged with the care of Nations, and particular Men. The Devils are not Sinners by Nature. God created them in a ſtate wherein they might do Good or Evil. They fell voluntarily into Sin through Pride, and God puniſhed them for their Sin, by caſting them from their firſt Eſtate. Man is alſo the Work of God, who hath formed him by his Almighty Hand; he is made up of a Body, and a Spiritual and Reaſonable Soul, which is Immortal; God created it when the Body was formed. All things were governed by Divine Providence; we are not ruled by Deſtiny. There are three ſorts of things in the World, which are worthy of conſideration; real good things, which conſiſt in Virtue, real Evils which conſiſt in Vices, and things indifferent, which may be good or evil according as we make uſe of them, as Riches and Poverty, Proſperity and Adverſity, Health and Sickneſs. If we may believe Theodoret, the Goods and Evils of the firſt ſort are in our Power; he holds, that it is in our Power to be Virtuous or Sinners; but as to all other things, God diſpoſeth of them as he pleaſeth, for reaſons to us unknown. The Word of God, his only Son was made Man to reſtore our decayed Nature, and as the whole Man had ſinned, he aſſumed our Nature entire. He did not take a Body to cover his Divinity, but a Soul and Body like to ours, nor did he put off that Nature at his Reſurrection. He came to teach Men a more perfect Law than that of Moſes, but yet not contrary to it in the leaſt. Baptiſm came in the place of the Jewiſh Waſhings. This Ordinance, which is of marvellous Virtue, was not eſtabliſhed for the remiſſion of Sins paſt only, but alſo to make us hope for the good things promiſed, by making us Partakers of the Death and Reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt, and rendring us the Children of God, Heirs of his Kingdom, and Co-heirs with Jeſus Chriſt: For Baptiſm is not only a Razor (as I may ſay) to cut off Sins paſt: For if that were ſo, why ſhould we baptize Children in their Infancy, ſays Theodoret, here, who have nothing of Sin? (This is Pelagianiſm, if he doth not underſtand it of actual Sins.) This Sacrament of Baptiſm gives us the hopes of the Reſurrection, which we expect. The Soul is not raiſed, that ſhall only be re-united to its Body, which ſhall be formed anew. The Unbelievers ſhall be raiſed from the Dead as well as Believers, the Sinner as well as the juſt. All Men ſhall receive at the Day of Judgment, either a Reward of their Virtue, or a Puniſhment for their Sins. The reward of the Saints ſhall have nothing temporal or periſhing in it. It conſiſts in the enjoyment of Eternal Goods. Chriſt's Millenary Reign is a Fable. This Eternal Life is free from Temptation and Sin, and full of ineffable Joy. Before all this, ſhall the coming of Jeſus Chriſt in Glory be, which ſhall follow the coming of Antichriſt.

Theodoret, after he hath ſpoken of that which concerns the Faith of the Creed, paſſeth to the Articles which relate to Mens Manners. The firſt is of Virginity. God hath not commanded it, but yet he gives it ſuch Commendation as it deſerves, that he may encourage Men to embrace it. Marriage is not forbidden, but the end of it ought to be for the Procreation of Children. Second Marriages are not prohibited neither, but Fornication and all other Uncleanneſſes are condemned by the Evangelical Law.

Theodoret goes on next to Repentance, and after he hath obſerved, that the Scripture doth not only forbid Sin, but alſo affords a Remedy for the Cure of thoſe, who have committed it, by exhorting to Repentance; he ſaith, That there is alſo a Medicine for Sins committed after Baptiſm, but that they cannot be cured as before, by Faith alone; we muſt make uſe of Tears, Weeping, Groans, Faſtings, Prayers, and a Satisfaction proportionable to the greatneſs of the Sins, that we have committed. And as to thoſe, who are not ſo diſpoſed, the Church doth not deſpair of them, but admits them to Communion. Theſe, ſaith he, are the Laws of the Church about Repentance. Laſtly, as concerning Abſtinence, the Church doth not forbid the Uſe of Wine and Fleſh, as ſome Hereticks do, but leaves us at Liberty, that they that will may abſtain. She obliges no Man to embrace a monaſtick Life, but that is entirely free. Theſe are the Articles of the Doctrine of the Church, which Theodoret oppoſes to the Errors of the Hereticks, and which he proves by expreſs Teſtimonies of Holy Scripture excellently well choſen. Theodoret.

In ſpeaking of Providence, he referrs us to what he hath ſaid in the ten Books which he hath written upon that Subject. He cites them alſo in his Commentary upon the 67*th. Pſalm*, and ſpeaks of them in his 133*d.* and 182*d.* Letters. This makes it evident, that altho' the Diſcourſes of Providence are put after the Treatiſe of Heretical Fables, yet they were compoſed a long time before about the year 433. Theſe are the Diſcourſes or Sermons which he recited probably at Antioch. In the five firſt, he proves a Providence by the admirable Poſition of the heavenly Bodies, by the wonderful Order of the Elements, by the Contexture of the Parts of Man's Body, by the Invention of Arts, and by the Dominion of Man over the Beaſts. In the 6*th.* 7*th.* and 8*th.* he anſwers ſome Objections which may be made againſt Providence, by ſhewing, that Poverty, Bondage and other Misfortunes, to which Men, and even the Juſt, are ſubject, have Profit in them. In the 9*th.* he ſhews, that the Practice of Virtue is not unprofitable, altho' very often it is not recompenſed in this World, becauſe it ſhall be rewarded in another Life. In the laſt, after he hath obſerved, that God hath always loved and taken care of all men; he ſhews, that this Love appears plainly in the Incarnation of the Son of God, and all that Jeſus Chriſt hath done for them. Theſe Diſcourſes are written with a great deal of Generoſity and Eloquence. They have been publiſhed by Majoranus [at Rome] in 1545. and tranſlated by Gualter [at Tigur] in 1546. [Afterward at Paris, in 1630. in Octavo, Dr. Cave.

There is not leſs Eloquence and much more Learning in the 12 Diſcourſes concerning the * Cure of the falſe Opinions of the Heathens, where he proves the Truth of our Religion, and convinces the Heathens of Falſhood, by comparing them together. Theodoret undertook this Work to ſatisfie ſome Objections which had been made to him. He ſpeaks of it in his Letter to Renatus, and in that which he wrote to St. Leo, and he puts them among thoſe Books, which he had compoſed before the year 438. He therein ſpeaks of the Law of the Emperor, in which he had commanded that the Temples ſhould be demoliſhed, purſuant to a Law of Theodoſius promulgated in 426. So that this Work was framed in ſome of the following years. It is divided into 12 Diſcourſes, of which Theodoret himſelf hath made an Abridgment. The firſt is of the Credulity of the Chriſtians and Ignorance of the Apoſtles. Theodoret proves both of them are unjuſtly imputed to the Chriſtians, as a Proof of the Falſhood of their Religion; that the wiſeſt Perſons have not always been thoſe who have had moſt Eloquence and Learning; that the Greeks have been taught that Wiſdom by the Barbarians; that Plato had acknowledged, that the greateſt Philoſophers were not always thoſe, who were moſt skilful in Arts and Sciences; that it was not true, that the Chriſtians believed raſhly and without Proof; that the Heathen Philoſophers required Faith, and that they themſelves had yielded Faith to the Poets; that they had acknowledged, that Faith was neceſſary in order to Knowledge; yea, that there was no part of Knowledge but required ſome ſort of Faith in order to it.

[* De curandis affectionibus Græcorū. Dr. Cave.]

In the ſecond, after he hath examined the Opinions of the heathen Philoſophers concerning the Beginning of the World, he makes it appear, that what Moſes hath ſaid of it, is much more rational than all that the Philoſophers have imagined; and that Plato had taken all that he hath ſpoken ſo well upon that Subject, out of the Books of Moſes.

In the third, he compares that which the Greeks have written concerning their Petty-Gods, with what the Chriſtians have ſaid of ſpiritual Creatures, Angels and Demons; and makes it clear, by that Compariſon, that the Doctrine of Chriſtians is as wiſe and rational as the Heathens is impious and ridiculous.

In the fourth he ſhews, that what the Chriſtians believe of the Creation of the World, is far more reaſonable than what Plato and the other Philoſophers have taught of it.

In the fifth, he ſpeaks of the Nature of Man; and after he hath laid down what the Chriſtians and Greeks think of it, he ſhews the difference between Light and Darkneſs, Ignorance and Error.

In the ſixth he diſcourſes of Providence; 'For, ſaith he, 'it was juſt, after I had ſpoken of God and the Creatures, 'to ſay ſomething of Providence, in refutation of the Im'piety of Diagoras, the Blaſphemies of Epicurus, and the 'fabulous Sentiments of Ariſtotle, by confirming the Doc'trine of Plato and Pheninus upon that Subject, and by pro-

Theodoret. ‘ving, from Reaſons, drawn from Nature and the Frame ‘ of the World, that the Providence of God is manifeſted ‘ in all Creatures.

In the ſeventh Diſcourſe he condemns the Sacrifices of the Heathen, and makes uſe of the Teſtimonies of the Prophets, to prove that the Ceremonies of the old Law were intended for Perſons unperfect only.

In the eighth he undertakes to defend the Honour which the Chriſtians give the Martyrs, ſhewing, by the Teſtimonies of the Philoſophers, Poets and Hiſtorians, that the Greeks have honoured the Memory of eminent Men, by offering Sacrifices to them after their Death, and by beſtowing on them the Qualities of Gods, Demi-Gods and Heroes, altho' the greateſt part of them had been infamous and Criminals: And this he does to give a clearer Demonſtration that the Chriſtians did honour their Martyrs far more deſervedly. He makes a compariſon between the heathen Lawgivers and the Apoſtles, which is the Subject of the ninth Diſcourſe.

In the tenth he compares the Predictions of the Greeks with the Prophecies of the Jews, and by that compariſon demonſtrates, that the one promoted Falſhood and Abſurdities, whereas the other had foretold nothing but what is true and reaſonable.

In the eleventh he relates what both Heathens and Chriſtians have ſaid concerning the end of the World, and the laſt Judgment.

Laſtly, in the twelfth Diſcourſe he ſhews, that the Life of the Apoſtles, and of thoſe who have imitated them, is far above the Life of other Men.

In theſe Diſcourſes there is a great deal of Learning; Theodoret quotes above an hundred heathen Authors in them: They are written with a great deal of Art and Eloquence, and may not give place in any thing to all the Works of Antiquity, compoſed for the defence of Religion. They are tranſlated by Acciaolus, who printed his Verſion at Paris in 1519. Silburgius hath publiſhed them ſince in Greek [and Latin, at Heidelberg 1592. in Folio, with his own Notes, full of moſt uſeful and excellent Learning, Cave.]

The Addition, which is at the end of this fourth Tome of the Works of Theodoret, doth not contain forged Pieces, but certain Treatiſes that have not yet been put in order. The firſt is a Diſcourſe of Charity, which is a kind of a Concluſion of his Hiſtory of Religion; in which he extols the Charity and Love that the Martyrs of the Old and New Teſtament had ſhewn in their Sufferings.

The Diſcourſe which carries the Name of a Letter to Sporatius, is not a Letter, but a Fragment of the Treatiſe of Hereſies, to which is joyned an Explication of the Myſtery of the Incarnation. We will put the Letter to John Biſhop of Germanicia to the other Letters of Theodoret, and will elſewhere ſpeak of the Confutation of St. Cyril's Anathematiſms, as alſo of the Diſcourſe that he made at Chalcedon againſt St. Cyril, when he was Deputy for the Oriental Biſhops, after the Council of Epheſus. We have one of theſe Diſcourſes entire, in the Acts of the Council of Epheſus, and ſome Fragments of three other, in the Acts of the fifth Council.

Theodoret being returned to Antioch, after the Council of Epheſus, compoſed five other Books againſt St. Cyril. M. Mercator hath given us ſome Extracts of them in Latin, and F. Garner hath publiſhed ſome Fragments of them in Greek. Photius, in the forty ſixth Book of his Bibliotheca, makes mention of twenty ſeven Books of Theodoret againſt ſeveral Propoſitions. The twenty laſt are Eutherius's of Tyana, as we have learned of M. Mercator. F. Garner believes, that the ſeven firſt Books are the Work againſt St. Cyril, but, for my part, I rather believe them another Treatiſe of the Incarnation, which he often ſpeaks of. For, 1. The Work of St. Cyril was divided into five Books, this into ſeven. 2. Photius, without doubt, would have obſerved, that theſe Diſcourſes were againſt St. Cyril. 3. The Subject of theſe Diſcourſes does not agree, in the leaſt, with the Treatiſe againſt St. Cyril. ‘ The firſt, ſaith Photius, is a- ‘ gainſt thoſe, that ſay, that the Word and Humanity ‘ make up but one Nature, and who attribute the Suffe- ‘ rings to the Divinity. The ſecond ſets upon the ſame Er- ‘ rors very ſtrongly, by Teſtimonies of Scripture. The third ‘ is about the ſame Subject. The fourth contains the Opi- ‘ nions of the holy Fathers about the Incarnation of Jeſus ‘ Chriſt our Saviour. The fifth gathers together the Opini- ‘ ons of the Hereticks, and ſhews that they are near a-kin ‘ to their Error, who will not acknowledge two Natures ‘ in Jeſus Chriſt. The ſixth ſhews, that there is but one Je- ‘ ſus Chriſt. The ſeventh is inſtead of a Letter.

[*Reſponſiones ad queſita Magorũ.]

[† Opus myſticum, ſive de Myſteriorum Fidei expoſitione, l. 12.]

Theodoret, in the Catalogue, which himſelf made of his Works, mentions other Treatiſes, which he had compoſed againſt the Arians, Macedonians, Apollinariſts and Marcionites, but theſe Works are irrecoverably loſt (g); as alſo the Treatiſe againſt the Jews, and * the Anſwer to the Queſtions of the Perſian Magi; nor have we his † Book of Myſteries, to which he refers his Readers, when he is ſpeaking of Baptiſm, in his laſt Book of Heretical Fables, and of which he makes mention in the Places where he gives a Catalogue of his Works, nor the Book of Theology. It ſeems likewiſe, that all theſe Works were not known to thoſe who have ſpoken of Theodoret, for neither Photius, nor Gennadius, nor Nicephorus, nor Hebedieſu, who have made Catalogues of Theodoret's Works, have made mention of them. He had alſo made an Apology for Diodorus of Tarſus and Theodorus of Mopſueſta, which the Author laſt named, calls the Apology of the Fathers. Theodoret gives an Hint of them in one of his Letters, and ſome Fragments are to be found in the fifth Council. Photius hath preſerved large Extracts of the five Diſcourſes, compiled in the Commendation of St. Chryſoſtome. He obſerves, that he had made a greater number, but he had never ſeen any but theſe five: That the one part of the firſt Diſcourſe ſeems to reſpect another Subject; but, in the latter Part, he tells us, how St. Chryſoſtome was made Biſhop, the Deſign he had to reſtore the Prieſthood to its ancient Splendor, the Diſcourſe he made againſt the Caimites, his Sermons which he preached for the good of the State, the Envy that they had againſt him, the manner how he was driven out, and ſent into Exile, and other Circumſtances of the Life of this great Saint. He ſaith, that the ſecond Sermon being but ſhort, contained very little of his Praiſe, but the third, which was much ſuperior to the others, in the Choiceneſs of Words and Notions, ſurpaſſed the Bounds of a Panegyrick. The fifth and ſixth finiſh the Deſcription of his Virtues.

Theodoret. Photius relates theſe long Extracts, but they are in a Style wholly different from Theodoret's. They are nothing but Antitheſes, Jinglings of Words, abrupt Phraſes, childiſh Notions, and nothing like Theodoret's Style, which is grave, maſculine and ſerious. 'Tis not the ſame with the Sermon upon the Nativity of St. John Baptiſt, publiſhed by F. Garner, which is like enough to Theodoret's Style. Hebedieſu attributes to Theodoret a Book againſt Origen, but he hath not ſpoken of it in any other Place, and 'tis very unlikely that he hath written any thing againſt that Author. There is a Manuſcript, where a Book of Aſceticks, printed under the Name of Maximus, carries Theodoret's Name, but it is rather the former's.

We have deferred to ſpeak of the Letters of Theodoret 'till this Place, becauſe they are very proper to repreſent the Hiſtory of his Life, and give us a true Idea of his Conduct, ſo as we ordinarily conclude with a Deſcription of the Authors. We have judged that we cannot do this better of Theodoret than by drawing it from his Letters, where he ingenuouſly diſcovers his Opinions and Notions. There we may ſee the Obligations he had, the Motives by which he acted, the Diſpoſition he was of, and the Virtues and Failings which he had.

Theſe Letters are of two Sorts: The one concerns the Diſputes which he had, through his whole Life, with the Biſhops of Ægypt: Others are familiar Letters, written about private Affairs. The firſt of theſe may be referred to three Claſſes; the firſt is made up of thoſe which were written before and in the time of the Epheſine Council; the ſecond of ſuch as were written during the time that the Peace between the Oriental Biſhops and the Ægyptians was in making, till it was agreed on: And the third contains thoſe which were written from the time he began to be troubled afreſh, untill his Abſolution pronounced in the Council of Chalcedon.

Since we ſhall be obliged to ſpeak of theſe Letters in particular, when we ſhall lay down the Hiſtory of the Councils of Epheſus and Chalcedon, we ſhall content our ſelves to obſerve only their Number in this Place, and what may be deduced from thence, to make known the Diſpoſition of Theodoret.

The firſt Claſs contains but a very ſmall number of Letters, eſpecially if we do not attribute to Theodoret all the Letters which were written from Epheſus in the Name of the Eaſtern Biſhops. The firſt is the Letter which he wrote to John Biſhop of Antioch, when he ſent him the Confutation of St. Cyril's twelve Chapters, in the year 431. This we have in Greek and Latin; but of all the others only the Latin Verſion. M. Mercator hath preſerved a Fragment of a Letter, which Theodoret wrote from Epheſus to Andrew Biſhop of Samoſata. There is alſo a Letter in the Acts of the Council of Epheſus, written from Chalcedon to Alexander Biſhop of Hierapolis, and four or five others in the Collection of Lupus, written before the Affair of the Peace began to be ſpoken off. It is evident by theſe Letters that Theodoret was extremely incenſed againſt the twelve Chapters, becauſe he thinks them heretical, defends Neſtorius, accounts him orthodox and unjuſtly condemned, and was perſuaded that St. Cyril and Memnon had been juſtly condemned. In a word, he maintains all that was done by the Oriental Biſhops, and diſapproves whatſoever St. Cyril and the Council had done.

The ſecond Claſs contains no other Letters, almoſt, but thoſe which have been lately publiſhed by F. Lupus, out of

(g) Irrecoverably loſt.] F. Garner pretends, that theſe are the Dialogues in St. Athanaſius, but it is more probable that they are Maximus's. See what we have already ſaid in the Notes, upon the Works of St. Athanaſius.

but

Theodoret. a Manuscript of the Library of Monte Cassino, which comprehends a great Number of Letters of the Oriental Bishops, but all in Latin. These are all taken out of a Collection, which had been formerly made by Count Irenæus, who assisted at the Council of Ephesus in the room of the Emperor, and was after a Bishop in Phœnicia. As he was one of the most zealous Favourers of Nestorius, he had gathered all the Letters together, which might countenance him; and drew Consequences from them to maintain his Party. This Book was intituled A Tragedy, because he pretends to shew, that the Condemnation of Nestorius was but a bloody Scene exhibited to the World. We have already seen that Isidore of Damiata, and Eutherius of Tyana had given that Name to what was done in the Council of Ephesus. The Ancient Author, who hath taken out of him these Letters, which he hath inserted in his Collection, hath set down in some Places the Reflections of Irenæus. The Design of this Author hath been to justify Theodoret, and to shew, that since all the Letters are certainly his, he cannot be accused of Heresy, because it appears, that he always acknowledged the Letter which St. Cyril wrote to procure Unity, to be Catholick Doctrine, and that he never defended Nestorius but in Matter of Fact, believing him of the same Judgment.

Although we have these Letters only upon the Faith of this Author, and in one Manuscript, which the Romanists likewise are careful to conceal, ever since F. Lupus made use of it, it may be, because it contains some Pieces, which are not favourable to the Pretensions of the Court of Rome; yet it is not to be doubted but that they are Ancient: For, 1. We find in this Collection those which are in the Acts of the Council of Ephesus, and of the third Council, and of which M. Mercator recites some Fragments. 2. They contain such particular Facts, and are accompanied with such Circumstances, and which have such a natural Relation to the rest of the History of the Council of Ephesus, that it is impossible that they should be devised by an Impostor. 3. The principal Matters, which they discover, are confirmed by other undoubted Records, although they are not sufficiently explain'd and clear'd but by these Letters. Lastly, it cannot be doubted but they are taken out of the Collection of Irenæus. The Terms, which are cited, make it evident, that this Work is not forged. Now Irenæus lived in the very Time of the Controversy, and was a Witness of all that had passed, so that these Letters are very Ancient. It may be objected, that Irenæus, being of the Novatians Party, might forge those Letters of Theodoret in their Favour: But what likelihood is there that he should have the Boldness to do it, in a time, in which it was so easy a Matter to convince him of the Imposture. There are more than Thirty Letters in this Collection, which bear the Name of Theodoret. I will not here speak of every one in particular, because I will not repeat the same thing over twice, I will content my self to relate the Consequences which may be drawn from them.

First of all, they shew that Theodoret did always approve the Doctrine contain'd in St. Cyril's Letter, written about the Reconcilement: He looked upon it to speak the Truth, as a kind of Recantation of the Doctrine contain'd in the twelve Chapters, but he thought it Orthodox, although Nestorius, Alexander Bishop of Hierapolis, and some others, found Fault with it.

II. At first he shewed a great deal of Averseness to receive St. Cyril into his Communion, for though he believed that he professed Orthodox Doctrine, and revoked his pretended Errors, yet he could not bring himself to a Reconciliation, with a Person, whom he thought to be the Author of all his Troubles: Nevertheless, he passed it over at length, and offered to communicate with him, provided that he should not be obliged to pronounce Nestorius accursed, and that all the Bishops of the Eastern Party might be restored.

III. Having heard that the Peace was concluded, without mention of their Restoration, that Nestorius was forsaken, and that Paul Bishop of Emesa had cursed him, he joyned himself with Alexander of Hierapolis, and many other Bishops, who would have nothing to do with that Agreement, and who separated themselves from John of Antioch, because he had made it.

IV. Being Sollicited by John Bishop of Antioch to yield himself, and pressed to it by his Monks, who were afraid that he would be driven out of his Bishoprick, he entred a Conference about it with John Bishop of Antioch, and consented to receive St. Cyril into his Communion, nevertheless, without cursing Nestorius, and exhorted the other Bishops to do the same soon after. He wrote Letters to St. Cyril, and received Letters from him, but he did not entirely put off the good Opinion he had of Nestorius and his most zealous Adherents; and although he dare not stand up in their Defence ever after, yet he seems always to have some Compassion for them, and also a secret Grudge against St. Cyril, and the Bishops of Ægypt, who envied him, both in his Life-time and after his Decease. St. Cyril himself complains of his Behaviour, if the Letter which is found in the Vatican Manuscript, and which F. Garner has printed, be really his. And Theodoret, for his part, bespatters the Memory of St. Cyril, in as bloody a Letter as can be written: If it be of him that he speaks, in that which is recited in the fifth Council, and if that Letter be not forged; but this we shall examine elsewhere: Yet we must observe, that F. Garner hath published a Letter of Theodoret's, to John of Antioch, in Greek and Latin, which had been before printed by Leo Allatius and Cotelerius; in which he approves the Form of Agreement as very Orthodox. Theodoret.

The third Class of Theodoret's Letters, which are Historical, is contained in the Greek and Latin Collection of his Letters, which F. Sirmondus hath published at the End of the third Tome of his Works.

The sixtieth Letter may be reckon'd the first, according to the Order of time, which was written to Dioscorus, newly preferr'd to the See of Alexandria, after the Death of St. Cyril, which happen'd in 444. This Letter is a proof that the Reconciliation of Theodoret with the Ægyptians was sincere, and that he did not intend to trouble the Peace of the Church. Nevertheless he was accused to the Emperor, the next Year, by those that favoured the Error of Eutyches, of troubling the Peace of the Church, by holding frequent Assemblies at Antioch, instead of residing in his own Dioceſs. Under this pretence they obtained an Order from the Emperor, in which he strictly enjoyned Theodoret to remain in his own City Cyrus, and not stir from thence. This Order was shew'd him by Count Rufus, and he immediately obeyed it. Yet he wrote in his own defence to Patricius Anatolius, to the Præfect Eutrechius, and to the Consul Nonius. These Letters are the Seventy ninth, Eighty, and Eighty one. He therein shews, that it was very unjust to give Credit to the Accusations of his Enemies without hearing him; that he has always lived a blameless Life; that no Man complained of him in his own Country; that he was not troubled that he was confined to the City Cyrus, but on the contrary, there was no place of Dwelling more pleasing to him; but this grieved him, that he was constrain'd to it by the Order of the Emperor, because it would give an occasion to the People of his Dioceſs to slight his Instructions; that he was wrongfully accused of having held frequent Assemblies at Antioch, since he never came thither but when he was summoned by his Patriarch; that he had done nothing but what was according to the Canons and Discipline of the Church; that he had lived and discharged all the parts of his Ministry without fault; that all his Crime was, that he lamented the Miseries of the Phœnician Churches; that he was ready to be Judged by a Council of Bishops, and that in the presence of the most Illustrious Magistrates.

The Enemies of Theodoret were not satisfied to have accused his Behaviour, but they would render his Faith suspected, and to this end published in Alexandria, that he taught, that there were two Sons of God. This obliged him to write his eighty second Letter to Eusebius Bishop of Ancyra, wherein he declares, that he was so far from that Error, that when he discovered some of the Fathers of the Nicene Council to incline to a Division of the two Natures, he was much troubled, because he knew, that the excessive use, they made of it, had given occasion to that Error. 'And for fear, addeth he, that it should be thought, 'that it is fear, which makes me now speak in this man'ner, let those who would inform themselves fully of my 'Opinion, read the Works which I have composed, either 'before the Council of Ephesus, or within these twelve 'Years last past, which if they examine, and judge of my 'Opinions by them, they will find, that I have no other.

The Accusation, which Theodoret endeavours to clear himself of in this Letter, was greedily received by Dioscorus Bishop of Alexandria, who besides the old Controversie of the Ægyptians, had another private Quarrel with Theodoret about the Jurisdiction of the Bishop of Alexandria. He wrote to Domnus, who had succeeded John in the See of Antioch, that it was told him, that, Theodoret preaching publickly at Antioch, had divided the Person of Jesus Christ into two. Theodoret having seen this Letter, which was given to him in the seventh Year of the Pontificate of Domnus, in 447, he wrote the eighty third Letter to Dioscorus, wherein he complains, that Dioscorus had given Credit to the Testimony of a few Persons so easily. He opposes to their Testimony the infinite number of those who had heard the Sermons which he preached at Antioch in twenty six Years time under three Arch-bishops, without incurring blame from any Person for that matter. He professes to follow the judgment of the Fathers, to defend the Doctrine of the Nicene Council, and to acknowledge but one Jesus Christ the Son of God, as he did confess but One Father, and One Holy Ghost. He proves this Truth likewise, and shews, that tho' there are two Natures in Jesus Christ, there is nevertheless but one Jesus Christ, to whom the Properties of the two Natures agree. He adds, that he hath taken this Doctrine out of the Writings of St. Alexander, St. Athanasius, and St. Basil, and that his Writings make it appear, that he made use of the Books of Theophilus, and St. Cyril, to confute the Errors of those, that say, that one of the two Natures hath been changed into the other; that he hath written to St. Cyril, and that that Saint received his Theodoret. Letters; that he hath read and admired his Books againſt Julian; that he wrote to him upon that Subject, and that he yet hath the Anſwer which he made to St. Cyril. He then deſires Dioſcorus not to hearken to his Calumniators, nor to reject him from his Communion; and after he hath cited his Books as Authentick Witneſſes of the Purity of his Faith, he concludes with this Proteſtation, If any one refuſeth to confeſs, that the Bleſſed Virgin is the Mother of God, or ſays, that Jeſus Chriſt our Lord is but a mere Man, or divides him into two, he, who is the only Son of God, and the firſt Born, of every Creature, Let him looſe all the hope which he hath in God. Altho' Theodoret ſeemed to have fully juſtified himſelf by this Letter, nevertheleſs Dioſcorus gave not over his Enterprize, and inſtead of rejecting the Calumnies which were ſo ill grounded, he called together his Accuſers, cauſed them publickly to pronounce him Accurſed, and did the ſame himſelf. When Theodoret heard it, he implored the help of other Biſhops, but particularly Flavian Biſhop of Conſtantinople. The Letter which he wrote to him is the eighty ſixth. After he hath related the Attempt of Dioſcorus, he ſays, that he heard, that that Biſhop of Alexandria had ſent ſome of his Biſhops to Conſtantinople, hoping to raiſe great Commotions againſt him, but he put his Confidence chiefly in God, ſince he is Aſſaulted upon the account of the true Faith, and next in the protection of Flavian, whom he prays to maintain the Orthodox Faith, and vindicate the Canons, which were ſlighted. 'For, ſaith 'he, the Fathers of the Council held at Conſtantinople, fol-'lowing the determination of the Nicene Council, have 'diſtinguiſhed the bounds of Dioceſſes, expreſly forbidding 'the Biſhops of one Dioceſs to incroach upon the Rights 'of another. They ordered the Biſhop of Alexandria not 'to concern himſelf but in Ægypt only, and have left to o-'thers the Government of their own Dioceſſes. But Dioſco-'rus contemning theſe Laws, boaſts that his See is St. 'Mark's, that he may aſſume the Rights that do not belong 'to him. We might oppoſe to him, that the Church of 'Antioch was the See of St. Peter, the Prince and Head of 'the Apoſtles. But we do not regard the Dignity of the 'See, we know and keep within the bounds of Humility 'which the Apoſtles have taught us. Theodoret ſays further 'to engage Flavian on his ſide, that Dioſcorus had hated him 'ever ſince he conſented to the Rules made in the time of 'Proclus, in favour of the See of Conſtantinople.' He wrote alſo Letters to Domnus Biſhop of Antioch, to the Biſhops of Cilicia, and to many Officers of the Emperor's Court, whom he fills with Complaints. We may ſee upon this ſubject the eighty third Letter, and the following to the one hundred and tenth.

But all his endeavours were to no purpoſe; he became every Day more and more odious to the Emperor, and the main thing that was ſought, was an occaſion to ruin him. This was thought a very fit One, to depoſe Irenæus, whom he had ordained Biſhop of Phœnicia. Two Faults were found with that Ordination. The firſt was, that Irenæus, was a Neſtorian, and did not believe that the Virgin ought to be called the Mother of God. The other was, that he had been twice Married. The Emperor wrote to Domnus to depoſe him. Theodoret tells him in his Hundred and tenth Letter that he could not do it without an Offence againſt God, becauſe he had Ordained him purſuant to the declaration of the Biſhops of Phœnicia, who had judged him worthy to be a Biſhop for his rare Virtues; and as to that Charge, that he had been twice Married, he had paſſed by the ordinary Rules according to the Example of Alexander Biſhop of Antioch, who with Acacius Biſhop of Beræa had Ordained Diogenes, a Man twice Married, and of Prailus Biſhop of Jeruſalem, who alſo had ordained Domnus Biſhop of Ceſarea altho' he was twice Married. That in fine, Proclus had approved the Ordination of Irenæus, and the Biſhops of Pontus, Paleſtine, and Cappadocia, had acknowledged him, and that no Man ever had called in Queſtion the Validity of it; that it was unjuſt after this to condemn him; that Domnus ought to repreſent theſe things to the Emperor; That he could nevertheleſs anſwer otherwiſe, if he judged it fit; that as to himſelf, he expected to ſuffer the utmoſt; That he believed in the laſt place, that the beſt Expedient were to wait the Anſwer of the Biſhops of Paleſtine, to write unanimouſly to Conſtantinople. He wrote at the ſame time the third Letter to Irenæus, wherein he ſignifies to him obſcurely, that he ought not to withdraw himſelf, if he were not forced to it.

But another Buſineſs was brought upon the Stage againſt Theodoret; he was accuſed, that he had evil-intreated and unjuſtly condemned the Accuſers of Ibas. He defends himſelf againſt that Accuſation in the Hundred and eleventh Letter to Anatolius, by telling him, that he was none of the Judges, being detained at Cyrus by the Emperor's Order; that he had no part in that Judgment, but that Domnus had done his duty in reviewing their Affair, not only as to the Judgment of Ibas, but alſo of Simeon Biſhop of Amida, to the end that their Cauſe might be judged by two different Metropolitans. He complains, that in all other Countries the Biſhops were at eaſe, and that no regard was had to any but the Eaſtern Biſhops; that whatſoever their malicious Adverſaries could invent againſt them, was hearkened to. That as to himſelf, there was leſs reaſon to accuſe him than any other, ſince he had kept himſelf quietly in his own Dioceſs according to the Emperor's Order, and that he had not aſſiſted at two Ordinations made in his Province. He adds, that if he were not detained by the Emperor's Order, he would retire altogether for the remaining part of his Life. Theodoret.

The Calling of a Council at Epheſus under Dioſcorus affrighted Theodoret. He foretel'd eaſily enough, that he could hope for nothing from a Synod, where Dioſcorus his Adverſary preſided, and ruled all. Alſo when Domnus ſent him the Letter of the Convocation, which was directed to him, he ſignifies to him by his Hundred and twelfth Letter, the fear he had, that this Synod would have but a very bad iſſue, if God did not diſappoint the deſigns of Men, for tho' the Council of Nice had condemned Arius, and the Biſhops of his Party had conſented to his Condemnation, yet they had continued in their Impiety, and troubled the Church for many Years; that he feared yet worſe of this preſent Synod, becauſe the other Dioceſſes did not diſcover the Poiſon of the twelve Chapters, and that only conſidering the Reputation of him that compoſed them, this was the cauſe, that they ſuſpected no ill in them; that he did not doubt but that his Succeſſor would do what in him lay to have them confirmed in a ſecond Council: 'For having already pronounced, ſaith he, Ana-'thema againſt thoſe who would not approve them, what 'will he not do at the Head of a Council? But, ſaith he, 'further to Domnus, be it well known to you that none 'of thoſe Biſhops who have eſpyed the Hereſie that is 'couched in thoſe Propoſitions, will ever give their Ap-'probation of them, although the number of them that 'ſhould ordain it be as great again. We have already re-'ſiſted them, although many Biſhops had approved them 'at Epheſus, nor did we communicate with the Author of 'them, till he had declared his conſent plainly to that 'Explanation of the Faith, which we had preſented to him 'without mentioning the twelve Chapters.' He proves afterwards by Authentick Records, that the Biſhops of the Eaſt had always condemned them, and exhorts Domnus not to forſake the Faith of his Anceſtors, and not to receive a ſtrange Doctrine. It is plain, that this Letter was written a little before the Council in 449.

The Council of Epheſus did worſe than Theodoret had foretold, for it approved the Doctrine of Eutyches, rejected the Faith of the Church, condemned Flavian, and pronounced a Sentence of Depoſition againſt Theodoret without hearing him, or citing him. But he in many Letters made it appear immediately, that he was unjuſtly condemned by them.

The largeſt and moſt conſiderable, is, that which he wrote to St. Leo, to whom he made his Appeal in this Urgent Neceſſity, it is the Hundred and thirteenth Letter. After he hath complimented him about his Primacy, the Greatneſs and Prerogatives of his Church, and the Purity of his Doctrine, explained in his excellent Letter to Flavian. He deſcribes the Injuſtice that Dioſcorus had committed, not only as to Flavian, but alſo as to himſelf, in depoſing him ſo irregularly; that is to ſay, in his abſence, without having cited him judicially, without queſtioning him, without having ordered his Proceſs, and after he had cauſed him to make Excuſes of coming to the Council. He next proves his own Innocence, chiefly by the unblameable manner in which he had managed the Government of his Dioceſs. Laſtly, he implores the help and protection of St. Leo, and prays him to ſend for him to Rome, that he may juſtifie by his Writings, that his Doctrine is throughly conformable to that of the Roman Church. But above all things, he beſeeches him to let him know whether he ought to yield to that unjuſt Sentence; that he would wait his Advice thereupon, and if he thought it beſt for him to abide there, he will do it freely, that he will be troubleſome to no Man, any more, but wait patiently the Juſt Judgment of God, that as for himſelf, he valued his own Reputation but little, but that he was afraid of giving Scandal, and being an occaſion of falling to the Weak, who believing his Doctrine Heretical might fall into Error.

He wrote at the ſame time to Renatus, a Prieſt of the Church of Rome, to deſire him to put forward his Propoſition, with his Biſhop of aſſembling a Council in his Church, promiſing to ſubmit himſelf to his Judgment, be it what it will. He alſo quotes his own Writings as an Authentick Proof of the Truth of his Faith. This is the Hundred and fifteenth Letter.

The Hundred and ſeventeenth Letter is directed to the Biſhop of Florence, if we follow the Title, but the Body of the Letter makes it appear, that it was written to many Biſhops, or to the whole Clergy. He repreſents to them the Injuſtice that was done him, and implores their Aſſiſtance. He makes the like Complaints to the Arch-Deacon of Rome, by the Hundred and eighteenth Letter, and to Anatolius Patricius by the Hundred and nineteenth, and Hundred twenty firſt Letters, to Uranius Biſhop of Emeſa in the Hundred twenty third, and Hundred twenty fourth Letters, to Biſhop Timothy by the Hundred and thirtieth Letter, to Ibas Biſhop of Edeſſa by the Hundred thirty ſecond Letter to John Bishop of Germanicia by the Hundred thirty third, and Hundred forty seventh Letters, and many others. All these Letters were written toward the end of the Year 449, or at the beginning of the Year 450, from the Monastery whither he had retired. The Hundred twenty fifth, Hundred forty fourth, Hundred forty fifth and Hundred and forty sixth, are Explications of the Faith written at the same time, and from the same place; as also the Hundred twenty sixth Letter to Sabinian Bishop of the Pareni, who having been deposed in the Council of Ephesus, was retreated. Theodoret commends him for his Valour. Theodoret.

to

At the end of this Year the Face of things was changed by the Death of Theodosius. Marcian who succeeded him, made the Judgment of the Council of Ephesus, held under Dioscorus, to be void, and restored Theodoret who had been driven out of Cyrus. He then wrote many Letters to his Friends, either to complain of them who had forsaken him, as he doth in the Hundred thirty fourth, and Hundred thirty fifth; or to return them Thanks who had assisted him, and opposed his Enemies, as he doth in the Hundred thirty seventh, Hundred and forty, Hundred and forty one, Hundred forty two, Hundred forty three, or to make them some part of a means, and pray them to obtain it of the Emperor, that a new Council might be called to settle the Peace of the Church, and uphold the Orthodox Faith. This is what he desires of Anatolius in the Hundred thirty eighth Letter, and Asparus the Consul, in the Hundred thirty ninth Letter.

These are the principal Letters of Theodoret, the other, which contain nothing Historical, are either Letters of rejoycing upon some Festival, or Letters of Consolation, Thanks, Recommendation, and Congratulation to his Friends. The twenty ninth, and the following Letters, recommend the Orthodox banished from Carthage in 442. The forty second and four following, are written to obtain the discharge of a Sum which was demanded of his Country, the payment of which was sollicited by a wicked, excommunicated Bishop. The seventy seventh, seventy eighth, shew to the Bishops of Armenia, near adjoyning to Persia, what they ought to do in the time of Persecution. Theodoret in all his Letters discovers a great deal of Piety, Charity, and Humility; these have all the Qualifications which render Letters valuable, they are Short, Plain and Neat, Elegant, Civil, Pleasant, full of Matter, Wit, and Holiness.

There is no necessity of making a further Description of Theodoret; what we have related of his Life, the Judgment which we have passed upon all his Works in particular, and what we have spoken of his Letters, are sufficient to give a full Idea of his Conversation, Learning and Eloquence.

As to his Doctrine we shall have frequent occasion to speak of it. Notwithstanding we see by his Conduct hitherto, that though he defended the Person of Nestorius, he never divided, but only distinguished the two Natures; he never maintain'd his Errors; he always profess'd his Belief of one Jesus Christ, God and Man in one Person; he never disapproved the Term of the Mother of God, and gave advice to Nestorius and Irenæus to use it. This is true, that he never would approve the Chapters of St. Cyril, but it was, because he thought they contain'd in them that Error which was after maintained by Eutyches. In fine, he explains in so many places of his Works, the Doctrine of the Incarnation in so orthodox and exact Terms; that he cannot be accused of Error in that point without a great deal of Injustice. St. Cyril hath accused him of being in that Error, but he also accuses all the Oriental Bishops of the same, which after he acknowledged to be Orthodox, after they had signed the Confession of Faith, which was made in order to the Peace, which because Theodoret approved, he ought to be accounted Orthodox. The Eastern Bishops were not obliged to approve of the 12 Chapters of St. Cyril to be accounted Orthodox; why then should Theodoret be obliged to it? M. Mercator rails on Theodoret, and finds Errors in his Books against St. Cyril: But the very places which he cites, justifie him, and 'tis only by Consequences, which Theodoret disowns, and which do not follow from his Principles, that M. Mercator extracts his Errors. As to the Authors which lived in the time of the 5*th*. Council, or since that time, they ought not to be alledged, because we know, that they were Parties in this Cause or followed the Judgment of the fifth Council, of which we will speak hereafter. If we desire to know the Defenders of Theodoret, we shall find Men worthy of Credit, John Bishop of Antioch, all the Bishops of the East, all his Hearers at Antioch, are so many Witnesses of the Purity of his Faith. St. Leo was an Apologist for him, and the Emperor Marcian declared him Innocent. The Council of Chalcedon owned him for a Bishop, and did not oblige him to any Retractation, but only to say Anathema to Nestorius. Many other Authors might be produced, which defended him against Calumny. But his best Defence are his Writings themselves, his Protestations, Declarations, Explanations of Faith, which cannot be accused of Heresie without condemning also the Letters of St. Leo to Flavian, the Writings of the most Orthodox Fathers, and the Forms of Doctrine which the Church of God hath always used. Theodoret.

I will not stay any longer to speak of the particular Opinions which are attributed to Theodoret. Every one knows, that he was of the Judgment of the Greeks touching the Procession of the Holy Ghost. The Controversie upon the Passages of the Eucharist, are too famous and too common to be unknown. It would be to no purpose to repeat in this place what hath been so often insisted upon. He is accused of being a Pelagian, and that he knew nothing of Original Sin. But this is certain, that he was not of Pelagian Principles, since he owns, that Death, our Propensity to Evil, Concupiscence, are the Effects of the Sin of the first Man. He also often acknowledgeth the Necessity of the Grace of Jesus Christ, and begs his Assistance. But he is not of the Principles of St. Austin concerning the Nature of Original Sin and Efficacy of Grace. He follows those of St. Chrysostome, to whose Opinion he joyns himself.

We have spoken of the principal Editions of the Works of Theodoret in particular. The first Collection which was made of them, was made up of Versions only. It was printed at Colen in 1573. and at Paris 1608. [also at Colen 1567, 1617.] F. Sirmondus hath printed these Collections in Greek with the Latin by the side. This Edition is disposed into 4 Vol. in Folio, printed at Paris in 1642. F. Garner a little while since hath added a 5*th*. Vol. printed in 1684. This last contains, besides the Pieces of Theodoret, which we have spoken of, 4 Dissertations of F. Garner, upon the Life, Works and Doctrine of Theodoret, whom he inveighs much against. The Dialogues of Maximus, upon the Trinity, which he attributes to Theodoret, a Dissertation upon the 5*th*. Council, the Collection of Pieces which F. Lupus had printed in 1682. A Treatise of Eusebius of Tyana, which was among the Works of St. Athanasius, and the different Readings of the Treatise of Theodoret against the Gentiles, collected by Ursinus.

ANDREW Bishop of Samosata.

Andrew of Samosata.

ANdrew, Bishop of Samosata, was an intimate Friend of Theodoret's, and observed almost the same way of Deportment. He was chosen by John Bishop of Antioch to confute St. Cyril's Anathematisms, which he did with a great deal of Moderation. We have yet that Work with St. Cyril's Answers. Andrew of Samosata, having seen them, he confuted them by a more smart Writing*. Anastasius Sinaita makes mention of this last, and recites a Fragment of it in his Book, intitled, Ὁδηγὸς, The Guide, Chap. 22. There are †9 Letters of his in the Collection of F. Lupus, by which it appears, that he condemned Rabbulas, who had the boldness to pronounce Theodorus accursed; that he disallowed at first St. Cyril's Letter for the Union and Peace which was made with him, but that afterwards he yielded, following the Example of Theodoret, and counselled Alexander [Patriarch of Antioch] to do the same. He was condemned in the sham Council of Ephesus, if we may believe Theophanes. He was dead before the Council of Chalcedon, where his Successor, called Rufinus was present. Andrew of Samosata.

[*Virulento admodum Libello. Dr. Cave.]

[†8. Dr. Cave.]

HELLADIUS Bishop of Tarsus, MAXIMINUS Bishop of Anazarbum, and IRENÆUS Bishop of Phœnicia.

Helladius Bishop of Tarsus, &c.

HElladius Bishop of Tarsus, the Metropolis of the upper Cilicia, was deposed in the first Council of Ephesus. St. Cyril would not suffer him to be included in the Peace, and he himself was averse to it. He resisted a long time, but at last he yielded. He hath *7 Letters in Lupus's Collection.

Maximinus, Bishop of Anazarbum, Metropolitan of the lower Cilicia, he stood out longer than Helladius; but at last seeing himself molested with the Emperor's Orders, he followed his example, he, and all the Bishops of his Province. We have the Synodal Letters which he wrote pro and con, with three or four other Letters upon the same Subject in Lupus's Collection. Helladius Bishop of Tarsus, &c.

Count Irenæus, who was present at the Council of Ephesus in the place of the Emperor in quality of a Commissioner, was afterward chosen Bishop of Phœnicia by the Bishops ſhops of that Province, and ordain'd by Theodoret in 444. He did not enjoy that Biſhoprick long, being depoſed in 448. by the Emperor's Command. We have made an Extract of Theodoret's Letter, wherein he ſpeaks of the Defects of his Ordination; and of another Letter wherein that Father exhorts him to own, that the Virgin Mary is the Mother of God, but all in vain. He was too cloſe linked to the Doctrine of Neſtorius to change. This firm Adherence appears by the Work which he intitled Tragœdia, the Tragedy, in which he hath written ſtrongly in his own Defence, and condemned not only St. Cyril and the Ægyptians, but alſo John Biſhop of Antioch, and all the Biſhops of the Eaſt, who had joyned in the Peace, commending none but thoſe, who thro' unheard of Obſtinacy, remain'd in a Separation from the Church. We have already obſerved, that F. Lupus hath publiſhed a Collection of that ancient Author, who hath tranſlated and copied a part of the Letters, which he had gathered in that Work, and ſome Reflections of Irenæus.

[*6. Dr. Cave.]

Helladius Biſhop of Tarſus, &c.

Helladius Biſhop of Tarſus, &c.

St. LEO.

St. Leo.

ST. Leo. (a), after he had gotten himſelf Repute among the Clergy of Rome (b), under the Pontificate of St. Cœleſtine and St. Sixtus, in quality of an Arch-deacon, was choſen Biſhop of Rome after the death of the latter (c), which happened Apr. 1. in the year 440. He was ſent into France to procure a reconciliation between Aetius and Albinus [two chief Captains of the Roman Army.] While he was there, Deputies were ſent from Rome to him, to carry him the News of his Election, and to haſten his return to Rome where he was ordain'd 40 days after the death of his Predeceſſor. He maintained his Dignity with ſo much Splendor, Vigilance and Authority, that he rendred himſelf more famous in the Church than any of the Popes which had been before him, even from St. Peter. He not only had a ſpecial care of the Church of Rome, and thoſe Churches which were ſubject to his Metropolis, but he extended his Paſtoral Vigilance over all the Churches of the Eaſt and Weſt. He maintain'd the ancient Doctrine, oppoſed Hereſies, upheld the Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, renewed and confirmed the ancient Canons, enlarged the Grandeur and Authority of his See, and manfully defended the Rights of it. There was no Affair almoſt tranſacted in the Church in the time of his Pontificate, in which he had not a great ſhare. We do not mention them here, becauſe his Letters teach us them in particular. He died in the 21*ſt*. year of his Prelacy, in the year 461. (d).

This Pope is deſervedly ranked among the Fathers of the Church, becauſe tho' we have no great Treatiſes under his Name, his Sermons and Letters are very uſeful Works. We will begin to make the Extract of his Letters, which contain a great number of very important Points of Doctrine, Hiſtory, Morality and Diſcipline.

But before we enter upon the particular diſcuſſion of the Letters, it is convenient to examine the Conjecture of a Modern Critick, who aſſerts, that the Letters attributed to St. Leo are the Work of St. Proſper. This Conjecture is principally upheld by the Teſtimony of Gennadius, who ſpeaking of St. Proſper, ſaith, Epiſtolæ quoq; Papæ Leonis adverſus Eutychem de vera Chriſti Incarnatione, ad diverſos datæ, & ab ipſo dictatæ dicuntur aut creduntur. The Epiſtles alſo of Pope Leo againſt Eutyches, written to ſeveral Perſons, about the Incarnation of Chriſt, are ſaid or believed to be dictated or publiſhed by him. Theſe words are found exactly in Marcellinus's Chronicon in the Conſulſhip of Vivian and Felix; and 'tis from hence, that Ado Viennenſis hath taken that Paſſage, as Honorius Auguſtodunenſis and Tritbemius have taken it from Gennadius. But Ado gives St. Proſper the Title of a Secretary Notarius to St. Leo. 'Tis from the Teſtimonies of theſe Authors that M. Anthelmi takes the boldneſs to aſſert this Paradox, that all the Letters of St Leo were written by St. Proſper. For confirmation, he compares the Letter of St. Leo to Flavian, and that directed to the Biſhop of Aquileja, with ſome places of St. Proſper's Works, and thinks that he finds an entire conformity of Style in them. He adds, that St. Jerome was Secretary to Pope Damaſus, and that he made Anſwer to ſuch as conſulted any thing of him in the name of that Pope. And ſo St. Gregory, when he was a Deacon, was Secretary to Pelagius II. and it is credible, that all the Popes wrote nothing almoſt themſelves, but had Secretaries to write for them. Theſe are the Conjectures upon which M. Anthelmi grounds himſelf, but they are too weak to prove what he aſſerts.

For firſt of all, the whole frame of this Argument is ſupported by a mere Hear-ſay, related by Gennadius, who was not himſelf really of that Opinion; for ſpeaking before of Pope Leo, chap. 70. he attributes to him, in expreſs Terms, the Letter to Flavian, and ſays nothing of his other Works, inſomuch, that he could not have put him in the number of Eccleſiaſtical Writers, but becauſe he thought this Letter was of his Writing. Now when an Author ſpeaks affirmatively in one place, and in another reports it upon Hear-ſay only, his Judgment is to be gathered from the place, where he ſpeaks of his own Head, and not from that wherein he ſpeaks according to the common Opinion.

St. Leo.

Secondly, 'Tis not certain that theſe words in chap. 84. Epiſtolæ quoque Leonis, &c. The Epiſtles likewiſe of St. Leo, &c. are Gennadius's: But on the contrary, 'tis probable, that they have been added. To be convinced of this, we need but caſt our Eyes upon chap. 84. and we may ſoon ſee what is Gennadius's, and what is added. For after that Gennadius hath ſpoken of the Works of St. Proſper in ſuch a manner as made it evident, that he did not approve what he had written about Grace, ſome Body hath added; This Proſper hath been the Defender of St. Auſtin's Books alſo againſt the Hereticks, who were Enemies to the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt. This is plainly an Addition to the Text of Gennadius. Theſe words which are now in Queſtion follow this Addition, and are a part of it; for, 1. If they were Gennadius's, they would be joyned to his Text, and would not follow this Addition. 2. The way in which this Phraſe is expreſſed, Epiſtolæ quoque Leonis, &c. ſhews, that it hath a relation to the preceding Addition, and that it hath nothing to do with the Text of Gennadius. It begins with theſe words, Epiſtolæ quoque. The word quoque referrs to the preceeing Addition, Hic etiam Proſper, and cannot be joyned with the Genuine Text. Quæ enim vere Caſſiani & Proſperi, de gratia & libero arbitrio ſententiæ fuerunt, in aliquibus contrariæ ſibi inveniuntur. The Opinions of Caſſian and Proſper of Grace and Free-will, are contrary the one to the other in ſome things. Who would ſay after this, the Epiſtles of St. Leo alſo, &c? It is then certain, that this laſt Phraſe hath relation to the Precedent, where he ſpeaks with diſlike of the Semi-Pelagians. So that it is not certainly Gennadius's; 'tis an Addition no Man can doubt. And what can we ſay of the other?

But whence comes this Addition? Whence was it taken? It is no hard Matter to gueſs, ſince the ſame words are to be found in Marcellinus's Chronicon. From hence ſome Perſon took them to add them here to the Text of Gennadius, chap. 84. One of thoſe two muſt be, either that Marcellinus hath taken this place from Gennadius, or ſome Body hath taken this paſſage out of Marcellinus. The firſt is very unlikely: Marcellinus doth not uſe to copy out Gennadius. We muſt then hold the latter, and ſo much the rather, becauſe there are other Conjectures to prove, that this Paſſage is an Addition to the Text of Gennadius, and there is nothing to prove, that it hath been added to Marcellinus.

This being ſo, all the proofs of M. Anthelmi are reſolved into a common Rumour which was current in the time of Marcellinus, who lived an hundred years after Leo. For as for Ado, 'tis viſible enough, that he hath taken all he ſays from Marcellinus; and beſides, an Author of the 9*th*. Age is of no great Authority. And the ſame I ſay of Honorius of Auguſtodunum, and Tritbemius, who have copied the Addition, which had been made to chap. 84. out of Gennadius's Book.

There is likewiſe very great probability, that the Title of Secretary or Notary, which Ado hath given to Proſper, is grounded upon nothing but what he had read in Marcellinus's Chronicon. For from whence ſhould he know, that St. Proſper had the Title? But if it were certain, that he had the quality of Notarius in the time of St. Leo, it doth not follow that he made the Letters of that Pope. The Notaries in the time of St. Leo, were not thoſe who compoſed the Letters, but thoſe who kept them, carried them, publiſhed them, and kept the Regiſters of the Eccleſiaſtical Affairs. We read, in the 25*th*. Epiſtle of St. Leo, that Dulcitius the Notary, was ſent to the 1*d*. Council of Epheſus,

(a) ST. Leo.] It is commonly believed, that he was a Tuſcan. F. Queſnel thinks rather that he was a Roman, becauſe he himſelf calls the City of Rome his Country, Ep. 27. St. Proſper, in his Chronicon, ſays the ſame thing. It is true, that in the ordinary Editions of the Pontifical, 'tis ſaid, he was a Tuſcan. But there are 2 MSS wherein 'tis ſaid, he was a Roman. However that be, he was brought up and educated at Rome.

(b) Repute among the Clergy, &c.] He carried Zoſimus's Letter to Auxilius, when he was but an Acolythus, as appears by the 101*ſt*. Letter of St. Auſtin to Sixtus. He was Arch-deacon under Pope Celeſtine; the Books of Caſſian, concerning the Incarnation, written in 420. at the deſire of St. Leo, then Arch-deacon, are a plain proof of it. In 429. he got himſelf a great Name by appearing againſt the Pelagians, as it is noted in St. Proſper's Chronicon.

(c) Was choſen, &c.] After the ſame manner doth St. Proſper deſcribe St. Leo's Election.

(d) In the Year 461. according to the Vulgar Æra.] The day is not certain. An ancient Kalendar, which is in the 10*th*. Tome of M. Luke D' Acheri's Spicilegium, places the death of St. Leo on Octob. 30. Marianus Scotus places it on June 28. His Memory is celebrated on that day in ſeveral Martyrologies and Eccleſiaſtical Offices. His Feſtival is commonly on April 11.

to

St. Leo. to write the Acts of it. Dionysius, who was sent to Constantinople to carry the Letters of St. Leo, Ep. 46. is called, Romanæ Ecclesiæ Notarius. Tiburtius, Secretary of the Church of Rome, signed the Letter to Flavian, under that Title. Tiburtius Notarius, &c. I Tiburtius, the Notary, by the command of my Reverend Lord the Pope have publisned. These were the Offices of a Notary. Also altho' it were certain, that St. Prosper was a Notary of the Church of Rome, it would not follow, that he hath composed the Letters of St. Leo. And, likewise, if we follow the Correction, that M. the Abbot Anthelmi hath made in the Chronicon of Ado, by 2 MSS. in M. Colbert's Library; this Author doth not say, that St. Prosper, as he was a Notary, hath written the Letters of St. Leo, but only that he set them out, a quo editæ creduntur.

The example of the Office of St. Jerome with Pope Damasus, doth not prove, that St. Prosper hath performed the same Office with St. Leo. There have been Popes, who have written for themselves; there are others who have made use of the help of others, not being of sufficient Abilities to write. For example, Pelagius II. had need of the assistance of St. Gregory; but who will say, that St. Gregory, being made Bishop, used another to write his Letters?

Nor is there any conformity of Style between the Letters of St. Leo and the Works of St. Prosper, as is pretended by M. Abbot Anthelmi, but this is that in which he least of all agrees with him. The Comparisons and Parallels which he makes, shew indeed, that they agree in some Terms, which all that treat of these Matters do commonly use, and which are taken from St. Austin in a thousand places. But this will never for all that persuade them, who have any Judgment, that the Style of St. Leo's and St. Prosper's Writings, is the same. And let any Man read but a little of each, and he will find a considerable difference, and be convinced, that St. Leo had a loftiness of Expression, which St. Prosper was not able to attain, and a readiness in Writing and Speaking, which raised him above the help of a Secretary. Lastly, the Style of his Letters is so like that of his Sermons, that it cannot be doubted but that they are the same Author's. Now who is there, even at this day, that is so inconsiderate as to say, that St. Leo's Sermons are not his? It is true, that M. Abbot Anthelmi also thinks, that St. Prosper had an hand in them; but this is another Paradox more extraordinary than the former, and is not supported by the Testimony of any Author, and which he cannot make good, as we shall shew afterwards. But let us return to St. Leo's Letters, and follow the Order of time, according to which they are disposed by F. Quesnel.

The First is directed to the Bishops of Mauritania Cæsariensis, which was probably written before Genfericus, King of the Vandals, had conquered that Province, which happened after the Death of Valentinian, who died 455 (a). This Letter contains Directions how to reform the Disorders which were committed in Africa, in the Ordination of Bishops. Bishop Potentius, whom St. Leo had sent into Africa to get Information of it, and to let him know if it were true that the Bishopricks there were so ill bestowed, had given him an Account, that for the most part the Churches were governed by Persons unworthy of the Name of a Bishop; that they were raised to that Dignity either by Bribery or popular Faction. St. Leo immediately wrote to them, as well to testifie his own Grief, which he had for their Disorders, as to prescribe them Means to reform them. First, he shews, that 'tis prejudicial to the People's Salvation, to place over them Pastors unworthy of their Office, that in doing it they were so far from comforting them; that they made their Case more dangerous. He superadds, that though he found some who were ordained by Sedition or Bribery worthy of their Office, yet the Example was of ill Consequence, and that it is very improbable that that should end well which had a bad beginning. St. Leo.

He observes in the Second Article, that if they are obliged to take care, that they do not mistake in the Election of all, that are admitted into the Clergy, that nothing be done in the Church of God, which is not in Order, they are much more obliged to chuse Persons of Worth to rule over others. Upon this occasion he quotes a Text of St. Paul's, wherein he gives Timothy charge to lay Hands suddenly on no Man: What is it, saith he, to lay Hands suddenly on no Man, but not to conferr Priests Orders upon Persons whose Worth we are ignorant of, before they are of fit Age; before we have had Time to try them; before they have approved themselves fit by their Industry, and have given some signs of their Knowledge and Experience?

After these general Rules he speaks particularly of the Conditions necessary for entring into Holy Orders. The first is, not to have above one Wife, and she not to be a Widow, the second, to have passed all the Inferior Orders, and to have exercised them for some Time. After he hath proved the Necessity of these two Conditions in the third and fourth Articles, he commands, in the fifth, the Bishops to whom he wrote, to deprive them of their Bishoprick, who were found to have had two Wives, or had married a Widow: But as to them whose Ordination was not Faulty, but upon this account, because they were made Bishops immediately of Laicks, he permits them to keep their Bishoprick, telling them, that he did it only by a kind of Indulgence and without prejudicing the Holy See, the Decrees of his Predecessors, or his own, by which it is forbidden to promote any Person to the first, second or third degree of the Clergy, who have not arrived at these Dignities by the Ordinary ways, declaring to them, that for the future he intended that those Rules should be strictly observed.

He comes at last to the Affairs, in which he was personally concerned: A Novatian Bishop, called Donatus, had been converted with all his People. St. Leo suffered him to keep his Bishoprick, but required him to send a profession of his Faith to him; in which he condemns the Errors of the Novatians, and professes the Faith of the Church. He exacted the same thing of Maximus, who had been before a Donatist, and had after been made a Bishop of a Layman. As to Aggæus and Tiberianus, who had been ordained Bishops, being before but mere Laymen, and that with a great Uproar, he enjoyned the Bishops of Africk to inform themselves exactly of all that had passed at their Ordination and to write to him of it. This is what respects the Ordination of Bishops.

He speaks, in the eighth Article of the Virgins who had been deflower'd by the Barbarians, and advises them, not to comp are themselves with those that had yet their Virginity, because, although they were Innocent, and had not contented to the Sin, yet they ought to bewail the Loss they had suffered. He exhorts the Bishops, at last to hearken to his Advice, and observe the Holy Canons.

The Second Article, in the ordinary Editions, is not put in this Edition, because it is not to be found in the best Manuscripts, and hath no Connexion with the precedent Article, insomuch that this is a Supposititious Passage, which is none of St. Leo's (f), or if it be his, 'tis a Fragment of not be said that St. Leo hath repeated the same thing in one and the same Letter, in two different Articles, about Virgins; either then the second or eighth Article must be added: Now 'tis most probable that it is the second. For, 1. It is not to be found in the most Ancient Manuscripts. 2. It begins with the Conclusion of the same Letter: Cum itaque de omnibus quæ Fratris nostri Potentii relatio continebat, &c. This supposeth, that the Letter is finished, whenas this is but the second Article of the Letter; and he speaks afterwards of many other things, contained in Potentius's Relation. 3. F. Quesnel, says, that that which is discoursed of in these Articles doth not agree with the Condition the Church of Africa was then in. It is not probable that in the Persecution, wherein the Church was, they could ordain Bishops in the Boroughs. 4. He maintains, that 'tis not Leo's Style, that the Words Diocesis for Parish, Specialibus & propriis commoveri, damnum propriis honoris evadere, Episcopalia gubernacula præsidere, pendente negotio, were not St. Leo's, nor so much as used in his Time. 5. Isidore hath not put this Article into his Collection, although he hath omitted nothing that might favour the Right of Appeals to the Holy See. 6. 'Tis likely that it hath been added to the ancient Collection of Dionysius Exiguus, for the Title is differently expressed from that of the others; that the Titles at the beginning of the Letters and Index are different. Lastly, Cresconius, who follows the Code of Dionysius Exiguus, and hath inserted it in his Collection, hath put nothing of that Letter in it. These Reasons have made F. Quesnel to conjecture, that this Fragment hath been added in the Code of Dionysius Exiguus, by the same Person that hath added the Letters of Pope Hilary, and his Successors, as far as Gregory II.

(a) In 455.] It is not probable that it was written in 458. as Baronius and Blondel are of Opinion, because Rome was sack'd by the Vandals. St. Leo had Business enough to watch over his own Church, without troubling his thoughts about the condition of others. Is is very likely that Mauritania was still under the Dominion of the Empire, because otherwise he could not have received the News so easily, nor have written thither. He says, indeed, that that Province was at war with the Barbarians, but he doth not say that it was entirely subdued. F. Quesnel thinks, that this Letter was written in 442. One thing may make it doubtful, which is, that he speaks of the Decrees which he had made already, to hinder Laymen from being raised to the first, second or third Degree of the Clergy, which is pretended to have relation to Epist. 12. to Anastasius Bishop of Thessalonica, where he forbids him to prefere Laymen to the Episcopal Dignity: But, besides that he speaks not in that Place of the second or third Degree of the Clergy, but only of Bishops, he might make this Decree in another Letter. F. Quesnel grounds himself upon this, that Potentius might well be one of the Bishops of Africk, who having been expoled to the Mercy of the Winds by the Vandals, were driven a shore at Naples; but this is not beyond Controversy, all that can be said is this, that this Letter was written before the Year 455.

(f) It is a Suppositious Passage, which is none of St. Leo's.] This Article is found in the Collection of Dionysius Exiguus, where the sixth, seventh and eighth are not to be found: But these are in four ancient Manuscripts, where the second is not. Merlin's Editions of the Councils in 1524, and 1525. agree with these last Manuscripts, which are the ancientest and best. It canſome other Letter unfitly inſerted in this: It contains a Prohibition of ordaining Biſhops in the Villages or Caſtles, and an Advertiſement to the Virgins that had been defiled by the Barbarians, that they ought not to reckon themſelves, according to the Judgment of the Author of this Fragment, neither among the Widows nor Virgins. Laſtly, He therein ſpeaks of a Biſhop of Africk, called Lupicinus, who had been excommunicated in Africk, notwithſtanding the Appeal which he made to Rome, and in whoſe Place they had ordained another Biſhop, before the Pope had given Judgment. This ſhews, that the Biſhops of Africk retained their Liberty about Appeals for a long time, and did not recede from their Rights in the leaſt, when this Letter was written by St. Leo, or by ſome other Pope.

St. Leo.

The ſecond Letter is written about the Year 442 (g), to Raſticus Biſhop of Narbonne. This Biſhop ſent his Archdeacon Hermes to St. Leo, to propoſe ſeveral Queſtions to him touching Diſcipline, and communicate to him his Proceedings againſt two Prieſts, who were under his Juriſdiction, who had withdrawn themſelves before their Judgment was pronounced: St. Leo leaves it to his Diſcretion to cenſure them as he thought fit; and exhorts him only to do what he was able to recal them again to the good way, by treating them with Gentleneſs. He afterwards diverts him from his Purpoſe to leave his Biſhoprick, and paſs the remaining part of his Life in a Retreat. At laſt, he anſwers ſeveral Queſtions, which that Biſhop had put to him. I ſhall in this place relate the Anſwers of this Pope.

In the firſt place he declares, that they who have not been either choſen by the Clergy, or deſired by the People, nor ordained by the Biſhops of the Province, with the conſent of the Metropolitan, may not be accounted Biſhops, that they ought not to be allowed the Dignity, which they have not received: Nevertheleſs, if he finds that theſe falſe Biſhops have ordain'd Clerks in the Churches by the conſent of ſuch as preſide, that is to ſay, the Biſhops of theſe Churches, their Ordinations may be approved of, upon condition that they continue in theſe Churches; but ought to be looked upon as Null, if they had not been fixed in one Church, nor approved by a Lawful Authority.

In the ſecond he ſays, that it is not allowable to put a Prieſt or a Deacon to do publick Penance, although he deſires it, and if he find himſelf guilty of any Crime, he ought to retire himſelf, and do Penance in private. This Rule of St. Leo is contrary to the Ancient Diſcipline of many Churches and to the Canons of the firſt Council of Orange, and ſecond of Arles.

In the third, he orders, that the Miniſters of the Altar, that is, the Deacons, and Subdeacons, as it appears by his Letter to Anaſtaſius of Theſſalonica, ſhould be ſubject to the Law of Continence, as well as the Biſhops and Prieſts. He adds, that being Laicks or Readers they may be married and have Children, but being arrived at the ſacred Miniſtry of the Altars, 'tis not to be permitted them; that their Marriage ought to be changed from carnal to ſpiritual, that ſo they may neither forſake their Wives, nor have any carnal Knowledge of them. St. Leo is the firſt who hath extended the Law of Celebacy to Subdeacons. His Predeceſſors St. Syricius and St. Innocent, ſpeak of none but Deacons. The Uſage of the Church of France was contrary in the very time of St. Leo, as it appears by the Canons of the firſt Council of Orange, the ſecond of Arles and Anjou, where only Deacons were obliged to Continence; for the Decree of the Council of Orange was only for the future. It coſt a great deal of Trouble to bring the Deacons to a Submiſſion to that Law, ſeeing that the Biſhops were forced to renew it often. It was afterwards enlarged to the Subdeacons in ſome Churches, as appears by the Councils of Venice and Agatha, but that Diſcipline was not general in all Churches of France, as we learn by the Letter of Lupus of Troyes [Tricaſſinus] and Euphronius of Autun [Auguſtodunenſis] to Thalaſius Biſhop of Anjou.

In the fourth he declares, that a Clergyman, who gives his Daughter in Marriage to one that hath a Concubine, ought not to be treated as if he had given her to a Perſon already married, becauſe Concubines cannot be counted lawful Wives, nor the familiar Commerce with them Marriage; at leaſt, they are not free, endowed nor joyned together by publick Marriage.

In the fifth he ſaith, that the Daughters of thoſe Parents, who have married them to Perſons that have Concubines, do not ſin in dwelling with thoſe to whom they are married.

In the ſixth, that it is not the Sin of Adultery, but a virtuous Action, for a Man to caſt off his Concubine, that he may live only with his Wife. The Concubines, which are ſpoken of in this Place, are Slaves, with whom Men lived as with their Wives, without having any Commerce with others, although they were not ſolemnly married to them.

In the ſeventh he ſaith, that they are much to be blamed for their Negligence, who attend dying Perſons, to require Repentance of them, but do not inſiſt upon it, when they are returned to Health again; that they ought not to give over wholly their Deſign, but bring them by frequent Exhortations to perform that which Neceſſity obliged them to require; becauſe we ought to deſpair of no Man ſo long as he is in this World, and it often happens that Men do that in their riper Age which they have deferred thro' Diſtruſt.

St. Leo.

In the eighth, that thoſe that die after they have undergone their Penance, without being reconciled, ought to be left to the Judgment of God, and no Signs of Communion be allowed them. This Practice was contrary to that of the African, French and Spaniſh Churches.

In the ninth he ſpeaks of thoſe who having demanded Penance, when Afflictions lay upon them, would not undergo it when they were mitigated. He ſaith, that it may be this Diſpoſition doth not proceed from a Contempt of Repentance, but from a Fear of ſinning, and that it muſt not be deny'd them, if they requeſt it a ſecond time.

In the tenth he ſaith, that a Penitent ought not to go to Law before the ſecular Judges, but before the eccleſiaſtical only, becauſe he ought to abſtain from ſuch things as are permitted.

In the eleventh he ſaith, that altho' it is nothing but the Nature of Gain that excuſeth or condemneth Trading, yet it is moſt convenient for a Penitent wholly to forbear it, becauſe it is hard to avoid Sin in Commerce, either on the part of the Seller, or on the part of the Buyer.

In the twelfth he obſerves, that it is contrary to the Laws of the Church, to become a Soldier after a Man hath done Penance.

In the thirteenth he ſays, that he could wiſh that thoſe who have done Penance when they were Boys, would not marry; yet he excuſes young Men who do it, when it is to avoid Incontinency.

In the fourteenth he orders, that the Monks, who have married, or liſted themſelves for Soldiers, ſhould be made to do Penance, becauſe they cannot leave that Profeſſion without Sin, when they have once embraced it, but are obliged to perform their Vows.

In the fifteenth he condemns the Virgins, who married after they had voluntarily put on the Habit of Virgins, and embraced Virginity, altho' they were not yet conſecrated.

In the ſixteenth and ſeventeenth he affirms, that they muſt be baptized anew who have not any Proof that they have been already baptized, altho' they remember that they have been heretofore in the Church.

In the eighteenth he ſaith, that it is ſufficient to lay Hands upon, and call upon the Holy Spirit, over thoſe that do remember that they have been baptized, but know not in what Sect.

In the nineteenth, and laſt, he ſaith, that thoſe Infants, who after Baptiſm have lived among the Heathen, ought to be put to publick Penance, if they have worſhipped Idols, or committed Sins; but it is ſufficient to purge them by Impoſition of Hands, and Faſting, before they are permitted to approach the Communion, if they have been only preſent at the Heathen Feaſts, and eat only of Meats offered to Idols.

It muſt be obſerved after F. Queſnel, that moſt of theſe Queſtions have been determined by the Canons of the Councils of Orange, Vaiſo, and Arles II. in which Hilary Biſhop of Arles was Preſident; and 'tis likely, that Raſticus Biſhop of Narbonne, who was evil affected to that Biſhop, had rather have Recourſe to the Biſhop of Rome, than to the Councils of his Province; but theſe Deciſions of St. Leo are not conformable to the Cuſtoms of the Church of France, as we have obſerved, and may be ſeen by conſulting the Canons of thoſe Councils.

The third Letter of St. Leo is directed to the Biſhops of Campania, Hetruria, and Picenum, and other Provinces, dated October the 12th. in the Year 443. St. Leo obſerves in the Beginning of this Letter, that as the Order of the Churches was a Joy to him, ſo he was troubled when any thing was done contrary to the Canons and Diſcipline of the Church. He adds, that if the Biſhops did not reſtrain the Diſorders with all poſſible Diligence, ſince they are appointed to watch over the Flock of Jeſus Chriſt, they are inexcuſable; to ſuffer, that the Body of the Church, which they ought to keep in Purity, ſhould be defiled and corrupted with Diſſentions, is a great Fault. He annexes to this Admonition theſe following Canons.

In the firſt he forbids, that ſuch Perſons be not received into the Clergy, as are Slaves, as alſo Farmers, or Sureties, or any other, who depend in any manner ſoever upon Maſters, at leaſt, that thoſe upon whom they depend, do not require it. He gives two reaſons for this Prohibition; the firſt, becauſe the ſacred Miniſtry is as it were made Contemptible by ſuch ſort of Perſons; And the ſecond is, becauſe it doth an Injury to their Maſters. Pope Gelaſius allows the contrary, in reſpect of the Farmers, in his ninth Epiſtle.

(g) In 442.] The Queſtion which Raſticus propounded to St. Leo, proves, that he wrote in a time when the Chriſtians were much diſtreſs'd by the Barbarians. F. Sirmond hath referr'd this to the Irruptions of the Huns into France, under the conduct of Attila; F. Quesnel to the taking of Carthage, and the Deſolation of Africa by Genſerick, in 450. This Opinion is confirmed by the Eighteenth Queſtion; wherein he ſpeaketh of the Chriſtians of Africa and Mauritania.

In

St. Leo.

In the second Canon he smartly reproves the Ordinations of Persons that have been twice Married, and commands, by vertue of his Apostolical Authority, that they be hindred from doing the Offices of their Ministry, reserving to himself the Cognizance of the Cause of such as bring some Excuse for it; and that no Man might pretend Ignorance (although 'tis not sufferable for a Bishop to be Ignorant of what is ordered by the Canons) he tells them, he had sent this Letter by three Bishops, which may be a Reason to think, that it was written in a Synod.

The third and fourth Canons are against Usurers. These are the first, which forbid Usury to Lay-men. In the last Canon he declares, that those that will not obey these Decrees, shall be deprived of their Dignities, and that they that will not conform to the Discipline of the Church of Rome, shall have no part in her Communion. Lastly, he commands them to keep the Decrees and Ordinances of his Predecessors, but especially of Pope Innocent. Those, saith he, which have been promulged about the Order of the Church, and Canonical Discipline. Quæ de Ecclesiasticis ordinibus, & Canonum promulgata sunt disciplinis. For so it ought to be read, as it is in the MSS. and not Ordinata, as it is in some Editions. Hincmarus reads promulgata, and much amplifies this passage in Opusculo, 33. Ch. 10. This Letter was sent to the Bishops of Italy subject to the Church of Rome, as their Metropolis, and therefore it is no wonder if St. Leo speaks to them with so much Authority.

The fourth Letter to Anastasius Bishop of Thessalonica, is taken out of the Acts of the Council of Rome, under Boniface II. which is to be found in Holstenius's Collection. In this Letter St. Leo made Anastasius his Deputy in Illyria, imitating therein the Example of Siricius, who had first granted that place to Anysius, and he exhorts him to imitate his Predecessor, and to have a care of the Churches which he committed to his Charge. Above all, he recommends to him, that he cause the Canons about the Ordination of Bishops to be observed, and that he oppose the Election of Persons who have been twice Married, especially when they have married the first Wife before Baptism. He would not have him suffer the Metropolitans of Illyria to ordain any Bishop without his Approbation, nor themselves to be ordained but by himself. He charges the Bishops to come to the Synods which he shall call, to judge in common what concerns the Discipline of the Church; and desires him, that if there happen any Cause of great Consequence which they could not determine, he would give him an Account of it, that the Holy See might decide it according to the ancient Custom. Whereupon he observes, that he entrusted him with his Authority, in such manner nevertheless, as that he reserved to himself those Causes which could not be ended in the Province, or in which there should be an Appeal to the Holy See. He admonishes Anastasius to make known all these Orders to all the Bishops, that they may have no ground of Excuse, if they did not put them in practice, and that he had written to the Metropolitans, that they ought to acknowledge him the Deputy of the Holy See. In the conclusion, he reproves the fault of some Bishops, who ordain'd Priests and Deacons upon other Days than Sundays, an Usage, which he says, was contrary to the Canons and Tradition of the Fathers. This Letter is dated January the 11*th*. 444.

The fifth Letter, which is directed to the Metropolitans of Illyria, is that which he mentions in the foregoing. St. Leo exhorts them to take care that the Canons be not broken, and tells them, that he had made Anastasius, Bishop of Thessalonica, his Deputy, that they might obey him in those things which concern the Discipline of the Church. He sends them at the same time some of the Rules which he wrote in the foregoing Letter, and repeats them in this.

The sixth Letter is superscribed to a Bishop of Aquileia, his Name is not found in any Manuscripts, nor in the more ancient Editions. In the latter Editions the Name of Nicetas is put before it, without any other Reason, but only, because there is another Letter of St. Leo's that bears the Title of Nicetas Bishop of Aquileia. But since there is also one to Januarius Bishop of the same See, there is nothing that can determine to which of these two this Letter belongs, but only the time when it was written. That which is directed to Nicetas bears Date in the year 458, and that to Januarius in 447. This of which we are now speaking, is not far from 447, for St. Leo therein speaks against the Pelagians, whom he opposed in the Beginning of his Pontificate; at the same time, when he attacked the Manichees, as the Author of the Book of Predictions and Promises attributed to St. Prosper, shews, in Chap. 6. Now it is certain, that it was in 444. that he set upon the Manichees. And consequently it must be to Januarius, and not Nicetas, to whom this Letter was written. In it St. Leo tells him, that he had heard, by the relation of Septimius, that some Priests, Deacons, and other Ecclesiastical Persons, who had been engaged in the Heresie of Pelagius, or Cœlestius, had been admitted to the Communion of the Church in their Province, without being required to condemn their Error expressly. Insomuch, that while the Shepherds slept, the Wolves have entred into the Fold of Jesus Christ, without laying aside their Cruel Disposition. That they had likewise done a thing which the Canons and Constitutions of the Church do not allow the most Innocent, in leaving the Church, where they had been admitted Clerks, to go to other Churches. That their design was, by this means, to corrupt many Churches, by hiding the Heresie, with which they were infected, under the show of Communion to which they had been received, without being obliged to any Profession of Faith. To remedy their disorder, he enjoins the Bishop to whom he wrote, to call a Synod, and to compel all his Clergy to condemn openly the Authors of their Heresie, and to make a Confession in Writing, that they do firmly hold all the Synodical Decrees made for the Extirpation of that Heresie, and confirmed by the Authority of the Apostolick See. He adds, that great care ought to be had, that they make use of no obscure, or ambiguous Terms, because he knows them to be so deceitful, that if they can avoid the Condemning any Branch of their Errors by that means, they will put themselves under any disguise. That one of their principal Artifices is, when they pretend to condemn all their Doctrines, and renounce them sincerely, to slide in this pernicious Maxim, That Grace is given according to Deserts. That that Opinion is contrary to the Apostle's Doctrine, who teaches us, that Grace, which is not given without Merit, is not Grace, and that the disposition to Good Works is also an effect of the Grace of Jesus Christ, which is the beginning of Righteousness, the Source and Original of our Merits. That when they say on the contrary, that Natural Industry must go before it, their design is to insinuate by it, that our Nature hath not been impaired by Original Sin. Then he exhorts Januarius to beware, lest his People raise new Scandals by obliging them to purge themselves from all manner of suspicion, upon pain of being driven out of the Church. He admonishes him also about the end, that he should not suffer the Priests, Deacons, or other of the Clergy, to pass from one Church to another at their own pleasure, but force them to continue in that Church wherein they have been once ordain'd. Lastly, he discovers to him the Obligation that all Bishops are under, to see that the Canons be observed, because if they do not do it, they keep up the Disorders of their Inferiors by their Gentleness, and increase the Evils by not using the Remedies sufficient to cure them.

St. Leo.

The following Letter to Septimius Bishop of Altinum, (now Torzello) a City of the Patriarchate of Venice, is upon the same subject with the former, and contains the same things in short. This, and the fourteenth to Januarius, are written much about the same time, but this applies to the Pelagians in particular, what is said in the fourteenth in general against Hereticks and Schismaticks, that they ought not to be received, till they have abjured their Errors, and condemned the Authors of them. Besides this, the Letter to Septimius doth only repeat what had been said in the first Letter to Januarius concerning those Clerks, who leave their Church to go to another; whereas in the fourteenth he speaks nothing of this Change, but he orders, that those Clerks who are converted, ought to look upon it as a great favour, that they are allowed to continue in the Clergy in which they are, provided, that they have not been baptized twice, and they may not hope to be raised to any higher Dignity. The seventh hath no Date, the fourteenth is dated December the 29*th*, or June the 24*th*, Anno 447. It was intituled to Julian in the vulgar Editions. But Dionysius Minor, Cresconius, Hincmarus, and all the MSS. carry the Name of Januarius Bishop of Aquileia. There are three other Letters which bear the Name of St. Leo, very like for the subject. The first and second, that is to say, the sixth and seventh, contain nothing but the same thing exactly, but the one is a great deal longer than the other. The seventh and fourteenth are not so like in the subject, but they are much more so in the terms, or rather they are the same thing, a few Lines excepted. Which made F. Norris believe, that they were really two Copies of the same Letter sent to two different Bishops. But that Conjecture doth not seem possible to be defended; for besides, that the Sense of the last part of these two Letters is wholly different, it cannot be of the Pelagians of whom he speaks in the latter, but in general of all Hereticks, and Schismaticks, and particularly of the Donatists, who caused themselves to be re-baptized. It cannot then be said, that these two Letters are two Copies of the same Letter, they are certainly two different Letters; for is it likely that St. Leo, who had so great a facility of Writing, should be brought so low, as I may say, as to copy out his own Writings himself, Word for Word, and to follow the terms only of one of his Letters to write another to a distinct Person upon a different subject? this is not at all Credible. 'Tis more probable, that one of these two Letters is forged, but which of the two is disputable. Father Quesnel thinks 'tis the seventh, and his Adversary maintains that it is the fourteenth. Let us consider their Reasons.

F. Quesnel proves, that the 14*th*. is authentick, by the Testimony of Dionysius Exiguus, and Cresconius, who have inserted it in their Collections of Hincmarus who hath cited this Letter, and by the Authority of the more ancient MSS.

St. Leo. On the contrary, he rejects the 7th. which is not in the ancient Collections, but in Iſidore's only, by theſe Conjectures: The moſt valid is taken from this Term, Metropolitan of the Province of Venice, which is to be found in this Letter, which is not in the 14th. We ſhall never find, ſays he, that the Metropolitan of the Province of Venice was ever ſpoken of, before the City of Venice was made an Epiſcopal See, and what Senſe can that Expreſſion have, when Venice was not the Metropolis of any Province, and the Province it ſelf was not called Venice, but Iſtria? The Biſhop of Aquileia was never called Metropolitan of the Province of Venice, but of the Province of Iſtria, and the Biſhops of that Country, Biſhops of Iſtria, and not of the Venetian Province. Photius, in the 54th. Code of his Bibliotheca, ſays well, that Septimius had written to St. Leo againſt the Hereſie of the Neſtorians (he means of the Pelagians, for they were known in the Eaſt under the Name of the Neſtorians only) who would exalt themſelves; but he ſays not that St. Leo had ſent a Letter to Septimius.

The Adverſary of F. Queſnel doth not oppoſe the Proofs, by which the 14th. Letter is upheld, but he makes it his Buſineſs to relate ſuch Conjectures as prove it ſuppoſititious, and anſwers to thoſe which F. Queſnel hath brought againſt the 7th. He ſays then, againſt the 14th. 1. That the Concluſion is not anſwerable to the Beginning; that it is an unſhapen Monſter; for in the beginning, St. Leo commends the Zeal of the Perſon to whom he writes, and at the end threatens him, if he neglects to have his Decrees put in practice. 2. That this Concluſion is taken, word for word, out of the 6th. Letter of St. Leo to the ſame Januarius; that nevertheleſs it is all that is different almoſt in this Letter from that which is directed to Septimius. Now what probability is there, that St. Leo ſhould uſe the ſame Concluſion in two diſtinct Letters written to the ſame Perſon. 3. It is probable, that the Terms, which are in the 14th. Letter and not in the 7th. have been added. 4. That the 6th. Letter to Januarius confirms the 7th. It is certain, that Septimius had written to St. Leo, concerning the Pelagians, which is alſo confirmed by the Teſtimony of Photius. There is then a greater probability, that the Letter, which is written to him upon that Subject, is genuine, than another Letter to Januarius concerning the Donatiſts. For when we have two Writings, one of which is certainly forged, and we find one to have relation to the Circumſtances of the Hiſtory of the Time, and the other none at all; we ought to uphold the former rather than the latter.

Theſe are the Arguments which M. the Abbot of Authelmi brings againſt the 14th. Letter. Next, he anſwers to thoſe which F. Queſnel hath offered againſt the 7th. Letter; ſince there is none but that which reſpects the Metropolitan of Venice, which appeared ſtrong to us, we will not ſtay to diſcuſs the other. M. Abbot Authelmi is ſenſible of the force of it. And, firſt, he endeavours to elude it, by ſaying, that among the Records of the Ancients, the Names of Venice and Iſtria are to be found. Whereupon he quotes two Inſcriptions, and the 25th. Letter of St. Ambroſe to the Church of Vercellæ, wherein he ſpeaks of the Provinces of Liguria, Æmilia and Venice. But diſtruſting this firſt Anſwer, he ſays, that the Name of Venice, in this Letter, is evidently added or changed for Iſtria. And he endeavours to diſcover after what manner this Change might be made, but he doth not prove it by the Authority of any MSS. that it hath been done; yet this is all that he hath brought to prove it. This is what he ſaith on both ſides concerning the Authenticknes of theſe two Letters. Altho' it doth not belong to me to judge between two Perſons, ſo judicious as theſe Criticks are, nevertheleſs I cannot but give my Opinion concerning theſe Letters, yet upon this condition, that it be not reckoned of any great worth.

The Authority of the Collections of Dionyſius Exiguus and Creſconius, ſeem to me to prove the Authenticknes of the 14th. Letter, to which 'tis hard not to yield Aſſent. It is true, we have rejected ſome Parts of the firſt Letter, altho' they are in the Collection of Dionyſius Exiguus. But 'tis becauſe we had a lawful Reaſon to doubt, whether they were there heretofore, and becauſe Creſconius had not put them in his Collection, and becauſe they are not to be found in the ancient Manuſcripts, and becauſe they are evidently added. It is certain, that Dionyſius hath recited that Letter, Creſconius hath followed him, the Manuſcripts agree, and there is nothing that proves the Letter ſuppoſititious, for the Conjectures of M. Abbot Authelmi do not ſeem ſtrong enough.

The firſt is grounded upon this Suppoſition, that the laſt Words of that Letter are directly applied to Januarius, but this is not altogether ſo, for they may as well relate to other Biſhops. Furthermore, theſe Words are not ſo ſharp, but St. Leo might make uſe of them to awaken and increaſe the Zeal of the Biſhop to whom he wrote.

The 2d. is not at all more concluding. It is not very unuſual for the ſame Man to write two different Letters after the ſame manner, and to repeat the ſame Sentence in two different Places. St. Leo's Letters afford us many Examples of it. Read but the 97th. and the 134th. Letters, and you will find there 6 or 7 Chapters tranſcribed out of the one into the other. Beſides, the Concluſion of theſe two Letters is perhaps a Form of Threatning, which the Popes ordinarily uſed. But however that be, it is not leſs allowable to St. Leo, to take this Concluſion out of his 6th. Letter, than to Pope Adrian I. to take the whole 4th. Chapter of this ſame Letter, and inſert it into his 97th. Letter. St. Leo.

The third is the very Point about which all the Conteſt is. F. Queſnel holds, that what there is over and above in the 14th. Letter is no Addition, but what comes naturally in with the Text; and that it is the 7th. Letter which is defective. Let the Reader judge. The Senſe of the 2d. Part is quite different. The Order, which is found in the 14th. Letter, by which it is forbidden to promote converted Clergymen to any higher Degree, is certainly ancient; it bears a Mark of Veneration, and is expreſſed in Terms ſuitable to St. Leo. This is in my Judgment, of great Weight.

The laſt Conjecture of M. Abbot Authelmi, although he thinks it able to determine the Point, yet doth not ſeem to me to be altogether ſo. The Forgers of Writings do often take occaſion to counterfeit Books from ſome Circumſtance of Chronology. They think not upon new Notions, nor of Affairs very lately tranſacted, but they ordinarily derive them from the Ancients. It was much eaſier for an Impoſtor to forge a Letter of St. Leo, to Septimius, by taking the Hiſtory of the 6th. Letter, and the Terms of the 14th. than to produce one wholly from his own Fancy.

The Conjectures which F. Queſnel hath alledged againſt the Letter to Septimius, are not altogether deciſive; but if we muſt neceſſarily aſſert, that one of the two Letters is forged, and the other genuine, I ſhall readily conclude in favour of the 14th. And muſt, withal, acknowledge, that the Objection taken from theſe Words, Ad Metropolitanum Epiſcopum Venetiæ, is almoſt unanſwerable; a like Example cannot be produced. The Word Venetia, in the ſingular Number, is no where to be found, nor Provincia Venetiæ, but Liguriæ, Æmiliæ Venetiarumque partes. In fine, It was never heard, that the Biſhop of Aquileia was called Metropolitanum Venetiæ Provinciæ. It is not likely, that this Place hath been added or changed, ſince the Letter was written. The Abbot Authelmi ſuppoſeth, that the precedent Letter, in many Manuſcripts was intitled, Ad Metropolitanum Provinciæ Venetiæ, and that that gave an Occaſion to the Notary, who ſaw that the precedent Letter was ſpoken of in this, to change Iſtriæ into Venetiæ upon the Credit of the Title only. But there are only two Manuſcripts wherein this Letter is ſo ſuperſcribed. In all the other, it is only directed to the Biſhop of Aquileia, and yet we find in the Letter to Septimius, Metropolitanum Provinciæ Venetiæ. It is then far more probable, that it was the 7th. Letter, which gave occaſion to intitle the 6th. ſo, in ſome Manuſcripts, than that the meer Title of the 6th. Letter ſhould be the cauſe, that the Text of the 7th. hath been corrupted. But we have ſtayed too long upon a critical Point of little Importance.

The 8th. Letter of St. Leo is dated Jan. 30. 444. In many MSS. it is directed to the Biſhops of ſeveral Provinces. In one, to the Biſhops of Sicily, but commonly to the Biſhops of Italy. St. Leo writes in this Letter, that he had found out and convinced many Manichees of their Error in the City of Rome; that he received ſuch of them to Penance, as acknowledged their Sin, and the reſt he had baniſhed according to the Edicts of the Emperors. He exhorts thoſe to whom he writes, to be Vigilant, as good Paſtors, to diſcover thoſe, who might lurk in their Dioceſſes.

The 9th. Letter to the Biſhops of the Province of Vienna had never been publiſhed, had it not been found in a MSS. in the Library of the Abby of Fleury. It is a very dubious Piece, as F. Queſnel ſhews in his Notes, for, 1. The date, by the Conſuls, is apparently falſe. Valentinian had been Conſul 4 times in 435. but never had Avienus for his Colleague, who was not Conſul till 450. St. Leo was not yet Pope, when the firſt was Conſul, and Hilarius Biſhop of Arles, to whom this Letter was written, was dead, when the latter was Conſul. But the date may be amended, by putting it under the Conſulſhip of Valentinian, the 6th. time, and of Nomius. 2. The Style of this Letter is altogether different from St. Leo's. 3. We find therein the Name of Archbiſhop, which the Latin Authors did not uſe at that time. 4. Nor is it probable, that St. Leo did write two Letters to the ſame Biſhops at the ſame time, and upon the ſame Subject; and the 10th. being certainly St. Leo's, this ought to be accounted a Forgery. 'Tis very ſhort. He therein revokes the Privileges granted to the Church of Arles, becauſe Hilarius had refuſed to ſubmit to his Judgment, and reſtored them to the Church of Vienna.

The 10th. Letter to the Biſhops of that Province, is about the difference between Hilarius Biſhop of Arles and St. Leo. For the full underſtanding of which we muſt obſerve, 1. That there had been a Conteſt, a long time, between the Biſhops of Vienna and the Biſhop of Arles, about the Rights of the Metropolis in the Province of Vienna. 2. That the Council of Taurinum, to appeaſe this Quarrel had ordain'd, that whoſoever, of the two, could prove, that his City was the Civil Metropolis, ſhould enjoy the Right of the Eccleſiaſtical Metropolitan of all the Province; but that,

St. Leo. that, in the mean while, each ſhould have for Suffragans, the Biſhops which were neareſt to his City, and ſo they ſhould live peaceable. 3. That the Biſhop of Arles would not only have the Title of Metropolitan of the Province of Vienna, but alſo that of Exarch of the 7 Provinces of Narbonne. Zoſimus acknowledges this Right, in his 5th. Epiſtle; and the Biſhop of Arles obtained an Edict in 418. by which it was granted him. Pope Boniface oppoſed his Claim, and bewails it in a Letter to the Biſhop of Narbonne, that the Biſhop of Arles had ordained a Biſhop in the Church of Luteva, which belongs to the Province of Narbonne, without the conſent of the Metropolitan of that Province. 4. That Hilarius, Biſhop of Arles, deſirous to maintain the Right of the Metropolis and Exarchy, given to his Church, went his Viſitations, into all the 7 Provinces, and having light upon a Biſhop called Celidonius, of the Province of Vienna, who had been married to a Widow, and who had had ſecular Employments, he depoſed him in a Synod. This Biſhop went to Rome, and there complained of the Judgment given againſt him by Hilarius. 5. That Hilarius, Biſhop of Arles, followed him, and after he had viſited the Church of St. Peter and St. Paul, to pray to theſe Apoſtles there, he went to St. Leo, and humbly beſought him not to trouble the Churches. He made his complaints concerning the French Biſhops, who, after they had been deſervedly condemned in France, were, notwithſtanding, allowed to aſſiſt at the Holy Sacrament in the City of Rome, and earneſtly deſired him to yield to his Perſuaſions, declaring to him at the ſame time, that he was not come to accuſe his Adverſary, but barely to make his Proteſtations and Declarations, and if it did not pleaſe him, he would return home, as he really did, when he ſaw, that St. Leo called a Synod to bring the Matter to Tryal. 6. That after his Departure, St. Leo abſolved and reſtored him to his See.

Upon this occaſion, and in this juncture of Affairs, did this Pope write in 445. to the Biſhops of the Province of Vienna, this Letter of which we are ſpeaking. He begins with an Encomium of the Apoſtolick See, and ſays, that he had been conſulted very often by the French Biſhops, and had diſannulled and confirmed their Judiciary Sentences, which had been brought to him by Appeal. He complains that Hilary had diſturbed the Peace and Union of the Churches; that he had endeavoured to make the Biſhops of the ſeven Provinces ſubject to his Authority, without ſubmitting to St. Peter's, whom he had reſiſted and leſſen'd, being puffed up with a Spirit of Pride. He adds, that having examined the cauſe of Celidonius, he found him really Innocent of what he was accuſed, and therefore had made void the Sentence which had been given againſt him, which nevertheleſs he would have ratified, if what was alledged had been true.

He ſpeaks afterwards of the cauſe of another Biſhop of the Province of Vienna, named Projectus: He complains, that Hilary would have ordained, in his Place, a Perſon who had been choſen neither by the People, nor Clergy, nor Nobility. He demands why St. Hilary did intermeddle with the Ordinations of another Province. He reproves his departure from Rome, and at length declares, that he had ordained that Projectus ſhould remain in his See.

He then commands the Biſhops to ordain Canonically, in purſuance of the Election of the People or Clergy, and that every one of them keep within their own Bounds. He condemns Hilary for carrying along with him armed Men in ordaining or driving out Biſhops: He forbids him the calling of Synods, and declares him deprived not only of his Right of Primacy, which he had pretended to, but alſo of the Right of Metropolis in the Province of Vienna, which he had uſurped. He will not have him ordained, and declares him fallen away from the Communion of the Apoſtolick See. He brings here an excellent Rule about Excommunication, We muſt not, ſaith he, eaſily excommunicate any, nor ought it to be inflicted upon any at the Humour of every peeviſh Biſhop, but we ought to uſe that Means to puniſh a great Crime. He adds, That none may be excommunicated but the Guilty, not they that have no Part in the Action.

He exhorts the Biſhops to whom he wrote, to put in execution what he had commanded: He makes them take notice, that he did not aſſume to himſelf the Ordinations of their Churches, but preſerved them from the incroachments of Hilary. Laſtly, He forbids them calling a Synod, of more than one Province, without the conſent of Leontius an ancient Biſhop (he doth not tell us of what See, but in the Life of Honoratus, written by Hilary Biſhop of Arles, there is one Leontius Biſhop of Frejus [Forum Julii, a City in Provence] ſpoken of). St. Leo, by this, gives him the Primacy for a Time, upon the account of his Age, but yet wholly by the Leave and Approbation of the Biſhops of France, ſi vobis placet, and without diminiſhing the Rights of the Metropolitans.

It remains that we obſerve, that neither Hilary Biſhop of Arles, nor the Biſhops of France did give place to St. Leo, and that this Pope continued firm to his opinion, although Hilary ſent two Deputies to him to appeaſe him. This is evident by the Letter of Auxiliaris, Governor of Rome, recited by Honoratus; in which he tells this Saint, that he hath ſpoken with Pope Leo, and adds: In reading this you will be ſtirr'd, for you are always the ſame, and in the ſame Reſolution. He adviſes him to ſoften his Terms, becauſe, ſaith he, Roman Ears are tender. St. Leo.

Upon this account it was that the Pope, labouring with all his Might to have his Decrees put in execution, obtained an Edict of the Emperor Juſtinian, which he ſent after this Letter; by which the Emperor declares, that the Primacy of the Apoſtolick See ought not to be leſſened, being built upon the Merits of St. Peter, and confirmed by the Authority of the Councils. He blames Hilary Biſhop of Arles, for having arrogated the Ordinations to himſelf that did not belong to him, and having depoſed Biſhops unjuſtly. He commands, that the Sentence given againſt him by the Holy See, which ought to take place without the Imperial Authority, be executed, that no Man oppoſe it, and that there be no Diſturbances in the Churches for the future. He ordains, that for ever hereafter, neither the French Biſhops, nor the Biſhops of other Provinces, ſhall undertake any thing without the Authority of the Biſhop of Rome; That all that he orders ſhall be acknowledged for a Law; and that the Biſhops, which he ſhall cite, ſhall be compelled by the Governor to come to Rome. This Edict, which is contrary to the Canons, as alſo to the Decrees of the Council of Sardica, hath no place here. It is dated the 6th. of June, in 445.

The eleventh Letter to Dioſcorus Biſhop of Alexandria, was written, certainly, ſome time after the Ordination of that Biſhop, and conſequently in 445. St. Leo having ſpoken of the Union and Agreement that there ought to be between the Church of Rome and Alexandria, becauſe the firſt was founded by St. Peter, and the ſecond by St. Mark his Scholar: He exhorts Dioſcorus to obſerve that which was practiſed in the Church of Rome, touching the Times of Ordinations, which ought not to be conferred on all Days indifferently, but only on Saturday-night, juſt before the Lord's-day, which may be looked upon as belonging to the Lord's Day. He would have them, who celebrate Ordination, to be faſting, and that they they continue the Faſt of Saturday upon the Lord's Day; that is to ſay, that ſince they begin to faſt all Day upon Saturday, they do not eat till the Evening of the Lord's Day, after the Ordination is ended; ſo we ought to underſtand St. Leo's Words. This Explication is confirmed by Urban II. in the Council of Clermont in the Year 1095. where ſpeaking of Ordinations, he ſays, Et tunc protrahatur jejunium uſque ad craſtinum, ut magis appareat in die dominico ordines fieri. And then let the Faſt be lengthned till the Morrow, that it may be the more apparent that Orders are conferred on the Lord's Day.

In the ſecond part of this Letter, he adviſes him to obſerve the Cuſtom of the Church of Rome; which was to reiterate the holy Communion, when ſo great Numbers come to the Church upon ſolemn Feſtivals, that all thoſe that come can not enter. It was evidently the ſame, who began the Sacrament again, for the Biſhop ordinarily adminiſtred it, and it was not allowed to a Prieſt to offer in the preſence of a Biſhop. He wrote this Letter to Dioſcorus, by Poſſidonius a Deacon of Alexandria, who is evidently the ſame that St. Cyril ſent to St. Cœleſtine; for St. Leo witneſſes, that he had often been preſent at the Ordinations and Proceſſions of Rome.

The twelfth Letter is to Anaſtaſius Biſhop of Theſſalonica, and altho' the Date of it be not well known, yet it is referred to this Year. St. Leo in this Letter lays ſome Faults to the Charge of this Biſhop, and preſcribes him ſome Rules, which he would have him obſerve. He tells him, that he and his Predeceſſors being made his Deputy, he ought to execute that Charge with Moderation, and ſuſpend the Judgment of Matters of Conſequence, and which have ſome Difficulty to make Report of them to the holy See. He tells him, that he muſt act with Gentleneſs and Charity, principally in reproving Biſhops, and that he muſt rather amend them by Kindneſs than Severity. He afterward objects ſome Faults againſt him, not directly laying them to his Charge. They, ſaith he, who ſeek their own Intereſt more than that of Jeſus Chriſt, take no Care how they manage Affairs; they depart from the Laws of Charity; they love rather to rule than to adviſe; the Honour pleaſeth them, when it raiſeth them, and they abuſe the Title which hath been given them for the Preſervation of Peace. He adds, that it is a Grief to him, that he is forced to uſe ſuch Terms, but he thinks himſelf in Fault, when he knows, that he, whom he hath made his Deputy, is departed from the Laws which he hath given him. He then tells him, that the Reaſon of this Imputation is the Severity which he hath uſed towards Atticus Metropolitan of Epirus, becauſe he had not appeared at the Synod, to which he had been ſummon'd. He tells him, that altho' he were blame-worthy, yet he had not Power to condemn him, without waiting for the Judgment of the holy See; becauſe being but Deputy, he was aſſumed, in partem ſollicitudinis, non in plenitudinem poteſtatis; To ſhare in his Care, not exerciſe the ſame Authority.

He appoints, in the ſecond Canon, that Metropolitans ſhould preſerve the Rights which are granted them by the Canons.

St. Leo.

In the third, he ſays, that ſuch Perſons may not be choſen for Biſhops, as are Laymen, or Novices, or twice married or have married Widows. In the old Edition it is, Sed nec qui viduam copularit; Neither he that marrieth a Widow: It ought to be read, Qui unam vel habeat vel habuerit, ſed quam ſibi viduam copularit; He that hath or ſhall have but only one Wife, but whom he married when ſhe was a Widow. F. Queſnel hath thus corrected it, following the Authority of the Collections of Councils.

In the fourth Canon he commands the Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons, to live unmarried, and obſerves, that the Uſe of Marriage was not allowed to Sub-deacons. Nevertheleſs, St. Gregory, lib. 2. Regiſt. Ep. 42. ſays, that it was too hard to refuſe it to the latter.

In the fifth Canon he ſaith, that he ought to be made a Biſhop, who is choſen by the Clergy and People. He gives Power to the Metropolitan, in caſe that their Judgments be divided, to preferr him who is of greateſt Worth, and hath moſt Votes: But he peremptorily forbids him making any Perſon a Biſhop, whom the People would not have.

In the ſixth Canon he judges it very fit, that the Metropolitan ſhould write to his Vicar concerning the Election, that it may be confirmed by his Judgment, and ſo, after the Death of the Metropolitan, he wills that the Biſhops of the Province ſhould aſſemble themſelves and chuſe one of the Prieſts or Deacons of the vacant Church, and that they give an Account of their Election to his Vicar that he may confirm it: He commands him, notwithſtanding, to return a ſpeedy Anſwer; Sicut enim, ſaith he, juſtas electiones nullis volumus dilationibus fatigari, ita nihil permittimus te ignorante præſumi; For as we will not have due Elections to be diſturbed with Delays, ſo we do not allow that any thing be preſumed on without your Knowledge.

In the ſeventh Canon he appoints, according to the Nicene Council, that two Synods be held every year in each Province. He requires, that if there be any Cauſe among the Biſhops, accuſed of Crimes, which cannot be determined in the provincial Synod, it ſhould be made known to his Vicar, and, if he could not end it, he ſhould write to the holy See.

In the eighth he declares, that he that would go from one Church to another, out of Contempt of his own, ſhall be be deprived both of that he would have, and of that he hath. Ut nec illis præſideat, quos per avaritiam concupivit, nec illis quos per ſuperbiam ſprevit. That he may not preſide over thoſe whom he thro' Covetouſneſs hath deſired, nor thoſe whom thro' Pride he hath contemned. St. Leo in this follows the Canon of the Council of Sardica; but thoſe of Nice and Chalcedon permitted them to continue in their firſt Church.

In the ninth he forbids the Biſhops to receive or invite the Clergy of another Church. He will ſo have it, that if a Clerk, being come out of his own Dioceſs, abide in the ſame Province, he ſhould be compelled to return to his own Church by the Metropolitan; and if he be out of the Province, by the Vicar of the holy See.

In the tenth he enjoyns him to obſerve a great deal of Moderation, in calling his Brethren together. He requires, that if it be neceſſary to convene a Synod about ſome weighty Affair, he would conſtrain no more than two Biſhops of each Province to come to it, and thoſe ſuch as the Metropolitan ſhould chuſe; and that he ſhould keep them no longer than five Days.

In the laſt he commands Anaſtaſius, that if in any thing he found his Judgment different from his Brethrens, that he ſhould write to him before he did any thing, that all things might be done with Unity and Concord. He obſerves, that altho' the Dignity of Biſhops be common (for ſo it ought to be read, Etſi dignitas communis, non eſt tamen ordo generalis) their Order is different; that altho' the Apoſtles were equal, yet a Primacy was always given to one only: That, according to this Platform, the Diſtinction of Biſhops is formed; and it hath been provided, that all ſhould not aſſume to themſelves all ſorts of Rights. For this Reaſon it is that Metropolitical Biſhops have greater Authority than other Biſhops; that in great Cities there are thoſe that have a greater Charge: And, that, laſtly, the Care of the univerſal Church belongs to the See of St. Peter, that all the Churches may agree with their Head: That he muſt not take it ill to have one above him, who is himſelf above others, but he ought to obey the rather, as he deſires others ſhould obey him, and as he would not bear an heavy Yoke himſelf, he muſt not impoſe it upon others.

It is to be obſerved, that St. Leo wrote this Letter to a Biſhop of Theſſalonica, whom he had made his Vicar in the Dioceſs of Illyria, which he had a mind to add to his Patriarchate, and govern it with the ſame Authority that he did the Sub-urbian Provinces.

The thirteenth Letter directed to the Metropolitans of Achaia, is taken out of the Collection of Holſtenius. It is dated January the 6*th.* 446. St. Leo tells them how joyful he was at the Receipt of their Letters, underſtanding thereby, that they approved of what he had done, in committing the Care of the Churches of Illyria to Anaſtaſius Biſhop of Theſſalonica. He admoniſhes them, that if there ariſe any Controverſies among the Biſhops of that Country, which cannot be decided in the Province, they ought to be brought before him, and determined by his Judgment, but if they are of very great Conſequence, and cannot be ended in the Provinces, nor accommodated by the Mediation of the Biſhop of Theſſalonica, the Biſhops of the Provinces muſt come to a Synod, which he will call, and two or three Biſhops at leaſt of each Province muſt be preſent at it. He then reproves the Metropolitan of Achaia, becauſe he had ordained many contrary to the Canons of the Church, and particularly had not long before made a Perſon Biſhop of Theſpiæ, who was unknown to the Inhabitants and whom they were againſt. He thereupon forbids Metropolitans to ordain ſuch Perſons as they thought good of, Biſhops, without waiting for the Conſent of the People and Clergy, and enjoyns them to accept him who ſhall be choſen by the common Conſent of all the City. Laſtly, He requires them to obſerve the Canons, which forbid a Biſhop to take a Clerk of another Biſhop, if he do not ſhew Letters from his own Biſhop, that he is willing to let him have him. He looks upon this Point of Diſcipline as being very uſeful to uphold Agreement and Peace among Biſhops.

St. Leo.

We have already ſpoken to the fourteenth Letter written to Januarius Biſhop of Aquileia.

The fifteenth Letter written to Turribius, is of July the 21*ſt*, 447. St. Leo therein commends that Biſhop, that he had care to give him notice, that the abominable Hereſie of the Priſcillianiſts began to ſpring up afreſh in Spain. He alſo calls it the Sect of the Priſcillianiſts becauſe, he ſays, it was an heap of deteſtable Errors, and moſt filthy Superſtitions.

He adds, that that Hereſie hath been condemned by the Church as often as it hath appeared, and that the Magiſtrates themſelves have had ſo great an hatred for that deteſtable Sect, that they have uſed the ſeverity of the Laws againſt them, puniſhing the Author and principal Abetters with Death. And that not without Reaſon, becauſe they ſaw that all Laws, Divine and Humane, would be ſubverted, and the Civil Society diſturbed, if ſuch Perſons, who divulged ſo deteſtable Errors, were ſuffered to live. That this ſeverity had been uſed a long time together with the lenity of the Church, becauſe, tho' the Church being contented with the Judgment of her Biſhops, avoids all ſanguinary Puniſhments, yet it is helped by the Edicts of Princes, which cauſe them, that fear temporal Penalties, to have recourſe ſometimes to ſpiritual Remedies. St. Leo in the next place relates the ſixteen Articles, in which Turribius makes the Doctrine of the Priſcillianiſts to conſiſt; and ſhews us, that they contain ſo many Impieties. The Articles are theſe, 1. That the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, are only one Perſon. 2. That there come from the Eſſence of God, Virtues, that is to ſay, Spiritual Beings, which proceed from his Eſſence. 3. That Jeſus Chriſt is the Son of God only, becauſe he was Born of the Virgin Mary. 4. That they faſt on Chriſt's Nativity, and Sundays. 5. That the Soul is from the Divine Eſſence. 6. That Devils were never good by their Nature; that they were not created by God, but they were formed out of the Chaos, and Darkneſs. 7. That Marriage is forbidden, and that Generation is a deteſtable thing. 8. That the Bodies of Men are made by the Devil, and that they ſhall not riſe from the Dead. 9. That the Children of the Promiſe are born of Women, but are conceived by the Holy Ghoſt. 10. That the Souls of Men have their abode in Heaven, before they are incloſed in their Bodies, and that they are thruſt into them upon the account of their Sins which they have committed heretofore. 11. That the Stars and Conſtellations govern all things by an inevitable Fate. 12. That the Body and Soul are ſubject to certain Powers, thoſe that govern the Soul are called Patriarchs, and thoſe that rule the parts of the Body, are Stars. 13. That the whole Body of the Canonical Scriptures is contained under the Name of the Patriarchs, which denote the twelve Virtues, which reſtore and illuminate the inner Man. 14. That our Bodies are ſubject to the Stars and Conſtellations. 15. St. Leo obſerves, that they have corrupted the Books of Scripture, and make uſe of Apocryphal Works full of Errors; that the Biſhops ought to take them from them and burn them, altho' they bear the Names of the Apoſtles, and have ſome ſhow of Piety, becauſe they ordinarily have an hidden Poiſon in them, and lead Men into Error. In the 16*th.* Article St. Leo prohibits the Book that Dictinius had compoſed, being a Priſcillianiſt. He alſo ſpeaks of their Infamous Myſteries, like to thoſe of the Manichees, whom he had made to acknowledge their Crime. Laſtly, He condemns thoſe Biſhops, who are in thoſe Errors, which he before obſerved, or rather, who did not oppoſe them, and would not curſe them.

In fine, as to that which Turribius hath noted to St. Leo, that ſome of the Orthodox did doubt, whether the Fleſh of Jeſus Chriſt was really in the Sepulchre, during the time that his Soul went down into Hell? He anſwers, that he wondered that any Chriſtian ſhould doubt of that Truth, ſince it is plain by the Teſtimony of Holy Scripture, that the Body of Jeſus Chriſt was buried, and was raiſed again from the Dead. He concludes, that it is neceſſary that a Council be called in Spain in ſome convenient place, where the Biſhops of the Neighbouring Provinces may be preſent, and there examine, if there be any Biſhop who hold theſe

Errors

St. Leo. Errors which he hath related, and if any be found, they must be excommunicated, because it is not to be endured, that they who ought to preach the Faith to others, should have the boldness themselves to dispute against the Creed and Gospel. He says, that he hath written to the Bishops of the Provinces of Spain to assemble a National Council, and that it belongs to him, to whom he writes, to cause it to be put in execution; but if that cannot be done, the Bishops of Gallæcia should at least meet. He leaves the care of calling the Council not only to Turribius, but also to Idacius, and Cæponius, to which two Bishops Turribius wrote a Letter which he sent a little after along with that which St. Leo wrote to him. That Bishop shews therein his Grief which he was in, to find his Country infected with so many Errors, and commands them not to suffer the Christians to read such Apocryphal Books, as the Acts of St. Andrew, St. John, St. Thomas, and the Book intituled, The Memoirs of the Apostles.

The sixteenth Letter to the Bishops of Sicily is dated October the 21st, 447. St. Leo in it reproves the Custom of the Churches of Sicily, in administring Baptism upon the Feast of Epiphany, and says, that no Man ought to be baptized, but upon the Feasts of Passover and Pentecost, according to the Custom of the Church of Rome, which he would have them to understand, that they are obliged to follow, because they were ordain'd by the Bishop of Rome. Nevertheless he pardons their fault, because he had not as yet given them notice of it, hoping they would alter this Custom. He then proves, that they ought to observe certain times for the Celebration of the Mysteries of Religion; that the Feast of Easter is the most proper time for the Administration of Baptism, because that is the time when those Mysteries are remembred, which are represented by Baptism; that the Feast of Pentecost may also be joined with it; that those who thro' Sickness, or Absence, could not receive the Sacrament of Baptism at Easter, might not be deprived at Pentecost of the Grace which it conferrs, and which the Holy Spirit pours out upon the Faithful; that the Apostles themselves have authorized this Usage; but that there is no other Feast on which Baptism can be administred after a solemn manner, because, tho' we ought to give a due respect to all the Festivals which are appointed for the Honour of God, yet we must keep the Mystical Representation of that Sacrament; that this Law nevertheless doth not hinder from succouring those at all times which are in danger of Death; that those, who respect the Feast of Epiphany, as a fit Season for the Administration of Baptism, because Jesus Christ upon that Day received the Baptism of John, ought to consider, that there is a great deal of difference between the Baptism of John, and that of Jesus Christ, and that this last was not instituted till the Side of Jesus Christ was opened, and there came from thence Blood and Water. This was the reason that St. Leo defended the Custom of the Church of Rome, to which he endeavoured to oblige the Bishops of Sicily, who were in his Patriarchate, and commanded them to send every Year three Bishops to the Synod which he did hold at Rome the 29th. of September.

There is another Letter to the same Bishops, dated the next Day in which this last was written, wherein upon the Complaints of the Clergy of two Churches of Sicily, who had accused their Bishops for squandring away the Revenues of their Churches, he forbids the Bishops, that they do not give, pawn, change, or sell the Goods of their Churches, unless it be for the advantage of the Church, and with the advice of all the Clergy. But for fear lest the Priests and Deacons should agree with their Bishop to make away the Church-goods, he forbids them, upon pain of Excommunication, to do any thing of that Nature, because it is just, saith he, that not only the Bishops, but all Ecclesiastical Persons, should preserve the Revenues of the Church, and unreasonable, that the Goods given by the Faithful for the Salvation of their Souls, should be embezelled, or consumed.

Father Quesnel doubts, whether this Letter be St. Leo's, being induced to it by these Conjectures, 1. It is not found in any MSS. under the Name of St. Leo. Vossius having met with it in a MS. of Cardinal Sirlet's, hath printed it under St. Leo's Name, upon the account of the Date. 2. 'Tis not this Pope's Style, and there are in it many Expressions (b) which he never uses. 3. What probability is there, that S. Leo would write to the same Bishops two different Letters, two Days together? Could he not have written in the former what is in this latter? 4 The Abuse which is reproved in this Letter, doth not in the least agree with the times of St. Leo, and the Discipline which is therein establish'd hath yet less resemblance. Who will believe, that in the time of St. Leo, it was allowed to a Bishop to alienate the Goods of the Church with the consent of his Clergy only? 5. The Author of this Letter imposeth this Penalty upon the Clergy, who abuse the Goods of the Church, to be deprived both of their Office, and the Communion of the Church. In St. Leo's time they never joined these two Punishments together. These Conjectures are certainly very probable, and make me of F. Quesnel's Judgment, who thought this Letter forged, or at least, that it is another Leo's, and the Names of the Consuls have been added to it. This last is so much the more probable, because it is cited by Gratian under the Name of Pope Leo the 12th. Quest. 2. cap. 52. sine exceptione. St. Leo.

The eighteenth Letter is written to Dorus, Bishop of Beneventum, and dated the 8th. of March, in the Year 448. He reproves that Bishop, for having disturbed the whole Order of Priests, by preferring a younger Priest before the more aged. He commands, that the more ancient should take their Places, unless it were those two who had consented, that the Person, of whom he speaks in this Letter, should be preferred before them, tho' they were elder than he.

The nineteenth Letter, dated June 1. 448. is an Answer to a Letter that Eutyches had written to St. Leo before he was condemned by Flavian. He had told him, that some Persons did revive the Nestorian Errors again. St. Leo returns him Answer, that he commended his Care; and tells him, that he would provide a sure Remedy, when he should be informed more at large, who they are that have attempted it.

The following Letters, for the most part, concern the Affair of Eutyches, and the History of the Councils of Constantinople under Flavian, of Ephesus under Dioscorus, and of Chalcedon. We shall put off speaking of these, till we shall make a particular Relation of that Affair. We shall satisfie our selves to speak, in this place, of those that have no reference to it.

Of this sort is the thirty sixth Letter to the Bishops of the Province of Arles. He congratulates them, for that, according to the desire of the Clergy, Nobility and People, they had, with one consent, ordained Ravennius Bishop of Arles, in the room of Hilarius, whom he calls a Bishop of blessed Memory. This Letter is dated Aug. 449.

The thirty seventh Letter is written to Ravennius, to congratulate his Promotion to the Bishoprick of Arles. He tells him, that he was much rejoyced at it, not only for his own sake, but upon the Account of the Church of Arles; for it is an Honour, as well as an Advantage to the Faithful, to have a Bishop who can help them, and give them an Example. He says, that he hath heretofore experienced his Moderation (Ravennius having been sent to Rome heretofore by Hilarius his Predecessor.) He exhorts him to join Authority with that Moderation, to mingle Justice with Lenity, to avoid Pride, to love Humility, and to keep himself within the bounds prescribed by the Laws of the Church. Lastly, he desires him to inform him often of his Government.

The following Letter is also directed to Ravennius, to whom he wrote about a Vagabond, named, Petronianus, who being in France, boasted himself to be a Deacon of the Church of Rome. He gives him notice, that he was a Cheat, and desires him to write to all the Bishops of his Province, that they should not receive him into Communion. It is dated the 26th. of Aug. 449. but it is not very certain, that it is really St, Leo's.

The Bishops of the Province of Arles having receiv'd a Letter from St. Leo, concerning the Ordination of Ravennius, thought that they had a favourable opportunity given them of obtaining of St. Leo, a restitution of the Rights belonging to the Metropolis of Arles. They preferred a kind of Petition to him, in which, after they had shewn what respect they owed to the Holy See, and thanked St. Leo for the approbation he had given to their Election of Ravennius, they prayed him to restore the Priviledges of the Church of Arles, which had been diminished by St. Leo's last Declarations. To prove the Prerogatives of that Church, they alledge, 1. The Antiquity of the Church of Arles, which they say, was founded by Trophimus, to whom they attribute the first planting of Religion in the Province of France called Narbonne. They observe, that Trophimus was sent by the Apostle St. Peter, which ought to be understood according to the ordinary manner of speaking used at that time, by the Bishops of Rome, Successors of St. Peter and the Apostles. 2. They confirm the Dignity of the Church of Arles by the Privileges, which the Popes themselves had granted to it. 3. As also by the Privileges which the Emperors Constantine, Valentinian and Honorius, had bestowed upon the City of Arles. 4. They alledged, that the Bishop of Arles was in the present possession of three Provinces adjoyning to Vienna, as subject to his Care; and besides these, which he governed by his own Authority, he had the Inspection over all France, as Apostolick Vicar, to enforce them to observe the Rules of the Church. Moved, by these Reasons, they intreated him to render to the Church of Arles all his Prerogatives.

The 50th. Letter to the Bishops of the same Province, is an Answer to the precedent Petition, or the Judgment which St. Leo gives upon their Demand. After he hath declared the Joy, that he did conceive for the kindness which the French Bishops had for Ravennius, he says, that the (b) Expressions.] Of which these are some Examples, Ab omni Episcoporum usurpatione resecare, Ecclesiæ nuditatem deplorare, querimoniarum causam deferre, exemplum fiat imitabile, diversis modis alienare, conniventiam in Ecclesiæ damno miscere. All the Letter is written after a dry and barren way.

St. Leo. Biſhop of Vienna had prevented him from granting their Petition, having ſent Letters and Deputies to complain, that the Biſhop of Arles had ordained the Biſhop of Vaſio. He adds, that having conſidered the Reaſons, on both ſides, he had found, that the Cities of Arles and Vienna, having always been very famous, had diſputed about their Church-Privileges; that ſometimes one was Superior, and ſometimes the other got uppermoſt; ſo that he muſt not leave the Church of Vienna without any Prerogative, eſpecially ſince he had lately honoured it with the Power which he had taken away from Hilarius Biſhop of Arles. He therefore grants him four Suffragan-Biſhops, which are Valentia, Tarentum, Geneva and Gratianople, and leaves the other under the Juriſdiction of the Biſhop of Arles, who will be, as we require him, ſaith he, ſo great a Friend of Peace and Concord, that he will not think that taken from him that is given to his Brother.

The fifty firſt Letter is directed to Ravennius. He ſends to him his Letter to Flavian, and exhorts him to get himſelf a Name in the beginning of his Epiſcopacy, by defending the Catholick Faith, about the Incarnation. 'Tis dated May 5. 450.

The ſeventy ſixth Letter is alſo written to the ſame Biſhop, but upon another Subject. He gives him notice on what day the Feaſt of Paſſover was to be celebrated in the year 452. and commands him to publiſh it to all the French; which ſhews, that he acknowledged him his Vicar among the French.

This Letter is followed by a Letter of Ceretius, Salonius and Verannus, French Biſhops, in which they thank St. Leo, that he had ſent them his Letter to Flavian, and pray him to review and correct the Copy, which they had taken of it. This Letter is not ſo conſiderable as the next to it, which is a Synodical Letter of a French Council to Pope Leo, to thank him for ſending them his Letter to Flavian. The name of Ravennius is in the beginning of it, which may make us think, that the Synod was held at Arles. The Subſcriptions ſhew, that it was compoſed by 44 Biſhops out of the ſeven French Provinces. Theſe Biſhops, after they have excuſed themſelves, that they gave him an Anſwer no ſooner, becauſe they could not meet together, ſay, that they received St. Leo's Letter as a ſum of Faith; that many of them acknowledged the Doctrine which they had received by Tradition to be contained in it, and ſome of them had been better inſtructed by reading of it. They thank S. Leo, in the moſt obliging Terms, and ſcruple not to ſay, that next to God the Faithful are beholding to him for the purity of their Faith.

They add, that they had alſo written unto the Emperor upon the ſame Subject, to teſtifie to him the Zeal which they had for the Faith, by following the example of the Pope, but that having received News from the Eaſt, they believed that it would be unprofitable. They call the Emperor St. Leo's Son, Filium Veſtrum. In fine they write, that they never ceaſe to give God thanks, that he hath given a Biſhop of ſo much Holineſs and Faith to the Apoſtolick Church, from whence comes the Origine and Source of our Religion: Apoſtolicæ Sedis, unde Religionis noſtræ fons & origo manavit, they pray to God to preſerve him a long Time in that See. They make an end by ſaying, that although they come ſhort of his Merit, yet they have the ſame Faith Impares meritis, pari fide, and that they are ready to defend it and die for it. This Letter is full of Expreſſions very reſpectful to the Holy See, and very obliging to the Perſon of St. Leo.

St. Leo, alſo anſwers them in a courteous Manner in Letter 77. He therein accepts their Excuſe, commends their Faith, explains the Errors of the Neſtorians and Eutyches. He lets them know, that this laſt Heretick hath been condemned in a Synod of 600 Biſhops, who confirmed the Catholick and Apoſtolick Faith. He obſerves, that the Catholick Faith may not be changed; that it may be aſſaulted by its Enemies, but that ſuch Oppoſition rendred it more illuſtrious. He ſays, that the Synod hath approved the Letter which he had written, and had condemned Dioſcorus. Laſtly, he earneſtly intreats them to give God thanks, to pray for the happy return of them who were gone to the Council: And he deſires them to let the Biſhops of Spain know what had paſſed in the Eaſt.

This Letter is followed by a Letter of Euſebius, Biſhop of Milan, to St. Leo, in which that Biſhop ſignifies to him the Joy that he had for the return of the Weſtern Biſhops, who had been preſent at the Council of Chalcedon, and aſſures St. Leo, that his Letter to Flavian hath been read and approved in the Council of Milan, where alſo the Error of Eutyches was condemned.

The following Letters are in the Council of Chalcedon. In Letter 78. to Marcian, after having congratulated the Council of Chalcedon, he blames the Ambition of Anatolius, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, who coveted thoſe Rights that did not belong to him. He was willing, that the City of Conſtantinople ſhould be equal to Rome; but he ſays, it muſt not be ſo in the Churches; that there is no ſolid Foundation, but that Rock which Jeſus Chriſt hath laid for the Foundation of his Church; that Anatolius cannot prove, that his Church is an Apoſtolick See; that the Privileges of Churches cannot be overthrown by any other way, being eſtabliſhed by the Canons of the Fathers, and fixed by the Decrees of the Council of Nice; that he is obliged by his Office, to ſee them executed, and he ſhould be much to blame if he ſhould ſuffer them to be broken. He then exhorts the Emperor to deſire Anatolius to deſiſt from the Right he pretends to, and to which the Legates of the Holy See oppoſed themſelves, and if he will not, to make uſe of his Authority to keep him in order, and hinder him from incroaching upon the Rights of other Biſhops. This Letter is dated April 22. in the year 452. St. Leo.

He repeats the ſame things in the 79*th*. to the Empreſs Pulcheria, which is of the ſame date. In it he obſerves particularly, that Anatolius had obtained the Biſhoprick of Conſtantinople through the favour of the Empreſs, and thro' his conſent, Pietatis veſtræ beneficio, & pietatis meæ aſſenſu. He had alſo ſaid before in the precedent Letter, that he owed his Biſhoprick to the kindneſs of the Emperor, Veſtro beneficio. He urges alſo the Canons of the Council of Nice againſt the pretences of Anatolius, and declares that he doth cancel and make void, by the Authority of St. Peter, all the Conſtitutions which are contrary to the Laws eſtabliſhed in the Council of Nice.

He repreſents the ſame things to Anatolius in the 80*th*. Letter. He therein commends his Faith, but condemns his Pretenſions. He finds fault with him, that he ordained the Biſhop of Antioch, and was willing to break the Decrees of the Council of Nice, by making the Church of Alexandria to loſe the ſecond place, and that of Antioch the third, and by depriving the Metropolitans in his Juriſdiction of the Rights and Honours which they had. He accuſes him of endeavouring to make uſe of the Council, which was called for the ſuppreſſing of Hereſie, to further his own Ambition. He aſſures him, that no Synod can hurt what the Council of Nice hath done, and that the Legates of the Holy See had reaſon to oppoſe his Attempts. He exhorts him, at length, to keep himſelf within the bounds of Humility and Chriſtian Charity, and not give any further occaſion of Scandal in the Church of Jeſus Chriſt. He tells him, that he may not elevate himſelf upon the account of ſome pretended Conſtitutions of the Biſhops, made 60 years ſince, which were never ſent to the Holy See, and have never been executed. He forbids him diſturbing the Metropolitans about their ancient Rights, and he declares, that he intends that the Churches of Alexandria, and Antioch ſhould remain in Poſſeſſion of their ancient Order. This Letter is alſo dated the ſame day.

St. Leo hath not contented himſelf with writing ſo ſtrongly againſt the pretenſions of Anatolius, but in his 81*ſt*. Letter written ſome days after the former, he commands Julian, Biſhop of Coos, who had the charge of his Affairs in the Eaſt, not to conſent to Anatolius's pretences. And ſince Julian had written to him in his Favour, he tells him, that tho' he had a very great reſpect for him, yet he will never do any thing upon his Recommendation, which is contrary to the Rules of the Church. He adds, that Anatolius ought to be throughly ſatisfied, that by his Suffrage he had been raiſed to the Biſhoprick of Conſtantinople, without obliging him to break the Laws of the Church in favour of his Ambition. He commands Julian to have a greater regard to the order of the Univerſal Church, than the perſonal Friendſhip of Anatolius, and not deſire a favour of him, which he cannot obtain, without making him that requeſts it, and him that ſhould grant it, guilty of a great Sin.

The 82*d*. Letter is directed to Ruſticus, Ravennius, Venerius and other French Biſhops. St. Leo relates the definition of the Council of Chalcedon, and ſends them a Copy of the Sentence which Paſchaſius and Lucentius, had pronounced in the Council of Chalcedon. It follows this Letter, but is ſomething different from that which is found in the Council of Chalcedon.

The 83*d*. Letter is directed to Theodorus Biſhop of Frejus, and dated June 10. Anno 452. St. Leo having been conſulted by this Biſhop, without communicating it to his Metropolitan, he admoniſheth him, that he ought firſt of all, to adddreſs himſelf to him for the obtaining an Explication of his Difficulties, and if he were alſo ignorant of the Solution, they might joyn together to conſult the Holy See, becauſe there ought to be no Queſtion made, ſaith he, of any things which concern the general obſervation of all the Churches, without the Authority of the Primates, i. e. the Metropolitans. Notwithſtanding he doth not forbear to inſtruct this Biſhop about that which he demanded of him, concerning the Diſcipline of the Church towards Penitents. He ſays, that Repentance is the only remedy for Sins committed after Baptiſm; that Jeſus Chriſt hath given power to Prieſts to impoſe Penance upon Sinners, and to admit them when they are purified by proportionable ſatisfaction; to admit them, I ſay, to the participation of the Sacrament by the door of Reconciliation. He adds, that Jeſus Chriſt comes between the action of the Prieſt, as I may ſay, inſomuch, that if the effect follow the action, we muſt believe that it is by the Vertue of the Holy Spirit; that if any Penitent die before

St. Leo. fore reconciliation, he can't be reconciled after Death, but must be left to the Judgment of God; but he assures us, that it is very profitable and necessary, that Sins be remitted before the day of Death, by the Prayer of the Priest. He will not have reconciliation denied to those who demand Penance, when they see them in danger of death, but he admonishes Sinners not to trust or depend upon that Pardon, nor put off their Repentance till the hour of death. He saith, that it is a sufficient Reason to grant reconciliation to those, who are in manifest Danger, that they shew their desires of it by some Signs, or there are some to witness that they have required it. Lastly, he commands this Bishop to inform his Metropolitan of these Answers.

The 84*th*. Letter is written to the Emperor Marcian. St. Leo in the first place congratulates the re-establishment of the Catholick Doctrine. He then signifies to him, that he had had some suspicion of Anatolius, and upon that account it was that he had not, for some time, sent him Letters of Communion, but in consideration of the Emperor's Testimony, and the Profession of Faith which he had made, he had received him to his Communion, yet having advertised him, that he would not communicate with those who had persecuted Flavian, and that the Defender of the Eutychian Party should be deposed, that he was throughly satisfied, by his Letter, in which he signifies to him what had been decided in his Synod, but that he was surprized to hear, that after he had begun so well, he had deposed Aetius the Arch-Deacon, who was always an opposer of the Eutychians, to put into his place Andrew an Eutychian; which was done with so great Precipitancy, that he was ordained upon a Friday, contrary to the common Usage, and to Apostolick Tradition, and that in degrading the former, they had given him the charge of the Cœmetery, condemning him by that means to a kind of Exile. He prays the Emperor to take Aetius into his Protection, and to compel Anatolius to revoke what he had done. This Letter is of March 10. 453.

He wrote also at the same time the 85*th*. Letter to the Empress Pulcheria. It is upon the same Subject, and contains almost the same things. He therein observes, that tho' Andrew had abjured the Error of the Eutychians, yet he ought not to be preferred before those who have always preserved the Faith in Purity.

He wrote also the next Day the following Letter about the same business to Julian Bishop of Coos his Agent in the East. It appears by that Letter, that Anatolius had taken away the Arch-Deaconry from Aetius, by ordaining him Priest (for a Priest not being capable of an Arch-Deaconry) under the pretence of raising him to a greater Dignity, he had really deprived him of the Office of Arch-Deacon, which was more Honourable. St. Leo complains of these proceedings, and so much the more, because he had put a Person that favoured the Eutychians into his Place. He commands Julian to observe diligently, in the Name of the Holy Apostolick See, what passes in the East, and speak freely to the Emperor about those things that respect the good of the Church. He would have him write to him about such matters as may administer Debates. He enjoyns him to reprove Anatolius smartly, because he had put an Heretical Arch-deacon into the place of an Orthodox One. He accuses this Patriarch of having no Zeal for the Faith. He desires Julian to let him know what it was that disturbed the Monks of Palæstine, whether they are Eutychians, or whether they are at odds with their Bishop Juvenal, because he is a Favourer of that Party. He observes, 'That they ought 'to be punished according to the Nature of their fault; 'for there is a great deal of difference, saith he, between op-'posing the Faith, and being a little too hot for the Faith.' He requires him also to give him intelligence of the Monks of Ægypt, and the affairs of Alexandria. In the last place he tells him, that he had not received the Form of Faith which he had sent him. It is not known what Form of Faith this is which St. Leo speaks of in this place, and which Julian sent him. F. Sirmondus hath published one, which he pretends is this, but F. Chiffletius assures us, that he found it in that MS. of F. Sirmondus attributed to Alcuinus. F. Quesnel believes, that the Form of Faith which Julian sent to St. Leo, was nothing else but the definition of Faith, which is in the Fifth Action of the Council of Chalcedon. St. Leo also desires Julian to send him a Translation of the Acts of the Council of Chalcedon, at large, which were not understood at Rome, because they were written in Greek.

The eighty seventh Letter is directed to the Bishops who were present at the Council of Chalcedon. In it St. Leo approves of the Decisions of that Council concerning Matters of Faith, but declares at the same time, that he will never consent to what hath been done there contrary to the Canons of the Council of Nice. This Letter bears Date March the 21*st*. 453.

St. Leo was obliged to write it for the satisfaction of the Emperor, who had required him to give his approbation plainly to that which had been defined in the Council of Chalcedon, for fear, lest he should take an occasion to oppose the Council, because the Pope would not acknowledge the Rights which he had granted to Anatolius. This St. Leo himself testifies in the following Letter to Julian of Coos, wherein he praises the Zeal of the Emperor, and Empress, who had restrain'd the Insolence of some Monks. He also St. Leo. tells him, that the Emperor having privately bid him to admonish the Empress, he wrote presently to her, and he desires him to let him know what was the effect of his Letter, and if in short she hath approved of his Doctrine, or rather, St. Athanasius, Theophilus, and St. Cyril's.

As to the business of Aetius, he says, that he much commiserated his Affliction, but he thought he must bear it patiently, for fear he seem to carry things too high. In fine, he tells him, that Anatolius persisted in his Claim, and that he understood by the Messenger that brought him the News of the Ordination of the Bishop of Thessalonica, that he would make the Bishops of Illyria to subscribe it. For this reason it was that he did not write to them, although Julian had desired him to do it, because he knew by that, that he would not be amended by it. He sends him two Copies of the precedent Letter, the one by it self, the other at the end of the Letter which was written to Anatolius, that he might give that to the Emperor which he thought most convenient.

In the eighty ninth he writes to the Emperor about that which he required of him, to give his Approbation of what the Council of Chalcedon had defined concerning the Faith. He assures him, that he had approved it already, when he wrote to Anatolius, but that that Bishop would not publish his Letter, because he therein reproves his Ambition. He thanks God, that he had given them an Emperor who knew how to join the Priestly Vigor and Royal Power together. Perhaps you will wonder at this Expression, but as F. Quesnel has already observed, there are many such in St. Leo's Letters. Constantine assumes to himself the Title of an outward Bishop of the Church. The Fathers of the Council of Chalcedon and of Constantinople, under Flavian, have not scrupled in their Acclamations of Praise to the Emperors, to give them the Title of Bishop. St. Leo also commends Marcian, because he took upon him to maintain the Decrees of the Council of Nice, and that he had suppressed the Commotions of the Monks. Lastly, he assures him, that he had declared his Judgment of the Council of Chalcedon in obedience to his Command. He says a little after the same things to Pulcheria in the ninetieth Letter, dated March the 21*st*. 453.

In the ninety first written to Julian Bishop of Coos, he tells him, that he had omitted nothing that he was able to do for the defence of the Church's Cause; that it belongs to the Emperor to suppress the Disturbers of Church and State. He adds, that the Bishops ought not to allow the Monks to preach, and therefore he wondred, that Thalassius, who was Bishop of Cæsarea in Cappadocia, had given that Liberty, to one George, who was fallen from the monastick State by his Irregularities. He says, that he will write to him according to his Duty, if Julian judges it convenient. Lastly, he exhorts him to do his utmost Endeavour, that the Emperor do hinder the Hereticks from troubling the Peace of the Church. This Letter is dated April the 9*th*. in the same Year.

The ninety second Letter to Maximus Bishop of Antioch treats of several things. He observes in the first place, that the Catholick Faith keeps the Mean between the two Extreams of Nestorius, and Eutyches. He admonishes Maximus to be vigilant over the Churches of the East, but more especially over those, which the Council of Nice had entrusted him withal, to prevent that Heresie be not established in them. And that he might be able to do this with the greater Authority, he advises him to maintain the Rights, which the Council of Nice had allowed his Church, and preserve to himself the third place. That he will easily gain his ends, by doing so, because it is impossible, that the Order established by the inviolable Canons of the Council of Nice should be overthrown; that Ambition might prompt to make a Change as it already hath happened in the Council, where Juvenal endeavoured to usurp the Primacy of Palæstine, and attempted to ground his Pretensions upon some supposititious Writings, and that St. Cyril being afraid of that Enterprize, had written to him, but that whatsoever Constitutions were made thereupon, against those of the Council of Nice, whensoever a more numerous Council should meet, it would not, nor ought to be valid; that if his Legates had consented to any Decree of the Council of Chalcedon, which did not concern Doctrine, he declared it null, because he had sent them for no other end but to defend the Faith of the Church against Heresies; that all that had been handled in the Synods of Bishops, except what concerned the Faith, may not be received, if it do not agree with the Decrees of the Council of Nice; that he will see, by the Copy of the Letter written to Anatolius, how vigorously he defends the Council of Nice. Lastly, he advertiseth Maximus to prohibit the Monks and Lay-men from Preaching, and so much the more because it belongs to the Bishops only to do it. This Letter is of the 10*th*. of June.

In the ninety third Letter to Theodoret, he, in the first place, testifies the Joy which he had when he understood by the Legates which he had sent to the Council of Chalcedon, that the Catholick Faith had triumphed over the Errors of the Nestorians and Eutychians, and that the Council had confirmed by its Judgment, which was not ſubject to amendment, the Doctrines which he had aſſerted. Theſe Words are very remarkable, becauſe they evidently prove to us, that there is no Judgment but that of an univerſal Council, which may not be re-examined, and that the Judgment of the Pope himſelf is ſubject to amendment. This was it that made him add, that he was not troubled, that ſome People would not accept the Judgment which he had given, to evidence that the acknowledgment which the other Sees had made of his Supremacy, as given to him by God, was not meer Flattety. That the Oppoſition which the Truth had met withal upon that occaſion, was the cauſe of ſome Good, becauſe the Divine Favours are more thankfully acknowledged, when they are obtained with Difficulty, and God's Providence brings us to the fruition of Good by a kind of Evil. That the Truth is made clearer, and upholds it ſelf with the greater ſtrength, when the examination confirms that Faith which we have been taught; and that laſtly, the Grandeur of the Prieſtly Dignity ſhews it ſelf beſt, when we reſpect the Authority of the Biſhops that are moſt highly promoted; yet with a Proviſo, that we do not in any wiſe incroach upon the Privileges of ſuch as are inferior to them. Afterward he invites Theodoret to rejoice with him at the Victory which the Truth had obtained. He ſets himſelf againſt the Outrages which Dioſcorus had committed. He tells Theodoret, that he muſt equally avoid the Errors of Neſtorius and Eutyches. He thanks God, that he hath been freed from all manner of Suſpicion; and at laſt, exhorts him to be watchful for the Defence of the Faith of the Church, and not permit either Lay-men or Monks to become Preachers. This Letter is dated June 12.

St. Leo.

The ninety fourth Letter to the Emperor Marcian, is about a difficult Controverſy which was in the Church, concerning the day on which Eaſter ſhould be kept in the year 455. St. Leo ſays, that the ancient Fathers had impoſed that Task upon the Biſhop of Alexandria to find out the Feaſt of Eaſter every year, and to make it known to the Apoſtolick See, that he might give notice of it to the far diſtant Churches. That Theophilus had made a Calendar for an hundred years, beginning at the year 380. but that the Paſſover in the 76*th*. year, i.e. in the year of Jeſus Chriſt 455, is appointed upon an extraordinary day, and too much advanced in the Month of April. He beſeeches Marcian to command, that an exact Calculation be made, that all Churches may celebrate this Feaſt at the ſame time. The following Letter to Julian, is upon the ſame Subject. Both are of June 16. This laſt, in the ordinary Editions, is directed to Eudoxia. But the manner of writing, and MSS. prove to us, that it was really written to Julian.

The ninety ſixth Letter is addreſſed to the Empreſs Eudoxia. In it he exhorts her to make uſe of her Authority to compel ſome Monks of Palæſtine to ſubmit themſelves to the Council of Chalcedon.

In the ninety ſeventh Letter to the Monks of Palæſtine, he explains the Opinions which he had aſſerted in his Letter to Flavian, and evinces, that his Doctrine is clear contrary to the Error of Neſtorius, as well as that of Eutyches.

In his ninety eighth Letter, he deſires Julian to give him an exact Account of the News of what happened at Conſtantinople, and to take effectual care that the Canons be obſerved. It is dated June 25. 453.

The ninety ninth bears date Jan. 9. following. He gives the Emperor thanks for appeaſing the Troubles of Palæſtine, and reſtoring Juvenal, Biſhop of Jeruſalem, to his See again.

The following Letter to Julian is of the ſame date. In it he ſhews much Joy, that the Monks of Palæſtine had acknowledged their Error, and that Juvenal, Biſhop of Jeruſalem, was reſtored. He adds, that Proterius, Biſhop of Alexandria, [Succeſſor of Dioſcorus, who was depoſed] did write him a Letter, in which he makes known to him the Purity of his Doctrine. He ſpeaks of the difference between himſelf and this Biſhop, about the Celebration of Eaſter, in the year 455. He ſays, that he hath approved nothing in the Council of Chalcedon but what concerns the Faith, and was much pleaſed that Aetius had been found innocent.

In the hundred and firſt Letter to Marcian, St. Leo aſſures this Emperor, that he will freely be reconciled to Anatolius, and for that end had already written to him, if his Letters, which he hath ſent him, had had any effect, or he had anſwered them; yet if he will ſubmit himſelf to the Canons, and renounce his ambitious Pretenſions, he would inſtantly receive him to his Communion. This Letter bears date, March the 9*th*.

The following Letter to Julian is of the ſame date. He lets him know, that he had receiv'd a Letter from Proterius, in which he ſhews himſelf well principled in the Faith; but becauſe he was extremely troubled with the Faction of the Eutychians, who having made a corrupt Tranſlation of St. Leo's Letter to Flavian, would perſuade Men, that it favoured the Error of Neſtorius; he deſires Julian to cauſe it to be tranſlated into Greek, and ſend it to Alexandria, ſealed with the Emperor's Signet. He commands him to get knowledge of the Emperor's Anſwer about the day on which the Feaſt of Eaſter is to be kept the next year, and ſend him word of it, becauſe the time of ſending the Circular Letters for the Paſſover is at hand.

St. Leo.

The hundred and third Letter is written to Proterius Biſhop of Alexandria. St. Leo diſcovers to that Biſhop, the Joy which he had conceived, when he underſtood, by his Epiſtle, that he is of an Orthodox Judgment, and that the Church of Alexandria hath received of St. Mark, the Scholar of St. Peter, the ſame Faith which the Romans have received of his Maſter. He exhorts Proterius carefully to defend this Faith. He adds, that he hath taught no new Doctrine in his Letter to Flavian, nor departed from the Rule of Faith received from his Anceſtors; and if Dioſcorus had done the ſame, he would not have ſeparated from the Church, ſince he had the Works of St. Athanaſius, the Sermons of Theophilus and St. Cyril, which ought to have incouraged him to reſiſt the Error of Eutyches. He adve tiſes Proterius, that he muſt carefully avoid ſpeaking any thing, which may come near the Opinions of Neſtorius; and that in teaching the People, he muſt let them know, that he vents nothing new, but teaches what the Holy Fathers have unanimouſly preached, and to convince them of it, it is not ſufficient to ſay ſo, but it is convenient to prove it, by bringing and explaining their Authorities, to which he may join his Letter.

In fine, St. Leo ſays, that he applies himſelf to Antiquity, as well in Matters of Diſcipline as Faith, and for this reaſon it is, that he hath oppoſed them, who through their Ambition would rob the Church of Alexandria of her Privileges, and Metropolitans of their Rights. He adviſes Proterius to uphold the Cuſtoms which were in uſe in the time of his Predeceſſors; to keep the Biſhops, who according to the ancient Canons, are ſubject to the Church of Alexandria, cloſe to their Duty, by obliging them to be preſent at his Synod at the appointed times, or when there is ſome Buſineſs that requires their preſence. This Letter is of March 10. 454. It hath never been publiſhed.

To this Letter the Epiſtle of Proterius, Biſhop of Alexandria, to St. Leo touching the Feaſt of Eaſter in the year 455. is joined. He was of a contrary Judgment to the Pope, who at length yielded to the Opinion of Proterius. Thoſe that are curious Enquirers after the Accounts which were then made, to find out the day on which Eaſter was to be kept every year, may find much ſatisfaction in it. About the end, he cautions St. Leo, that he ſhould not venture to have this Letter turned into Latin, becauſe it is very hard for Men that do not underſtand it well, to expreſs exactly, in Latin, a Matter ſo hard and intricate as this is.

The hundred and fourth Letter to the Emperor Marcian, is of the ſame date with the hundred and third to Proterius, and contains almoſt the ſame things. St. Leo therein commends Proterius, becauſe he had approved his Letter to Flavian. He ſays, that ſome Hereticks had falſified it, and deſires the Emperor to cauſe it to be turned into Greek, and ſent to Alexandria.

The hundred and fifth to the ſame bears date the 15*th*. of April following. In it he promiſes the Emperor to be reconciled to Anatolius, provided that he would deſiſt from his Pretenſions. He deſires his Majeſty to baniſh Eutyches further, becauſe he divulged his Doctrines in the place of his Exile. He thanks him for ſending a Perſon to Alexandria, that he might inform himſelf exactly of the time, when Eaſter muſt be celebrated.

The Letter of Anatolius to St. Leo is taken out of Holſtenius's Collection. In it he complains that St. Leo had given over writing to him, and declares, that the Letter which he had written to others about him, had increaſed his trouble. He tells him, that he deſired nothing more than to give him ſatisfaction, and that having ſeen a Letter which St. Leo wrote to the Emperor, he had immediately performed what he deſired of him for the good of the Church; that he had preferred Aetius to an honourable Office among the Clergy, tho' not to be an Arch-Deacon, as appears by the following Letter; that he had expelled Andrew out of the Church, altho' he had made him Arch-Deacon, for no reaſon but that he came to that Dignity, by reaſon of his Age; that he had alſo put from the Communion of the Church, thoſe who had been of the Eutychian Party, altho' they had ſatisfied him by their Subſcriptions and Declarations, and that he would not receive them, till he had known from him, what he ought to do. He earneſtly intreats him to write to him. Laſtly, he proteſts, that as to the Dignity, which the Council of Chalcedon hath granted him in favour of the See of the Church of Conſtantinople he had not any hand in it, but it was the Clergy of Conſtantinople which deſired it, and the Eaſtern Biſhops, who had cauſed it to be ordained; that as for himſelf he had not concerned himſelf in it, but had always lived in ſuch a manner, as could give no juſt Cauſe to think that he was ambitious or forward in ſuch Attempts. The Body of this Letter is written in Latin, but the words are in the Greek Character.

St. Leo anſwers this Epiſtle in his hundred and ſixth, and tells Anatolius, that it is not for lack of kindneſs, that he had deſiſted from writing to him, but being obliged to oppoſe himſelf againſt thoſe things which he had acted contrary to the Canons, he had received no Anſwer from him. He commends him, that he hath compoſed the Buſineſs about

St. Leo. about Aetius, and turned Andrew out of the Arch-Deaconry. He informs him, that he may receive him, and ordain him Prieſt, yea him, and all that have been engaged in the Eutychian Party, if they do profeſs publickly, in writing, that they condemn the Hereſies of Eutyches and Neſtorius, but that he ought not to make any Perſon Arch-Deacon, who hath ever been engaged in thoſe Sects. He was not at all ſatisfied with the Excuſe made by Anatolius, about the Prerogatives given to the See of Conſtantinople, by the Council of Chalcedon; for he ſays, that the Clergy could not do it without his conſent. Notwithſtanding, he was glad to ſee him ſo well diſpoſed to give over that Enterpriſe, and exhorts him to do it forthwith. This Letter is dated May 29. 454.

The hundred and ſeventh Letter to the Emperor Marcian is upon the ſame Subject. He ſhews him, that he hath returned an Anſwer to Anatolius; that this Biſhop ought to attribute the interruption of Commerce by Letters, which had been between them, to nothing but his own ſilence; that he did not doubt, but that it was the Emperor who had diſpoſed him thus to amend himſelf: that he doth not reconcile himſelf to him but upon Condition that he abandons his Pretenſions, which he hath contrary to the Canons of the Church, and will be watchful to diſcover cloſe Hereticks; that he may drive them out by the Aſſiſtance of the Imperial Authority, that it is eaſy, by that means, to extinguiſh the other Hereſies entirely, ſince Palæſtine was already returned, and Ægypt began to acknowledge him; that he was much pleaſed with that which he had done in favour of Aetius, and deſires him to hearken to what Julian hath to communicate to him. Laſtly, he requires him to prohibit the Monk Caroſus from diſperſing his Error in Conſtantinople as he hath done.

He wrote alſo another Letter to the Emperor at the ſame time, in which he thanks him for the Enquiry he had made, to let him know Eaſter-day. He aſſures him, that he had received Proterius's Letters, and that he will follow his Judgment, altho' he is not perſuaded of the Reaſon, yet for Peace and Unity ſake. Laſtly, he prays the Emperor, that the * Receivers of the Church of Conſtantinople might not give up their Accounts before the ſecular Judges, but leave it according to the ancient Cuſtom to the Biſhop's Court.

[* Oeconomi.]

The hundred and ninth Letter is a Circular Letter to the Biſhops of France and Spain, in which he gives them notice, that the Feaſt of Eaſter, in the next year, ſhall be kept upon the 22*d*. of April. It is dated July 28. Anno 454.

The hundred and tenth is written to Juvenal Biſhop of Jeruſalem. In it he declares his Joy, that this Biſhop, having condemned the Error of Eutyches, was again ſettled in his See. He exhorts him to defend the Faith of the Church about the Incarnation, of which the Holy Places, which are in his Biſhoprick, are a convincing Proof. He explains the Catholick Doctrine, and tells him, that he will find it proved by Teſtimonies of Holy Scripture, in his Letter to Flavian. This Letter bears date September 4th.

The hundred and eleventh Letter is an Anſwer to Julian's, wherein he had ſent him the News of Dioſcorus's death. He tells him, that he hopes that it will render the Converſion of many more eaſy. He commands him to manage the Inclinations of the Emperor well, and to inſtruct him, what he may do for the good of the Church, becauſe he knew that this Prince is perſuaded, that he never acts ſo much for the good of his Empire, as when he procures the good of the Church. He puts Julian in mind to let him know, what condition the Church of Alexandria is in.

The hundred and twelfth, hundred and thirteenth and hundred and fourteenth Letters of St. Leo are written in 455. In the firſt, he thanks the Emperor Marcian for the care he had taken, to have it plainly ſettled on what day Eaſter ought to be celebrated; and aſſures him, that he ſubmits to the Judgment of the Biſhop Alexandria, and that he hath followed it in the Letters which he hath written to all the Biſhops of the Weſt, to give them notice of the day of that Feaſt. He alſo thanks the Emperor for expelling Caroſus and Dorotheus from their Monaſteries. In the ſecond, he makes anſwer to Julian's Letter, who had written to him, that Caroſus had profeſſed the Orthodox Faith, but was yet at variance with Anatolius; that John was ſent into Ægypt to reſtore the Faith, and ſettle Peace there. He deſires Julian to let him know what ſucceſs he ſhall have there, and tells him, that he is much troubled for the condition of the Biſhop of Antioch, if what his Accuſers ſay, be true. He adds, that he hath ſo great confidence in the Piety of the Emperor, that he doth not doubt but that he will hinder the eſtabliſhment of Hereſie. In the 114*th*. he exhorts Anatolius to labour with all his Might to extinguiſh the remainders of the Hereſie. The laſt of theſe Letters is dated March 13.

We have nothing more of that year nor the next, becauſe Rome having been taken by the Vandals, St. Leo was ſo buſy about the Affairs of his own Church, he had no leiſure to take care of others. Beſides, that in the trouble he then was, it was hard to ſend or receive Letters from diſtant Countries. But as ſoon as he began to be a little at reſt, he then began afreſh to give Marks of his Paſtoral Care and Vigilance over the Church.

The Hundred and fifteenth Letter to the Emperor Leo, dated June 9. Anno. 457. is the firſt. He prays the Emperor to protect the Faith, and not permit the Authority of the Council of Chalcedon to be queſtioned, particularly at Alexandria, where according to the account he had received from Anatolius, it was ſtrongly oppoſed. St. Leo.

To him alſo he directs the following Letter of July 11. St. Leo praiſes him, becauſe he was troubled to ſee the Church of Alexandria, reduced to ſo lamentable a Condition through the Outrage of the Hereticks; that the Emperor Marcian was taken out of the World, juſt when he was uſing Remedies for it; but (God be praiſed) he had left a Son, from whom the Orthodox Religion might expect the ſame protection; that he had written to him for that reaſon; that he ought to joyn with him in endeavouring to maintain the Deciſions of the Council of Chalcedon, and prays him to let him know what he could do with him thereupon.

The Hundred and ſeventeenth is of the ſame date; In it he tells Julian, that he wondered he did not write to him; but being informed, by Anatolius's Letter, that he was gone to Alexandria, he had written to the Emperor to pray him to reſtore Peace to that Church; and to Anatolius, that he ſhould uſe his Intereſt with the Emperor upon that Subject. He commands him to joyn his Sollicitations with Anatolius, to uphold the Decrees of the Council of Chalcedon, and ordain an Orthodox Biſhop at Alexandria in the place of Proterius.

The Hundred and eighteenth Letter, dated Aug. 23, 457. is directed to Baſilius Biſhop of Antioch. In the beginning he complains, that this Biſhop had not given him Notice of his Ordination: He exhorts him to joyn with him and other Biſhops that are Orthodox, to defend the Catholick Faith with Courage, becauſe he is perſuaded, that the Emperor and Lords of the Court will not undertake to innovate any thing, when they ſee the Orthodox Biſhops firm and united,

In the Hundred and nineteenth Letter he exhorts Euxithius Biſhop of Theſſalonica, and Juvenal Biſhop of Jeruſalem, to be reſolute, and not ſuffer that any Council be aſſembled to diſanul what hath been done in the Council of Chalcedon. He ſent theſe Letters to Julian and Aetius, that they might deliver them to the Metropolitans to whom they are directed, and by that means all the Biſhops may know it. This appears by the 120*th*. and 121*ſt*. Letters.

In the Hundred and twenty ſecond Letter he congratulates the Emperor Leo, that he declared himſelf for the Council of Chalcedon, and exhorts him to further the Peace of the Church. This Letter is dated Sep. 1. 457.

He comforts the Biſhops of Ægypt, who had been baniſhed from their Churches for the Orthodox Doctrine in the following Letter. This is of Octob. 11.

The Hundred and twenty fourth Letter is to Anatolius. After he hath thanked him for his care in writing to him the News, he exhorts him to oppoſe the Temptations of Hereticks vigorouſly, but he reproves him for ſuffering the Clergy of Conſtantinople to have Commerce with the Enemies of the Catholick Faith. This Letter is dated the 11*th*. or 14*th*. of October.

In the Hundred and twenty fifth Letter to the Emperor Leo, he endeavours to ſhew the Emperor that he ought not to revive again the Queſtions about the Incarnation of Jeſus Chriſt, and that he ought to hold to the Deciſion of the Council of Chalcedon. He exhorts him to apply Remedies to the Diſtempers of the Church of Alexandria, and not ſuffer the Enemies of the true Faith to thruſt themſelves into the Government of that Church; that having received Petitions from both Hereticks and Catholicks, he eaſily diſcerned to which of them he ought to lend his Aſſiſtance, ſince on the Hereticks part there is nothing but Violence and Sacrilege, who have put to death an Innocent Biſhop, caſting his Aſhes into the Air, overturning the Altars, laying open the Myſteries to Parricides and Wicked Men, caſting down the Oblation, and deſtroying the Holy Oyl; that after all this they had the boldneſs to demand a Council; that the Emperor ought not to ſuffer this Impudence, but reſcue the Church of Alexandria from the Oppreſſion in which it was; that he had ſent him a Letter treating of Matters of Faith, to inſtruct him fully in the Doctrine of the Church. Laſtly, he complains, that ſome of the Clergy in Conſtantinople held Heretical Opinions. He accuſes Anatolius of Negligence in not puniſhing them, and exhorts the Emperor to baniſh them out of the City. He recommends to him the Biſhop Julian, and Aetius the Prieſt. This Letter is dated Decemb. 1.

In the Hundred and twenty ſixth Letter he deſires Anatolius to joyn with him in perſuading the Emperor to maintain the Deciſions of the Council of Chalcedon, oppoſe the Hereticks, and reſtore the Peace of the Church of Alexandria. He tells him, that he was very joyful to hear, that there were but four Biſhops of Ægypt who were guilty of the ſame Crime with Timotheus, and who were of his Party; that he muſt do his endeavour to help the other Biſhops of Ægypt, who were under Perſecution, and aſſiſt thoſe who are withdrawn to Conſtantinople; that their Preſence is very neceſſary to divert the Emperor from calling a new Sy-

St. Leo. nod. He admoniſhes him not to ſuffer Atticus and Andrew, two Clergy-men of Conſtantinople, to perſiſt in their ſpeaking againſt the Council of Chalcedon. He likewiſe makes ſmart Reflections upon him for ſuffering them.

In the one hundred twenty ſeventh he comforts the Orthodox Biſhops of Ægypt, who had retired to Conſtantinople. Anatolius bore the reflections which St. Leo made upon him, with a ſort of Diſturbance. Atticus the Prieſt, whom St. Leo had branded, ſought to juſtify himſelf, by ſending ſome Writings, which he pretended to be Orthodox, but St. Leo was not ſatisfied with that, but inſiſted upon it, that he would plainly condemn the Error and Perſon of Eutyches, and ſign the Profeſſion of Faith made by the Council of Chalcedon. This Letter is dated in March 458.

The one hundred twenty ninth Letter of St. Leo to Nicetas, or rather, to Niceas, Biſhop of Aquileia, is dated March 21. in the ſame Year. The firſt and principal Queſtion which he treats of in this Letter is this, viz. Whether thoſe Women, who in the Captivity or Abſence of their Husbands, whom they thought dead, having been married to others ought to return to their firſt Husbands, if perchance they return again? He anſwers, that they are obliged to it, if their firſt Husbands demand them again, although their ſecond Husbands have not ſinned in marrying them. And he at the ſame Time orders, that thoſe Women be excommunicated, who would not return to them.

The ſecond Queſtion is concerning thoſe who have eaten Meats offer'd to Idols, being urg'd to it through Hunger, or conſtrain'd through Fear. He ſays, that they muſt be cleanſed by Penance, which ought to be conſidered not ſo much in reſpect of the length of Time, as of the Sincerity of Grief. He orders, that they do the ſame to thoſe who have been baptized a ſecond Time, either by Force, or becauſe they have been engag'd in the Heretical Factions. He wiſely obſerves, that the Time for Penance ought to be ordered according to the Devotion, Age or Profeſſion of the Penitents. In fine, as to thoſe Perſons who have been baptized but once, but by the Hereticks, he ſays, that they ought to be confirmed by the Impoſition of Hands, with Invocation of the Holy Spirit. Sola invocatione Spiritus Sancti, per Impoſitionem Manuum Confirmandi.

In the one hundred and thirtieth Letter he comforts the Biſhops of Ægypt, who were retired to Conſtantinople, and adviſes them not to ſuffer thoſe Matters to be diſputed afreſh, which were decided in the Council of Chalcedon. This Letter is dated March 21.

The one hundred thirty firſt is of the ſame Date. He exhorts the Clergy of Conſtantinople to continue ſtedfaſt in the Faith, and ſeparate themſelves from the Hereticks; and he admoniſhes them, that they ought not to ſuffer Atticus and Andrew to remain in the Church, if they will not make profeſſion in Writing of the Faith of the Council of Chalcedon.

The next Day he wrote to the Emperor the One hundred thirty and ſecond Letter, in which he declareth to him, that he ought not to ſuffer the Decrees of the Council of Chalcedon to be brought under Examination a ſecond Time; hat he could neither communicate with Hereticks, nor depart from the Deciſions of the Synod; that he will ſend the Legates of the Holy See, as he hath deſired; that he doth it not to enter into Diſpute about that which hath already been decided, but only to clear it, and make it known.

In the one hundred thirty third Letter, to the ſame Emperor, dated Aug. 17. He writes to him, that he had ſent two Biſhops, to require him, in his Name, to take Care of the Peace of the Church, maintain the Faith, and not ſuffer the Definitions of the Council of Chalcedon to be called in queſtion. He enlarges chiefly upon the latter, ſhewing, that if once it be allowed to diſpute continually, and uſe Logical and Rhetorical Arguments in the Explication of the Myſteries there will never be an end. That Jeſus Chriſt hath evidently prov'd that he would not have theſe Arts made uſe of, ſince he had not choſen Philoſophers or Orators to preach his Goſpel, but poor Fiſher-men, leſt the Heavenly Doctrine, which is ſo powerful, ſhould be thought to need the Help of Humane Eloquence: That the Arguments of Rhetorick appear ſo much the more, by how much the things that are treated on are the more obſcure and uncertain, and accounted true becauſe they are defended with more Wit and Eloquence, but that the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt hath no need of that Artifice, becauſe the Doctrine of Truth is clear in it ſelf, and that no Man ſeeks what is pleaſing to the Ear, when he deſires only to know what he ought to believe. Next he explains, in a few Words, the Doctrine eſtabliſhed in the Council of Chalcedon. He bewails the Outrage committed againſt the Perſon of the Biſhop of Alexandria. He requires no Puniſhment, but hopes that the Authors of it would amend, and ſuffer Penance for their Sin. In fine, he recommends to him his Legates, St. Leo. which he ſent to him, not to enter any Diſpute, but to repreſent to him what muſt be done for the Maintenance of the Faith, and Reſtoration of the Church's Peace. He prays him to ſend an Orthodox Biſhop to Alexandria, and re-ſettle the Biſhops of Ægypt, which have been forced away by the Hereticks. This excellent Letter is one of thoſe which F. Queſnel hath lately publiſhed. *Prudens, Biſhop of Troyes, hath copied out a part of it in his Book againſt Joannes Scotus. Vigilius and Pelagius II. have alſo cited it, and Facundus hath produced a Paſſage of it. [* Tricaſſinus.]

The one hundred thirty fourth Letter is a Diſcourſe againſt the Error of Eutyches. St. Leo relates therein firſt of all the Errors of the Hereticks about the Myſtery of the Incarnation. He proves, that the Council of Nice hath confounded them altogether. He demonſtrates, that it was neceſſary for the Reconciliation of Man to God, that Jeſus Chriſt ſhould be God and Man, and the divine and human Nature ſhould be united in one Perſon. He proves afterwards by many Reaſons, confirmed by Teſtimonies of Holy Scriptures, that theſe two Natures are really and truly in Jeſus Chriſt: This, in the laſt place, he makes good by the Authority of the Holy Fathers, of whom he produces many Paſſages. In a Word, he proves and explains the Myſtery of the Incarnation in a clear, noble and ſublime manner, without involving himſelf in School Subtleties.

The one hundred thirty fifth Letter is written to Neonas Biſhop of Ravenna (for ſo it ought to be read, and not Legio.) F. Queſnel thinks it was written in the year 458 (i), altho' it be dated in the Conſulſhip of Marcian. St. Leo, in this Letter, reſolves a difficult Queſtion, which had been propoſed in a Synod, viz. Whether they who were carried Captive in their Infancy, before they had any Uſe of Reaſon, not knowing whether they have been baptized or no, muſt be baptized? He concludes, that they need not fear to baptize them, ſince they have no proofs that they have been, but if they know that they have been baptized, tho' it were by Hereticks, they muſt not be then baptized. This Letter ſhews, that Baptiſm upon condition was not in uſe at that Time.

In the one hundred thirty ſixth Letter, directed to the Biſhops of Campania, Picenum and Samnium, St. Leo reproves thoſe Perſons who baptized without Neceſſity upon the Feſtivals conſecrated to the Martyrs. He forbids the Celebration of Baptiſm upon any other Days beſides the Feaſts of Eaſter and Pentecoſt, at leaſt if no Danger or Peril oblige to a ſpeedy Adminiſtration of that Sacrament. He alſo oppoſes the Practice of ſome, who cauſed Offenders to recite publickly the Sins which they had committed, and ſays, that it is ſufficient to diſcover them in private Confeſſions to the Prieſt; and altho' it ſeems to be a commendable Action that Men ſhould expoſe themſelves to Shame thro' Fear of God's Judgment, yet ſince it is poſſible to have Sins, which they that have committed them dare not often even publiſh them; therefore this Cuſtom muſt be entirely aboliſhed, for fear of frighting Men from the Remedy of Penance, leſt they ſhould diſcover thoſe Crimes to their Enemies, for which they may be puniſhed by civil Juſtice. It is enough to confeſs his Sin firſt to God, and then to the Prieſt, who ought to pray to God for the Remiſſion of the Sins of Penitents, that by this means Sinners will be more eaſily drawn to Repentance, when they are ſure that the Sins, of which they confeſs themſelves guilty ſhall not be made publick. This Letter bears date March 6th. 459.

In the one hundred thirty ſeventh Letter St. Leo congratulates the Emperor Leo for having put Timotheus Ælurus out of the See of Alexandria, and exhorts him to take care that ſome Orthodox Perſon, worthy of that See, be choſen into his Place, aſſuring him, that though Timotheus ſhould return from his Errors, and profeſs the Catholick Faith, yet his Crimes render him unworthy of being reſtored. This Letter is dated June 460.

The one hundred thirty eighth Letter, of the ſame date, is written to Gennadius Biſhop of Conſtantinople. He complains that he permitted Timotheus to come to Conſtantinople. He adviſes Gennadius not to communicate with him, and to put him out of all Hopes of recovering his Biſhoprick, by ordaining ſome Perſon of Merit in his Place.

This was put in execution, for a little after Timotheus, ſurnamed Solofaciolus [or Baſilicus,] who was an Orthodox Perſon, was put into the See of Alexandria. St. Leo wrote to him, to congratulate his Election, and to exhort him to oppoſe the Hereſies of Neſtorius and Eutyches. This Letter is the one hundred thirty ninth, and dated April 18. 460. He wrote alſo the one hundred and fortieth Letter, at the ſame time, to the Clergy of Alexandria; in which he

(i) Thinks it to be written in 458.] He affirms, that there is a Fault in the Date of the Conſulſhip, and that we muſt read Majorian for Marcian. 1. Becauſe all the Letters of St. Leo, written in 451. under the Conſulſhip of Marcian and Adelphius, carry all the Name of Adelphius; and indeed when St. Leo mentions but one Conſul, 'tis always the Weſtern one which he names. 2. It is there Conſulatu, but St. Leo never ſets it down ſo, but Conſule or Conſulibus. 3. Becauſe it is evident by the Letter, that it is written on the occaſion of a Queſtion raiſed upon the account of ſome Perſons who had been carried Captives by the Barbarians, and were lately returned into the Province of Ravenna, their Country. In 451. there was no Invaſion of the Barbarians in Italy, it could not be before 452. that Attilas laid waſte the Country of Ravenna. This Letter then muſt be written ſome Years after.

exhorts

St. Leo. exhorts them to Peace, and encourages them to maintain the Faith which had been taught them by the Orthodox Biſhops of Alexandria, without any Variation, For the Truth, ſaith he, which is Simple and One, receives no Change. He admoniſhes him to bring over and receive to Repentance thoſe who are in an Error.

St. Leo a little after (viz. September 1.) congratulates the Biſhops of Ægypt, that they had an Orthodox Patriarch, and exhorts them to labour after a re-union of Minds, and the Converſion of thoſe who were engaged in Hereſy. This Letter is the one hundred forty firſt, and the laſt of St. Leo's Letters, in this new Edition, augmented with thirty Letters.

St. Leo hath written many other Letters beſides; Pelagius in his one hundred and eleventh Letter, to the Biſhops of Iſtria, cites two Fragments of a Letter of St. Leo, to Baſil: One of theſe Fragments is found in the one hundred thirty and third Letter, to the Emperor Leo, the other is not to be met with; ſo that this muſt be, either that St. Leo hath repeated the ſame thing in two Letters, or Pelagius is miſtaken in his Quotation. The ſame Pope cites alſo a Fragment of a Letter of St. Leo's, to the Archdeacon Aetius, which is not to be found among thoſe we have.

St. Leo had given his Legates ſome Memorandums in Writing, when he ſent them to the Council of Chalcedon, of which Boniface read a part in the ſixteenth Action of that Council. F. Queſnel hath collected theſe Fragments, at the end of the Letters, and joyned to them a Letter of Julian Biſhop of Coos to the Emperor Leo; in which this Biſhop anſwers the Emperor, who had deſired Advice from him and other Biſhops about the preferring of Timotheus ſurnamed Ælurus, and about the Council of Chalcedon: He anſwers him, I ſay, that Timotheus ought not be accounted a Biſhop, and that he ought to be expelled from the See of Alexandria, which he had invaded, and that he ought to keep to the Deciſion of the Council of Chalcedon, and maintain its Decrees.

There is mention made in St. Leo's own Letters, and ſome other Records, of ſeveral other Letters written by or to St. Leo, of which we have no Fragments. F. Queſnel hath made an exact Catalogue of them, at the end of his Notes upon St. Leo's Letters, to which we may have Recourſe: There alſo we may ſee the Inſcriptions of nineteen or twenty Letters of St. Leo, of which we have not one Word more remaining.

He hath left out a Letter which was heretofore reckoned the eighty eighth of St. Leo's Letters, to the Biſhops of Germany and France, touching the Office of the Chorepiſcopi; but he hath proved in a Diſſertation, purpoſely made on that Subject that that Letter is certainly ſuppoſititious (k), and taken out of the Canons of the ſecond Council of Sevil, held Anno 619. which forbids, in the ſame Terms thoſe Offices to Prieſts which this Canon does to the Chorepiſcopi; neither hath he ranked in the Number of St. Leo's Epiſtles, that which was formerly counted the ninety ſixth Letter, becauſe 'tis not this Pope's, but a Synodical Letter, written in the Name of St. Leo * Biſhop of Bourges, Victurius † Biſhop of Mans, Euſtochius ‡ Biſhop of Tours, and ſome other Biſhops in the Churches of the third Province of Lyons (l), which is that of Tours.

[* Leo Bituricenſis. † Cenomanum viduum. ‡ Caſarodunum Turones.]

From the Letters we will come to his Sermons, bnt we muſt firſt examine the Conjectures upon which M. Anthelmi grounds himſelf, in attributing them to St. Proſper. The firſt is the Likeneſs of Style, which he pretends is to be found between the Writings of St. Proſper and the Sermons which are ſaid to be St. Leo's. He thinks that he meets in ſeveral Places of them not only with Words but alſo Phraſes, Sentences, Expreſſions, and particular Modes of Speech proper to St. Proſper, and produces many Examples, which he ſays are ſufficient to determine the Point. The ſecond Proof is from an ancient Manuſcript of nine hundred years old, written in the Saxon Character, which was heretofore in the Library of M. Thuanus, and at preſent is in M Colbert's; where the Anniverſary of the fourth year of the Exaltation of St. Leo bears the Name of St. Proſper, according to an ancient Inſcription. There are alſo in the Manuſcript two other Sermons attributed to St. Leo; the one is of Collection and Alms-giving, and the other upon the Faſt of the tenth Month, which are the tenth and ſixteenth in F. Queſnel's Edition of St. Leo's Sermons. The old Title of theſe Sermons doth not carry the Name of St. Leo in the Manuſcript, but it hath been added by a later hand: From whence he concludes, that theſe two Sermons as well as the former, are St. Proſper's, and not St. Leo's. He brings for a third Proof, that neither Gennadius nor Pope Gelaſius, who ſpeak of St. Leo's Letter to Flavian, do make the leaſt mention of his Sermons, no more than Anaſtaſius Bibliothecarius, who ſpeaks of the Actions of this Pope. It is ſaid alſo, that in thoſe Times the Biſhops preached Sermons made by others: That Gennadius aſſures us, that Salvian had compoſed many for Biſhops, and ſays the ſame thing of Honoratus. That if Biſhops did make uſe of the Sermons of a Prieſt and * Biſhop of Marſeilles, and deſired them of 'em, 'tis very credible that they ſhould apply themſelves to St. Leo (whoſe Reputation was very great) for them. Now St. Leo being buſied with ſo many Affairs, 'tis not likely that he could compoſe them himſelf, and if ſo, whom ſhould he chuſe to do it for him but St. Proſper, who was his Secretary, and was ſufficiently qualified to make good Sermons? And that it was theſe he ſent to the Biſhops under the Name of St. Leo. This is the Opinion of the Abbot Anthelmi upon the Sermons which bear the Name of St. Leo, and the Conjectures upon which he builds it.

[* Salvian was no Biſhop. Du Pin miſtakes Gennadius's words. See Cave in Salvian.]

But altho' I have no ſmall eſteem of the worth of this Author, yet I cannot but ſay, that this whole Frame appears to me a mere Chimæra, and the Proofs which he brings are extremely weak; for what probability is there, that other Biſhops ſhould addreſs themſelves to St. Leo to make Sermons for them? It is viſible enough, that the Biſhops of Rome have otherwiſe been conſulted about the affairs of the Church, but whoever ſaid, that they were deſired to make Sermons? Is there any Example of it? Salvian made Sermons for ſome Biſhops, and Honoratus's Homilies were uſed by others, but what is this to the Biſhop of Rome? M. Anthelmi ſuppoſes that he was burdened with ſo many affairs, and incumbred with ſo much buſineſs, that he had not leiſure to write Letters. And is it credible, that they did addreſs themſelves to him to have Sermons? Or, that he ſhould contrive to have them made and publiſhed in his Name? Further, it is diſcernable, that St. Leo's Sermons were compoſed by St. Leo for his own People, and preached in his own Church (m). 'Twas only for St. Leo that they were made, and for no other Biſhops. But ſay ſome, Sozomen aſſures us in his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, l. 7. c 19. That in the Church of Rome, neither the Biſhop, nor any in his ſtead, preached to the People, as if this Remark of Sozomen ought to be followed. Do they not know, that even they, that maintain this, as M. Valeſius hath done, own that St. Leo did not conform to that Cuſtom. So clear it is, that he preached himſelf to the People: But yet it is not probable, that what Sozomen ſays in that Place, was ever true; or he muſt be underſtood in another Senſe, for who can (k) Certainly Suppoſititious.] The Reaſons which he alledges are convincing: Theſe are the principal of them. 1. This Letter is not in the Ancient Manuſcripts, but only in thoſe which are later than Iſidore's Collection. 2. The Ancients have not cited it: It is not in any Collection of Canons before St. Iſidore's. 3. The Style is different from St. Leo's: It doth not come up to his Elegancy: St. Leo's would not have been ſo barren upon ſo good a Subject. 4. In the Title the Name of a Biſhop of the Roman Church is given to this Saint, whereas he never aſſumed any other but that of a Biſhop of the Church of Rome, or of the City, or Orthodox Church of the City of Rome. 5. This Letter is copied Word for Word out of the ſecond Council of Sevil, except the firſt part of it, which is impertinent. 6. It contains Rules contrary to the Uſage of the Church of Rome; as for inſtance, this, by which it is forbidden a Prieſt to enter into the Baptiſtery, or to baptize in the preſence of a Biſhop. It will be ſaid, perhaps, that in a Canon of the Council of Sevil it is ſaid, that theſe Prohibitions were made by the Holy See, which agrees very well with St. Leo's Letters. But this may be anſwer'd, 1. That this concerns not St. Leo more than any other Biſhop of Rome. 2. That theſe Words are not in Loayſa's Edition. It may be further objected, that Leo III. in his Letter to the French Biſhops, writing againſt the Chorepiſcopi, quotes the Decrees of St. Leo, but it is not this Letter which he cites, but the Letter to Ruſticus, which lays down the Principles againſt the Ordination of Chorepiſcopi. The Councils of Paris, Melde and Meta, cite the Decrees of Damaſus, Innocent and Leo to prove, that the Epiſcopal Functions which the Chorepiſcopi did perform were of no worth: But this doth not prove that thoſe Popes have written any thing in particular againſt the Chorepiſcopi. But although it were true that the Authors of the eighth and ninth Age had cited the Letter, under Examination, under the Name of St. Leo, it would not follow that it were really his: Perhaps 'tis Leo III's. This is what F. Queſnel ſays upon this Letter in his eleventh Diſſertation.

(l) The Third Province of Lyons.] This Letter was falſly directed to the Biſhop of Thrace, for the Biſhops named in the Title are French Biſhops. It was Eccleſiarum quæ ſunt intra Provinciam tertiam conſtitutæ; ſome Scribe, not knowing what was meant by Tertia, put Thracia inſtead of it.

(m) Preached in his own Church.] It is evident that the four firſt Sermons upon the Anniverſaries of St. Leo's Exaltation to the Pontificate, are proper to this Pope, and were preached at Rome. They cannot agree to any other Biſhop, or any other Church. There are alſo in theſe Sermons ſome things which none could fitly ſpeak but St. Leo. The Sermons upon the Collects are built upon the Uſage of the Church of Rome. The end of the Sermons upon the Monthly Faſts, prove invincibly, that they were preached at Rome; for could he otherwiſe ſay, Sabbato apud Beatum Petrum Vigilias celebremus. The fifth of Faſting contains a particular Faſt of St. Leo's. The Lent-Sermons relate to the Uſage of the Church of Rome. The 80*th* and 81*ſt* upon the Feaſt of St. Peter and St. Paul, cannot be for any other Church, but for that of Rome, no more than that for the Feaſt of St. Peter's Chair. Laſtly, they have all the Character of the Biſhop of Rome ſpeaking to his People. There is very little of them which could be preached by any other Biſhop, in any other Church.

St. Leo.

imagine, that in ſo flouriſhing and orderly a Church as that of Rome was, the Biſhop ſhould neglect his principal Duty, and ſuffer his Flock to be without Feeding? Beſides, St. Leo tells us in ſeveral places of his Sermons (n), that he did nothing new in Preaching, but followed the ſettled Cuſtom, and in the eighty ſecond Sermon he obſerves particularly, that his Predeceſſor St. Sixtus had made ſome publick Inſtructions. And do we not learn from St. Ambroſe, that Liberius * made a Sermon upon the Occaſion of Marcellina's vowing Virginity in the Church of St. Peter on the Feaſt of the Nativity? This is ſufficient to make it appear, that Sozomen's Obſervation is falſe, or ought to be underſtood in another ſenſe. But however that be, no Man dare extend it as far as St. Leo's Time, becauſe 'tis manifeſt beyond all Contradiction, that the Sermons which bear his Name, were compoſed for the People of Rome, and preached before them. So that there is nothing more fictitious, than the Syſtem of M. Abbot Anthelmi? But perhaps tho' St. Leo preached them, yet he did not make them himſelf? Could a Biſhop in ſo much buſineſs as he was, have time to make his Sermons? Is it not more likely that St. Proſper made them? This ſuppoſition is not ſo abſurd as the former, but yet not much better grounded. Why might not St. Leo have had time enough to compoſe ſuch ſhort Sermons as his are? The chief Duty of a Biſhop is to inſtruct his People, and it being eſpecially appropriated to him, as St. Leo himſelf ſaith in his Letters to Maximus and Theodoret, it is evident, that he ought to preferr this Employment before all others. St. Leo was eloquent, and ſpoke readily, he needed no very long Time to make his Sermons. He preached apparently without much preparation: Afterwards, they wrote his Sermons either in the Time he preached them, or he dictated them himſelf. But ſuppoſing that St. Leo had cauſed them to be made, he did certainly make uſe of ſome other Pen, than St. Proſper's, for they are of a more ſublime Stile than the Works of that Author. The Stile of this laſt is plain and doctrinal, not at all florid, as the Sermons and Letters of St. Leo are. That jingling and rhiming Cadence ſo proper to St. Leo, is very rarely to be found in St. Proſper. This it is that we muſt judge the likeneſs of Stile by, and not becauſe the ſame Words, or Thoughts, are by chance found in two Authors. And yet this is all that proves the parallels of M. Abbot Anthelmi. And if any Perſons will give themſelves the trouble to compare the Places, which he alledges, they'll ſee that there is no likeneſs of Stile between the Paſſages of one Author, and the other, although they meet with the ſame Words. And further, altho' there were ſome little Conformity of Stile between the Writings of St. Proſper, and St. Leo, yet have we not much greater reaſon to ſay, that St. Proſper hath imitated his Maſter whom he often heard ſpeak and preach, whoſe Sermons he read, and perhaps copied out to keep them, In Scrinio Romanæ Eccleſiæ, In the Regiſtry of the Roman Church, it being ſuppoſed that he was a Notary of the Roman Church?

As to the Saxon MS. as it contains no more than three Sermons, whatſoever Authority we allow it, it ought to make us doubt of no more than three Sermons, for this doubt ought not to reach to others, which are always attributed to St. Leo in all the Manuſcripts, and never to St. Proſper. But notwithſtanding theſe three Sermons are not to be found, ſave in this Manuſcript only, where the firſt is attributed to St. Proſper, yet the Stile and Matter do evince that they are St. Leo's, and canot be St. Proſper's. This is the Judgment, which the learned M. Faber, whoſe is this Manuſcript, gives of it, and which he ſent to Voſſius Provoſt of Tongres to add them to his Edition of St. Leo. See what this great Man ſaith in his Letter to Voſſius, p. 113. and 114. of his Works, Hearing that Michael Sonnius Bookſeller hath a Correſpondence with you by Letters, and that he expects ſhortly your Edition of St. Leo's Works, I thought that I might do you a kindneſs in ſending you three Sermons of this Father copied out of an ancient Manuſcript that you might add them, if they have eſcaped your Obſervation. I have ſent you them at firſt, that you might ſee whether they are among thoſe that you have. And ſince you have made anſwer to Sonnius, that they are not there, I do ſend you them ſo much the more freely, becauſe I obſerve in them, as I think, the Eloquence of that Father, the Roundneſs of his Periods, and that compact Stile, which is peculiar to him. That which is attributed to St. Proſper, doth evidently belong to the ſame Author as the others, as is proved by the Agreement in the Stile, and becauſe he ſpeaks of himſelf as Biſhop of Rome, for tho' indeed ſome ſay, that St. Leo made uſe of St. Proſper, yet I ſhall never be perſuaded, that ſo eloquent a Pope as St. Leo was, hath craved the Pen of another, and preached to his People the Sermons that another made. M. Anthelmi muſt pardon me, if I preferr M. Faber's Judgment before his, and if without relying upon the Authority of that Manuſcript, we acknowledge the firſt Sermon to be St. Leo's. But why doth it bear St. Proſper's Name in that ancient Manuſcript? Do we not know, that there is a great Confuſion in the moſt ancient Manuſcripts, about the Titles of Sermons, and that often they are very faulty? Witneſs the two ancient Manuſcripts a thouſand Years old, of which F. Mabillon ſpeaks in the Preface to St. Maximus's Homilies, Muſ. Ital. T. 1. P. 4. where the Homilies of St. Maximus bear the Name of St. Auſtin. We need not then wonder, if a Sermon of St. Leo's carries the Name of St. Proſper in a Manuſcript of 900 Years old. And yet this doth not prove that it is this Father's, nor that he hath put it under his own Name, becauſe it was known even then, that St. Proſper made St. Leo's Sermons, or that it was copied out of a Manuſcript, wherein the Sermons of St. Leo were attributed to St. Proſper. M. Abbot Anthelmi owns, that in the Time of St. Proſper, the Sermons which were made for St. Leo, did bear the Name of that Pope. Why then was the Name of St. Proſper affixed to them three hundred Years after? Whence did he that wrote the Manuſcript learn that they were St. Proſper's? Why had not all his other Sermons the ſame luck? What neceſſity is there for amending all other Manuſcripts by this, wherein there are no more than three of St. Leo's Sermons? The Tranſcriber might eaſily miſtake, he might copy the firſt Sermon from a Manuſcript which had been St. Proſper's, or written by St. Proſper, and take the Name of him that wrote the Manuſcript, or the Perſon's, whoſe it was, for the Name of the Author. He might find this Sermon at the end of St. Proſper's Works, and ſo attribute it of his own head to St. Proſper: However that be, it often happens, that we find in the moſt ancient Manuſcripts the Sermons of St. Maximus, and St. Cæſarius, under the Name of St. Auſtin, and Ambroſe, which in our Time have been reſtored to their true Authors, upon the account of the mere agreement of Stile with the other Sermons of St. Maximus, and Cæſarius, and without the Authority of any Manuſcript? And why may we not do the ſame to the Sermon of St. Leo? A negative Argument taken from the ſilence of Gennadius, Gelaſius, and Anaſtaſius, is of little conſequence. Gennadius often paſſes over in ſilence many excellent pieces of thoſe Authors of whom he ſpeaks. Gelaſius had no deſign to ſpeak of his Sermons, and Anaſtaſius never uſes to mention the Writings of Popes. We muſt then leave St. Leo in poſſeſſion of his Sermons.

St. Leo.

The four firſt are Diſcourſes upon his own Promotion to the See of the Roman Church. The firſt was preached according to ſome, a Year after, according to others, on the Day of his Ordination, but it is more probable, that it was on the Octave after it, for he ſpeaks of his Election as lately paſt, and of ſome time that came between, and yet he ſignifies, that he did not preach it upon the ſame Day that he was ordained, but recurrente per ſuum ordinem Die, quo me Dominus Epiſcopalis officii voluit habere principium, the ſame Day returning in its courſe, on which the Lord was pleaſed to give a beginning to my Epiſcopal Charge, which agrees very well to the Octave. He gives God thanks in this Sermon for the favours which he had received of him, and more eſpecially, that he had permitted him to return again to Rome, after a long abſence, to govern that Church. He declares to his People the grateful Senſe he had of their good-will to him, in chuſing him their Biſhop, beyond his deſert. He deſires them to help him by their Prayers, that he may govern the Church in Peace. He aſſures them, that he will always have that Day in great Honour, in which he was advanced to his See, becauſe, although he ought to tremble by reaſon of his unworthineſs, yet he was obliged to rejoyce in the favour which God had ſhewn him, hoping, that he, who hath permitted him to be put into a Charge of ſo great Weight, will help him to undergo it, and give him ſtrength that he may not faint under the Burden of that Dignity. Laſtly, he teſtifies the Joy that he hath to ſee the Biſhops his Brethren aſſembled, and makes them to hope, that St. Peter is with them, and that he governs that Church in the Perſon of his Succeſſor.

In the ſecond Diſcourſe preached a Year after his Ordination, he ſays, that though all Biſhops ought to give God the Honour of their Miniſtry, yet he had greater reaſon than any Body elſe to attribute it wholly to the Divine Mercy, when he conſiders on the one hand his own Weakneſs, and on the other, the Excellency of his Miniſtry. That the very thoughts of it made him tremble, becauſe nothing is more to be feared, than Labour by the weak, great Dignity by mean Perſons, and an Office by Men of no deſert. Labor fragili, ſublimitas humili, dignitas non merenti. That nevertheleſs he doth not deſpair, nor is faint-hearted, becauſe he puts his Truſt in him who works in, and by Man. That the Pſalm, which they are about to ſing, is very proper to humble a Biſhop, and to give all the Glory to Jeſus Chriſt; that it ſpeaks of Melchiſedeck an Eternal Prieſt, whoſe Parents are not known, which is a Type of the New Law, and the practice of the Church, which beſtows not the Prieſthood upon Perſons of Quality, or of a particular Family,

[* Valeſius ſays, Non erat Sermo ad Populum ſed exhortatio ad Marcellinam. No publick Sermon, but a private Admonition. But this is only to maintain his aſſertion, for the F. ſays, Populus convenerit, nemo impaſtus recedet, and for that end goes on preaching, Amb. lib. 3. de Virgin. in ipſo limine.] nor by Succeſſion, but chuſes ſuch Men as the Holy Spirit hath fitted for it, inſomuch that it is not the Prerogative of Birth that qualifies for the Sacerdotal Unction, but 'tis the Heavenly Grace that makes Biſhops. That the Church is ſtill governed by Jeſus Chriſt, who hath given to St. Peter the Apoſtolick Power. That the Apoſtle never forſakes his Church, but continues to be the Foundation of it; that his Authority and Power ſtill lives in his Succeſſors, and that it is to him that that little Good which he doth in his Charge is to be attributed. That it is St. Peter alſo that he ought to Extol upon that Day, that is the Feaſt of that Apoſtle; that the Biſhops his Brethren were aſſembled not ſo much to honour him as St. Peter, who is not only Biſhop of the Roman Church, but the Head of all the Churches in the World. Upon this account he exhorts the Chriſtians of the Church of Rome to excel the Chriſtians of all other Churches in the World in Virtue.

(b) In ſeveral places of his Sermons.] Sermon 111. of the Epiphany. Tamen ut noſtri nihil deſit officii, loqui de eadem feſtivitate, quod Dominus donaverit, audebo. Serm. 7. de Paſſ. c. 10. De ſervitute quam debeo. Serm. 2. de Reſurrect. c. 1. Repoſcere vos conſuetudinis debitum. Serm. 82. in Nat. Macc. he ſays of St. Sixtus, that he was, Magnificentior adificator animarum—ut utilitatibus inſtitutionum ejus erium in ipſo fruetetur devota poſteritas, & habitando quod condidit, et faciendo quod docuit.

nor

St. Leo.

In the third Diſcourſe upon the ſame ſubject, after he hath ſhewn that all Chriſtians ought to joyn in that Feaſt, becauſe all are in ſome meaſure Prieſts to God, having received the Unction of the Holy Spirit, which makes them in a Senſe Prieſts, he ſpeaks of the Prerogatives granted to St. Peter, and he adds, that the Right of that Power hath paſſed to all the Primates of the Church, but it is not without good reaſon, that God ſpake that to one, which belongs to all, becauſe in chuſing St. Peter to entruſt with his Power, he hath made him the Prototype of all Biſhops, and that this Privilege granted to St. Peter meets in all thoſe who judge according to the Juſtice of that Apoſtle. That as all the Apoſtles and Biſhops have received the Keys in the Perſon of St. Peter, ſo likewiſe it was for all the Apoſtles, and all the Biſhops, that Jeſus Chriſt hath prayed, when he prayed in particular for St. Peter, that his Faith fail not. Laſtly, that St. Peter doth ſtill take care of his Church, and though he doth not refuſe to aſſiſt all the Chriſtians in the World, yet it is to be believed, that he helps in a particular manner thoſe of the Church of Rome, whom he hath preferred, and among whom his Body is buried.

The fourth Sermon is almoſt ſpent upon the ſame matters. After he hath proved, that all the good that we do, ought to be referred to God, he demonſtrates, that the higher Men are promoted in the Church, the more they ought to fear; that all Biſhops muſt give an Account of their Flocks; that all Churches having recourſe to the Holy Apoſtolick See, God requires of his Biſhop ſuch an Univerſal Charity, as he hath commanded St. Peter to have; that it would be impoſſible for him to diſcharge ſo great an Office well, and that he muſt infallibly faint under the Burden, if Jeſus Chriſt, who is an Eternal Prieſt after the Order of Melchiſedeck, did not by his Divine Aſſiſtance continually aid and aſſiſt his Church. That this Anniverſary Feſtival was not appointed for Pride, and Vanity, but to give Jeſus Chriſt upon that Day, the Honour of what he doth in the Perſon of his Miniſter, and to celebrate the Memory of St. Peter, who never ceaſeth to preſide over the Holy See, and hath tranſmitted to his Succeſſors the ſame conſtancy which he hath received from Jeſus Chriſt; that it is to him that we are obliged for that ſmall Power which remains yet in the Church of Rome. 'For, ſaith he, if God hath granted to 'the Martyrs as a recompence of their ſufferings, and to 'make known their deſerts: If he he hath granted them, 'I ſay, an ability to relieve Men in Diſtreſs, reſtore 'Health to the Sick, and caſt out Devils out of the Bodies 'of ſuch as are poſſeſſed, and to heal all manner of Di'ſeaſes, who can be ſo Ignorant, or ſo Repining againſt 'the Glory of St. Peter, as to aſſert that there is any part of 'the Church which is not governed by his Care, or ſtrengthned by his Help?' He concludes, that if all the Church acknowledge it ſelf obliged to St. Peter, the Roman Church ought more eſpecially to ſhew all tokens of the reſpect which it hath for him, and make all thankful acknowledgements of his Bounty; that it is to this Apoſtle, that all the Honour and Reſpect which is this Day given to his Succeſſor is directed and intended.

The ſix following Sermons, are upon the Collections, or Contributions, which were made for the Poor upon ſome Sundays in the Year. They are very ſhort, and much commend Alms-giving to us, and ſhew, that Gatherings for the Poor are derived to us from Apoſtolick Practice.

Next there are nineteen Sermons upon the Faſt of the tenth Month, that is, upon the Ember-Week in the Month of September. He obſerves, that the Ember-Faſts were appointed to teach us, that there is no time which ought not to be employed in the doing of Good Works; that this Faſt in September was inſtituted to give God thanks for the Fruits of the Earth, which they had juſt gathered in, and put us in mind of beſtowing a part of thoſe things which God hath given us, to the Poor, by abſtaining from them our ſelves. That the new Law doth not diſcharge Men from the obligation of Faſting, but on the contrary, the Faſts which it preſcribes, are of longer continuance than thoſe of the Jews; that the Apoſtles commanded it; that Faſting is of great advantage, but it ought to be accompanied with other Chriſtian Virtues, and chiefly, Charity to our Neighbours; that Almſgiving, Prayer, and Faſting, are efficacious Means to obtain remiſſion of Sins, that when we give Alms, we lend our Money to God upon Uſury; that ſuch Uſury is allowed, but 'tis not permitted under any pretence whatſoever to lend to Men upon Uſuries. St. Leo.

The ten Sermons upon the Nativity, contain in them more of Doctrine, than Morality. In them he explains the Myſtery of the Incarnation, confutes the Errors of the Hereticks who have oppoſed it, and adds to the Doctrine ſome Moral Conſiderations.

The eight Sermons upon the Epiphany, contain ſome Conſiderations upon the circumſtances of that Myſtery.

In the twelve Lent-Sermons he ſpeaks of the Inſtitution and Benefit of Faſting. He believes, that it was appointed principally to make Expiation for Sins, and do Penance for their Sins; that the Catechumens are obliged to it, as well as the Faithful; that Virtues muſt be joined with the due Obſervation of Faſting, and chiefly Alms-giving, and forgiveneſs of Enemies; that the whole Lent, and above all, the laſt Days of it, ought to be uſed to prepare our ſelves for the Feaſt of Eaſter.

In the nineteen following Sermons he explains the Myſtery, Fruit, Effects and Circumſtances of the Paſſion of our Saviour.

He hath two Sermons upon the Reſurrection, two upon the Aſcenſion of Jeſus Chriſt, and three upon the Pentecoſt. In theſe laſt he proves the Divinity of the Holy Spirit, in the ſecond he takes notice of ſome Circumſtances of the Hereſie of Manes.

The four next Sermons are upon the Ember-days immediately after Whitſuntide, which follow that Feaſt, ſaith St. Leo, that the Graces beſtowed by Vertue of thoſe Myſteries may be preſerved by that means. He ſpeaks in theſe Sermons of the Benefit of Faſting.

The Sermon upon the Feaſt of St. Peter and St. Paul is looked upon, and that with a great deal of Reaſon, as one of the beſt Sermons of St. Leo. He ſhews, in the beginning of it, that tho' this Feaſt be common to all the Churches in the World, it is reaſonable that it ſhould be celebrated with the greateſt Solemnity in the City of Rome, where theſe two Apoſtles have manifeſted the Light of the Goſpel, and where they received the Crown of Martyrdom. He deſcribes the manner how Religion was firſt ſettled at Rome, and how that City, which was the chief City of the Empire, became the principal Church in the World. He extols the Zeal of St. Peter who came thither firſt of all to preach the Faith. He equals St. Paul with St. Peter in deſert, and ſays, that theſe two Apoſtles were as the two Eyes of the Body of the Church, of which Jeſus Chriſt is the Head; that their Call, Travails and End, made them equal. He concludes, ſaying, that he doth not doubt but that theſe two glorious Apoſtles do endeavour, by their Prayers, to move our Lord to Mercy.

There was heretofore another Sermon upon this Feaſt, but F. Queſnel hath rejected it in his Appendix, becauſe all of it, except the beginning, is taken out of the 3*d*. Sermon of St. Leo, upon the Anniverſary of his advancement to the Popedom.

The following Sermon is on the Octave of the preceding Feaſt, if we may believe the Title: But it appears by the Body of the Sermon, that it was made upon another Subject, and apparently at another time after that Rome was freed from the Vandals. St. Leo therein condemns the Romaniſts Superſtition, who after they were delivered by the help of the Saints and the Mercy of God, did celebrate their * Cirque-ſhows with a great deal of Pomp and State.

The eighty ſecond Sermon is upon the Feaſt of the ſeven Maccabees, which was joined to the Feaſt of the Dedication of ſome Roman Church. He exhorts the Faithful to imitate theſe Generous Martyrs in conquering the Perſecutions of their Spiritual Enemies. He highly praiſes the Perſon that had built the Church, which was dedicated, and takes an occaſion to admoniſh the Chriſtians, that they ought to build a Spiritual Temple in themſelves.

St. Leo makes an Obſervation in the beginning of his Panegyrick of St. Lawrence, that the Martyrs are thoſe, who have moſt exactly imitated the Charity of Jeſus Chriſt; that our Lord in dying for us hath redeemed us, and that the Martyrs ſhew us by their death, that we ought not to fear Tortures; that among all the Martyrs, there is none that was more cruelly perſecuted, and ſhewed more Conſtancy than St. Lawrence; that as he was a Miniſter of the Sacraments, the Perſecutor was animated by a double Motive, and put on by two different Paſſions. Being Covetous of Money, and an Enemy to the true Religion, his Avarice put him upon ſeizing the Treaſures of the Church, and his Impiety upon deſtroying the Chriſtian Religion. He could not make St. Lawrence deliver up the Treaſures of the Church, but he muſt at the ſame time make him renounce his Religion. He demands of him then the place where the Treaſures of the Church were? Our Saint ſhews him the Flocks of Poor which were maintained and cloathed out of the Church's Revenues. The Tyrant being diſappointed of his hopes, was all in a fury, and prepared the moſt cruel Torments; and after he had torn and mangled his Body with many Blows, he broiled his Body upon a Grid-Iron. But the more cruel his Tortures were, the greater was the Glory of this Martyr: So that Rome hath been as famous for the Martyrdom of St. Lawrence, as Jeruſalem for St. Stephen. We hope, adds this Father, that we ſhall be helped by his Prayers and his Interceſſion.

[* Ludi Circenſes, in honour of Neptune, or as others, of Juno, Minerva, & Jupiter.]

St. Leo.

The nine following Sermons are upon the Summer Ember-days. He exhorts the Faithful to Faſting, and ſhews the Advantage of it, and requires them always to join Faſting and Abſtinence together. He recommends the Love of God.

The ninety third Sermon is againſt the Error of Eutyches. The ninety fourth contains ſome Reflections upon the Myſtery of the Incarnation upon the occaſion of the Transfiguration of our Lord. In the ninety fifth he explains the Degrees of Bleſſedneſs, ſet down in the Sermon of Jeſus Chriſt upon the Mount. The ninety ſixth upon the Feaſt of St. Peter's Chair is newly publiſhed out of a Manuſcript of the King's Library. It is St. Leo's Style.

F. Queſnel obſerves, in this place, that there are many Prayers in the Miſſal and Roman Pontifical, which are St. Leo's Style. In this number he puts the Prefaces of the Maſs, and hence he adds two of them, the one for the Maſs of Conſecration of Biſhops, the other for the Ordination of a Prieſt, with a Prayer of the Arch-Deacon to the Biſhop, upon the reconciling of Penitents. Theſe Pieces are taken out of the Pontifical, but 'tis not certain that they are St. Leo's.

The Appendix contains three Sermons falſly attributed to St. Leo, and two others made up of little Pieces taken out of this Father. The 1*ſt*. is upon St. Vincent. The 2*d*. upon the Nativity of our Lord. The 3*d*. upon the Aſcenſion. The 4*th*. upon the Feaſt of the Apoſtles St. Peter and St. Paul; and the Laſt is a Treatiſe againſt the Errors of Eutyches and other Hereticks.

We do not here ſpeak of the Books of the Calling of the Gentiles, the ſhort Heads about Grace and Free-will, nor of the Epiſtle to Demetrias, Works which Father Queſnel hath put under St. Leo's Name in the beginning of his Works, becauſe we will allow a Chapter by it ſelf for the Examination, whether they are St. Leo's or not.

The Style of St. Leo is polite and over-elegant. His Diſcourſe is made up of Periods, whoſe Parts are well diſtinguiſhed and meaſured. He has a Rhyming Cadence of words, which is very wonderful; it is ſwelled with noble Epithets, fit Appoſitions, ſuitable Antitheſes and admirable endings of Periods; this renders it pleaſant to the Ear, and that ſets ſuch a luſtre upon it as is dazling and raviſhing. But this Style not being natural, is found ſometimes intricate and obſcure, and keeps the Reader or Hearer in ſuſpenſe. The Elegancy of theſe ſort of Diſcourſes ariſes from nothing but the ranging of the words, which makes a wonderful Cadence. If we will alter it, and expreſs the ſame Senſe in other words, we ſhall perceive no ſuch Beauty as we admired before. Nevertheleſs St. Leo's Senſe is very good; he is exact in Points of Doctrine, and very skilful in Diſcipline, but he is not very full of Moral Points; he treats of them very dryly, in a way that rather diverts than effects. He was zealous for the Rights and Privileges of his See, and ſought all opportunities of advancing and enlarging them as much as poſſible. This Deſign is very apparent in all his Writings, but we muſt own that he uſed his Power with a great deal of Meekneſs and Moderation, being perſuaded, that the only Uſe of it was to provide that the Laws of the Church be duly obſerved, and that nothing be commanded or allowed contrary to the Decrees of the Councils. Theſe were his Principles. He greatened his Authority, but it was for Edification, and never for Deſtruction. He had a great Veneration for Emperors and Kings. He medled not with Civil Affairs. Laſtly, it may be ſaid, that the Church of Rome never had more Grandeur and leſs Pride than in this Pope's time. The Biſhop of Rome was never more honoured, more conſiderable and reſpected than in this Pope's time, and yet he never carried himſelf with more Humility, Wiſdom, Sweetneſs and Charity.

St. Leo.

The firſt Edition of St. Leo's Works was compoſed by John Andrew, Biſhop of the Iſle of Corſica, and printed at Venice in 1485. This Edition was re-printed in 1505. by Porteſius. This had but a few of his Letters. But the Collections of Merlin and Crabbe, afford us a greater number. Caniſius undertook a new Edition of St. Leo's Works, which he publiſhed at Collen in 1546, and 1547. Surius made another in 1561. This was followed by another of the Canons of St. Martin of Louvain in 1575, and 1578. and at Antwerp in 1583. The Letters of St. Leo are inſerted in the Collection of the Decretals and Councils. In 1614, and 1618. the Works of St. Leo were printed with the Homilies of St. Maximus and St. Chryſologus [at Paris], and afterwards re-printed ſeveral times at Lyons, [viz. 1633, 1651, and 1671.] and at Paris.

But all theſe Editions are not comparable to the laſt, which F. Queſnel, a Prieſt of the Oratory, hath publiſhed. It was printed at Paris by Coignard in 1675. He hath publiſhed 31 Sermons never before printed, and reviewed the Works already publick, by a great number of MSS. from which he hath taken very conſiderable Amendments. It is divided into two Tomes, in Quarto. The 1*ſt*. contains St. Leo's Sermons and Letters, with the Books of the Calling of the Gentiles, the Aphoriſms of Grace attributed to St. Cœleſtine, and the Epiſtle to Demetrias, which he pretends to be St. Leo's. He hath ranked his Sermons and Works in a better Order, and hath ſeparated his Suppoſititious Works from his Genuine. This Tome ends with the Life of Hilary Biſhop of Arles, written by Honoratus. The 2*d*. Tome contains an ancient Book of Canons and Conſtitutions of the Popes, which F. Queſnel holds to be that which the Church of Rome uſed heretofore; ſix Diſſertations upon Matters that have relation to the Works he was about to publiſh, and very learned and uſeful Notes upon St. Leo's Letters. Altho' his Diſſertations ſeem to be ſomething long, and contain ſome things which ſeem remote from the Works of this Father, yet they are written with ſo much Reaſon, and are ſo full of Learning, that no Man will be troubled to have them joined with the Works of this Father. The Induſtry of the Printer, the Beauty of the Character, and Correctneſs of the Edition, are anſwerable to the Learning of him who had the care of it.

St. HILARY Biſhop of Arles.

St. Hilary of Arles.

HOnoratus Biſhop of Marſeilles, whom we think to be the Author of the ancient Life of Hilary Biſhop of Arles, hath written it with ſo much Exactneſs, that we cannot be miſtaken in following him. He ſpeaks nothing of his noble Extraction and Country, imitating therein St. Hilary himſelf, who made no account of thoſe Privileges. He paſſes over in ſilence what was very worthy of obſervation in his Youth concerning his Studies, the Acuteneſs and Vigor of Wit, his Proficiency in the Sciences, being perſuaded, that it is needleſs to enlarge upon thoſe things, in writing the Life of a Perſon ſo Virtuous as St. Hilary.

In the next place he relates after what manner Honoratus Abbot of * Lerins left his Society, and went into his Country to find out St. Hilary, that he might convert him. He deſcribes the oppoſition he met withal at firſt from St. Hilary, the Arguments which he made uſe of to move him, the diſturbance St. Hilary himſelf was in, and at laſt, how being touched by Grace, which changeth the Will, he took up a reſolution to withdraw himſelf from the World. Having ſold his Eſtate to his Brother, he gave the price of it to the Poor, or diſpoſed of it for the Subſiſtence of the Monks, and then retreated into the Iſle of Lerins. Sometime after Honoratus having been choſen Biſhop of Arles, St. Hilary went with him thither; but the Love of Retreat ſoon recalled him to his ancient Privacy. Two years after, in 429. Honoratus being ready to paſs out of this Life into a better, ſent for his dear Son Hilary to do the laſt Offices for him; whom, as he was about to return, the Governor Caſſius caſt his Eyes upon, to make him Succeſſor to Honoratus, and his Choice was unanimouſly approved by all, wherefore he detained him, and, tho' againſt his Will, ordained him Biſhop of Arles.

[* Lerina, an Iſle of France.]

St. Hilary of Arles.

This Dignity, which often corrupts others, did only increaſe his Holineſs and Zeal. He founded a Society of the Clergy, which he trained up to Godlineſs, by Imitation and Example. He taught them, by his own Practice, to contemn the World, to neglect the Body, to ſubdue it by Faſting and Mortifications, to ſuppreſs Sin, to live Hardly, to journey on Foot, to eat and drink juſt no more than Neceſſity requires, to undergo hard Labour, to meditate on the Law of God, to relieve the Poor and Widows, and be good Examples to all the World. He ſold the Ornaments of the Church to redeem Captives, inſomuch that he was forced to uſe Chalices and Pattins of Glaſs. He expended the Offerings of the People for the Redemption of the Members of Jeſus Chriſt, not reſerving any thing for himſelf. He had a ſpecial regard for the Holy Monks. He was extremely humble, and yet he was inflexible in reſpect of the Proud, and terrible to Perſons Haughty, and puffed up with their own Grandeur. This is an eminent Inſtance of his Conſtancy and Inflexibleneſs. The Governor of the City having done many Injuries, he often admoniſhed him of them in private, but ſince the Governor valued it not, on a day, when he came into the Church with his Guards, while St. Hilary was preaching, he broke off his Sermon, ſaying, that he ought not to hear the Word of God in publick, who is not bettered by private Inſtructions. His Sermons were Eloquent, and adorned with curious Sentences. He employed the Spiritual Sword of the Word of God to cut off Hereſies. On the Faſting-days he preached to the People even till Night, and that with ſo much Delight, that they almoſt almoſt forgot they had need of Eating. When he was to ſpeak to the Ignorant, he uſed ſuch Language as was ſuitable to their Capacities. But when he ſaw learned Perſons come to hear him, he elevated himſelf, and made himſelf ſo much admired, that two Biſhops of that time, called Sylvius and Euſebius, Perſons very well known by their Writings, going one day into his Church as he was preaching, did own, that there was ſomething Extraordinary and Divine in his Diſcourſes. When he had once begun, he would never make an end, if the Sign, which was given him to tell when it was time to conclude, had not made him give over. His Diſcourſes were ſo elegant, that a learned Poet of his time proclaimed publickly, that if St. Auſtin had lived after St. Hilary, he would have been accounted inferior to him. The Works which he hath left us, are an evident Proof of his Eloquence, viz. The Life of Honoratus. His Homilies upon all the Feſtivals of the year, his Expoſition of the Creed, a great number of Letters, and his Poems written with a great deal of Wit. If what I ſay of his Eloquence, ſaith Honoratus, be not credible, ſure Eucherius will be regarded, who having received his Book in Verſe and Proſe, wrote back again to him, that there was in it an equal Portion of Wit and Eloquence; yea, let them believe Auxiliaris, a Roman Orator, who commends his Letters as Pieces excellently written. He had ſo ready a Wit, that he could read, compoſe, dictate and write with his own Hand at the ſame time. 'Tis wonderful, but it is authorized by the Teſtimony of the Poet Edeſius, who himſelf ſaw it. His Table was ſo Frugal, that he never durſt invite any Body to it. He ſought all Opportunities of being ſerviceable to the Publick. Being at the Salt-pits, he invented and made ſome Engines himſelf, or certain Inſtruments to make ſome Wares, which would remove themſelves conveniently and eaſily. He roſe at Midnight, went eight or ten Miles on Foot, officiated every day at Divine Service, and made very long Sermons. When he impoſed Penance on Offenders (which he did ordinarily on the Lord's day) they came to hear him in Throngs. All that were preſent poured forth Tears, and being aſtoniſhed at the Judgments of God, and allured by the Promiſes, they ſent out ſuch ſtrong Cryes and Sighs, that all the Place was filled with the noiſe of them. Who ever better diſplayed the Rigor of God's Judgments? Who ever more livelily repreſented the Torments of Hell? Who ever made Sinners more ſenſible of the Enormities of their Crimes? After his Exhortation was ended, he received the firſt Supplications with Tears, and confirmed by Prayer the Fruit of Repentance ſtirred up by his Exhortations. He caſt out Devils from the Bodies of ſuch as were poſſeſſed, by making them renounce their Sins publickly. When he ſaw his People go out of the Church after the Goſpel was read, he kept them back, by telling them, you may eaſily go from hence, but you cannot go from Hell.

St. Hilary of Arles.

Who can expreſs, ſaith Honoratus, how much good his Viſitations did in the French Churches? He often went to ſee St. German, with whom he made an Enquiry into the Life and Manners of the Clergy. While he was with him a certain Biſhop named Celedonius, was accuſed before him, becauſe he had married a Widow before he was ordained, which is forbidden by the Canons, and the Authority of the Holy See: Some added, that he had been preſent at the Tryal and Condemnation of Criminals. The Caſe being diſcuſſed with all the fairneſs imaginable, and the Witneſſes heard, he pronounced, that he whom the Holy Canons deprived of his Prieſthood, ought to forſake it of himſelf. He reſolved with himſelf to go to Rome; he complains, that he had been condemned with two much ſeverity. St. Hilary underſtanding this, puts himſelf immediately upon his Journey to go to Rome; the coldneſs of the Seaſon, the Heighth of the Alps, and other troubles in the Journey, could not take off the Edge of his Zeal; he conquered them all, and went to Rome on Foot; after having paid his Devotion to the Tombs of the Apoſtles and Martyrs, he went to St. Leo, gave him all due Reſpect and Veneration, and humbly beſought him that he would make no Alteration in the ordinary Diſcipline of the Church: He complained, that thoſe Biſhops who had been condemned in France were permitted to exerciſe their Miniſtry at Rome, which was a great Scandal, and ought to be rectifyed by him: As for himſelf, he ſays, he came not to aſſiſt at their Tryal or Condemnation, but only to pay his reſpects; and what he ſaid was by way of Proteſtation, not Accuſation, and if he would not hearken to him, he would not be further troubleſome about it.

Nor was he more bold and couragious in his Words than Actions: He proved, that he very little valued the Menaces of Rome, for he ſtiffly maintained what he had done, yielded to no Man, would never communicate with thoſe whom he had condemned, and ſeeing that he could not make the Romans underſtand Reaſon, he went home again. Being returned, he neglected nothing that might appeaſe the Pope's Mind; he firſt of all ſent Ravennius the Prieſt who afterward was his Succeſſor, and then deputed the * Biſhops Nectarius, and Conſtantius, to negotiate his affair, with the Pope; he gave them long Inſtructions, but found no acceptance. It is worth our Pains to read what Auxiliaris, the Præfect of Rome [who was alſo employed to pacify the Pope] wrote to our Saint: 'I have received, according to my 'Duty, the Biſhops Conſtantius and Nectarius, who are 'come hither on your behalf. I have often diſcourſed with 'them about your Conſtancy and Contempt of the World. 'I have alſo ſpoken of your Buſineſs to Pope Leo: I do 'not doubt but here you will be a little aſtoniſhed, ſince 'you are always firm, and in the ſame purpoſes, not be'ing tranſported with exceſſive Anger or Joy; I do not be'lieve but that you muſt ſuſpect ſome part of the World 'to be governed by Pride, but Men do not eaſily endure 'that others ſhould ſpeak their Opinions freely of them, be'ſides, the Roman Ears are very Nice, that they will not 'ſuffer any thing that doth not pleaſe them. I am of Opi'nion, that if you would become more mild, you would 'gain much by it. Grant me this, and remove thoſe little 'Clouds by the ſmall Change of a Calm.' St. Hilary did nothing of it, but ſeeing that no great Succeſs was to be hoped for by that Negotiation, he gave himſelf wholly to Prayer and Labour, and paſſed the reſt of his Days in continual Auſterities. Some Hours before his Death he called together his Society, and having made a very affectionate Diſcourſe to them, he reſigned his Soul to God, anno 454. We have related the Life of this Biſhop at length, as it is written by Honoratus Biſhop of Marſeilles, becauſe it contains many very important Points of Diſcipline, and diſcocovers the Diſpoſition and Character of St. Hilary. We have alſo in it an enumeration of the Works of St. Hilary: We have nothing of them at preſent but the Life of Honoratus, a Letter to Eucherius, and a Poem upon the beginning of Geneſis. F. Queſnel hath collected theſe three Pieces, and cauſed them to be printed at the end of St. Leo's Works.

* The Life of Honoratus hath already been publiſhed by Bollandus. It doth not at all come ſhort of the Idea which Honoratus hath given us of the Wit and Eloquence of St. Hilary.

He ſays, in the beginning, that he had a great Conflict in his Mind, and though he took great delight in celebrating the Memory of St. Honoratus; yet on the other Hand, he was much troubled to think that he had loſt a Perſon for whom he had ſo great a Love, Talem reminiſci dulce eſt, tali carere ſupplicium. After he hath amplified this Notion, he obſerveth, that it is dangerous to praiſe a Man before his Death: But he cannot praiſe good Men too much, when they are departed into another Life, becauſe, that beſides that the Praiſes which we beſtow upon them cannot be ſuſpected of Flattery, they tend much to the Edification of the Church, and may be of good uſe to the Faithful: God is praiſed in his Saints, becauſe all their Worth and Excellency ought to be imputed to the Author of Grace. He adds, that he is not afraid that any Man will think he ſpeaks too favourably of St. Honoratus, becauſe nothing can be ſaid of him which doth not come far ſhort of his Merit and Virtues. That he was very ſenſible that he had not Wit and Eloquence enough to undertake to write upon ſuch a Subject, which requires the Eloquence of the moſt accompliſhed Orators of Antiquity, but that the Reſpect and Kindneſs which he had for him, engaged him to ſatisfy their Deſires, hoping that the Deſerts of that Saint would put Life into his Diſcourſe, and revive the meanneſs of it.

The Cuſtom of ſuch Authors as write Panegyricks, is to begin with the Commendations of the Country and Parentage of him, upon whom they make them, that the Glory of his Anceſtors may ſupply the defects of his Virtues. But as for us Chriſtians, we are all but one in Jeſus Chriſt; the greateſt Nobility among us is to be the Children of God, He is the moſt glorious and greateſt who hath the meaneſt Conceit of his noble Extraction. Theſe reaſons kept St. Hilary from enlarging upon the Honours and great Offices which had been in the Family of Honoratus, and among others the Conſulſhip which the World looks upon as one of the moſt eminent Dignities. He begins his Encomium of him with the Praiſe of his Chriſtian Virtues and Spiritual Regeneration, the Tractableneſs of his Infancy, Modeſty of his Youth, the Regularity of his Converſation, and Life in his Youth; but above all, the earneſtneſs with which he deſired and demanded Baptiſm, againſt the Will and Conſent of his Parents, and the care he had, after he had received it, to keep himſelf harmleſs and undefiled, by avoiding all occaſions of Sin, reſiſting Temptations, and ſhunning the pleaſures of the World. He often ſaid to himſelf, this Worldly Life pleaſeth us, but it deludes us: This Conſideration made him often reſolve to renounce a worldly Life wholly: This induced him to cut off his Hair, wear a courſe Habit, and mortify his Body with Labour. This Change ſtirred up his Father and neareſt Relations againſt him, but he oppoſed them, and continued to live an auſtere Life: His Example prevailed ſo much with his elder Brother, named Venantius, that he embraced the ſame way of Living. The reputation of their Holineſs ſpread it ſelf ſoon through all the World, and attracted the Praiſe and Admiration of all Men: This made them take up a Reſolution to forſake their Country, and find out a Retreat; they took with them a certain old Man named Capraſius,

[* Prieſts, Dr. Cave.]

[*The Life of Honoratus was put out by Genebrard and printed at Paris 1578. Octavo. 'Tis alſo in Surius, and in Bibl. Patr. Tom. 7. with the other Two.]

St. Hilary of Arles.

and went into ſeveral places to live in Solitude, but for all this their Reputation diſcovered them. They took Ship, intending to go by Sea into the Eaſt, but Venantius being dead by the way, in Achaia, Honoratus returned into Italy, and at length retired into the Iſle of Lerins, there to paſs his Life in the Exerciſes of a Monaſtick Life. This engaged him to enter into Holy Orders, which he had ever before avoided; and when many Perſons came to find him out, that they might live under his Conduct, he built a Monaſtery, took care to govern the Religious, and ruled them with all the Kindneſs and Prudence poſſible. St. Hilary commends his Diſcretion, chiefly his Care to provide for the Neceſſities of the Religious, his kind Entertainment of Strangers, his liberal Diſtribution of Alms, and his Love for all the World. He alſo relates what great Pains he took to convert him, and after what manner he caught him. He proceeds, in the next Place, to his Epiſcopal Virtues, upon which nevertheleſs, he doth not enlarge ſo much as he might have done, becauſe they were ſufficiently known to the Chriſtians of Arles. He obſerves, notwithſtanding the greatneſs of his Vigilance and Charity, how he mixt Severity with mildneſs, after what manner he took care of his Flock, with what Vehemency he reproved Vice, how he ſettled Peace and Concord in the Church. He adds, that he did not make uſe of his Power for Terror, but he governed his Flock with Love; and that during the Time that he was Biſhop, the Church grew in Grace, but decreaſed in Riches, becauſe he diſtributed thoſe Treaſures which his Predeceſſors had gathered together, and for a long Time lay uſeleſs, reſerving no more than what was juſt neceſſary for his Subſiſtence, of which likewiſe he would retrench a part, if there were need of it.

In fine, St. Honoratus, being impaired with Labours and Auſterities, fell into a languiſhing Diſtemper, which nevertheleſs did not hinder him from executing his Prieſtly Office. He preached in the Church upon the Feaſt of Epiphany, anno 429. but his Diſeaſe being increaſed, took him away within eight or nine days after. He ſhewed a great deal of Conſtancy and Courage in the Extremity of his Sickneſs; St. Hilary, who was preſent at his Death, relates here many exemplary Circumſtances. He deſcribes alſo his Funeral Solemnity; and after he hath made a ſhort Relation of his Virtues, and equalled him with the Martyrs, he ends his Diſcourſe with an addreſs to him, to pray him to remember him and his People, and to be their Patron and Interceſſor with God. St. Hilary of Arles.

His Poem upon the Beginning of Geneſis is much inferior to the Life of Honoratus in Beauty and Elegancy. It is full of Faults againſt the Rules of Proſodia; it contains nothing noble or remarkable in it.

The Letter of Hilarius Biſhop of Arles to St. Eucherius, is a ſmall Ticket, in which he tells him, that he had run over the Books of Conſtitutions, which he ſent him, and deſires to ſend him one of his Children, to whom he had given ſuch excellent Precepts. This ſhews the Intimacy and Friendſhip there was between Hilary Biſhop of Arles and St. Eucherius. It appears alſo by the Writings of this latter, who ſpeaks very honourably of him, and hath dedicated his Book, Of the Praiſe of a Monaſtick Life, to him. Conſtantius, the Author of the Life of St. German, Julianus, Pomerius, Sidonius, Apollinaris, and all other Authors of that Time, ſpeak of him as a very holy Man. St. Proſper, who did not like well of him, becauſe he was not altogether of St. Auſtin's Opinion about Grace, nevertheleſs, in his Letter to St. Auſtin ſpeaks of him as a Perſon of great Authority, and very well verſed in all ſpiritual Knowledge, and owns that he was a Man of excellent Worth. In his Chronicon he joins him with St. Eucherius, and ſays, that they both conſummated an eminent Life by an holy Death. Laſtly, altho' St. Leo had great Quarrels with him, and ſpake very ill of him in his Life-time, yet he could not refrain ſpeaking honourably of him after his Death. The only thing that he can be reproached with is, that he did not follow St. Auſtin's Opinion about Grace, and having favoured, or at leaſt being one of the principal Patrons of the Semi-Pelagians: But at that Time the moſt learned and holy Perſons of France were of that Opinion. This was the Doctrine of the Monks of Lerins, with whom St. Hilary lived; yea, this was the Doctrine held by the Biſhops and all the Clergy of the Provinces of Vienna and Narbonne. Thoſe that maintained this Opinion were not looked upon as Hereticks, unleſs it were by the zealous Followers of St. Auſtin: It is no Wonder then that St. Leo does not reproach him with it. I have forgotten to obſerve, that St. Hilary was preſent at, and ſubſcribed firſt, the Councils of Ries in 439. and Orange in 441.

St. VINCENTIUS LIRINENSIS.

St. Vincentius Lirinenſis.

[*Being a Soldier.]

Vincentius, a Frenchman by Nation, after he had ſpent ſome part of his Life among the Troubles, Commotions and Waves of the World *, through the Impulſe of the Holy Spirit, retreated, as he himſelf ſays, into the Haven of Religion; O happy and ſafe Haven for all the World: And having gotten Shelter againſt the Storms of Pride, and the Vanity of the World, to retire the remaining part of his Days, and offer to God the continual Sacrifices of Humiliation, that he might avoid the Sufferings of this Life, and the Flames of the Life to come. The Place of his Retreat was the famous Monaſtery of the Iſle of Lerins, ſo famous for ſo many Perſons eminent for Doctrine and Piety, which it hath produced for the Church: Vincentius the Prieſt was none of the leaſt Ornaments of it: St. Eucherius, who tells us, that he was the Brother of Lupus Biſhop of Troyes, compares him, for the Fervency of his Devotion, to the Brightneſs of a ſparkling Diamond, interno gemmam ſplendore perſpicuam: And in another place commends his Learning and Eloquence. Gennadius aſſures us, that he was well skilled in the Holy Scriptures, and very well verſed in the Diſcipline of the Church.

He hath compoſed an excellent Treatiſe againſt the Hereticks, in which he hath given very infallible Rules and convincing Principles to diſtinguiſh Error from Truth, and the Sects of the Hereticks from the Catholick Church. But his Humility made him conceal his Name, and he publiſhed his Treatiſe under the Title of a * Commentary made by Peregrinus againſt the Hereticks. It was divided into two parts, but the ſecond being loſt, he contented himſelf to make an Abridgment of it.

[* Admonition, as Gennadius's Commonitorium, Voſſ. Cave.]

He propoſes to himſelf in this Commentary, to gather the Principles of the ancient Fathers againſt the Hereticks. He tells us in the Preface, that it was the Uſefulneſs of the Work it ſelf, the Time and the Place that he lived in, and his Profeſſion, that engaged him to undertake this Work. The Time, becauſe all things here below being carried on with ſuch a ſwiftneſs, it is reaſonable that we ſhould ſnatch up ſomething that may ſtand us in ſtead in another Life, and ſo much the rather, becauſe the terrible expecting of the laſt Judgment (which he thought nigh at hand, becauſe that the Barbarians had made ſo great a Progreſs into the Empire) ought to ſtir up the Zeal of the Faithful for Religion, and the Malice of the Hereticks ought to oblige the Orthodox to ſtand upon their Guard. The Place alſo was very ſuitable for ſuch a Work, becauſe being diſtant from the Noiſe and Crowd of the Cities, retired in a private Village, and ſhut up in the Cloyſters of a Monaſtery, he was able, without Diſtraction, to do that which is ſaid in the Pſalm, Attend ye, and ſee, that I am your God. Laſtly, no Employment can be more agreeable to a religious Life, which he profeſſed. He therefore undertakes * to write rather as an Hiſtorian than an Author, what he hath learned from the Ancients, and they have entruſted to their Poſterity. He advertiſeth us, that his Deſign was not to collect all, but only offer to our Obſervation what there is moſt neceſſary. St. Vincentius Lirinenſis.

[* Voſſius in his Hiſt. Pel. proves him a Semi-Pelagian from ſome places of this Treatiſe, as alſo of his Objections againſt S. Auſtin.]

Entring then upon his Matter, he ſaith, that he hath learned from many learned and holy Perſons, that the means to avoid Hereſie, and adhere ſtedfaſtly to the true Faith, is to ground themſelves upon two Foundations. 1. Upon the Authority of Holy Scripture. 2. Upon the Tradition of the Catholick Church. But perhaps ſome will demand, ſaith he, the Canon of the Holy Books being perfect and ſufficient of it ſelf to ſettle all Religion; why is it neceſſary to join the Authority of the Church with it? He anſwers, 'tis becauſe Holy Scripture having a ſublime ſenſe, is differently explained; one underſtands it after this manner, and another after that, inſomuch, that there are almoſt as many Opinions about the true meaning of it, as there are Perſons. Novatian underſtands it one way, and Photinus another. It is neceſſary then altogether upon the account of the ſubtle Evaſions of ſo many Hereticks of ſeveral ſorts, in interpreting Scripture to take the ſenſe of the Catholick Church for our Rule. But yet we muſt be careful to chooſe out of thoſe Doctrines, which we find in the Church, ſuch as have always been believed in all places, and by all true Chriſtians; for there is indeed nothing truly and properly Catholick, as the Name in its full ſignification doth denote but what comprehends all in general. Now it will be ſo if we follow Antiquity, unanimous Conſent and Univerſality. We ſhall follow Univerſality, if we believe no other Doctrine true, but that which is taught in all Churches, diſperſed thro' the whole World. We ſhall follow Antiquity, if we depart not from the Judgment of our Anceſtors and Fathers. Laſtly, we ſhall follow unanimous Conſent, if we adhere to the Opinions of all, or of almoſt all the Ancients. But what ſhall an Orthodox Chriſtian do if ſome part of the Church apoſtatize from the Faith of the whole Body of the Church? There is nothing to be done but to preferr the Doctrine of the whole Body that is ſound, before the Error of a rotten and putrefyed Member. But what if ſome new Error is ready to ſpread it ſelf, I do not ſay, over a ſmall part, but almoſt over all the Church? We muſt then be ſure to cleave cloſe to Antiquity, which cannot cannot be corrupted with Novelty. In fine, if among the Ancients we find one or two Persons, or perhaps a City or Province in an Error, we must preferr the Decrees of the ancient and universal Church before the Rashness or Ignorance of some Particulars. But if there arise any Question, to which we cannot find a parallel Case, we must then consult the Judgments of the Ancients, and compare together what those Authors have said at several Times, and in distinct Places, who being in the Communion of the Church may be esteemed Teachers worthy of Credit, and not only to rely upon what one or two have said, but what they all have held, written and taught unanimously, clearly, and without contradicting themselves at any Time. To these Rules Vincentius Lirinensis had added these Examples. The Example of the Donatists he uses to prove, that we ought to keep to the Universality, that of the Arians, that we must cleave to Antiquity and reject Novelty. The Opinion of St. Cyprian about the Rebaptization of Hereticks, he makes use of to shew, that we must not always follow the Sentiments of one particular Ancient, but we may be Hereticks in maintaining the Doctrine which one Orthodox hath taught, wherefore we must depend upon Consent and unanimous Agreement.

St. Vincentius Lirinensis.

Photinus, Apollinaris and Nestorius, are also brought for Examples of Hereticks, who were unfortunately mistaken by departing from the Tradition of the Catholick Church. The Fall of Origen and Tertullian may be a Warning to all Christians how they lean upon the Authority, or Reputation, or Learning of any private Person, and forsake the Doctrine of the Universal Church. Vincentius Lirinensis after he hath enlarged, as much as was possible, upon these Examples, returns to his Principles, and maintains, that we ought to keep our selves to the ancient Rule of Faith, and ought not at any time to seek after or propagate any new Doctrine in the Church; that they who suffer any new Doctrine, hitherto unknown, to be taught, are Deceivers; that Men may labour to explain and clear the ancient Faith well, but may not teach any thing new; they may have a new Way of expressing Matters, but no new Subjects. Cum dicas nove, non dicas nova. But may some say, how is it, that the Faith may not be improved or perfected? Certainly it may be, but it cannot be changed. The Church grows in Knowledge, Understanding and Wisdom, but it always holds the same Doctrines, neither taking from them nor adding to them. Things may be made more evident, receive greater Light, and be better distinguished, but they remain always in the same Fulness, Perfection and Nature: Antiquity may be polished or perfected, but we must always keep the same Foundation. And truly the Church hath done nothing else in the Councils, but maintained the ancient Faith against the Innovation of Hereticks. It obliges us to believe more explicitly what we have already believed, and teach that, with more Power, which we have heretofore taught, and defend with greater Care, what we have already defended. In fine, it gives us an express definition in writing of that, which it hath received from its Ancestors by Tradition. The Hereticks, on the contrary, have broached new Doctrines, and made use of the Holy Scripture to gain reception of them. Vincentius Lirinensis brings several Examples. In the next place he considers after what manner we ought to consult and compare the Opinions of the ancient Fathers, and brings for an Example, in the 2*d*. part of his Commentary, the Proceedings of the Council of Ephesus against Nestorius, but because that part was lost, he contented himself in giving us an Abridgment, making a Summary of the Principles, which he had laid down in his Work. But we must not forget, that Vincentius Lirinensis owns, that there are two Occasions, upon which these excellent Rules concerning Tradition are not of so great use. 1. When Questions of very small Consequence, which do not concern the Rule of Faith, are under debate, or Questions, which serve for the Foundation of Christian Doctrine. 2. When we have to deal with Heresies which are of a long standing; for, saith he, 'tis not convenient to oppose all Heresies by Tradition only, but only such as are newly risen up, as soon as they appear, and before they have corrupted the ancient Records; for when they are once throughly settled and grown old, this Argument becomes weak, because they have had, as I may say, Time to cover themselves with an appearance of Antiquity. So that we must content our selves to confute them by Scripture, or avoid them as Sects condemned and disproved by the ancient Councils of the Catholick Church. It is very probable that this Author is the same with him, who propounded the Objections, or rather Questions against St. Austin's Doctrine concerning Grace, which St Prosper hath answered. There are likewise some places in that little Treatise in which he seems to quarrel with the rigid Scholars of St. Austin. But be that as it will, he was in a Country and in a Monastery, where he did not think himself obliged to addict himself to St. Austin's Opinions, whatsoever esteem he had for him. And perhaps it is for that reason, that he hath laid it down so firmly, that we ought not to submit to the Authority of one Father alone, but to the unanimous Consent of many. Nevertheless he condemns Pelagius and Julian, and there is no Objection to be made against the Rules, which he gave to discern the Doctrines of Faith from Heresie, Error and Opinion, since they are the same, which the Church hath always observed, the holy Fathers have laid down in their Writings, and St. Austin himself hath given in many places. Vincentius Lirinensis did no more but collect, enlarge, and put those Rules in order which he found in the Church, and he hath done it with much Faithfulness, Clearness and Eloquence. He composed this Treatise 3 Years after the Council of Ephesus in 434. He died in the Reign of Theodosius and Valentinian, he is acknowledged for a Saint in the Roman Martyrology, and his Memory is celebrated on the 24*th* of May. This little Tract hath been printed in the Bibliotheca Patrum [Tome 7.] and in several Collections of Authors, at Basil in 1528. [at Collen 1569. with Costerius's Notes] at Paris in 1569. and in 1586. which Edition is reviewed by Peter Pitthæus [at Collen it was reprinted with Costerius's Notes in 1613, Twelves.] Fillesachus hath commented on it, and had it printed 1619. [in Quarto.] It was printed at Lyons, with a controversial Treatise in 1622. Lastly, M. Balusius published it with Salvian, 1663. [whose Edition was reprinted at Paris, 1669. in Octavo. It was also printed at Cambridge in 1687, Twelves.]

St. Vincentius Lirinensis.

St. EUCHERIUS.

St. Eucherius.

[*Verantus Cave.]

ST. Eucherius, after he had had two Sons, called Salonius and Veranus * withdrew himself into the Isle of Lerins, and was afterward made Bishop of Lyons. We have some of his Works. The first is a Book written in Praise of the Desart, or of Solitude, dedicated to St. Hilary afterward Bishop of Arles, in the time that he left Honoratus to return to the Solitude of Lerins, that is to say, about the Year 428. He hath collected, in that little Treatise, a great number of Arguments to raise Mens good Opinion of a solitary Life. The Desart is the Temple of God. In the Desart God is found. The earthly Paradise is the Figure of it. Moses saw God in the Desart. The People of Israel were delivered by passing through the Desart. The Red-Sea opened it self to give them a free Passage into the Desart, and afterward closed again to prevent their Return from thence. In the Desart they were nourished with the heavenly Food, and quenched their Thirst with the miraculous Water. In the Desart they received the Law. David was preserved in the Desart. Elias, Elisha, and the Prophets dwelt in Desarts. Jesus Christ was baptized in the Desart. There it was that Angels ministred unto him, where he fed 5000 Men. It was upon a Mountain in the Wilderness, that his Glory appeared. He prayed in the Desart. The Saints retired themselves into the Desart. The Habitation of Desarts is to be preferred before all others; there God is more easily found, there we converse more familiarly with him, there we live more quietly and free from Temptations. The Praises of Desarts in general are attended by the particular Commendations of the Desart of Lerins. That is a sweet Place full of Fountains, overspread with Herbs, abounding with most pleasant Flowers, grateful as well to the Eyes as Smell, an Abode fit for Honoratus, who first founded the Monasteries, and had Maximus for his Successor; blessed Lupus, his Brother Vincentius, and reverend Caprasius, and many other holy old Men, who dwelt in separate Cells, have made the Life of the Ægyptian Monks to flourish among us. Lastly, after he hath spoken of their Virtues, he congratulates Hilarius, that he was return'd again to such a charming and delightful Dwelling.

St. Eucherius.

The second Work is a * Treatise of the Contempt of the World dedicated to his Kinsman, called Valerian, who was of an Illustrious Family, to exhort him to fly from the World. He represents to him the two principal Duties incumbent upon Man. 1. To know and worship God. 2. To take Care of the Salvation of his Soul. That these two Duties are inseparable, because no Man can be careful of his Soul unless he worship God, nor honour God, unless he take care of his Soul: That it is more reasonable to be sollicitous for the Safety of our Souls than our Bodies, because the Life of the Soul is eternal, whereas the Life of the Body must have an end; and for that Reason we must labour in this Life for Eternity: That it is easy to obtain the Eternal Happiness which we desire, provided that we contemn this miserable Life: That the World hath two principal Attractives to allure us to it, Riches and Honour, but that we ought to tread them both under our Feet: That Riches are ordinarily the Causes of Injustice, that they are uncertain, that we must necessarily leave them at our Death: That Honours are common to the Good and Evil, that Fortune hath her flittings, and nothing is stable and permanent but true Piety: That the true Honours and Riches are celestial: That it is impossible to make a serious Reflection upon the ſhortneſs of Life, and the neceſſity of Death, but we muſt think that theſe are not the only good Things for our Salvation: That we ought not to follow the Examples of thoſe who lead a worldly Life, but to propound to our ſelves the Lives of them who renounce the World that they may lead a truly Chriſtian Life, although they were Perſons of Quality, and might have enjoyed Honours and Riches. St. Clemens, St. Greg. Thaumaturgus, St. Baſil, St. Greg. Nazianzen, St. Paulinus of Nola, St. Hilary Biſhop of Arles and Petronius, are thoſe whom St. Eucherius propounds to Valerian; he mentions the excellent Orators who renounced the Honours which they might have hoped for in the World, yet laid aſide all their Glory to write for Religion, ſuch as Lactantius, Minutius Fœlix, St. Cyprian, St. Hilary, St. J. Chryſoſtome and St. Ambroſe. He propounds to him alſo the Examples of Holy Kings. Laſtly, he makes uſe of the whole Frame of Nature, and all the Viſible World, to prove that the only Employment of Man ought to be to honour the Creator of all Things. After all theſe Conſiderations he diſcovers to him the Vanity of all Philoſophical Knowledge, and ſhews him that there is no true Wiſdom taught, nor any true Happineſs to be found but in the Religion of Jeſus Chriſt. This Writing is dated in the 1085*th.* Year from the firſt Building of Rome, which is the 432. of our common Æra. Theſe two Treatiſes are written in a Style very Clean and Elegant, the Matter is Spiritual, and the manner of handling it very agreeable. It may be ſaid that theſe little Books are not inferior in the Politeneſs and Purity of Language to the Works of theſe Authors who lived in thoſe Ages, when Language was in greater Purity. They have been printed diſtinctly at Antwerp in 1621. [This Treatiſe to Valerian was printed at Baſil, with Eraſmus's Notes; who commends it to us, as one of the moſt elegant Pieces of Antiquity, anno, 1520 and 1521. It was alſo publiſhed by Roſweidus, with Notes, at Antwerp 1620. together with the former, in the Praiſe of Solitude, which Genebrard, put out at Paris 1578.]

[* Epistola de contemptu mundi, & saeculari Philosophia, Dr. Cave.]

St. Eucherius.

His other Treatiſes are not ſo Profitable nor ſo Elegant as the former by a great deal. His Treatiſe of * Spiritual Terms and Phraſes, directed to Veranus, is a Collection of Myſtical and Spiritual Reflections upon the Terms and Expreſſions of Holy Scriptures, in which there is very little Solidity. His firſt Book of Inſtructions contains the Explication of ſeveral Queſtions, which he propoſes to himſelf out of the Old and New Teſtament. Some of them are very well reſolved, and we may find in them ſome very good Remarks. The ſecond Book contains, 1. The Explication of the Hebrew Names. 2. The ſignification of ſome Hebrew Terms, which are often met withal in the Bible, ſuch as Amen, Halleluja, &c. 3. The Explication of ſome ſpecial Phraſes. 4. An Explication of the Names of Nations, Cities and Rivers which are not known. 5. Of the Hebrew Months and Feſtivals. 6. The Names of Idols. 7. The Explication of their Habits and Cloathing. 8. Of Birds and Beaſts. 9. A Compariſon of the Jewiſh Weights and Meaſures with thoſe of the Greeks and Latins, and the Signification of ſome Greek Names. The Uſefulneſs and Worth of this Critical Work may be eaſily known, but the Compoſing of it is very hard. St. Eucherius hath not examined theſe things throughly, but contents himſelf to give the Meaning of every thing in ſhort, without troubling himſelf to prove them. He hath taken the greateſt part of what he diſcourſeth of, out of ſeveral Authors: He diſcuſſes them very often well enough, but he is miſtaken in many Places. Gennadius make mention of theſe Books.

[* De formulis ſpiritualis intelligentiæ Cave.]

The Commentaries upon Geneſis, and the Books of Kings, which go under the Name of St. Eucherius, cannot be his, becauſe the Author himſelf tells us upon Ch. xxii. of the Third Book of Kings, that he lived under the Popedom of St. Gregory, at the time when he ſent St. Auſtine and St. Paulinus into England. He alſo quotes Caſſiodorus, and copies out often the Comments of St. Gregory, which evidently prove that theſe Books do carry a falſe Name.

The Hiſtory of the Sufferings of St. Mauritius and the other Thebæan Martyrs related by Surius, on the 22*d.* of September and printed by it ſelf [at Ingolſtadt in 1617. by the Care of P. Steward, is not the Style of our St. Eucherius: It may better be accounted another St. Eucherius's who was preſent at the fourth Council of Arles, in 524, and at the ſecond Council of Orange, in 529. for he of whom we now ſpeak was dead in 454, as is noted in Proſper's Chronicon.

We have neither his Abridgment of Caſſian, nor ſome other Works concerning a Monaſtick Life, which Gennadius makes mention of. As to the Homilies of which St. Mamertus ſpeaks, ſome think that ſome of thoſe which bear the Name of Euſebius Eneſenus are his, which it may not be amiſs to examine in this Place. We have often ſpoke of them already, but did not throughly determine it, becauſe we had not throughly examined it, but it is a convenient Time to do it. We find, at the firſt Sight, 145 of them upon all the Sundays and Holydays in the Year, which all the Manuſcripts of Monte-Caſſino and the Vatican reſtore to * Bruno Biſhop of Signi. The Agreement of the Style of theſe Homilies with the other Treatiſes of that Author, leaves no place to doubt but that they are really his. Thus we ſee already the great Number of Sermons attributed to St. Eucherius much leſſened. The others are certainly, as I have already obſerved, ſome one or ſeveral French Authors. There are ſome of the Sermons, as that of Maximus Regenſis, that cannot be compoſed but by a Perſon who lived in the Time when the Monaſtery of Lerins flouriſhed. We find in the Life of St. Hilary, written by Honoratus Biſhop of Marſeilles, that there was at that Time a Biſhop of France called Euſebius who made a great many Sermons: This is confirmed by the Verſes of Helman, Scholar of Rabanus who reckons Cæſarius and Euſebius among the famous Biſhops of France. All theſe Homilies therefore might well be attributed to him; but this cannot be, becauſe we find ſome made by Cæſarius, others by Maximus Biſhop of Ries and and laſtly by Fauſtus Regenſis; which prove that 'tis a Collection of Sermons, compiled by the Clergy of the Monaſtery of Lerins, which bear perhaps the Name of Euſebius becauſe theſe Monks had a Cuſtom of Concealing themſelves under an Appellative Name, ſo that theſe Sermons of Euſebius ſeem to import nothing elſe, than the Sermons of a Pious Perſon. Perhaps this Title was given to theſe Sermons becauſe the Author was not known, or becauſe thoſe who compoſed them would not name them otherwiſe, according to the Cuſtom of Lerins. For this Reaſon it is that Vincentius of Lerins took the Name of Peregrinus in his Commentary, Salvian of Timotheus; and it may be 'tis for the ſame Reaſon that the Life of St. Hilary Biſhop Arles, compoſed by Honoratus, bears the Name of Reverend.

St. Eucherius.

There are alſo ſome of theſe Sermons made by Cæſarius Biſhop of Arles, who penn'd a vaſt number of Sermons, and ſent them every way to the Biſhops, that they might have them preached in their Churches. Salvian alſo compoſed ſome for the Biſhops, inſomuch that the great Number of Sermon-makers, who lived at that Time, have bred much Confuſion among their Sermons, which are almoſt all alike, which hath been much increaſed by the Copyers. Nevertheleſs, let us paſs our Conjectures upon them.

It is certain that the Panegyrick of St. Maximus belongs to Fauſtus Regenſis, to whom it is attributed by Dinamius, who compoſed the Life of this Holy Abbot. In it he marks, that the Monaſtery of Lerins had yielded two Biſhops to the City of Ries: The firſt was Maximus, who was an Honour to it, but of the ſecond it ought to be aſhamed. It is plain, that it is Fauſtus who ſpeaks ſo thro' Humility. It is alſo evident, that the Sermon upon the Death of Honoratus was preached at Lerins before the Monks of that Monaſtery, which makes it Credible, that it was alſo Fauſtus's. Now theſe Sermons being in the ſame Style with the foregoing, we eſteem them to be the ſame Author's, viz. The 1*ſt*, and 2*d*, Homily upon the Nativity, the 1*ſt*, upon Epiphany, the 2*d*, 6*th*, 8*th*, 9*th*, 10*th*, and 11*th*. upon the Feaſt of Eaſter; that upon the good Thief; the 2*d*, about the Aſcenſion, the Panegyricks of St. Elpbodius, St. Alexander, St. Geneſius, St. Romanus, and all the Sermons publiſhed lately under the Name of Euſebius, ſome of which bear the Name of Fauſtinus. Among the Sermons of St. Cæſarius Biſhop of Arles, the 5*th*, 6*th*, 9*th*, and 10*th* Sermons to the Monks, and an Exhortation to the People, are really his. We alſo attribute to him the 2*d*, 3*d*, and 4*th*. Homilies upon Epiphany, the 1*ſt*, upon Lent, the 2*d*. upon the Creed, the 1*ſt*, 3*d*, and 7*th*, upon Eaſter, the 1*ſt*, upon Aſcenſion, that of Pentecoſt, the two Homilies upon St. John, St. Peter, and St. Paul, that upon the Maccabees, the Diſcourſe upon the Trinity, two Sermons upon St. Matthew.

All the Diſcourſes to the Monks ſeem to be the ſame Author's, ſo that if there be any of Cæſarius Biſhop of Arles, they are all his; perhaps, they are Maximus's or Fauſtus's, for their Works are confounded. To theſe we muſt add the Sermon to the Penitents, and the five ſubſequent, which are very like Cæſarius's. The fourth Sermon upon Eaſter is Maximus Regenſis's, and it may be there are ſome other Sermons his. The firſt Sermon upon the Creed is likely to be Hilary's Biſhop of Arles, who made a Diſcourſe upon that ſubject, as we underſtand by Honoratus. But indeed it is not worthy of him. The Sermon of St. Blandinus was made by ſome Biſhop of Lyons, probably Eucherius, 'tis his Style. The Homily upon Eaſter bears the Name of Iſidore, in a Manuſcript of the Abby of St. Germains. Indeed it is a Modern Compoſure, for it treats of the Euchariſt. St. Thomas hath taken out of it the ſubject of his Proſe. The Homily upon the Litanies agrees exceeding well to St. Mamertus, Author of the Rogation-Days. The Sermon upon the Repentance of the Ninevites ſeems to be the ſame Author's. The Sermon upon St. Stephen is altogether unlike to the other, it is probable, that it is a Tranſlation of ſome Greek Sermon, but that is not certain. Theſe are my Conjectures upon the Sermons publiſhed under the Name of Euſebius. I confeſs, they are not abſolutely certain, but there is ſo great diſorder and confuſion among theſe Sermons in the Manuſcripts, and the Authors did follow the Copies, and imitate them ſo ordinarily at that time, that it is hard to ſpeak any thing more certain.

[* Vulgo Bruno Aſtenſis.]

PETRUS

PETRUS CHRYSOLOGUS.

Petrus Chrysologus.

PEtrus, who was surnamed Chrysologus, was a Native of * Imola. He was taught, and admitted into the Clergy by St. Cornelius Bishop of that City, as he notes in his 165 Sermon. Some are of Opinion, that being at Rome with his Bishop, at that time when the Clergy and People of Ravenna had sent their Deputies to desire a Bishop of Sixtus III, then Pope, he was chosen by that Pope to fill that vacant See, as he had been warned in a Dream by St. Peter, and Apollinaris the first Bishop of the See of Ravenna. But this is a groundless Story being related by no credible Author. It is only certain that P. Chrysologus was chosen and ordained about that time Bishop of Ravenna. He governed that Church several Years. There is a Letter of St. Leo's written to Neonas his Successor, which was heretofore the 37*th*, and is at present the 135*th*, which is thought to be written in 451, in the Consulship of Martian and Adelphius *. This supposeth that P. Chrysologus was Dead in 449. But F. Quesnel having proved in his Notes upon that Letter, that it is rather written in 458, some few Years more may be allowed for the continuance of this Saint in his Episcopal Charge, yet not to carry it so far as the Year 500, nor confound him with that Petrus who lived under Theodoricus.

[* Ancientely called, Forum Cornelii.]

[* Dr. Cave follows this Opinion.]

Trithemius says, that this Bishop composed several Sermons, or Homilies, for the People, a Letter to Eutyches, which beginneth with these words, I have read with grief, and some other Letters. We have 176 Sermons, and the Letter to Eutyches.

These Sermons are very short. In them he explains the Text of Holy Scripture in few words, but in a way very pleasing, and makes short Moral Reflections upon them. The Parables, and Miracles, of Jesus Christ, are the chief Subjects of his Sermons. In some of them he treats of Fasting, Alms-giving, Vigilance, Patience, and some other Christian Virtues. He hath also several upon the Great Feasts, with some Panegyricks of Saints. St. Chrysologus hath found out the way to join extreme Brevity, and very great Elegance together, in his Discourses. His Style is made up of short Sentences, and Phrases, which have a natural sequence and connexion one with another; the Words are very fit, and the Sense is simple and natural. It hath nothing swelling, or forced. His descriptions are clear and easy. But for all this, there is nothing great enough, sublime enough, nor eloquent enough to intitle him justly to the Sirname of Chrysologus, of which he is possessed; We see no extraordinary Motives; we meet with nothing that quickens, or affects much we find no Truth enforcing consent, only Doctrines explained at large. All that can be said is this, his Relations are pleasant, and his Moral Discourses represent very well to the Mind what we ought to do, but make no impression upon the Heart, nor are able to change the Will.

The Sermons of this Author have been collected together above nine hundred Years, by Fœlix Bishop of Ravenna, who lived in the Year 702, or 708. F. Oudin proves it in his Advertisement, that he found them in three Manuscripts. They have been printed since at Cologne in 1541, 1607, [1618] and 1678, [Quarto] at Paris in 1585, at Antwerp in 1618, at Lyons in [1633] 1636, at Bologne in 1643. This Edition is the best. They are also to be found in Bibliotheca Patrum, [Tom. VII.] and with St. Leo's Works at Paris in 1614, and 1670.

Petrus Chrysologus.

The Epistle to Eutyches was written after that Monk had been condemned by Flavian. St. Chrysologus tells him, that he read with sorrow his sad Letter; for if the Peace of the Church, the Agreement of the Clergy, and the Quiet of the People, cause Joy in Heaven; on the contrary, Divisions ought to beget Sadness, and Grief; especially, when they proceed from so lamentable a Cause, as that was, for which he separated from his Bishop. He adds, that the Church had been free from Controversies for thirty Years; that Origen and Nestorius had fallen into Error by reasoning upon the ineffable Mystery of the Incarnation. That it was a shame for Priests to be Ignorant of that which the Magi acknowledged and adored; that when Jesus came into the World, Glory to God was Sung, and it is strange at present, that all the World bow at the Name of Jesus, that he should be Ignorant of the Reason of it. He saith afterward with the Apostle, that tho' we have known Jesus Christ according to the Flesh, yet now we know him no more; that it becomes us not to be very inquisitive, and that we ought to honour, respect, wait upon our Judge, and not dispute about his Title, this is, saith he, what may be answered to your Letter in a few words, I would have sent you a longer Answer, if our Brother Flavian had not sent me some Instruments about what passed in your Cause. You say, that his Judgment ought not to stand, because he made whom he thought fit to be Judges, but how should we know that, since we neither heard, nor saw them? We should be unjust Arbitrators, if we should determine in favour of one Party, before we hear the other. In sum, we exhort you, my most honoured Brother, to submit to what hath been written by the Bishop of Rome, because St. Peter, who lived and presided in his See, teaches the true Faith to those that enquire after it. As for us, we dare not, for the Love we have to Peace and Truth, concern our selves either to hear or judge Causes without the consent of the Bishop of Rome. Gerard Vossius, who hath published this Letter in Greek and Latin among several other Pieces, at the end of St. Greg. Thaumaturgus at Mentz, in 1604, [in 1603, Cave] tells us, that there are two Manuscripts in the Vatican, where this Letter ends at these words, This is what I thought fit to answer at present to your Letter. And indeed it is likely that the Letter ends at that Place, and that what follows hath been added afterward to raise the Authority of the Church of Rome. It is nevertheless to be found in the Manuscripts of Cardinal Sirlet, and it is printed also in the first Part of the Acts of the Council of Chalcedon, and in the ordinary Editions of St. Chrysologus.

MAXIMUS TAURINENSIS.

Maximus Taurinensis

MAximus Bishop of Turin flourished under the Empire of Honorius, and Theodosius the younger. He lived to the Year 465, since in that Year we find him at a Synod at Rome held under Pope Hilarius. Gennadius saith, that he applied himself to the Holy Scripture, and that he was able to make an Extempore Homily to the People. We have several of his Homilies, which are the greatest part of them cited by Gennadius. There are some upon the Feast of the Nativity, Circumcision, Epiphany, Easter, and Pentecost, for the two Sundays in Advent, Ash-Wednesday, for Palm-Sunday, for the Passion-Week. There also some for the Saints-Days, viz. for St. Stephen, St. John Baptist, St. Peter, St. Paul, St. Lawrence, St. Cyprian, St. Eusebius of Verceille. St. Michael, and the Martyrs of Turin. There is one upon the Creed, another upon Watchfulness, another upon that Custom of giving Thanks after Meat. Two against Covetousness, two more upon Alms-giving, a Discourse upon the Eclipse of the Moon, and a Sermon upon these words of Isaiah, Thy Wine is mixt with Water. In all there are Sixty three of them. Several others are mingled among the Sermons of St. Austine, and St. Ambrose, for it appears that they are not those Fathers, but this Bishop's. For besides, that they are for the most part taken notice of by Gennadius, they are of the same Style. It is likely, that there are also others among the Sermons of the Latin Fathers which ought to be restor'd to this Father. His Sermons are short and weak, they have neither Ornament, Beauty, nor Loftiness, the Style of them is mean, and the Sense ordinary, they contain nothing in them very remarkable. They have been printed at Cologne, in 1535, at Antwerp 1618, at Rome in 1564 and 1572. at Paris in 1614, and 1623. with the Works of St. Leo, and in the Bibliotheca Patrum, [Tom VI. Part 1.] [At Lyons in 1633, and again at Cologne in 1678, with Chrysologus's Homilies joyned to them.] F. Mabillon in the first part of his Musæum Italicum, hath published twelve Homilies of St. Maximus's, which he thought to be new, but they had been printed three times before among the Works of St. Ambrose.

Maximus Taurinensis

VALERIAN.

Valerian.

VAlerianus or Valerus, Bishop of (a) Cemele, a City of the Sea-Alps, an Ancient Bishoprick, subject to the Metropolis of Ambrun, flourished in the Popedom of St. Leo. We have a Letter of this Pope's to the Bishops of France, in the inscription of which we find the Name of Valerian, and a Letter of the Bishops of France, in the subscription of which we find it also. He was present at the Council of Ries in 439. at the 3*d*. Council of Nicæa, which hath been a Bishop's See since, Cemele being destroyed, so that there are no Remainders of it.

Valerian.

(a) Cemele.] Cemele, Celle or Comelle, was the Capital City of the Vediantians, a People of the Sea-Alps. It was a long time the Seat of a Bishop. St. Leo joined it to the Castle

Valerian. Arles in 455, to which he was ſummoned by Ravennius, to determine the difference between Theodorus Biſhop of Frejus, and Fauſtus Abbot of Lerins. He took the Part of Fauſtus and the Monaſtery of Lerins, of which he was once a Monk. We have 20 Homilies of this Author, and one Letter to the Monks. The 1ſt. is of the Uſefulneſs of Diſcipline. The 2d. and 3d. is of the narrow way to Salvation. The 4th. is upon the obligation of paying of Vows, and giving to God what is promiſed. The 5th. is of the Abuſe of the Tongue. The 6th. is of Idle Words, wherein he blames vain Talk, Detraction, Raillery, Songs, and whatſoever tends not to the Edification of our Neighbour. The 7th. 8th. and 9th. are upon the obligation that lies upon Men to be Charitable. He requires, among other things, that Chriſtian Charity ſhould extend it ſelf to all the World, excepting no Man. The 10th. is an elegant Satyr upon the Life of Paraſites. The 11th. teaches the Faithful to humble themſelves by acknowledging, that they are beholding to God for all the Good they do, yet he maintains that Man contributes to it by his Free-will: But as it would be ridiculous in a Soldier to attribute the Victory to himſelf, although he fought in it, ſo it would be a fooliſh thing for a Chriſtian to arrogate to himſelf the Honour of the good he does by the aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit. We muſt give God the Praiſe of all our Labours, becauſe they belong to him. The 12th. and 13th. are about the Love of Enemies, and the Benefit of Peace. The 14th, is concerning the neceſſity and conditions of Chriſtian Humility. The following Three are upon the Advantages of Martyrdom. The 18th. is in Honour of the 7 Maccabees. The 19th. oppoſes the Diſorders of thoſe who follow their Debaucheries upon the Sundays in Lent, under pretence that it is allowed not to faſt upon thoſe Days. Valerian exhorts the Chriſtians to keep up the Lent-diſcipline even upon thoſe Days, and not run to any Exceſs. The laſt Homily is againſt Covetouſneſs. The Letter to the Monks is a very little thing. Valerian.

The Style of theſe Homilies is not lofty, but plain and without Ornament, yet perſpicuous and familiar. It hath neither Allegories nor Clinks of Words, nor harſh Figures. They are moral Diſcourſes, very uſeful, where we may find very edifying Inſtructions and profitable Maxims. The Opinions of the Monks of Lerins and Prieſts of Marſeilles about Grace and Free-will, are ſcattered up and down his Sermons. He holds a neceſſity of Grace in order to doing good, but gives Man an abſolute Liberty. He ſuppoſes, That the beginning may proceed from him, and that God never denies Grace for the Accompliſhment. This Author was publiſhed [at Paris] in 1612. [Octavo.] by F. Sirmondus, and after printed [at Lyons] in 1623. [1633.] with the Works of St. Leo. [They are in Bibl. Patrum, Tome VIII.]

VICTOR CARTENNENSIS.

Victor Cartennenſis. Victor Biſhop of Cartenna, a City of Mauritania, wrote a Treatiſe againſt the Arians, which he cauſed the Orthodox to preſent to King Genſericus, as the Preface makes me think. He alſo compoſed a Tract upon the repentance of the Publican, wherein he lays down Rules for Penitents about the manner how they may live conformable to the Mind of Holy Scripture. He ſent alſo a Book to one named Baſil, in which he comforts him for the Death of his Son by the hopes of the Reſurrection. This Work is full of ſolid Inſtructions. Laſtly, he hath compoſed many Homilies, which have been carefully kept, and divided into ſeveral Books by thoſe who have been diligent to collect Works of Piety. Let the Reader conſider what Gennadius ſaith of this Author. We have none of his Works under his own Name, but there is among the Works of St. Baſil, a Latin Treatiſe intituled Conſolation in Adverſity, which hath alſo been put among the Works of St. Eucherius, which in all likelihood is that which Gennadius ſpeaks of. Becauſe it is written to Baſil, 'twas thought St. Baſil's, but 'tis plain it belongs to a Latin Author, and what Gennadius ſpeaks of Victor's Treatiſe, agrees to this, for therein he ſpeaks of the Reſurrection, and the Book is full of Authorities and Examples of Holy Scripture. There is alſo a Treatiſe of Repentance among the Works of St. Ambroſe, which is certainly Victor's for it ends with theſe Words, Remember Victor in your Prayers. This, together with the Teſtimony of Gennadius, puts it out of all doubt, that this Treatiſe of Repentance is Victor's of Cartenna. But F. Labbe obſerves, that in two ancient MSS. this Tract is attributed to Victor Biſhop of Victor Cartennenſis. Tunna, Author of the Chronicon, and not Victor of Cartenna. Nevertheleſs I believe 'tis more likely to be this Victor's; for, 1. Gennadius aſſures us, that this laſt made a Book of Repentance. 2. That he preſcribes Rules of Repentance in it conformable to Holy Scripture, which abſolutely agrees to this Book, for he gives very uſeful Rules and Inſtructions to Penitents, which he confirms by ſeveral Texts of Holy Scripture. Laſtly, this Treatiſe is in the ſame Style, and written after the ſame manner as the Treatiſe of Conſolation to Baſil, which can't be attributed to any other Victor but this. We have nothing particular of theſe two Books. In the Diſcourſe of Conſolation he demonſtrates, by examples taken out of Holy Scripture, that God permits Men to be oppreſſed by Misfortunes and Afflictions, either to puniſh them for their Faults, or to try them, or to heal them of their Sins and Paſſions, yea, for what Reaſon ſoever he ſends them, 'tis always for our good. He derides the Opinion of thoſe who afflict themſelves for their Diſeaſes, or for the loſs of their Members, becauſe they imagine that they ſhall be raiſed in the ſame condition that they died, One-ey'd, Lame or Leprous, &c. This is a filly Thought, the Reſurrection ſhall deliver us from all our Maladies. In the Treatiſe of Repentance he exhorts Sinners to acknowledge their Sin before God, deſire Pardon of him, to be touched with ſincere Regret, and to do Penance. He diſcourages no Man, but invites the greateſt Sinners to Repentance. He confirms all he ſays with Teſtimonies and Examples of Holy Scripture, as in the other Treatiſe. [* Tunna in Africa, Cave.]

St. PROSPER.

St. Proſper. Proſper of Ries in Aquitain, although he was a meer Lay-man (a) did yet concern himſelf in Theological Queſtions, and was one of the moſt Zealous Defenders of St. Auſtine's Doctrine. He wrote a Letter to him in 429. which is among St. Auſtine's Epiſtles, in which he propounds to him the Objections which the Prieſts of Marſeilles made againſt his Doctrine, and declares to him their Opinions, and prays him to anſwer their Objections, and confute their Opinions. St. Auſtine ſatisfied him by writing his Books of the Saints Predeſtination, and of the Gift of Perſeverance.

The Letter of St. Proſper to Rufinus concerning Grace and Free-will, was alſo written in St. Auſtine's Life-time. Who this Rufinus was is not known, but it appears by the beginning of that Letter, that he had been much diſturbed at the Reports, which the Enemies of St. Auſtine's Doctrine had ſpread abroad to cry it down, and wiſhed, that upon this occaſion it might be cleared. St. Proſper, deſirous to ſatisfy him fully, explains to him, what were the Reports which the Enemies of St. Auſtine's Doctrine had divulged, and upon what account they did it. He ſaith then, that one of the Fundamental Errors of the Pelagians is, that Grace is beſtowed according to Deſerts, and that they made uſe of this Principle to revive their Doctrines. That at firſt they had maintain'd openly, that Man may fully perform a good Action by the proper ſtrength of his own Free-will, without the Aſſiſtance of Grace. But this Opinion being viſibly contrary to ſound Doctrine, and having been condemned St. Proſper.

(a) Proſper of Ries, altho' he was a meer Lay-man.] He was neither a Prieſt nor Clergyman, when he wrote to St. Auſtine as appears by his Letter. In his Letter to Rufinus and the People of Geneva, he aſſumes to himſelf the Title neither of Biſhop nor Prieſt. All the Ancients who have ſpoken of him, give him neither of theſe Titles. Victorius Aquitanus, in the Preface of his Chronicon, having given Euſebius the Title of Biſhop, and Jerome of Prieſt, calls St. Proſper, Vir venerabilis, a Reverend Perſon. This was written a little after St. Proſper's death. Pope Gelaſius gives him no other Title but Vir religioſiſſimus, altho' he calls Auſtine Biſhop, and Jerome Prieſt. Gennadius, who never omits the Titles of the Authors he ſpeaks of, ſays of St. Proſper only, that he was Homo Aquitanica regionis. St. Fulgentius in his Book to Monimus, ch. 30. Proſper Vir eruditus. Marcellinus and Ado, in their Chronica, call him alſo, Hominem Aquitanica regionis. Hincmarus, Florus, Prudentius, Rabanus, never give him the Title of Biſhop or Prieſt. None but Honorius Auguſtodunenſis, or rather ſome Ignorant Scribe, hath called him, Epiſcopum Aquitanica regionis, by changing Homo into Epiſcopus. Trithemius makes him Biſhop of Ries, but that cannot be, becauſe Maximus was Biſhop there in St. Proſper's Life time, and he had for his Immediate Succeſſor Fauſtus, who out-lived St. Proſper. This appears by Sidonius's Euchariſtcal Poem, dedicated to Fauſtus, where he ſays, that Fauſtus ſucceeded Maximus twice; once in the Abbacy of the Monaſtery of Lerins, another time in the Biſhoprick of Ries. It is ridiculous to ſay, that he was of Rhegium in Italy. There were two Proſper's Biſhops in France, but one was Biſhop of Orleans, to whom Sidonius's 15th. Letter of his 8th. Book is directed, and the other ſubſcribed the Councils of Vaiſon and Carpentras.

by

St. Proſper. by all Orthodox Chriſtians; they had owned, that Grace was neceſſary for the beginning, continuance, and final perſeverance in Goodneſs, but yet had withal declared, that by it they underſtood nothing elſe but a certain general Grace, which makes uſe of the Freedom of the Will, and which informs and convinces the Mind by Exhortations, by the Law, by Inſtruction, by Contemplation upon the Creatures, by Miracles and by the Fear of God's Judgments: Grace which hath no other Operation than to admoniſh a Man of his Duty, and which differs not from the Law, and that Preaching which teacheth all Men, inſomuch, that they who deſire to believe, need no other helps to believing, and by believing they receive Juſtification upon the account of the deſerts of their Faith and Free-will. Whence it follows, that Grace is given according to Man's Merit, and conſequently is no more Grace. That this cunning deſign of the Children of Darkneſs had been diſcovered by the Judgment of the Eaſtern Biſhops, by the Authority of the Holy See, and by the Vigilance of the African Biſhops; that St. Auſtine, who was then, ſaith St. Proſper, one of the moſt excellent Biſhops, Præcipua portio Domini Sacerdotum, had fully confuted it in his Books of Controverſie, and entirely vanquiſhed that Hereſie; but that he did hear, that there were ſome Chriſtians, in France, which ſpread abroad ſcandalous Speeches againſt his Doctrine and Writings, daring to averr, that it deſtroyed Man's Free-will, and under the Name of Grace introduced a fatal neceſſity, and that he would make us believe that Man is compounded of two different Natures: That if it were ſo, they ought to appear openly againſt it, and publickly confute theſe Errors by writing, and not diſperſe them ſecretly againſt a Perſon, whoſe Doctrine, concerning Grace agreed ſo well with that of the Church of Rome and Africk, yea, and all Orthodox Chriſtians in the World. That the cauſe, why theſe Perſons acted in this manner, was, that they could not endure what had been oppoſed againſt thoſe things, which in their Conferences they had ſtarted againſt St. Auſtine's Doctrine; that they knew well enough that if they came to produce their Maxims in any Council, a great number of St. Auſtine's Writings would be objected againſt them, which would evidently prove that we ought to attribute all the Glory of the Good we do to the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, and not in the leaſt to the freedom of our Wills. In ſum, that he hoped through the Mercy of God, that he would not for ever deprive thoſe of his Illumination, whom at preſent he permitted to forſake Chriſtian Humility, that they might follow the bent of their own Wills. The Error of theſe Perſons conſiſts in aſſerting that our Virtues and Holy Lives ſpring from Nature, or if they proceed from Grace it hath been preceded by ſome good Action or Election of the Will which had deſerved it. St. Proſper undertakes to confute this Opinion, by proving from Teſtimonies of Holy Scripture, that ſince the fall of Man, the Free-will hath no Power to do any good, or to deſerve any thing unleſs aſſiſted by the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt; and that all Men being faln into a ſtate of Perdition, thro' the Sin of Adam, nothing but the gratuitous Mercy of God could deliver them. To prove this Doctrine, he brings the Example of Children who die Unbaptized, and of thoſe Nations to whom the Goſpel hath not been preached. He adds, that Grace doth not deſtroy Free-will, but that it reſtores and changes it: That of it ſelf it can do nothing but Evil, and that all the Work it doth, tends to Man's Deſtruction: That Grace cures it, and makes it act and think otherwiſe; but he teaches, at the ſame time, that his Recovery proceedeth not from himſelf, but from his Phyſician. Laſtly, St. Proſper refels the Calumny with which they had blackned the Doctrine of St. Auſtine, by accuſing it of introducing a Fatality, and admitting two Natures in Man. He maintains, that he never aſſerted any thing like to thoſe Errors; that neither himſelf nor his Scholars hold, that any thing happens through Fate, but they aſſure us that all is ordered and ruled by Divine Providence; that they allow not two Natures in Man, the one good, and the other bad, but only one Nature which having been created perfect is faln from that Perfection by the Sin of the firſt Man, and is become ſubject to Eternal Death; but Jeſus Chriſt hath reſtored it by a ſecond Creation, and ſecured its Liberty by preventing it, and helping it continually. He concludes by exhorting him, to whom he wrote, to read carefully St. Auſtine's Works, if he deſired to be well inſtructed in the ſound Doctrine concerning the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt.

But the Adverſaries of St. Auſtine were not contented to divulge ſcandalous Reports againſt his Doctrine, but they ſet down in writing the pernicious conſequences, which they thought might be drawn from it. Vincentius, who was perhaps the famous Monk of Lerins, of whom we have ſpoken, put out ſixteen erroneous Propoſitions, which he pretends to be maintain'd by St. Auſtine and his Scholars. This obliged St. Proſper to deliver St. Auſtine's and his Scholars Judgment upon every one of his Propoſitions.

Objection I. That our Lord Jeſus Chriſt did not die for the Salvation and Redemption of all Mankind.

St Proſper anſwers, that it is a true Aſſertion that Jeſus Chriſt died for all Men, becauſe he aſſumed that Nature which is common to all Men, that he offered up himſelf upon the Account of all Men, and that he hath paid a Price ſufficient for their Redemption. But nevertheleſs all Men have not a Part in that Redemption, but thoſe only who have been regenerated by baptiſmal Grace, and are become the Members of Jeſus Chriſt. St. Proſper Objection II. That God will not ſave all Men, altho' they deſire to be ſaved.

St. Proſper anſwers, that it may be ſaid, that God deſires the Salvation of all Men, altho' there be ſome that ſhall not be ſaved, for Reaſons known only to himſelf; that thoſe that periſh, periſh thro' their own fault, but they who are ſaved, are ſaved by the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt.

Objection III. That God created one part of Mankind to damn them eternally.

He anſwers, that God creates no Man to Damnation. The Sin of the firſt Man hath damned many, but God created them not to be damned, but to be Men. He denies not his Concourſe for the multiplying of Mankind. He rewards many for the good that is done by them, and he puniſhes, in others, the Vices that he ſees them guilty of.

Objection IV. That one part of Mankind is created to do the Will of the Devil.

His Anſwer is, that God created no Man to do the Will of the Devil, but every Man is made a Captive of the Devil, by Reaſon of the Sin of the firſt Man.

Objection V. That God is the Author of Evil, ſince he is the Author of our perverſe Will, and hath created us of ſuch a Nature as cannot but ſin.

He replies, this Objection is alſo grounded upon the Doctrine of Original Sin. God hath created Nature, but Sin, which is contrary to Nature, hath been introduced by the Apoſtacy of Adam.

Objection VI. That Man's free Will is like the Devils which cannot do any Good.

He anſwers, all the difference is, that God ſometimes converts, through his Mercy, ſome of the vileſt Sinners, but the Devils are paſt all hopes of Repentance.

Objection VII. That God will not have a great number of Chriſtians to be ſaved, nor gives them a Deſire ſo to be.

His Anſwer is, they, that deſire not to be ſaved, cannot be ſaved; but 'tis not the Will of God that makes them not deſire it. But on the contrary, 'tis that which ſtirs up the Wills of them that deſire it. God forſakes no Man that forſakes him not, and very often converts thoſe who have forſaken him.

The three Objections and Anſwers which follow, are bottomed upon the ſame Principles with the former.

The ſeven laſt are ſome Difficulties about Predeſtination, which come all to one Head almoſt, viz. If God hath predeſtined ſome to Salvation, and others to Damnation; this Predeſtination is the Cauſe of all the Evil that is done, and all the Faithful, who are decreed to Damnation, ſhall neceſſarily be damned whatſoever they do. The general Anſwer to theſe Objections is this, that God hath not predeſtined the Sin of any Man. He knew from all Eternity the Sins which ſhould be committed, and hath decreed the Puniſhment of Sins, but not the Sins themſelves. He damns the wicked and impenitent, but he makes them not either wicked or impenitent. It is true, he gives them not the Gift of Righteouſneſs or Repentance, but neither is he obliged to do it. It is one thing to deny a Gift, and another to be the Cauſe of Evil. There is a great deal of difference between not lifting up a Perſon fallen, and caſting him down. God compels no Man to commit Sin, yet he is not obliged to pardon every Criminal.

Theſe Anſwers of St. Proſper did not ſatisfie the Perſons againſt whom they were written, but they took an occaſion from them to form ſome new ones, which ſeemed to be grounded upon his Anſwers themſelves, and upon the Doctrine of the Writings of St. Auſtine, who was then dead. They are reducible to fifteen.

Objection I. That Predeſtination is a kind of Fatality, which neceſſitating Men to do Evil, damns them infallibly.

St. Proſper anſwers, that all orthodox Chriſtians acknowledged Predeſtination; that none yet owned a fatal Neceſſity of Sinning; that Predeſtination is not the Cauſe of Sin, nor of the Inclination to ſin, which proceeds from the Offence of the firſt Man, from which no Man is delivered but by the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, which God hath prepared and decreed from all Eternity.

Objection II. That Baptiſm doth not take away Original Sin from thoſe who are not predeſtined.

He anſwers, every Man that is baptized, being endued with Faith, obtains Remiſſion, not only of Original Sin, but of all thoſe Sins which he hath freely committed; but if he falls into Sin after Baptiſm, and dies in his Sins, he ſhall be damned for the Crimes which have followed Baptiſm; and that God having foreknown them from Eternity, hath never choſen nor predeſtined that Man to Salvation.

Objection III. That it is unprofitable for them who are not predeſtined, to live an holy Life after their Baptiſm, becauſe they are reſerved till they fall into Sin, and ſhall not be taken out of the World till that happens to them.

To this he replies, that theſe Perſons fall not into any Sin, becauſe they are not predeſtined; but they are not predeſtined, becauſe God hath foreſeen that they would fall into theſe Sins: If God doth not take them out of the World while they are in a good Eſtate, it ought to be referr'd to the Judgments of God, which are unknown to us, but are never unjuſt; God preſerves them, not that he may entrap them into their own Deſtruction, 'tis his Grace which is the Cauſe of their Preſervation, 'tis their own Fault if they periſh. St. Proſper.

Objection IV. That God doth not call all Men to Grace.

The Anſwer is, he calls all thoſe to it to whom the Goſpel is preach'd; but how can it be ſaid, that they are called to it who have never heard ſpeaking of the Goſpel.

Objection V. That of thoſe, who are called, ſome are called that they may believe, and others that they may not believe.

He replies, if by Vocation we underſtand the Preaching of the Goſpel, 'tis the ſame Goſpel that is preached every where, and by conſequence all are equally called: But if we conſider the Effect of that Preaching produced in the Hearts of Men, ſome reject it by reaſon of their Infidelity, which ariſes from their ſinful Wills, and others receive the Goſpel, being inwardly enlightned by God's Grace.

Objection VI. That Free-will doth nothing, Predeſtination doth all.

He anſwers, this is not ſo, Free-will without Grace is unable to do Good, but being aſſiſted by Grace it doth Good. It is Madneſs to ſay, that Predeſtination doth of it ſelf work Good or Evil in Men.

Objection VII. That the Faithful, who are regenerated in Jeſus Chriſt, do not receive the Gift of Perſeverance, becauſe they have not been ſeparated from the Maſs of Perdition by the eternal Decree of God.

He anſwers, it is thro' their own Will that they fall into Sin, and 'tis becauſe that God hath foreſeen it, that he hath not ſeparated them from the Maſs of Perdition by his eternal Decree. It is true, he hath not given them the Grace of Perſeverance, but he was not at all obliged to give it to them.

Objection VIII. That God will not have all Men to be ſaved, but only a ſmall number of the Elect.

Anſwer. If the Will of God to ſave Men were ſo general, why did he for ſo many Ages together leave Men in Blindneſs? Why ſuffers he Infants to die before Baptiſm? Nevertheleſs it is truly ſaid, that God will ſave all Men, becauſe there is nothing which he hath not made known to them either by the Goſpel, or the Law, or by Nature, 'tis from Men themſelves that their Infidelity proceeds, their Faith is the Gift of God.

Objection IX. That Jeſus Chriſt was not crucified for the Redemption of all the World.

Anſwer. Jeſus Chriſt hath taken the Nature of all Men, but that they may be ſaved they muſt become the Members of Jeſus Chriſt.

Objection X. That God with-holds the Preaching of the Goſpel from ſome, leſt they ſhould believe and be ſaved.

Anſwer. That if the Goſpel hath been preached to all the World, it is not true that God hath with-holden the Knowledge of it from any: But if there be any Men that have not heard it preached, we muſt own, that it is done thro' the ſecret Judgment of God, which we ought not to find fault with, becauſe we cannot underſtand it.

Objection XI. That God compels Men to ſin by his Omnipotency.

Anſwer. No Orthodox Chriſtian ever held this Maxim: On the contrary, when we read, that God hath hardned Sinners, and given them up to their irregular Deſires, we ſay, that they have deſerv'd it for their Sins.

Objection XII. That God takes away the Gift of Obedience from thoſe Perſons that live well.

Anſwer. This could not have been propoſed but by thoſe who confound the Preſcience and Will of God together; he knows Good and Evil, but wills nothing but Good; he takes away from no Man the Gift of Obedience, becauſe he hath not predeſtin'd them, but he hath not predeſtinated them, becauſe he foreſaw that they would not continue in their Obedience to the End of their Lives.

Objection XIII. That God hath created Men for other Ends than for eternal Life, viz. to adorn the World, and to be ſerviceable to each other.

Anſwer. God hath not created them that they ſhould be damned; they damn themſelves by their Impieties, but this hinders not but that they may for all this be profitable to the World.

Objection XIV. That thoſe that do not believe, do not believe becauſe God hath ordained it from all Eternity.

Anſwer. God foreſaw it, but he hath neither ordain'd nor predeſtinated it.

Objection XV. That Preſcience and Predeſtination are the ſame thing.

Anſwer. God hath foreſeen and predeſtinated all things that are good at the ſame Time, becauſe he knows them, and is the Author of them, but he hath foreſeen and yet not predeſtinated Evil.

St. Proſper, after he hath thus explain'd the Doctrine of the Church, condemns in fifteen Propoſitions the fifteen Errors which had been objected againſt the Scholars of St. Auſtin.

* Two Prieſts of Geneva ‡ did alſo find fault with ſome Propoſitions in the Books of the Predeſtination of Saints and Perſeverance, written by St. Auſtin, and ſent the Places which diſturb'd them, to St Proſper. This Saint relates them, and clears them in the Anſwer which he makes to them; wherein he maintains the ſame Truth, that Grace is a mere gratuitous Gift; that the Beginning of Faith is the Effect of the Grace and Mercy of God; that this Grace is not given to all; and, that we cannot do any Good without its Help. St. Proſper. [Camil. Theodorus.*] [‡ Genua, Cava, Voſſius.]

Of all the Books that were written againſt St. Auſtin's Principles, there was none that was in ſo much Eſteem as the Conferences of Caſſian. That Author, in the thirteenth Conference, under the Name of the Abbot Chæremon, lays down Maxims quite contrary to St. Auſtin's. St. Proſper, who had already oppoſed him, viva voce, * attacked him by Writing after the Death of St. Auſtin and Pope Cæleſtine, under the Popedom of Sixtus. Caſſian had aſſerted, as we have ſaid, that the Beginning of our good Deſires and Faith proceeds ſometimes from our ſelves, and ſometimes from Grace; that we have in us ſome Seeds of Virtues; that our Free-will can naturally incline it ſelf to Goodneſs; that Grace ſometimes prevents it, and that ſometimes its Motions anticipate thoſe of Grace. St. Proſper maintains, that theſe Principles are the Conſequences of the Errors of the Pelagians; that it follows from hence, that Grace is given according to every Man's Merits, and that Nature is not impair'd by Adam's Sin; that they have been condemned before-hand in thoſe Synods, which had condemned the Pelagian Errors, and in the Letters which the Popes had written againſt them, and that St. Auſtin had entirely vanquiſhed them in his Writings. [*This Book was printed alone at Leyden, 1606 and at Arras 1628.]

The Poem called De Ingratis, Of the ‡ Ungrateful, is the moſt excellent Piece which St. Proſper compos'd about Grace. In this Poem, after he hath ſhewed wherein conſiſts the Hereſy of Pelagius, and in what manner it hath been confuted by St. Auſtin, whom he highly extols, he ſaith, that there were ſome Chriſtians who endeavour to revive that Hereſy, by teaching, that Man's Free-will can incline it ſelf indifferently to Good or Evil. He makes the Pelagians to come to his help, who exhort Perſons to receive them, ſince they approve their Sentiments. He repreſents the Troubles and Perplexity they are in, and ſhews that the Pelagians have a Right to require Admiſſion into the Church, or elſe they muſt be driven out who have eſpouſed the ſame Principles. He afterwards confutes the principal Points of the Pelagian Hereſie, condemned by the Church, which he reduces to three Heads. That Man is born entirely innocent, That he can live in this World without Sin, and, That Grace is given according to Merit. He in the next place ſhews the Doctrine of thoſe whom he reſiſts, which he alſo referrs to three Heads. That God calls all the World by his Grace, which every one follows or rejects by his Free-will; That the Strength of Grace aſſiſts his Abilities, and teacheth him to love Virtue; That it is in the Power of Man to perſevere in Goodneſs, becauſe God never refuſeth his Aſſiſtance to thoſe that are inclin'd to Good. St. Proſper holds the contrary, That the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt is not given to all, and he demonſtrates it by the Example of the Infidels, who have never heard the Goſpel preached, and becauſe if God would ſave all the World, all the World would be ſaved; That it cannot be ſaid, that although God would ſave all Men, yet they ſhall not be ſaved, becauſe they will not; becauſe, ſaith St. Proſper, it would then follow, That the Effect of the Divine Will would depend upon the Humane Will, and that God would help a Perſon in vain, if he would not be helped: That Grace doth not depend ſo upon Freedom; That it is not merely of the Nature of the Law, which makes us know Good, but it converts the Soul and Mind; That without this Grace the Law, Goſpel and Nature were uſeleſs; That it plants Faith in our Souls; That it is not only neceſſary, as his Enemies themſelves do unanimouſly confeſs, to acquire a perfect Righteouſneſs and Perſeverance in Goodneſs, but alſo for the Beginning of Faith, which is a mere gratuitous Gift, which cannot be deſerved. This he proves by the Example of thoſe who having lived in all manner of Vices, have been ſaved by Baptiſm, which they have received at the Hour of Death: That the Error of thoſe who attribute the Will and Deſire of believing to Free-will, relapſe into the Errors of the Pelagians, by giving that Power to the Free-will, which hath been loſt by the Sin of the firſt Man; That they make God himſelf unjuſt, in ſaying, That the Death of the Body hath paſſed upon the Poſterity of Adam, which hath not been infected with his Sin. Then he confutes the Objections and Complaints of the Semi-Pelagians, which are reducible to two. 1. That the Freedom of Man's Will is utterly deſtroyed by holding, That Man, of himſelf, is not able to do any thing but Evil. St. Proſper anſwers to this Objection, That the Sin of the firſt Man hath reduced us to that Neceſſity, but that we are not by that means deprived of our Liberty, which always ſubſiſts, but which declines infallibly to Evil, when it is left to its own proper Strength, but to Good, when it is helped by Grace, which reſtores us to our firſt Dignity; That this Grace is the Original of all our Deſerts; [‡ So he calls the Pelagians, as being ungrateful in denying that Grace which God ſo freely beſtows on Men.]

That

St. Prosper. That the Example of Infants, of whom some receive Baptism and others are debarred from it, makes it appear that it is merely gratuitous, and that God gives to whom he pleases only. The second Objection is this, That if the Grace of living well were not given to all Men, those who have not received it are not to be blamed for living ill. St. Prosper also answers, That this Objection could not be proposed, but by Persons that did not acknowledge Original Sin, because all Men being by that Sin become subject to Condemnation, and having deserved to be abandoned for their own Offences, God would not have been unjust if he did not shew Mercy to any Man: That we must not search into the Reasons why he doth it to one and not unto another, because that is a Secret which God hath thought fit to conceal from us in this Life, as he does many others.

Lastly, he compares the Sentiments of those whom he confutes with the Principles of the Pelagians, which directly oppose the Grace of Jesus Christ; He owns that they seem to condemn their principal Errors, by acknowledging that Adam's Sin hath made us mortal, that no Man can obtain eternal Life without Baptism, and that Children are washed from their Sin by this Sacrament, but that they still follow their Principles, in asserting, That Nature hath yet in it self force enough to chuse the true Good, and that the Saints, confirmed in Virtue, may resist the Devil by their own Strength, God leaving them to themselves to give them a greater Opportunity of meriting; That we ought to have these Opinions in Abomination, and must acknowledge that Sin hath made so great a Wound in our Nature that it is not able so much as to desire the Recovery of them from God, not being sensible of its own Misery; That the Gifts of Nature serve only to make us proud, and give us no manner of Power to chuse that which is really good; That if it were not so, Jesus Christ would die in vain; That the Necessity there was that a God should die to save Mankind, ought to inform us how deep our Wound was; That the Faithful who are engrafted into Jesus Christ, ought to acknowledge that they can do nothing without him. He maintains, That it is foolish to imagine, that if the Saints have done no good Actions by the Strength of their own Freedom, they deserve no Reward; That on the contrary, all our Confidence ought to be in God, and that our Virtue is so much the more worthy of Reward, as it is the more fixed on Jesus Christ; That Christian Humility obliges us to acknowledge, that we cannot do any Good in this Valley of Tears, but by the Grace of Jesus Christ, which doth not destroy, but restores our Freedom, yet after such a manner, as that all the Good it doth ought to be attributed to Grace, and not to it; That, in the last Place, it doth not countenance our Negligence, nor hinder Men from pursuing after Virtue, since on the contrary we cannot do a virtuous Action without this Grace.

These are the Books of St, Prosper, which he purposely composed for the Defence of St. Austin's Doctrine, concerning Grace. He maintains the Principles of this Saint, but he mollifies them, at least as to the Terms, especially about the Subject of Predestination to Glory and of Reprobation, which he supposes to be built upon the Foresight of Man's Good Works, as the Schools speak. He speaks also of the universal Desire of God to save all Men, after a very moderate manner. But he departs not from St. Austin's Principles, as to the Fall of Man, the Necessity of Grace, the Weakness of Man's Will, as also the Beginning of Faith and Conversion, and the Efficacy by which it works upon Mens Hearts.

Indeed he hath no other Divinity than what he hath taken out of St. Austin, it was that he might acquaint himself the better with the Principles of this Father, that he made an Abridgment of Divinity, made up of certain Extracts, taken out of the Works of this Father. He puts some of his Sentences in Verse. We have yet these two Works among the Books of St. Prosper; The one is intitled, * Sentences gathered by St. Prosper from the Works of St. Austin, and the other, A Book of Epigrams composed of St. Austin's Sentences: There are † 97.

[* These were printed alone at Helmstadt, Anno 1613.]

He consulted no other Author but St. Austin in composing his Commentaries upon the Scriptures, as appears by his Commentary upon the fifty last Psalms, in which he follows the Explications of St. Austin so exactly, that he doth nothing almost but abridge him, and put him into other Words.

[† 98 Dr. Cave.]

The two Epigrams which he hath composed against * the Adversaries of St. Austin, are also a Mark of the Esteem he had for that Father. I see no Reason to take from St. Prosper the Epitaph upon the Nestorian and Pelagian Heresies: But there is not the like Grounds for the Poem upon Providence, which contains Principles concerning Grace, directly opposite to what St. Prosper lays down in his Poem of Ungrateful Persons, for the Author of the Poem about Providence maintains, That Man since the Fall into Sin hath still some Ability to do Good; That the Will goes before Grace; That the Good and Sinners are equally tempted and assisted, and that which makes the righteous Men so glorious, is, that they resist, whereas the Sinner yields to them. These are the very Opinions which St. Prosper opposes in his Poem of Ungrateful Persons, and in his other Works: For tho' we should suppose with M. Abbot Anthelmi, that St. Prosper sought for mollifying Terms, yet we cannot think that he proceeded so far as to deliver that for Truth which he had formerly confuted; Beside, the Style of this Poem differs much from the Poem of Ungrateful Persons. The Author wrote after the Vandals broke in upon the Empire. St. Prosper.

[* In obtrectatorem, Cave.]

The Poem of An Husband to his Wife, which bears Paulinus's Name, doth in many Manuscripts bear St. Prosper's Name, and Bede says 'tis his.

The Book of Promises and Predictions is not St. Prosper's, for the Author is an African, and the Style of this Work is very different from St. Prosper's other Works. Nevertheless it is attributed by Cassiodorus to St. Prosper, but either it is another's of the same Name, or in the Time of Cassiodorus this Work was falsly attributed to St. Prosper, either because it was conformable to his Doctrine, or perhaps because St. Prosper published it in the West. But however that be, it cannot be our Author's. The End and Design of the Book is to make a Collection of the Promises and Prophecies contain'd in Holy Scripture, and to shew which of them are already fulfilled, and which were yet to be accomplished hereafter.

The two Books concerning a contemplative Life are manifestly Julian Pomerius's, of which we shall speak hereafter, [Printed alone 1487, and at Col. 1536, Octavo.]

There remains nothing now but the Chronicon, Gennadius assures us, that St. Prosper had made a Chronicon from the Beginning of the World, down to the Death of Valentinian, and the Taking of Rome by Gensericus King of the Vandals. Victorius, Cassiodorus, and St. Isidore of Sevil, and many other Authors make mention of it. So that we cannot doubt, but that St. Prosper hath composed a Chronicon. The first, which appeared under St. Prosper's Name, was an Addition to the second Part of Eusebius's Chronicon, augmented by St. Jerome, which begins at the Death of Valens, and ends at the Year 455. This hath been since augmented 10 Years more in the Edition, which M. Chiffletius hath published in his first Tome of his Collection of the French Historians. This is the very same which F. Labbe hath published entire in his first Tome of his Bibliotheca Manuscripta. It begins at the Creation of the World, and ends at the Year 455. But M. Pithœus hath published another which begins and ends at the same Year, which bears St. Prosper's Name, but he gives it the Name of Tiro, which might make us think it some other Author's. Some believe that the first is St. Prosper's, and that the second is not. Some others think that neither of them is his, others, that both are his. In my Judgment the most probable Opinion is, That the Chronicon published by F. Labbe is the genuine Chronicon of St. Prosper, and that M. Pithœus's is the same Chronicon, to which some other Person hath made an Addition. For to think, that there were two Authors of the same Name, and at the same Time, who have made two Chronicons which begin and end at the same Year, is very improbable to me.

F. Sirmondus hath published a little Book intitled, * The Confession of St. Prosper. 'Tis a small Book of little Consequence, and unworthy of this Father. He made also a Paschal Table, but we have it not.

[* Confessio Fidei, Cave. Printed alone Paris, 1619.]

Trithemius places among the Works of St. Prosper a Summary of three hundred Questions, but he seems to me to mean his Book of Maxims taken out of St. Austine, which perhaps was much larger than now it is. And indeed, this Book begins with the same Words which Thrithemius cites as the Beginning of the Summary of St. Prosper. He also attributes to him a Treatise of famous Men, the History of the Taking of Rome, and some Letters. But since Trithemius doth not say, that he ever saw these Works, and he is not very ancient, we cannot much depend upon his Testimony concerning them.

The Chronicon of St. Prosper teaches us, that he survived the Year 455, and Victorius writing his Paschal Rule in 457, speaking of him, as a Person then dead, makes the Time of his Death evident to us.

Gennadius says, that St. Prosper's Style is scholastick, and that there is great force in what he says. Nervosus Assertionibus. He treats of very difficult matters with much subtilty and clearness. He imitated St. Austine, but was more concise. His Discourse is neither beautified nor pompous, but masculine and vigorous.

These are the chief Editions of this Father's Works. 1. At Lyons in 1539, Folio. 2. At Louvain in 1566, [Quarto.] 3. More large and correct at Doway in 1577, [Octavo.] But some preferr the Edition at Cologne in 1609. Octavo. These Works are also printed with St. Leo's at Paris in 1671, and several Times since. [Besides these Editions they were printed at Cologne in 1565, Quarto. And 1618, Octavo. At Lyons 1639. And in Bibliotheca Patrum, Tome VIII. P. 1.]

Of the Author of the Books, of the Calling of the Gentiles, And, Of the Epiſtle to Demetrias.

The Author of the Books, Of the Calling of the Gentiles, &c.

THE Author of the Books, Of the Calling of the Gentiles, hath been a long time ſought after by the Learned. At firſt they were attributed to St. Ambroſe, upon the Authority of ſome Manuſcripts; but that Opinion was ſoon abandoned, when it was conſidered, that not only the Pelagian Hereſie is therein ſpoken of, which ſprang up after the Death of St. Ambroſe, but alſo the Conteſt which aroſe in the Church about the Doctrine, which St. Auſtine had maintain'd in oppoſing thoſe Hereticks. Afterwards they were imputed to St. Proſper, becauſe they were found under his Name in ſome * Manuſcripts, and had great Affinity with the Queſtions of which he treats. But many Criticks ſay, this is alſo a miſtake, and that they are not this Father's, ſome becauſe the Style is different from his, others becauſe their Doctrine is contrary to his. Yet ſince there is no Manuſcript to be found, wherein they are attributed to any other Authors, they ſet themſelves to gueſſing. Some, as Latius, and Voſſius, have judged them that Hilary's who wrote to St. Auſtine, which ſome have confounded with Hilary Biſhop of Arles. Others, as Eraſmus, have believed them to be Eucherius's, and find them much like his Style. Laſtly, F. Queſnel ventures to aſſert that they are St Leo's, having diſcover'd as he imagines, an exact agreement in the Style and Doctrine of theſe two Books, and St. Leo's Works. He ſeems to have ſufficiently proved theſe two Points, and many Perſons are of his Opinion; but M. Abbot Anthelmi hath contradicted it, making a long Diſſertation on purpoſe to beat down that Opinion, and at laſt returns to the common Opinion, and maintains, that theſe Books are St. Proſper's

Of all theſe Opinions none deſerve Examination, but thoſe which attribute this Book to St. Proſper, or St. Leo all the others are manifeſtly falſe, or groundleſs. St. Ambroſe cannot be the Author, becauſe he was dead when theſe Queſtions were under debate. The Style of theſe Books, and of Eucherius's Works, is not ſo exactly alike, as that they can be attributed to that Author upon that Ground only. They cannot be Hilary Biſhop of Arles's, who was not of St. Auſtine's Opinion about Grace, but rather of their Judgment who are oppoſed in that Work. Neither Hilary's Biſhop of Syracuſe, nor Hilary's who was the Companion of St. Proſper, (if theſe two are two diſtinct Perſons,) ſince the Style of thoſe Letters, which they have written to St. Auſtine, has no reſemblance to the Author's of this Book. Nor can they rationally be ſaid to be * Proſper's Biſhop of Orleans, ſince he was ſo far from being able to write a Treatiſe of this Nature, that he was forced to deſire Sidonius Apollinaris to write the Life of Anianus his Predeceſſor, not thinking himſelf Learned enough to undertake to do it himſelf. Nor laſtly, are they * St. Proſper's, who ſubſcribed the Councils of Carpentoractum in 527, and Vaſio in 529, becauſe the Work Of the Calling of the Gentiles, is cited under the Name of this Author by Pope Gelaſius in his ſmall Tracts againſt the Pelagians, for this Pope being Dead in 496, there is no probability that he ſhould cite an Author that lived till 529.

The main Queſtion then, which will deſerve our Enquiry, is reduced to this, whether this Work be St. Proſper's or St. Leo's, or ſome other Author's which is unknown to us. Let us conſider the Reaſons alledged on both ſides.

Firſt, then it is pleaded for St. Proſper, that this Treatiſe bears the Name of this Father in many Manuſcripts; that Hincmarus, in his Book of Predeſtination, cites it under the Name of St. Proſper; that the Doctrine of this Treatiſe is very conformable to the Doctrine of this Father; that the Style is very like his, and that the ſame Expreſſions are very often met with in them. As for Example, St. Proſper ſaith in his Poem, that Rome being become the Head-Church in the World, hath made her ſelf Miſtreſs by Religion of all that which ſhe could not conquer by her Arms. The Author of the Book, Of the Calling of the Gentiles, hath the ſame Expreſſion, and uttered almoſt in the ſame Words, Ch. 16. lib. 2. St. Proſper in the eighth Sentence of his Book of Anſwers to the French, ſaith, that God hath choſen all the World out of all the World, Ex toto mundo totus mundus eligitur. There is a parallel Expreſſion in the firſt Book of the Calling of the Gentiles, Ch. 9. De toto mundo totus mundus liberatus. St. Proſper in his Poem relates, among the Examples of the unſearchable Judgments of God, the differences which are to be found among Men upon the account of their Natural Endowments. The Author of the Book Of the Vocation of the Gentiles, has a like Compariſon, lib. 1. ch. 14. Laſtly, St. Proſper, and this Author, alledge the ſame Examples of Infants that die unbaptized, of Infidels that are converted at the point of Death, and ſeveral others to prove the ſame things.

M. Anthelmi, who hath undertaken to defend that Opinion, which ſeemed to be cried down among the Criticks, urgeth theſe Proofs more amply, and adds alſo ſome others, taken from the Agreement of Style, Expreſſions, and Opinions, of which he produces large Parallels, and at length adds to them the Teſtimony of Photius, who ſpeaking of the Writings of the Weſtern Biſhops againſt the Pelagians in Vol. 54. of his Bibliotheca, ſays, that Proſper made ſome Books at Rome againſt ſome Pelagians in the Popedom of Leo, and after that this Pope ſuppreſſed them, by the Advice which he had received from Septimius, that they would raiſe new ſtirs and conteſts again. What Photius ſays in this place, cannot agree to the other Works of St. Proſper, which were written before the Pontificate of St. Leo. 'Tis then of the Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles, of which Photius ſpeaks in this place.

The Author of the Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles, &c.

They who maintain the contrary, that theſe Books are not St. Proſper's, ſay firſt, that the Style is very different from the Works of this Father. This is the Judgment which the moſt learned Criticks of our Age have given of them, Latius, Eraſmus, Voſſius, Grotius, and many other excellent Criticks, and very accurate Diſcerners of ſuch things, have been of that Opinion. And indeed the Style of the Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles, is much more Eloquent, Accurate, and Elaborate, than St. Proſper's, the Sentences are ſhorter, the Parts of it more equal, and better proportioned, there are more Oppoſitions and Antitheſes both in Words and Senſe; there are many more Rhimes, and it is diſcernable, that the Author of theſe Books delights to make uſe of them, whereas they are not to be met with in St. Proſper's Works, but in ſuch places as they ſeem to come of themſelves.

2. The manner, in which the Author of the Book Of the Calling of the Gentiles, handles the matter he takes in hand, doth not agree to St. Proſper, who openly declares himſelf always againſt the Adverſaries of St. Auſtine, praiſes that Father, ſtands up in his defence highly, alledges his Authority, and makes uſe of his Words. The Author of the Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles, doth not uſe the ſame way. He profeſſes himſelf diſengaged, and addicted to neither Party, who has no deſign to oppoſe any Man, but is deſirous to compoſe matters, to go in the middle way, that he may bring both ſides to an Agreement, and find out the Truth, without encountring any Man. He never ſpeaks of St. Auſtine, nor cites any of his Works. Laſtly, he ſpeaks of that Conteſt, as a Perſon who had no ſhare in it. He delivers his Thoughts, as a Man who would try himſelf, and give his Judgment upon a famous Queſtion, but he would not enter into any diſpute concerning it.

3. The time when the Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles was written, makes it evident, that they cannot be St. Proſper's. The Author ſays in the beginning, that 'tis a great while ſince the Patrons of Free-will and Grace began the Controverſie. Inter defenſores liberi arbitrii & prædicatores gratiæ Dei, magna dudum & difficilis vertitur quæſtio, &c. And a little after, De hac compugnantia opinionum annitar quærere, &c. This beginning proves two things, 1. that this Queſtion was not a new one, but had been formerly moved. 2. That this Author had not written before of that matter. So that it could not be St. Proſper, for 'tis certain he had written upon that Subject in St. Auſtine's Life time, and immediately after his Death; 'twas a freſh Author, who was willing to clear that Queſtion, and to ſettle Peace in the Church.

4. The Author of the Book Of the Calling of the Gentiles, carries the matter better than St. Proſper, for although he ſeems to agree in the ſubſtance of the Doctrine, yet he explains it in other words. He allows of a general Grace given to all Men. It is true, that by that Grace he underſtands nothing but our Natural Abilities, but St. Proſper never gives the Name of Grace to thoſe Abilities. The Author of the Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles, imparts it to Infants who die without Baptiſm, St. Proſper on the contrary ſeems to exclude them from the Calling to Grace, in his fourth Anſwer to the Objections of the French. Laſtly, this Author doth not accord with St. Proſper in the ſeveral ways of Arguing and Explaining himſelf.

Before we go any further, we muſt examine the Anſwers which M. Anthelmi gives to the Reaſons which we have alledged. He ſays, in the firſt place, that the Doctrine of St. Proſper, and the Book of the Calling of the Gentiles is the ſame; that F. Queſnel did acknowledge it himſelf, and confuted F. Norris, who believed the contrary, which is true as to the ſubſtance of the Doctrine. But we hold, that this Author's manner of Expreſſion is different from that which St. Proſper always uſeth. We own, that the Author of the Books of the Calling, ſometimes takes the word Grace in the ſame Senſe, that St. Proſper does for the real Grace of Jeſus Chriſt; but we maintain, that he hath alſo given the Name of Grace to Natural Gifts; and in that Senſe it is that he aſſerts, that it is common to all Men. Now we ſhall never find, that St. Proſper hath taken it in that

[*Very ancient MSS. as one in the Library of the Monks of Louvain another in Card. Cambray's Library, and a third in the Library of the Abby of Poniff. at Namure. Voſſ.]

[* Voſſius ſeems to think it the moſt probable conjecture that theſe Books are Proſper's of Orleans and Dr. Cave is fully of his Opinion.]

[* Dr. Cave and Voſſius make this the ſame with Proſper of Orleans.]

The Author of the Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles, &c.

that Senſe. He owns this thing, he ſaith, that God hath always had a care of Men; that he hath called them by the Law, by the Light of Nature, and by the Preaching of the Goſpel; but he hath not given the name of Grace to theſe ſort of Advertiſements. M. Anthelmi brings no Example of it. All that he proves, is, that St. Proſper hath acknowledged, that the Light of Nature is common to all Men; and that the Providence of God is over all Men, but that is not the thing he has in hand: He ought to prove, that St. Proſper hath given the Name of Grace to the concurrence of God's general Providence, that is to ſay, to the Light of Nature, Knowledge of the Law and Preaching of the Goſpel, &c. But M. Abbot Anthelmi does not cite ſo much as one Paſſage, where it is uſed in that Senſe. For that which comes neareſt it in the 139*th*. Page of his Work, where he ſpeaks of the power of Grace, and of the means of knowing God by Nature, proves nothing, becauſe St. Proſper hath not given the name of Grace to thoſe exterior means; he only aſſerts, that whatſoever mean God uſeth outwardly, 'tis always his Grace which inwardly attracteth. So that M. Abbot Anthelmi is at length obliged to own, that there is ſome difference between the way in which the Author of the Books of the Calling treats of the Queſtions of Grace, and that in which S. Proſper hath handled them in his Works. But he pretends, that he conceals himſelf by this means; that he hath publiſhed it without his Name; that he hath diſguiſed his Opinions; that he hath ſuppreſſed the name of St. Auſtine his Maſter that he might defend his Doctrine more cunningly; that he hath gone a new way to work, and 'tis for that reaſon that he makes a ſhow as if he had never written; that he hath well enough demeaned himſelf in his other Works, and that he hath moderated the Principles of St. Auſtine; that having promiſed to write no more, he was forced to take ſuch a way as he might not be known; that he had likewiſe diſguiſed his Style, but was forced to do it by the manner in which he had undertaken to compoſe this Treatiſe.

I leave the Reader to judge of the ſolidity of theſe Anſwers, and ſhall content my ſelf to obſerve, that if it be allowed, by Conjectures of this ſort, to evade ſuch Reaſons as we have alledged, there is no Critical Argument, how ſtrong ſoever it be, which may not this way be eaſily overthrown. Why doth M. Anthelmi ſay, that St. Proſper conceals and diſguiſes himſelf in that Work? How knows he that he did not put it out in his own Name? If it be ſo, what proof hath he that it is his? The Authority of Manuſcripts, upon which he leans ſo much, will make nothing for him, if it be certain, that in St. Proſper's time this Work bore no name, and that it continued ſo a long time after in the time of Pope Gelaſius. Why ſhould St. Proſper diſguiſe his Opinions? Why ſhould he forbear to ſpeak with that Liberty and Conſtancy, with which he always maintained St. Auſtin's Doctrines? Is it credible, that he was aſhamed to uſe the name of that Perſon for whom he had ſo great a reſpect? Altho' he hath carefully, in his Works, rejected the bad Senſe which might be put upon the Expreſſions of that Father, and hath delivered them in a more favourable way, yet he always openly maintained them, he always ſtood up againſt his Oppoſers, as againſt Perſons who were certainly in an Error. Laſtly, tho' he purpoſely diſguiſed his Style, yet it is not likely that he could do it with ſo good Succeſs, for really the Style of this Work is more curious, florid and noble than St. Proſper's Works are. It is not poſſible to diſguiſe his Style ſo. Men degenerate when they counterfeit, and when Men go out of their natural way, all that they produce is deformed and imperfect. It is very hard to find out ſo many Rhymes, and ſo exactly frame his Periods, when he is not accuſtomed to it. Nor do I ſee, how the manner of compoſure of this Writing did oblige St. Proſper to change his Style. Laſtly, All that M. Anthelmi ſays againſt theſe Reaſons, which are brought to prove, that the Book of the Calling of the Gentiles is not St. Proſper's, is grounded upon Suppoſitions, of which he hath not the leaſt ſhadow of proof.

Let us now ſee if the Reaſons which are given to faſten them upon St. Proſper be more ſound. They may all be reduced to three Heads. The Authority of Manuſcripts and Hincmarus, the Agreement in Doctrine, and the Likeneſs of the Styles.

As to the firſt Reaſon, which is the only one, wherein we really agree; theſe Manuſcripts are not more eminent than thoſe wherein the Books De Vita Contemplativa, of the Contemplative Life, made by Julian Pomerius, are attributed to St. Proſper, and the Authority of Hincmarus is not more to be regarded than that of the French Councils of above 800 years old, who have cited the Books of the Contemplative Life under the name of St. Proſper. It is well known, that Hincmarus doth often quote Books under the name of thoſe Fathers, who were not the Authors of them, as the Hypomneſticon under the name of St. Auſtin; The Book of Predeſtination and Grace, under the name of the ſame Father; The Book of the hardening of Pharaoh's Heart, under the name of St. Jerome; The Commentary of Hilary the Deacon upon St. Paul's Epiſtles, under the name of St. Ambroſe; And the Poem of Providence, under the name of St. Proſper. But to return to the Manuſcripts of the Books of the Calling of the Gentiles; the five Manuſcripts of the Vatican. Of theſe five, the moſt ancient is thought to be above a thouſand years old, and another alſo is very ancient, which both bear St. Ambroſe's name; the three other, of which the oldeſt is not above 800 years old, bear St. Proſper's name. There muſt needs be alſo other Manuſcripts, where they bear the name of St. Ambroſe, ſince they were all along printed under the name of this Father, before the year 1566. It ſeems then, that if we will hold to the Authority of the moſt Ancient Manuſcripts, we muſt attribute them to St. Ambroſe. M. Anthelmi ought to prove, according to his Hypotheſis, that the firſt Manuſcripts of theſe Books were without name, ſince St. Proſper's deſign was to conceal himſelf. Whence know we, that they who firſt prefixed St. Proſper's name to theſe Books, had ſufficient information that they were his? Is it not moſt likely, that finding this Book without a name, the agreement of the Matter and the Doctrine, inclined them to put St. Proſper's name before them? And that others more Ignorant, tho' more Ancient, have alſo been not ſo lucky in ſetting St. Ambroſe's name before them. This difference ſhews, that the Manuſcripts are not to be depended upon, and that the imagination of the Tranſcribers, is the cauſe that theſe Books bear theſe Titles in the Manuſcripts.

The Author of the Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles, &c.

As to the agreement of Style, we have already anſwered it, and ſhew'd, that altho' in the main, the Author of the Books of the Calling of the Gentiles, be of the ſame Opinion with St. Proſper, yet he expreſſes himſelf in a different way; and that he keeps a Method which St. Proſper never obſerved. Let any Perſon but read a little, a few Periods of both, the Style is our ſtrongeſt Argument, the difference is eaſy to be perceived. All the Tables of M. Anthelmi don't at all deterr me, nor give me cauſe to change my mind. In all the agreement of Style, there is nothing to be found, but ſome words which were in common uſe at that time. It would be very hard alſo not to meet with the ſame Terms in two Authors that treat of the ſame matter; nor is it at all ſurprizing to meet with the ſame Senſe, and the like Expreſſions. If we would ſearch St. Auſtin's Works, as diligently as M. Anthelmi hath taken the pains to do St. Proſper's, I do not queſtion, but we might have as good Succeſs in comparing the Phraſes of the Books of the Calling of the Gentiles with his; and there are alſo Parallel Places, where the Sentences of St. Proſper, which he compares with thoſe of the Books of the Calling of the Gentiles, are taken out of St. Auſtin, or are found in the ſame Terms in the Works of that Father. But it is needleſs to go to Particulars, becauſe notwithſtanding all thoſe long and tedious Parallels, the difference between the Style of the Books of the Calling of the Gentiles and St. Proſper's Works, is eaſy to be perceived, for the reaſon which we have already ſeveral times repeated.

We have now no more to do but to examine the Conjectures by which F. Queſnel hath been induced to attribute the Work of the Calling of the Gentiles to St. Leo. His principal, or rather his only Argument is the agreement of Style, which he thinks he hath found between this Work and St. Leo's Writings. For having read the Works of this Father over and over again, and rendred his Style familiar to him, he acknowledged him, as he ſays, in the Books of the Calling of the Gentiles. He perceived immediately his Modes of Speech, his pleaſant Words, his Tranſitions, his Figures, his Fancy, his exact Periods, his rhyming Cadences, his Apoſtrophes, his Interrogations and Paraphraſes. And coming afterward more ſtrictly to examine this Work, he found, 1. That the time did very well agree to St. Leo's Age, who might have compoſed it under the Popedom of Sixtus, the Conteſts about Grace having already been very much agitated. 2. That the Country of this Author did alſo ſuit with St. Leo; that he was not an African, ſince he never quotes St. Auſtin; that 'tis not likely that he was a French Man, Gennadius not having mentioned him; that he is rather an Italian. The Purity of his Style ſhews it, and this is confirmed by a Teſtimony out of Chap. 33. Lib. 2. where he ſays, The Barbarians coming to the Aſſiſtance of the Romans, have received that Religion in our Country, which they could never have come to the knowledge of in their own; which ſignifies, that the City of Rome was the Country of this Author. To this we may add, that theſe Books were never cited in Africa; that they were never ſeen in France, till the ninth Age, whereas we find them cited in 496, by Pope Gelaſius, as a Work known and received at Rome. 3. This Author cites the Holy Scriptures after St. Leo's manner. They both of them uſe St. Jerome's Verſion, they cite the ſame Texts, and uſe them in a particular way. 4. They expreſs their Doctrine about Grace after the ſame manner. They both acknowledge a general Grace, and call the Elements and Creatures, the Leaves and Volumes, wherein the Eternal Law is written. 5. They have often the ſame Thoughts. They ſpeak alike of the foundation of the Church of Rome, that God hath choſen it to be the Head-Church of the World, and that he permitted the Roman Empire to be extended over all the Earth, that Religion might enlarge it ſelf the more eaſily, and that it hath entred into thoſe places where the Roman Empire had gained no Power. Compare Chap. 1. Serm 1. of St. Peter and St. Paul in St Leo, with Chap. 16. Lib. 2. of the Calling of the Gentiles. They both ſay, that St. Peter hath taken his Soundneſs and Conſtancy from the principal Rock. St. Leo, A principali Petra ſoliditatem & virtutis traxit & nominis. The Author of the Books of the Calling of the Gentiles, Lib. 2. Chap. 28. Ab illa principali Petra communionem & virtutis ſumpſit & nominis; the ſame Fancy, Style and Expreſſion. 6. The Style of the Book of the Calling of the Gentiles, is exactly like St. Leo. We have already obſerved, that it is Elegant and Polite, full of Antitheſes and Rhymes; that his Sentences are proportion'd and divided into equal Parts, which is, as we have noted, the Deſcription of St. Leo's Style. 7. Not only the Style is very exactly alike, but they uſe often the ſame Words, and that peculiar ones. We may ſee a large Liſt of them, p. 375. of the ſecond Tome of Father Queſnel's Edition. He joyns to it, in the following Pages, a compariſon of many Phraſes, and thinks that by this he hath invincibly prov'd, that the Work Of the Calling of the Gentiles is St. Leo's.

The Author of the Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles, &c.

But his Adverſary undertakes to prove two things againſt him

1. That all his Conjectures are weak.

2. That there are Arguments which clearly ſhew, and put it out of queſtion, that the Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles are not St. Leo's

But ſince it is needleſs to enter upon a Diſcuſſion of the firſt, if the laſt be well proved, therefore I will begin with the latter.

Let us then take a View of the Reaſons which do invincibly prove, according to M. Anthelmi, that St. Leo is not the Author of the Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles. The firſt is taken from the Friendſhip that was between St. Leo and Caſſian: Is it credible that he would deſire Caſſian to write in the Name of the Church againſt Neſtorius, as he did, and would have had ſo much Reſpect for him, if he had thought him in an Error? And would he have written the Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles, againſt his Doctrine, if he had known that he had forſaken it, as F. Queſnel maintains? I believe that he hath no Proofs, and that it is not probable that Caſſian changed his Opinion. I own that St. Leo was one of his Friends, but this is no Proof that he was of his Judgment, nor can any Man be invincibly convinc'd thereby that he did not write the Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles: All his Days he did write againſt his beſt Friends, when he found them not of his Opinion: All that he could do for his Friend was to direct him, not to attack him directly, to treat him mildly, and inſtruct him rather than oppoſe him. Now this is what the Author of the Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles does; the Differences between St. Auſtine's Scholars and their Adverſaries were never look'd upon as Heretical. St. Proſper, though he was zealous for St. Auſtine's Doctrines, yet owns that thoſe whom he oppos'd were Orthodox Chriſtians, and ought for all that to be reckon'd in the Church. The Author of the Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles, ſpeaks in a more moderate way and accounts of thoſe Conteſts, as about ſome hard Queſtions, which were debated among ſound Chriſtians. Caſſian and the reſt of his Party defended their Sentiments with much Calmneſs, without Paſſion or Obſtinacy: All which evinceth that St. Leo might very well make uſe of Caſſian to write againſt the Neſtorians, and yet ſome time after make theſe Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles, in which he differs from him about Grace.

But at leaſt, ſays M. Anthelmi for the ſecond Reaſon, he would have preſerved ſome Reſpect for Caſſian and his Scholars, he would not call their Diſputes, Calumnioſa certamina, Mere Scoldings; he would not have accuſed them of making Objections full of Calumnies, of denying things impiouſly, of being preſumptuous and ignorant, of laying Snares to deceive, of making impudent Complaints, and of having deceitful Intentions; yet theſe Terms are diſpers'd up and down the Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles, and applied to them who do not give enough to Grace.

It is anſwer'd, that St. Leo reſpects Caſſian enough in not naming him, in not confuting him expreſsly, in only ſpeaking in general againſt thoſe who attribute too much to Free-Will, in handling this Queſtion as a Perſon not engaged to any Party, in not declaring himſelf highly againſt them. As to the harſh Words which he alledges, they fall not upon Caſſian nor his Scholars, but upon the erroneous Conſequences which may be drawn from their Principles; beſides, they are not ſo abuſive and reproachful as is ſuppos'd (a).

The Author of the Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles, &c.

The third Argument is unanſwerable in M. Anthelmi's Judgment: He hath been convinced by it, and it ought to ſatisfy every Man almoſt. It is this, ſaith he, 'If St. Leo 'being yet but a Deacon, had ſo ſtrongly oppos'd the Semi- 'Pelagians, it is not credible that he would have let them 'alone all the Time he was Pope; It was a vile and ſtrange 'thing, that he ſhould do nothing againſt them, and ſo 'much the rather, becauſe during the Time of his Pope-'dom that Party was honour'd and preferr'd. His Succeſ-'ſor Hilarius made Fauſtus, the Head of them, Preſident 'of a Council at Rome. If it be ſaid, that St. Leo diſſembled 'and connived at thoſe Errors, then we do not rightly give 'him the Title of a Declared Enemy of the Hereticks, and 'an undaunted Defender of the Truth. He is compar'd to 'the Lyon of the Tribe of Judah to no purpoſe; becauſe 'he oppos'd the Pelagians with ſo much Zeal, why ſhould 'he neglect to encounter the Semi-Pelagians, if he had been of 'the Mind of the Author of the Books Of the Calling, and be-'lieved with him, that they reviv'd the Errors of Pelagius? 'Would not St. Proſper his Secretary, a grand Enemy of 'the Semi-Pelagians, have ſtirr'd up his Zeal againſt them? I much doubt whether theſe fine Declamations can paſs for invincible and unanſwerable Proofs with any Man of Wit. The Author of the Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles hath not treated the Defenders of Free-Will as Hereticks. He rejects their Opinion as a particular Perſon. Let us then ſuppoſe that St. Leo is the Author of it, what Neceſſity had he, that being raiſed to the Popedom, he ſhould condemn them under the Title of Pope, as formal Hereticks? Though he believed, that the Opinions which he confuted in theſe Books were Heretical, yet why ſhould he perſecute thoſe Perſons who held them in ſilence, without being poſitive in aſſerting them, or combining into a Sect or Party? I do not ſee that there was any Diſpute upon that Subject under his Pontificate; the Conteſt did not begin a freſh till a long Time after: Let him tell us what occaſion St. Leo had to condemn the Semi-Pelagians? Were they ever brought before his Tribunal? Did any Perſon write to him againſt them? Did they publiſh any Books to maintain their Opinions during his Pontificate? There is not the leaſt proof of all this. But ſome of that Party were honour'd and preferr'd, they were made Abbots and Biſhops in France, St. Leo ought not to have ſuffer'd it: As if in thoſe Times there had been any need of the Pope's Bulls to be made a Biſhop: But his Succeſſor Hilarius made Fauſtus of Ries, who was Head of that Party, Preſident of a Council at Rome (he is miſtaken in conſtruing the Word Præſidere, for it doth not ſignifie to preſide, but only to be preſent, Præſidente Fratrum numeroſo Concilio, a numerous Aſſembly of the Brethren being preſent.) Can it hence be gather'd, that St. Leo favour'd the Semi-Pelagians? I do not believe that many would draw ſuch a Concluſion from it, altho' Fauſtus was preſent at a Council in Rome, yet he had then written no Book, wherein he declared againſt St. Auſtine's Doctrines? He did not do this till a long Time after; and altho' it had been already compos'd, it could not be inferr'd from thence that he had Pope Hilary's Approbation of it, and much leſs that St. Leo his Predeceſſor was a Favourer of him. But that which looks more ſurprizing is this, that M. Anthelmi did not take notice that all theſe Arguments are quite overthrown by that one Example of St. Proſper, for he perceives not that this Father wrote nothing againſt thoſe who are called Semi-Pelagians, after his Book againſt Caſſian, which was publiſh'd before St. Leo was Pope. If it were true that they were active under this Pope, why was he ſilent himſelf, or at leaſt why did he not attack them openly, as he did heretofore? Why did he not uſe his Intereſt againſt them? Why did he not accuſe them to St. Leo? If this ſort of Reaſoning be not allowable in reſpect of St. Proſper, why doth M. Anthelmi enforce it, in reſpect of St. Leo? We may near as well conclude, that St. Proſper never wrote any thing againſt the Semi-Pelagians.

The Argument which is taken from the Teſtimony of Pope Gelaſius, who cites the Author of the Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles, under the Name of a Doctor of the Church, without naming it, ſeems more plauſible than the former, for if this Work were St. Leo's, how could Gelaſius be ignorant of it? What Reaſon could he have to con-

(a) So Abuſive as is ſuppoſed.] Calumnioſa certamina doth not ſignifie, in this Place, Diſputes which are fill'd with Calumnies, for the Word Calumny in Cicero and other good Authors, doth not always ſignifie Calumnia, in that Senſe we uſe the Word, but ſometimes Subtlety and Cavilling, Craft and Wittineſs, &c. Qui ſæpe optimas cauſas ingenii calumnia ludificare ſolet. Calumniari ſignifies alſo to produce falſe Quotations, or abuſe wrongfully; ſo that Calumnioſe certamina, ſignify ſubtle Diſputes, full of Wranglings. And Calumnioſo objiciunt, imports, they object falſly. This Author takes it thus, Chap. xv. where calumniari juſtitiæ occultæ is to complain cauſeleſsly of the Secret Juſtice of God: And Chap. xvii. he that murmur'd againſt the Good Man of the Houſe, who gave as much to him that came laſt to labour as to the firſt, is call'd a Calumniator. St. Leo alſo uſes this Word in the ſame Senſe, in Serm. 25. ch. 2. where calumnia quæſtionum ſignify Subtleties: And in Serm. 58. ch. 6. ancilla Sacerdotis calumniante, that is exprobrante. In Serm. 59. ch. 2. de terrenis calumniantur, that is objiciunt; and in ch. 1. of the ſame Serm. Serm. calumnioſe & minaciter conclamarunt. Theſe Words impie diffitentur, and others, have not ſo harſh a Signification in Latin as in French. It is ordinary with thoſe that defend Grace, to accuſe thoſe who attribute any Deſert to the Free-Will, of Preſumption, Pride, Confidence, &c. The Author of the Books Of the Vocation of the Gentiles doth it with more Moderation than others, but he cannot forbear it altogether.

ceal

The Author of the Books, Of the Calling of the Gentiles, &c.

ceal his Name? But this Objection only proves, that his Work was without a Name, as I see all the World agrees, and then all the Question will be, to know if it is not St. Leo's, who composed it, without putting his Name to it? The Reasons of F. Quesnel seem to make this Opinion very probable; let us now see what Answers are given, since we are already certain that there is no Argument to shew, that these Books cannot be St. Leo's. His Adversary contents himself to prove, that St. Prosper uses St. Jerome's Version as well as St. Leo, and that sometimes also he uses the ancient Version, and thinks that thus he hath answered the strongest Argument. I will not stay here to examine which of the two hath Injury or Reason on his Side, I will only confine my self to the Argument about the Agreement of Style, in which M. Anthelmi yields to his Adversary, since he owns, that 'tis the Agreement of Style of the Epistles and Sermons of St. Leo with the Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles, that makes him attribute those Books to St. Prosper. This Concession is very favourable to F. Quesnel, for it being very certain that the Sermons and Epistles which bear the Name of St. Leo are that Father's; but not so, that the Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles are St. Prosper's; if it be necessary that these Works must both of them belong to one and the same Author, it is much more reasonable to attribute the Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles to St. Leo, than to fix the Epistles and Sermons of St. Leo upon St. Prosper. F. Alexander and F. Oudin pretend that there is some Difference of Style, and that there are not in St. Leo so many Rhymes and Figures, nor such a Cadence: But they seem not to have taken sufficient notice of it, for if there be any Difference 'tis inconsiderable.

From all that we have hitherto said concerning the Author Of the Calling of the Gentiles, we may conclude, 1. That this Book did at first appear without the Name of the Author. 2. That it was made since the Year 430, and before 496. 3. That in the Time of Pope Gelasius, the Work was known, but it was then without Name. 4. That since it hath born the Name of St. Ambrose in some Manuscripts, and of St. Prosper in others. 5. That 'tis certainly none of St. Ambrose's. 6. That there is no probability that 'tis St. Prosper's. 7. That the Author having hitherto been always unknown, 'tis hard to know now whose it is. 8. That if we judge by the manner of treating of Things, and by the Agreement of Style, St. Leo stands fairest for it. 9. That there is nothing to prove that this Work is not his. Nothing more can be expected but that it be positively asserted to be St. Leo's: But that I dare not do upon the mere Conformity of Style, altho' I confess, it renders F. Quesnel's Opinion extremely probable.

I have given no Answer to the Testimony of Photius alledged by M. Anthelmi, but it is nothing to our purpose. It appears that that Author had a very confused Knowledge of the History of the Pelagians, and that the Differences about St. Austine's Doctrine were not formed till after his Death. What he says concerning St. Prosper, that he opposed the Remnants of the Pelagians, under the Pontificate of St. Leo, is wholly imaginary. He had heard say, that St. Prosper had written about Grace, and thought he attacked the Pelagians; and knowing by Septimius's Letter, and St. Leo's to Januarius Bishop of Aquileia, that they had raised some Commotions under the Pontificate of this Pope, he thought that it was at this Time that St. Prosper had opposed them, and so much the rather, because he knew that St. Prosper was then at Rome: But it is discernable enough that Photius speaks all this by mere guess, and as a Person so remote both in Time and Place, as that he had not an exact History, but contriv'd this Model of his own. But yet, were it true, that St. Prosper had written against the Pelagians in the Popedom of St. Leo, 'tis a mere Surmise to apply it to the Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles, which are not written against the Pelagians. How knows he that Photius speaks of these Books? Is it not possible that St. Prosper might compose other Books against the Pelagians at that Time, which are not come to us? But there is no room, as we have already said, to bottom upon this Passage of Photius, who himself doth not assert this, but merely by Conjecture.

But we have insisted too much upon the Criticism of this Work, an Extract of it will be more useful, and less tedious. The Author in the Beginning propounds the Question, which he designs to handle in these Words. There is a great and difficult Question moved a long time since, between the Patrons of Free-will, and the Preachers of Grace, viz. Whether God wills that all Men should be saved? And because that cannot be denied, it is further demanded, why the Will of the Almighty is not always accomplished? If it be said, that it depends upon the Will of Man, this seems to exclude Grace which is no more a Free-gift, but a Debt, if it be bestowed according to Desert. It is further enquired, why that Gift, without which no Man can be saved, is not given to all by him, who desires the Salvation of all Men? The Design of the Author is to resolve these Questions, and to effect this, he proposes to himself to treat, first of all, of the Motions of the Will, against those who imagine, that they deny all Freedom who preach up Grace, not observing, that they may as well accuse them of denying Grace, when they suppose, that it doth not go before, but only accompanies the Will. For if we take away the Will, where is the Original of Virtue? And if we do not acknowledge Grace, where is the Cause of Merit? He then distinguishes three sorts of Wills, the sensual, animal, and spiritual; the animal is in Infants, the sensual in Men without Grace, the spiritual is the Will of those Men who act by Grace. He distinguishes also two sorts of Graces, 1. General Graces, which are nothing else but the exterior Helps, as the Elements, Nature, the Law, the Preaching of the Gospel; and, 2. Special Grace. The first is useless without the latter, which doth not destroy Nature, but restore it, doth not take away Freedom, but enables it to act. Without it there is no good, all that Men do is evil. The Light of Nature is not sufficient to believe, Faith is the Gift of Grace, it is Grace which increaseth it, 'tis Grace which preserves it.

The Author of the Books, Of the Calling of the Gentiles, &c.

Having laid down these Principles, he gives four Rules for the explaining of such general Expressions of Holy Scripture, as concern the Salvation of Men. 1. That the Holy Scripture speaking of the Good and Evil, the Elect and Reprobate, uses such general Terms in speaking of these two sorts of Persons, as if it would comprehend all Men in particular under this universal Expression. 2. That the Scripture speaking of the Men of one and the same Nation, useth such general Terms, altho' it intends to speak sometime of the Elect, and sometime of the Reprobate. 3*d*. Rule, That the Scripture speaks of Men of divers times, as if they were the same Men, and of the same time. The 4*th*. That the Word, All, is often taken for all sorts of Persons of all Ages, Sects, and Countries, and that it is in this sense, that these Words of the Apostle may be understood, God will have all Men to be saved.

As to the general Prayers of the Church, he observes, that that's the Reason of Praying for all Men, but that these Prayers are not heard with respect to every particular, altho' they be with regard to others; that the Reason of this Difference depends on the secret Judgments of God, and that it cannot be said, that it is the Merit of the Will which is the Cause of this Distinction; that Grace is given to the Good, and denied to Sinners; that the Examples of Infants, and of such wicked Men as are converted at the Hour of Death, prove the contrary. In fine, that Grace is an Act of the Divine Liberality; that we ought not to enquire into the Reason, why God gives it to some, and denies it to others? Why he chooseth some, and doth not choose others; that this Question is unsearchable, and that we ought not to have recourse to Free-will for the Explication of it.

After he hath rejected in the first Book that which was the subject of the Contest, he finds out three Truths, which he establishes in the second: 1. That God wills that all Men should be saved, and come to the Knowledge of the Truth. 2. That we cannot come to that Knowledge, but by Grace, and that Merits contribute nothing to it. 3. That the Mind of Man cannot comprehend the Judgments of God. Let us now see the Consequences which he draws from these Principles, that we cannot give the Reason, why he puts off the Calling of some, and gives not his Special Grace to all those whom he calls. That all Men have had a part in the general Calling, the Gentiles by Nature, the Jews by the Law, but they who have pleased God have been separated from others by Faith and Grace, which altho' more rare and secret was not denied in the first times. That at present, 'tis not equally disposed to all the World; that those to whom it is given have not merited it; that he that hath received it must expect all his growth and proficiency from the same Grace; that nevertheless Man doth merit by persevering, because he hath power to fall away; that one convincing Proof, that Men are beholding to God's Special Grace for their Conversion, and not to their Natural Goodness, is this, that since the Flood God hath continually called Men by Miracles, Signs, and Prophecies, and that nevertheless no Man hath turned himself: That on the contrary, the Apostles have converted all the World by their Preaching: Were Men better in the times of the Apostles, than before? Nay, do we not know, that Iniquity then was greater? This is it that shews the Efficacy of Grace. That when it is said, that Jesus Christ died for all Men, i. e. for all Nations, it was for that end that God had permitted that the Roman Empire was so very much enlarged, that the Christian Religion might spread it self the more easily; that it so happened that Rome was become more Glorious by Religion than Temporal Power, Amplior arce Religionis, quam solio potestatis; that all other Nations have been or will be, called every one in their time; that in the Old Testament the Grace of Jesus Christ was hidden from the Gentiles, and yet it is not a whit less true, to say, that God will have all Men to be saved in all times. But if God will have all Men saved, Why are so many Damned? Our Author answers. 1. That that is a Question which depends upon the secret Judgments of God, which are unsearchable to Men. 2. That all Men deserve Damnation upon the account of Original Sin. 3. That no Man may complain that he dies too soon, because it is the property of Humane Nature ever since Adam sinned to be subject to Death. 4. That God exempts from this general Misery those whom he pleaſeth, and that he by that means moderates the Puniſhment which all the Poſterity of Adam have deſerved; that others cannot complain, that God hath not delivered them out of a State of Damnation, becauſe he owes that Grace to no Man. 5. That he hath imparted to all Men certain general Graces, which conſiſt, as we have ſaid, in outward helps; that Infants themſelves are not deprived of it, becauſe God hath given them to their Parents, who ought to be ſerviceable to them to procure them Salvation; that it is true, that beſides this general Grace, there is a ſpecial Grace, both for the Adult, and for Infants, who are of the Number of the Elect, but God owes it to no Man. 6. That this ſpecial Grace doth not exclude the Will, or conſent of Man, but produces it in him, makes him to will, believe, love; that it doth not nevertheleſs take away the changeableneſs of the Will, for if it did, then no Man could fall; that thoſe that will, and do come, are called by this Grace, and they that do not come, reſiſt it by their own Will; that thoſe that periſh are inexcuſable, and thoſe that are ſaved have no cauſe of boaſting of their own Abilities. 7. That in all times there have been general Graces for all the World, and ſpecial for the Juſt; that among theſe laſt, ſome have more, ſome leſs, yet no Man may complain of the mercy of God, ſince he owes nothing to any Man. Nor can we more reaſonably complain of his Juſtice, ſince all that periſh deſerve Damnation. 8. That the particular Election of ſome doth not render our Labour, Prayers, or Good Works, needleſs, becauſe God hath ordained them from all Eternity, becauſe this Grace is given for Prayer, and becauſe Election is perfected by Prayer, and Good Works. 9. That it ought not to be ſaid of any Man before he is Dead, that he ſhall certainly be of the Number of the Elect, and that we ought not to deſpair of any Man's Salvation, becauſe the more Holy may yield to Temptation, and the greateſt Sinners be converted; that the Church in her Prayers giving thanks, for thoſe who have embraced the Faith, requeſts Perſeverance for them, and implores God's Mercy for Infidels, that they may turn from their ways and live.

The Author of the Books, Of the Calling of the Gentiles, &c.

After what we have ſaid of the Author of the Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles, it is not neceſſary to enlarge much upon that which concerns the Author Of the Epiſtle to Demetrias, ſince all Criticks agree, that it belongs to the ſame Author. Indeed they produce no other proofs but the conformity of the Style, but that ſeems ſufficient to determine theſe two Works to the ſame Author.

F. Queſnel brings ſome Reaſons proper to prove it St. Leo's. 1. He ſays, that the Scripture is quoted, as in St. Leo's Works, ſometimes according to St. Jerome's Tranſlation, and ſometimes according to the Ancient Vulgar. 2. He produces many Sentences Of the Epiſtle to Demetrias, which are found in St. Leo's Works. He finds the ſame compariſons and applications of Scripture, &c. 3. He marks out the very Words of St. Leo. 4. He ſaith, there is no probability, that the Epiſtle to Demetrias was compoſed by an African; that a Man of that Country mentioning his Religion would not have forgotten to tell how much St. Auſtine had been helpful to it, and that the Style agrees better to a Roman than an African, and becauſe he promotes the Authority of the Church of Rome, in maintaining that the Holy See hath given an example to all the Churches of the World, by condemning Pelagius. 5. That there was an intimate acquaintance between St. Leo and Demetrias; that it is related in Platina, and the Roman Breviary, that he perſuaded her to build a Church upon ſome Lands that belonged to her, and dedicate it to St. Stephen. In ſum, that there is no ground to attribute this Work to St. Proſper; that the Style is altogether different from that Father's; that he Inſcription of the Letter in the Printed Books, Proſper Epiſcopus Sacræ Virgini Demetriadi, Proſper the Biſhop to the Holy Virgin Demetrias, is apparently added, ſince St. Proſper never was a Biſhop. That the Author Of the Epiſtle to Demetrias ſpeaks not of St. Auſtine, altho' he had often occaſion to do it, which St. Proſper would not have omitted. Laſtly, he ſeems to ſay, that the Church of Rome was the firſt that condemned Pelagius, but St. Proſper gives this Honour to the Biſhops of Africa. Theſe are the ſpecial Reaſons of F. Queſnel.

M. Anthelmi on the other ſide maintains, that this Letter is St. Proſper's, and to prove it, compares ſeveral long pieces of this Letter with St. Proſper's Writings, but they do not ſeem to be more lucky about this Piece, than about the former Books, but we leave this to the Judgment of thoſe who will take the Pains to examine them. In the next place, he undertakes to overthrow the laſt Argument of F. Queſnel, taken from the difference of which he ſpeaks, concerning the order of time in which Pelagius was condemned in Africa, and Rome. He thereupon makes a long Diſcourſe, which, is not neceſſary for us to enter upon, nor diſcuſs, ſince St. Proſper hath ſaid in a place of his Poem, ——— Peſtem, ſubeuntem prima recidit.

Sedes Roma Petri;———————

We muſt underſtand by this word, Prima, either the firſt in Dignity, or the firſt according to the order of time; and ſo much the rather of the latter, becauſe in another place of his Poem, and in his Book againſt Caſſian, he places the Sentences of the Africans, after Zoſimus's. But the proof is not worth our trouble, we muſt own 'tis one of the leaſt, and will tarry on it no longer. Nor can we ſay, that the Argument taken from the Familiarity between St. Leo, and Demetrias, is very ſound; but yet M. Abbot Anthelmi doth not confute it ſolidly, by pretending that Demetrias who is ſpoken of in Anaſtaſius, Platina, and the Roman Breviary, is diſtinct from Demetrias. The Epithet, Ancilla Dei, the Handmaid of the Lord, doth ſuit as well to a Virgin, as a Married Woman; the taking away the Letters from the end is according to the uſage of the Latins, who follow that Termination. Laſtly, Paulus Diaconus calls the Foundreſs of St. Stephen's Church, Demetrias. But why do we ſtay ſo long upon Trifles? It is more profitable, and more to the purpoſe, to examine whether the Letter to Demetrias be written againſt thoſe Prieſts of Marſeilles, and againſt thoſe other Chriſtians, who tho' they condemned the Hereſie of Pelagius would not agree to all the Principles of St. Auſtine, or whether he ſpeaks only of the Pelagians. Altho' it be commonly thought that the Author of this Letter oppoſes the firſt as well as the laſt, yet I am of the Opinion of a learned Perſon who diſcovered this to me. That that which is ſaid in this Letter, Ch. 10. of ſome Perſons who pretending to deny all other Doctrines of Pelagius, yet retained this. That Grace is given according to Merits, is meant of ſome moderate and counterfeit Pelagians, as St. Leo obſerves in his Sixth Letter, where he ſpeaks plainly of the Pelagians. For in both places it is ſaid, that theſe Perſons had retained this Maxim with a deſign to revive all the other Pelagian Errors, and to overturn the Doctrine of Original Sin, which they owned among the Orthodox, but denyed among thoſe of their own Party. Cum inter noſtros Originalis peccati vulnera faterentur, inter ſuos tamen hoc tenere oſtenderent, Quod primorum hominum prævaricatio ſolis imitatoribus obfuit. This does not agree neither to the Prieſts of Marſeilles, nor to thoſe other Perſons who did not approve all the Principles of St. Auſtine, for they did ſincerely condemn them who denied Original Sin, they were no Party, nor had any Alliance with the Pelagians. They were then the Pelagians in diſguiſe, which the Author of this Letter to Demetrias ſpeaks of in his Letter; and the ſixth Letter of St. Leo teaches us, That there were many in the Popedom of this Pope, who made falſe profeſſions of the Faith, and with a deſign of reviving all their Errors, by putting ſome of them in diſguiſe. St. Proſper ſays in his Chronicon, that Julian uſed his utmoſt endeavours to gain admiſſion into the Communion of the Church, by pretending to renounce his Errors, but St. Leo hindred St. Sixtus from receiving him. And it is no wonder that the Author of this Letter of which we ſpeak, wrote to Demetrias againſt the Pelagians, becauſe Pelagius had heretofore written to that Virgin, and ſhe was acquainted with Julian, and might have had a Familiarity with ſome of his Friends.

The Author of this Letter in the firſt place commends her Noble Birth and Virtue; he obſerves by the bye, that there is no true Virtue without Charity and the Love of God, which ought to be the Motive of our Actions. Then he ſpeaks of Humility, firſt towards Men, and next towards God. This laſt conſiſts in acknowledging ſincerely, and wholly, the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt. He aſſerts, that Pride was the Original of the Pelagian Hereſie, and 'tis Pride that makes ſome hold that Maxim ſo faſt; that Grace is given according to Merits, a Maxim which is made uſe of to revive the other Pelagian Errors; that Chriſtian Humility makes us confeſs, that no Man hath any hopes of Salvation, unleſs Regenerate in Jeſus Chriſt; that it teaches us to give all Glory to him; that it makes us acknowledge, that without Grace we can do no good Thing; that it makes us own that the Operation of Grace is not prevented by the Will; that the Commandments are given to us, that we may fly to it for Help, without which we cannot perform them; that Pride, which corrupts our beſt Actions, is much to be feared; that Humility ſubjects Man to God; that we ought not to truſt in our own Merits; that no Good comes from our ſelves, no not ſo much as a Prayer. Laſtly, that all Good Works, and all Virtues come from God. Theſe are the Principles laid down and explained in this Letter.

We have already ſpoken of the * Aphoriſms of Grace. F. Queſnel, and M. Abbot Anthelmi, do both agree, that they belong to the ſame Author, but the one attributes them to St. Proſper, the other to St. Leo. They both ground themſelves upon the Conformity of Style. But it ſeems to me very hard to judge upon a Piece which is ſo ſhort as this is. We have already ſpoken our Opinion, and leave it to the more curious Criticks to examine throughly. Let thoſe who are more bold than we are, poſitively determine to whom theſe Treatiſes ought to be attributed. As for us, we content our ſelves in matters of this Nature, to ſpeak what ſeems to us moſt probable, believing that none can go further than probability: Alſo we confute others without Paſſion, and will not take it ill that others confute us. Nos ſequimur probabilia, nec ultra id quod veriſimile eſt, progredi poſſumus, & refellere ſine pertinacia, & refelli ſine iracundia parati ſumus. Cic. Tuſcul. Quæſt. lib. 2. It is neeedleſs to repeat in in this place, what we have said of the Style of the Books, Of the Calling of the Gentiles, and The Epistle to Demetrias. It is only worth our Observation, that whosoever is the Author of them, he was a very learned Man, of a solid Judgment, a fine and delicate Wit, and that understood well the matter he treated of. And altho' it were very obscure and intricate, yet he explains and clears it with so much Elegancy, and so good a Method, that he makes it both pleasant to read, and easie to understand. He dissolves the great Difficulties, and moderates the Doctrines which appear most rigorous, and illustrates those things which seem hard to attain. These Treatises have been printed with the Works of St. Ambrose, and St. Prosper. And F. Quesnel hath published a new Edition of them under the Name of St. Leo, as we have already several times observed.

[*Capitula de gratia.]

The Author of the Books, Of the Calling of the Gentiles, &c.

The Author of the Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles, &c.

The Author of the Books Of the Calling of the Gentiles, &c.

FLAVIAN, and several other Bishops, who wrote the Letters or Records about the Affair of Eutyches.

Flavian, &c.

IF we would place in the Number of Ecclesiastical Authors those Bishops who have written Letters, or presented Petitions in the Councils, we might reckon Flavian, who was Patriarch of Constantinople from the Year 446. to 449. among them. He hath written three Letters against Eutyches, of which the two last [Inscribed to P. Leo] are recited in the Acts of the Council of Ephesus, and the first hath been printed by M. Cotelerius in his first Tome of the Monuments of the Greek Church. We might also put in Anatolius, Flavian's Successor, who hath one Letter to the Emperor Leo, among the Acts of the Councils, and another to Pope Leo among the Letters of this last. Eusebius Bishop of Dorilæum, the principal Accuser of Eutyches, would obtain his place upon the account of two Petitions, which he presented against him to the Synods of Constantinople and Chalcedon, or upon the account of the Letter he wrote to Marcian. We must also place here Athanasius, Priest of Alexandria, and Ischyrion, and Theodorus Deacon of that Church, who presented Petitions against Dioscorus. Photius, Bishop of Tyre, may also be placed here, upon the account of a Petition, which he presented to the Council for the maintaining the Rights of his Bishoprick. Agapetus, Lucian, Theotimus, Vitalis, and some others, who wrote to the Emperor Leo, the Letters set down at the End of the Acts of the Council of Chalcedon, p. 904. unless they are omitted (a). Here also we may enter Ibas a Priest of Edessa, whose Letter to Maris the Persian, made so great a noise. We might also mention Eutyches the Monk, Head of that Party, and Bassianus Bishop of Evasa [afterward of Ephesus] upon the account of the Petitions which they presented in their own defence. But those, who have composed such sort of Works as these, do not deserve the Name of Authors, and we shall speak enough of them, in relating the History of the Councils. We shall also find there two Letters of Acacius Bishop of Constantinople, the one to Simplicius, the other to Petrus Fullo, and there we shall speak of the Letter of this last, which we have not, as well as of the Letter of Petrus Mongus to Acacius.

Flavian, &c.

(a) Unless they are omitted] Great Part of this Letter is recited in the Council of Chalcedon, Tome 4, of the Councils, p. 661.

Several Letters of divers Bishops.

Several Letters of divers Bishops.

THese are also Writers almost of the same Rank with the former, who have not above a Letter or two, and those found among other Mens Works. Paschasinus Bishop of Lilybæum in Sicily shall be first of them. Bucherius hath published a Letter of his about Easter in the Year 445, which is found among St. Leo's Letters in the last Edition, p. 412. Julian, Bishop of Coos, is of the same time; we have only one Letter of his directed to the Emperor Leo, which is at the end of St. Leo's Letters. We have also among the Letters of this Father a great number of Letters directed to him, viz. a Letter of Cerefius, Salonius and Veranus, Bishops of the Province of the Alps; a Letter of the Bishop of Vienna to St. Leo; two Letters of the French Bishops; a Letter of Peter of Ravenna; a Letter of Eusebius, Bishop of Milan, and the Bishops of his Province; three Letters of Flavian, of which we have spoken already; a Letter of Marcian, Theodosius, Placidia, Pulcheria and Leontius; a Letter of Proterius, Bishop of Alexandria, concerning Easter, recited by Bucherius; one of St. Petrus Chrysologus to Eutyches; one of Salonius a French Bishop, and another of his Brother Veranus; a Letter of Turribius to Idacius and Ceponius; and the Letter of Leo Bishop of Bourges, to the Bishops of the Province of Tours. Of all these we have already spoken. To these Letters we must add a Letter of a Bishop, called Rusticus, whose Bishoprick we know not, written to Eucherius, recited by F. Sirmondus, in his Notes upon the 2*d*. Book of Sidonius's Letters, p. 34. Two Letters of Lupus, Bishop of Troyes, of which one is in the 4*th*. Tome of the Councils, and the other in the 5*th*. Tome of M. Luke d' Acherius's Spicilegium; a Letter of Leontius, Bishop of Arles, to Pope Hilarius, in the same place, and in the Appendix of the 4*th*. Tome of the last Edition of the Councils; and the Testament and Epitaph of Perpetuus Bishop of Tours, in the 5*th*. Tome of the Spicilegium,

Several Letters of divers Bishops.

BASILIUS Bishop of Seleucia.

Basilius Bishop of Seleucia.

BAsil, Bishop of Seleucia, a City of Isauria, flourished in the Time of the Contest of Eutyches. He was present at the Council of Constantinople, held under Flavian in 448. and at the Council of Chalcedon, where, after he had begged Pardon for what he had done in the Council of Ephesus held under Dioscorus, he was restored, and believed as others.

[* Dr. Cave reckons 43. viz. 17 upon the old, and 26 upon the new Testament.]

We have at this day * 40 Homilies of this Bishop. Photius had seen but 15 of them, but the other being of the same Style and Coherence, it cannot be doubted but that they are the same Author's.

The first of these Homilies is upon the first Words of Genesis, In the Beginning God created the Heaven and the Earth. It seems to have been preached at the beginning of the solemn Fast of Lent. He therein describes very elegantly the Production of all Creatures, and the admirable Order of the Universe. Speaking of the Creation of Man, he observes, that the Words which the Scripture uses, being in the plural Number, Let us make make Man in our Image, is an Argument of a Trinity of Persons. He makes the Likeness of Man, with God, to consist in this, that he considers upon the Heavens, but doth his Works upon Earth, and that he establisheth Government and Laws.

In the 2*d*. Homily he explains more particularly the Creation of Man, and the Formation of Woman.

In the 3*d*. he describes the Estate of Adam in the earthly Paradise, and his unlucky and miserable Fall. He had an absolute Freedom. He might take all sorts of innocent Pleasures, because Pleasure was not then infectious and deadly: All the Creatures were subject to him, he could make use of them without Sinning, except one Fruit only. But the Devil envying his Happiness took on him the Form of a Serpent, and persuaded the Woman to eat the forbidden Fruit. She gave it to her Husband, and they immediately knew that they were naked. God called them, upbraided them with their Disobedience, and condemned them to different Punishments, both them and their Posterity; but he must not, for all that, despair of his Salvation. Jesus Christ is come to cure Man of that old Wound. He hath brought Medicines contrary to those things, which were the cause of his Fall. He opposeth Solitude to Paradise, Fasting to Delights, the Trophee of the Cross to the Deceit of the Devil; a Virgin conceiving without the Curse of Sin, to the first Woman; a Child born of a Virgin, and free from the old Disease, to the miserable Children of Adam. The new Adam is entred again into Paradise, from whence the first was driven; and from thence he sends forth his Darts to wound the Serpent.

Basilius Bishop of Seleucia.

Cain and Abel are the Subject of the 4*th*. Homily. Moses sets down their History as a dreadful Example, to teach Men to love Virtue and hate Vice. The Stories of the old Testament have all no other end. This teaches us, that God debaseth himself to Men; that he accepts their Sacrifices, tho' he hath no need of them to instruct them, who offer them to him, and that he hath care of good Men after their Death. Abel is the first just Man slain wrongfully. The Vengeance, which God inflicted upon his Death, gives cause to hope for a Resurrection. Cain is the first Child of Eve, a wicked Man, an Enemy of Nature, whoſe Crimes and Puniſhments are there painted in a lively manner.

Baſilius of Seleucia.

The fifth Homily is concerning Noah and the Flood. 'Twas Man's Sins that brought it upon him; God delayed it as long as he could; he admoniſhed them ſeveral times; he invited them to Repentance; but Men not growing better by his Admonitions, were all overwhelmed with a Deluge, except Noah and his Family, who were ſaved in the Ark. The Wood, which was the Inſtrument of Man's Deſtruction in Adam, was the Inſtrument of their Safety in the times of Noah.

The 6*th*. is alſo about ſome Queſtion, which might be made concerning the Deluge. He obſerves there, That the Sons of God, of whom 'tis ſaid, that they had Commerce with the Daughters of Men, are not Angels, but the Poſterity of Seth, who had Commerce with the Race of Cain. He gives the Reaſon of the difference of clean and unclean Beaſts. He ſaith, that God commanded it, that he might make the Jews afraid to eat of thoſe Creatures which they were forbidden to eat; as alſo, that they might not adore them. He believes, that Noah was not obliged to hunt after all thoſe Creatures that went into the Ark with him, and catch them, but that they came thither of themſelves. He teaches us to admire Noah's Dexterity in building the Ark, and the Providence of God in the courſe of the Flood.

In the 7*th*. he propounds to our obſervation the ready Obedience of Abraham, and the blind Submiſſion which he yielded to the Command of God in preparing himſelf to ſacrifice his Son. He deſcribes this Hiſtory in a very affecting Manner.

The 8*th*. gives us the perfect Hiſtory of Joſeph, and makes a faithful Deſcription of his Virtues.

The 9*th*. manifeſts to us the Providence of God in the Life of Moſes.

The 10*th*. compares Eliſha to Jeſus Chriſt, and the Son of the Shunamite, raiſed from the Dead by that Prophet, with the Gentiles.

The 11*th*. contains ſome Reflections upon the Life of the Prophet Elias.

In the 12*th*. Baſil uſes the Hiſtory of Jonas, and the Converſion of the Ninevites, to prove how great the mercy and goodneſs of God is towards Sinners.

In the 13*th*. he explains the reſemblances of Jonas to Jeſus Chriſt.

The 14*th*, 15*th*, 16*th*, and 17*th*. are upon King David. In the three firſt he extols the ſpecial Favours, which God beſtowed upon that Holy King. In the laſt he diſcourſes of his Sin and of his Repentance.

In the 18*th*. he endeavours to create a deteſtation of the Action of Herod and Herodias.

The 19*th*. is upon the Hiſtory of the Centurion.

The 20*th*. is upon the Woman of Canaan.

The 21*ſt*. is upon the Healing of the Lame Man, who lay at the Gate of the Temple.

The 22*d*. is upon the Storm appeaſed by Jeſus Chriſt.

The 23*d*. is upon the Cure of him that was poſſeſſed with the Legion of Devils.

The 24*th*. is upon thoſe words of the Mother of Zebedee's Children, Grant that theſe my two Sons may ſit, the one on thy Right Hand, and the other on thy Left in thy Kingdom.

The 25*th*. is upon theſe Words of Jeſus Chriſt to the Apoſtles, Whom do Men ſay that I am.

The 26*th*. is upon theſe Words of our Saviour, I am the GoodS hepherd.

The 27*th*. is againſt the Feſtival, and Shows of the Olympick Games.

The 28*th*. is upon theſe Words of Jeſus Chriſt, Except ye be converted, and become as little Children, ye ſhall not enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. Wherein he treats of Humility.

The 29*th*. is upon theſe other words, Come unto me all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will give you reſt.

The 30*th*. is upon theſe, Follow me, and I will make you Fiſhers of Men.

The 31*ſt*. is upon what Jeſus Chriſt ſays, Behold, we go up to Jeruſalem, and the Son of Man ſhall be betrayed into the hands of Sinners, &c.

The 32*d*. is upon that Prayer of Jeſus Chriſt to his Father, Father, if it be poſſible, let this Cup paſs from me.

The 33*d*. is upon the Miracle of the 5000 Men fed with the five Loaves, related in St. Matth. 14.

The 34*th*. is upon the Queſtion which John's Diſciples put to Jeſus Chriſt, Art thou he that ſhould come, or do we look for another?

The 35*th*. is upon the Parable of the Phariſee and Publican.

The 36*th* is upon the two Blind Men cured by Jeſus Chriſt.

Baſilius of Seleucia.

The 37*th*. is upon the Bloody Murther of the Infants, which he deſcribes in a very elegant and paſſionate manner.

In the 38*th*. he proves by the Prophecies, and particularly by Daniel's, that the Meſſiah is come, and that it is Jeſus Chriſt. He fixes the beginning of the 70 Weeks at the rebuilding of Jeruſalem by Cyrus, the Birth of Jeſus Chriſt in the 29*th*. Year of the Reign of Auguſtus, his Death in the 19*th*. Year of Tiberius, and ſo counts 483 Years from the firſt Year of Cyrus to the Aſcenſion of Chriſt into Heaven, which makes 69 Weeks of Years. The 70*th*, ends the ninth Year of the Emperor Caius, under whom the War began. This Writing is rather a Treatiſe than an Homily.

The 39*th*. is upon the Annunciation of the Virgin. In it he extols the Dignity of the Mother of God, and ſtirs up our Admiration of the Myſtery of the Incarnation.

The laſt is upon the Transfiguration of our Lord. F. Combefis hath [Printed at Paris in 1656, Octavo] publiſhed an Homily upon St. Stephen, which bears the Name of this Author.

As to the Style, and manner of Writing, which this Author uſes, Photius gives this Judgment of them. 'His Diſcourſe, ſaith he, is figurative, and lofty. He obſerves, as much as any Man whatſoever, an even Cadence. He hath joined Clearneſs and Pleaſure together, but his Tropes and Figures are very troubleſome. By theſe he wearies his Hearer always, and creates in him a bad Opinion of himſelf, as a Perſon ignorant, how to make Art and Nature accord, and keep juſt meaſures to cut off Superfluities.' Nevertheleſs we muſt own, that altho' he hath a great Number of Figures, yet he keeps up his Style very well, and his Diſcourſe very rarely dwindles into flat Alluſions. Nor doth it render him obſcure, becauſe he illuſtrates his Diſcourſe by the diſtinction of the Parts, and Periods, and by the Elegancy of his Expreſſions, clears up the difficulties in the Figures. But the great number of his Figures takes away the Grace of it, and ſo much the more, becauſe they are uſed too roughly, and the Artifice of them is not ſufficiently concealed.

Photius adds, that it was that Baſil who was the Friend of St. Chryſoſtome, rather than Baſil the Great, but he is miſtaken in this. (It is perhaps neither of them, as we have obſerved elſewhere) but he is not deceived in what he ſaith further, that in his Sermons he follows the foot-ſteps of St. Chryſoſtome, and that he hath taken his Senſe from his Diſcourſes, eſpecially as to what relates to the Explication of Scripture. Photius hath well done to make this reſtriction, for 'tis in that particular only that he imitates St. Chryſoſtome. The Homilies of this Patriarch of Conſtantinople have two Parts, as we have already noted. In the firſt he explains the Scripture according to the Letter, and joins to it ſome Mortal Reflections. In the ſecond he takes in hand ſome Moral Doctrine, which he handles very largely. Baſil of Seleucia meddles not with the laſt part, but contents himſelf to imitate the firſt, but has not performed it ſo naturally as St. Chryſoſtome. Photius alſo tells us, that Baſil of Seleucia had written the Life of the Eminent Martyr St. Thecla in Verſe. We have at this Day one in Proſe, which is attributed to Baſil of Seleucia. But there is no Proof that it is his; it doth not reſemble his Style, and it ſeems to have been compiled by ſome more Modern Greek. [Pantinus publiſhed it in Greek and Latin, at Antwerp, 1608.]

The Homilies of Baſil and Seleucia were Printed in Greek at Heydelberg in the Year 1596. In Greek and Latin with Dauſquius's Verſion and Notes at the ſame place, 1604. This Edition, with the Life of St. Thecla, in Greek and Latin, Tranſlated by Pantinus, is put into the Collection of Greek Fathers made at Paris in * 1621, which contains the Works of St. Gregory Thaumaturgus, Macarius, and Baſil of Seleucia, with a ſmall Commentary upon the Canonical Epiſtles attributed to Zonarus. F. Combefis hath Printed a Tranſlation of theſe Homilies in his Latin Eccleſiaſtes of Greek Authors Printed in 1674. He pretends to have corrected many faults of the Tranſlator, but if he hath rendred ſome places more agreeably to the Greek Text, he hath tranſlated others more barbarouſly, and made them harder to be underſtood. He hath alſo publiſhed the Sermon upon St. Stephen. Theſe Works alſo are to be found in the Bibliotheca Patrum.

[* Cave. 1622.]

[Dr. Cave mentions a Treatiſe of this Author's, intitled, A Demonſtration of the Coming of Chriſt againſt the Jews, Publiſhed by Turrian at Ingolſtadt, 1616, Octavo, and in Greek in Dauſquius's Edition, which this Author hath omitted.]

TIMO-

TIMOTHEUS ÆLURUS.

Timotheus Ælurus.

PRoterius Bishop of Alexandria being slain in 457,* by the People of Alexandria, Timotheus Ælurus † was seiz'd on by the People, and ordain'd in his Place by *one Bishop only: And since he could not maintain his Ordination, but by siding with the People, he condemned all those who had communicated with Proterius, as Nestorians. Some time after, that he might justify himself to the Emperor Leo, he sent an Apology to him, in which he endeavours to confirm his Heresy, by the Quotations of the Holy Fathers, understood in a wrong Sense, making the Bishop of Rome, the Bishops that were present at the Council of Chalcedon, and all the Western Bishops to pass for Nestorians : But missing of his Design, which he had to deceive the Emperor, he was banish'd to Gangra. Gennadius says, that he translated the Book of this Arch-Heretick into Latin, who was then alive when he wrote his Book of Ecclesiastical Authors ; but we have neither the Original nor Translation.

Timotheus Ælurus.

[* By Timotheus and his Accomplices.] [† Caused himself to be Ordained.] [*Two Bishops, but deposed. As. Eva.]

CHRYSIPPUS.

Chrysippus

THE time when Chrysippus, a Priest of Jerusalem liv'd, is not certainly known, yet it is most probable that he flourish'd in the fifth Age. We find in the Bibliotheca Patrum a *Sermon in Commendation of the Virgin, under his Name, which contains many extraordinary Praises of her, like to those used in the Litanies. Photius tells us in the 171*st*. Volume of his Bibliotheca, that he had found in a Book, where was a Treatise of † Eustathius, a Priest of Constantinople, concerning the estate of Souls after Death ; a Piece, where it was related, that Gamaliel, and Nicodemus, who was his Father-in-Law (as it is there said) were baptiz'd by St. John, and did suffer Martyrdom. He adds, that this History was attributed to Chrysippus, a Priest of Jerusalem, who in his * Panegyrick of Theodorus Martyr, makes mention of Lucian a Priest of the same Church, and that this last lived in the time that John was Bishop of Jerusalem, to whom Gamaliel had related this Story, and shewed him the Place where the Relicks of St. Stephen and Nicodemus were, which, being found, had done many Miracles.

Chrysippus

[*It is extant in Ducæus's Auctuarium, Tom. 2. p. 424, in Gr. and Latin. [† Eustratius Cave.] [* Some Fragments of it are found in Eustratius's Treatise above cited.]

VIGILIUS DIACONUS.

Vigilius Diaconus.

GEnnadius assures us, that this Author, whom he places in the fifth Age, hath written, according to the Tradition of the Fathers, A Rule for the Monks. He adds, that it was read in the Assemblies of the Monks, and that it contains, in few Words, and in a clear Method, all the Discipline of a Monastick Life. This agrees well with a Rule which is to be found in Holstenius's Collection, p. 1. p. 89. [in codice Regularum, p. 89. printed at Paris 1663. Quarto.]

Vigilius Diaconus.

FASTIDIUS PRISCUS.

Fastidius Priscus.

FAstidius Priscus, an English Author, hath written to a certain Woman named Fatalis, one Treatise concerning the Christian Life, and another * of Widowhood. His Doctrine is sound, and worthy of Esteem. This is what Gennadius informs us of this Author. Some have made him Bishop of London, but do not prove it. He lived in the fifth Age under Theodosius and Honorius. We have his Book of the Christian Life among the Works of St. Austine [Tom. IX. P. 888.] It hath been restored to him thro' the Credit of an Ancient Manuscript Printed by it self by Holstenius in 1663, [at Rome] * The other Treatise is lost.

The Book of the Christian Life is directed to a Widow. He first of all derives the Name of Christian from the Unction of the Holy Spirit. He tells us, that all that bear that Name ought to imitate Jesus Christ. He then gives us a Reason, why God bears with Sinners, and afflicts the Good. He explains the Principal Duties of a Christian, Love of God, Love of our Neighbour, and Good Works, without which he shews, that none can be saved. He at last describes the Virtues of a true Christian, and exhorts the Widow to whom he writes to lead a Life conformable to that which he had drawn up. This Treatise is written in a very mean Style. It hath more Piety and Plainness, than Eloquence and Loftiness. In some places he seems to favour the Opinions of Pelagius.

Fastidius Priscus.

[* De viduitate coland.] [* Dr. Cave thinks they are but one Treatise, and that Gennadius hath distinguished them falsly.]

DRACONTIUS.

Dracontius.

DRacontius, a Spanish Priest, who lived in the time of Theodosius the Younger, hath composed an Heroick Poem upon the six Days of the Creation, and an Elegy to the Emperor. There is nothing remarkable in that Work. It is written in a very barbarous Style. St. Isidore and St. Ildefonsus of Toledo speak of this Author. The Poem is extant in the Bibliotheca Patrum [Tom. 9. P. 724], and F Sirmondus hath printed it with the Elegy [at Paris] in 1619, Octavo * at the end of Eugenius of Toledo, who reviewed this Work, and put it in the condition that now it is.

Dracontius.

[*It is also in Fabritius's collection of Poets, and in Appendice Bignæana, p. 837.]

EUDOCIA the Empress, and PROBA FALCONIA.

Eudocia, and Proba Falconia.

WHo would expect to see the Names of Women among the Number of Ecclesiastical Authors? In all times indeed there have been learned Women, but yet very few durst meddle with Divinity. It is more strange to see an Empress so employ'd, and nothing is more wonderful, (as the learned Photius observes upon this occasion) than to see a Princess, amidst the soft and charming delights of a Court, to compose Books. This Woman of whom we are now speaking, was the Daughter of Leontius an Athenian Philosopher, and Wife of Theodosius the Younger. She composed a Paraphrase upon the eight first Books of the Bible in Greek Heroicks. Photius assures us in the 183 Codex of his Bibliotheca, that it was an excellent Work, and not inferior to any other of that Nature in the Elegancy of the Verse. But by confining her self too strictly to the Rules of Translation, she hath transgressed the Rules of Art. Nevertheless many approve of it, and affirm, that Translation ought to be so managed. She is not studious to please the Ears of the younger sort, as Poets usually do, by allowing themselves the Liberty of changing Truths into Fables. She doth not divert her Readers by tedious digressions from the subject treated on, but follows her Text with so much Exactness and Fidelity, that they that read her Work, will be well satisfied with it. She preserves the same Sense entirely in the same manner as it is written, without adding to it, or taking from it, and uses as much as possible such words as come nearest the Original. At the end of every Book she shews in two Verses, that she was the Author of it.

Eudocia, and Proba Falconia.

The same Photius adds in the following Volume, that she had composed in the same Style a Paraphrase upon the Prophecies of Daniel and Zachary, and three Books in commendation of * St. Cyprian the Martyr. The first contains the Life of St. Justina, the Artifices which Cyprian made use of to defile her, his Conversion and Ordination. The Life of Cyprian is related in the second ; and in the third, the Martyrdom of St. Cyprian, which happened under Diocletian. There are many things in this History which seem not to be certain. It supposes that Cyprian was Bishop of Antioch, whereas there was none of that Name there in the time of Diocleſian. I paſs over many things that are related by Photius, but are very improbable, and unlikely to be true.

[* Not St. Cyprian of Carthage, but another Cyprian, a Roman.]

Eudocia, & Pr. Falconia

We have none of theſe Works of Eudocia, but there is printed under her Name, An Hiſtory of the Life of Jeſus Chriſt, written in Heroick Verſes taken out of Homer, that is to ſay, there is not one Verſe which is not a piece of Homer's Poems. Upon which account it is that they are called Centones Homerici, Verſes made up of Fragments of Homer.

Zonaras, and Cedrenus ſay, that Pelagius Patricius, whom the Emperor Zeno put to Death, had compoſed a Work which bore the ſame Title, and indeed in the Catalogue of the Library of Heidelberg, this Book is attributed to one Patricius, who is there thro' miſtake called a Prieſt. There is alſo in the ſame place an Epigram of Eudocia's upon the ſame Poem. The firſt Greek Editions of Aldus and Stephanus in the Year 1554, and 1578, have no Author's Name. Photius, who ſpeaks of Eudocius's other Works, makes no mention of this. All which would make me believe, that 'tis not her's, but Pelagius's and that 'tis imputed to her for no other Reaſon, but becauſe ſhe had commended it in an Epigram which was in the beginning of it.

There is a Latin Work of the ſame Nature, attributed to Proba Falconia, the Wife of Anicius Probus who alſo hath made an Hiſtory of the Life of Jeſus Chriſt, framed out of pieces of Virgil's Poems. It was Printed at Cologne in 1601, at Lyons in 1516, at Franckfort in 1541, and at Paris in 1578. Theſe two Works are alſo put up in the Biblioth. Patr. [Tom. V.] St. Jerome in his Letter to Paulinus ſays, that he had ſeen theſe Poems made up of * pieces of Homer, and Virgil but he ſhews no great liking to them, and indeed, theſe ſort of Works cannot be very excellent, but are rather an Indication of the Authors Memory and Labour, than the fineneſs of their Wit, or the ſtrength of their Fancy.

Eudocia, & Pr. Falconia.

[Centones Homericiet Virgiliani.*]

Proba Falconia flouriſhed about the Year * 430. Eudocia was married to the Emperor about the Year 421, and died in 460 Zonaras tells us that ſhe fell into diſgrace about a trivial Matter. The Emperor having ſent her an Apple of an extraordinary bigneſs, ſhe gave it to Paulinus, who was highly in favour with her upon the account of his Learning; he not knowing where ſhe had it, preſented it to the Emperor, who ſeeing the Empreſs a little while after, asked her, What ſhe had done with the Apple? She fearing, leſt her Husband ſhould grow ſuſpicious of her, if ſhe ſhould ſay ſhe had given it to Paulinus, affirmed, with an Oath, that ſhe had eaten it. This made the Emperor believe, that ſhe had not an innocent Familiarity with Paulinus, eſpecially ſeeing her ſo much abaſhed when he ſhewed it to her, whereupon he forced her to depart from him. She went to Jeruſalem, where ſhe ſpent her time in Building of Churches, and did not return till after her Husband's Death. This is the Hiſtory, or rather, the Fable reported by Zonaras.

[*371. Dr. Cave]

*TYRSIUS RUFUS ASTERIUS.

[Turcius*, Dr. Cave.]

Tyrſius Rufus Aſterius.

Tyrſius Rufus Aſterius, who was Conſul in 449, reviewed and publiſhed Sedulius's Poems. Some have thought him the Author alſo of a Book, called A Compariſon of the Old and New Teſtament, written alſo in Verſe, but others attribute it to the ſame Sedulius. It is an Elegy, which contains in the firſt Verſe of every Strophe, ſome Hiſtory of the Old Teſtament, and in the ſecond, an Application is made of it to ſome part of the New. It is written in a very clear and ſmooth Style.

Tyrſius Rufus Aſterius.

PETRONIUS.

Petronius.

Petronius, a Perſon of great Sanctity, after he had been for ſome time a Monk, was choſen Biſhop of Bononia. He was Co-temporary with Eucherius Biſhop of Lyons, as appears by the Letter of this latter, written to Valerian, concerning the Contempt of the World. He is thought, ſaith Gennadius, the Author of ſome Lives of the Ægyptian Fathers, whom the Monks look upon as the Model and Mirror of their Profeſſion. I have read, ſaith the ſame Perſon, a Book concerning the Ordination of a Biſhop which bears the ſame Name, but the Elegancy of the Style proves that it is not his, as ſome have thought it, but his Father Petronius's, who was a Man very eloquent and very well skilled in the moſt excellent Learning, for it is noted in that Writing, that the Author was Præfectus Prætorio. He died in the Reign of Theodoſius, and Valentinian. St. Eucherius cites him in his Book of the contempt of the World. We have none of this Biſhop's Works. Some Lives of the Fathers are attributed to him, but they are ſuppoſititious.

Petronius.

CONSTANTINUS, or CONSTANTIUS.

Conſtantinus, or Conſtantius.

THis Author was a Prieſt of Lyons, who wrote the Life of St. German, Biſhop of Antiſiodorum, recited by Surius on July the 31*ſt*.

Conſtantinus or Conſtantius.

PHILIPPUS.

Philippus.

Philip, a Prieſt and Diſciple of St. Jerome, hath compoſed a very plain Commentary upon Job. He hath alſo written ſome Letters to his Friends, in ſome of which he exhorts them to endure Afflictions and Poverty patiently. He died under the Empire of Marcian. This is what Gennadius ſays of this Author. We have yet a Commentary upon Job under the Name of this Father Printed at Baſil in 1527, [both in Folio and Quarto]. It is nothing to the Purpoſe, that it hath been ſince attributed to Beda, and printed under his Name among his Works, becauſe this Author himſelf in his Treatiſe De Uncia, i. e. of the Ounce, cites it under the Name of Philip. But 'tis not abſolutely certain, that it is the Work of the Scholar of St. Jerome. The Commentary upon Job falſly reckoned for St. Jerome's, is nothing but an Abridgment of this.

Philippus.

SYAGRIUS.

Syagrius.

Syagrius, ſaith Gennadius, Ch. 65. of his Book of Eccleſiaſtical Writers, hath made a Treatiſe concerning Faith againſt the inconſiderate and preſumptuous Terms which the Hereticks made uſe of to aboliſh, or change, the Names of the three Perſons of the Trinity, by refuſing to give to the firſt Perſon the Name of Father, which ſhews, that the Son is of the ſame Nature, and by calling him by the Name of the only Uncreated God without beginning, and cauſe, that they may make us believe, that the other Perſons, which are diſtinct from him, are of a different Nature. This Author demonſtrates againſt them, that the Father may be ſaid to be without a beginning, altho' he be of the ſame Nature with the Son whom he hath begotten, and not created, and that the Holy Spirit is produced altho' it may be ſaid, that he is neither Begotten nor Created. I have alſo met, ſaith Gennadius further, ſome Books intitled, Of Faith, and the Rules of Faith, which alſo bear the Name of Syagrius, but becauſe they are not of the ſame Style, 'tis not credible, that they are his. We have nothing more of this Author's.

Syagrius.

ISAAC

ISAAC.

Isaac.

Isaac a Priest of the Church of Antioch, hath written several Books in Syriack; the principal of them are against the Nestorians and Eutychians. He hath also made a Poem, wherein he bewails the Destruction of Antioch, as St. Ephrem before him had lamented the Ruin of Nicomedia. This Isaac died under the Empire of Leo, and Marcian, about the Year 454. There was also another Younger of the same Name, who lived to the end of the sixth Age, as St. Gregory tells us, in the third Book of his Dialogues. The Treatise concerning the Contempt of the World, which bears the Name of Isaac in the Biblioth. Patr. [Tom. XI.] ought to be imputed to the latter, rather than to the former. Trithemius hath made a Catalogue of the Works of the former in the following manner, viz. Two Books against the Nestorians, and Eutychians, An Exhortation to a Spiritual Life; A Book of Fighting against Vices; A Book concerning our Approach to God; A Book of the difficulty in practising Virtue; A Dialogue of our Spiritual Growth; A Book of the Order of Monks; A Treatise of Humility; A Book of the three Orders of Proficients; One of the Privacy of Monks; One of the diversity of Temptations; One of the Instruction of Novices; One of Repentance; A Poem upon the destruction of Antioch. He had seen these Treatises, and marks the beginnings of them. He adds moreover, that this Author had made several Homilies which had never fallen into his Hands.

Isaac.

SIMEON STYLITES.

Simeon Stylites.

IT is commonly thought, that this famous and admirable Monk of Antiquity, who lived 56 Years on the top of a Pillar, whose extraordinary Life hath been written by [Antonius, it is extant in Bibl. Patr. Tom. 1.] one of his own Scholars, and by Theodoret, is the Author of a small Discourse concerning Death, which is in Latin in the Biblioth. Patr. Others attribute it, and that more probably, to another Simeon Stylites, who lived under Justinian, one of whose Letters is cited in the fifth Action of the II. Council of Nice. But however that be, this Discourse is a very little thing. He represents in it the state of the Soul after its separation from the Body, and describes after what manner the Angels conduct it to Glory, if it be adorned with Virtues; and how it is received by the Devils, if it be full of Vices. The Ancient Simeon Stylites wrote some Letters [to Theodosius, to Leo, to Eudoxia, to Basil Bishop of Antioch,] about the affairs of the Church.

Simeon Stylites.

MOSCHIMUS, or MOCHIMUS.

Moschimus or Mochimus.

Moschimus of Mesopotamia, a Priest of Antioch, wrote an Excellent Treatise against Eutyches, as Gennadius says, Ch. 71. It is said that he wrote some other Works, but I never read them. This is all we know of this Author, who hath nothing extant. There is in Lupus's Collection of Pieces, a Letter of Theodoret written to this Priest, by which we understand that he was Steward of the Church of Hierapolis, [now called Aleppo.]

Moschimus or Mochimus.

ASCLEPIUS, PETER, and PAUL.

Asclepius, Peter and Paul.

WE have nothing concerning these three Authors, but what Gennadius relates in Ch. 73, 74, and 75. of his Book of the Ecclesiastical Writers of his time, viz.

Asclepius the African, a Bishop of a small Town in the Territory of Baya, wrote against the Arians. He is also at this Day said to write against the Donatists. He is reputed to have taught excellently well Extempore.

Peter, a Priest of the Church of Edessa, an Eminent Orator, hath written Treatises upon several Subjects, and made Psalms in Verse, in imitation of St. Ephrem the Deacon.

Paul, a Priest born in Pannonia. so far as I can guess by his Writings, hath written to a Noble Virgin Named Constantia, Two Books Of the Preservation of Virginity; and some Treatises Of the Contempt of the World, the way to lead a Christian Life, and amend our Manners. This Style is mean, but seasoned with Divine Elegancy. He makes mention of Jovinian the Heretick, the great Lover of Carnal Pleasures, whose Life was so devoid of Chastity and Temperance, that he died in the midst of a Sumptuous Banquet, or as others report, while he was writing of Love-Letters.

Asclepius, Peter and Paul.

SALVIAN.

Salvian.

Salvian, a Priest of Marseilles, very well skilled in Divine and Prophane Sciences, Master of Bishops (a), hath written several Works in a clear and elaborate (b) Style. These Books I have read, saith Gennadius, Three Books of the Advantages of a Single Life, to Marcellus the Priest; Four Books Against Covetousness; Five Books Upon the Judgment; and another Book to Salonius (c); A Book to Claudian, containing, an Explication of the latter part of Ecclesiastes (d). A Book of Letters; And A Treatise, in Heroick Verse, upon the beginning of Genesis, in imitation of the Greeks. He hath also composed several Homilies for the use of some Bishops, and so many Discourses upon the Sacrament that I cannot remember them all. He was yet living, and enjoy'd an happy Old Age, when Gennadius wrote this of him about the Year 495. It is commonly believed, that we have none of Salvian's Works, of which Gennadius speaks, but it is very probable, that the eight Books Of the Government of God, and of his Judgments, are the five Books to Salonius; And the four Books of Covetousness, are the four Books to the Catholick Church. As for the rest, they are not extant.

In the first he undertakes to settle the belief of God's Providence, and to prove that it is every where present, governing, and Judging all. This he shews in the two first Books by Reason, Example, and Authority. After he hath laid this firm Foundation, upon which he builds his whole Edifice of Providence, he propounds this great Question: How it comes to pass, if this be true that the Barbarians, and Heathens are more happy than Christians, that among the Christians the Good are more Unfortunate very often than Sinners? In the first place he cuts the Knot, by saying, that he might answer, that he is ignorant of the reason, and that it belongs not to him to unfold the hidden Counsels of God, nor give a reason of his unsearchable Judgments; that it is sufficient for Christians, that the Holy Scripture hath clearly taught this Point, insomuch, that they cannot doubt of it; that they ought to content themselves with what the Apostle says, That in this World we must suffer Persecutions. But because many believe, that the worldly good things are due to them, as a reward of their Faith, he saith first of all, that there are very few Men that can truly pretend that they have Faith, and are through-Christians. We are

Salvian.

(a) Of Bishops.] Salonius and Veranus are ordinarily added, but there are several MSS, where they are not found. It is so read in Honorius Augustodunensis, but it is an evident Addition, for who sees not that there is no Sense in the Text of Gennadius, if it be read so. These are his Words, Salvianus divina & humana literatura instructus, &, ut absque invidia loquar, Magister Episcoporum. This is good and compleat Sense. But what does he mean to say after this, Sanctorum Salonii & Verani? Was it a thing to be envied to be Master of these two Bishops? No surely, but it was to be Master of Bishops, and to make Sermons for them, as we learn by what follows, Homilias scripsit Episcopis multas, for so it ought to be read, and not Episcopus.

(b) Elaborate.] Scholastico Sermone, is a Term which was used at that time to express a Polite and Elaborate Discourse.

(c) To Salonius.] It is in Gennadius, Pro eorum merito satisfactionis, which is very obscure. M. Baluzius reads it, Pro eorum præmio satisfaciendo, which is not much plainer. I believe it ought to be read, De præsenti judicio & de merito satisfactionis ad Salonium Libros VIII.

(d) Ecclesiastes.] It is Ecclesiasticus in Gennadius, but it is a mistake. It ought to be read, Ecclesiastes as Ado observes in his Chronicon.

Salvian. made Chriſtians, ſaith he, by the Law, by the Prophets, by the Goſpel, by Baptiſm, and by Chriſm. Now what Man is there that lives conformably to this Calling? Who is there that obſerves the Commands of Chriſt in the literal ſenſe? Who loves his Enemies heartily? Who utterly forſakes all? Who bears Injuries patiently? &c. False Oaths, Murthers, Luſts, and many other Sins reign in the World.

His way of handling this Subject convinceth us, that his main end was to declaim againſt the Manners of his Age, which he doth in all the reſt of this Work. He therein deſcribes with all the Strength and Elegancy poſſible, the moſt common Irregularities. He inveighs particularly againſt the Uncleanneſs of the Theatres, and prophane Sights. He gives a terrible Deſcription of the corrupt Manners of the People, and eſpecially the Africans; and he affirms, that as great as the Calamities of Africk, and other parts of the Empire of Rome, were, in being made a Prey to the Barbarians, they were nothing like to thoſe Puniſhments and Chaſtiſements which the Crimes of Men deſerved. In this Work he ſpeaks of the Taking of Carthage by Genſericus, which happened in 439, and of the War of Lotharius againſt the Viſigoths in the ſame Year, as of things newly done, which helps us to fix the Time when theſe Books were written.

The four Books of Salvian, dedicated to the Catholick Church under the Name of Timothy, contain a Satyr againſt rich, and covetous Men, and ſome important Precepts about the Obligation of giving Alms. He bewails in the beginning, the general Corruption of Chriſtians. That bleſſed time of the primitive Church is gone and paſt, ſaith he, that time wherein all that believed in Jeſus Chriſt did freely offer the corruptible Goods of this Life to obtain eternal Riches in Heaven, changing the poſſeſſion of the things of this Life for the hopes of the good things of another, and purchaſing immortal Riches with preſent Poverty. But now Covetouſneſs, Luſt, Theft, and other Vices which accompany them, ſuch as Envyings, Hatred, Enmities, Roughneſs, Laſciviouſneſs, Drunkenneſs, have come in their place, the Vices of the Church are increaſed as much as the Members. The Number of Chriſtians is greater, but their Faith is leſs, for where is now the ſingular Beauty of all her Members? Where is the time wherein every one minded not his own things. Further, having deſcribed the eager Deſires which the Chriſtians of his time had to gather great Riches, he confutes the plauſible Reaſons, and ordinary Pretences, which the rich Men made uſe of to excuſe their Deſires of Wealth. The firſt, ſays he, are thoſe that ſay, that the Love which they bear to their Children obliges them to gather Wealth, and get Riches, as if it were impoſſible to love their Children without being rich. Muſt Avarice be the Bond and Knot of Kindneſs? If this be ſo, I muſt not condemn Covetouſneſs, but that Love which inclines you to it. How ſo, do you condemn the Affection which Fathers have for their Children? I am ſo far from that, that I ſay, that we muſt love them above all things, but we muſt love them as God commands us, by giving them a good Chriſtian Education, and making them rich in Virtue and Piety. Salvian after he hath rejected this fooliſh Pretence, by which rich Men attempt to cover their deſire, proves, that it is not allowed to Men to make ſuch uſe of their Riches as they pleaſe; that they are but Stewards of what God hath given them, and he will require an account of the Management, and Uſe they have made of it, and condemn them to eternal Flames for the Miſuſe; That it is dangerous to put off our Converſion, or Alms to the Poor, 'till we come to die, becauſe there is a great likelihood, that we do not abſtain from Sin out of choice, but becauſe we cannot do otherwiſe; That Alms-deeds are of no uſe to them who live ill, and hope to buy off their Sins by the Legacies which they give at their laſt Gaſp, but may be very helpful to thoſe, who, having fallen thro' Frailty or Ignorance, are really touched with a ſincere Repentance, when they know their Fault; That he can ſay nothing of thoſe who continue in their Vices to the laſt Moment; That he can promiſe them nothing; That it were Cruelty indeed to forſake them altogether, and hinder them from applying the laſt Remedies, but it would be alſo raſh to promiſe any thing, ſeeing they offer themſelves ſo late to be cured; That all the Remedies that can be uſed to cure their Sins, is nothing but Almſgiving, which muſt then be applied to them; That they ought to be adviſed to offer their Wealth for the Deliverance of their Soul, but to do it with Tears, Grief, and Sorrow, becauſe God doth not regard the Offering ſo much, as the Diſpoſition of the Heart of him that offereth; That alſo when they offer their Subſtance to God, they muſt do it not with the Confidence of a Perſon that brings a Preſent, but with the Humility of a Debtor who would pay what he owes.

Salvian having thus ſhewn in the firſt Book, that Sinners are obliged to give Alms, he demonſtrates in the ſecond, that this Obligation reaches to the Righteous alſo. 1. Becauſe there is none of all thoſe many Benefits of Nature, or Grace, which we are not beholding to God for, and more eſpecially, for the Death of Jeſus Chriſt. But are then the Widow, Virgin conſecrated to God, the Monk, and Clergy-man, obliged to give all their Goods to the Poor? Did not the Law permit the holy Men to preſerve their Eſtates? The Law, ſaith Salvian, was perfected by the Goſpel, all that was allowed then is not ſo now. Under the Law there was more Liberty, Eating of Fleſh was then commended to us, but now Abſtinence is wholly preached up; there were few faſting Days, now all our Life is a continued Faſt. Revenge was then lawful, but now we muſt ſuffer, &c. Let any Man read the Precepts of the Goſpel. The Apoſtle will not have a Widow to live in Pleaſures and Delights, how can it then be permitted her to be rich? Such Virgins as give but a part of their Goods are Fools, for the Lamp goes out becauſe there is not Oil enough. It is needleſs to demonſtrate, that Clergy-men, and Biſhops, are obliged to reſerve nothing of their Goods to themſelves, ſince it is their part to give an Example to the ignorant Chriſtians, whom they ought as much to ſurpaſs in Devotion, as they do in Degree and Dignity. For the higheſt Place in the Prieſtly Office, without great Worth, is nothing elſe but a Title given to an Office, Dignity to an unworthy Perſon, and as a precious Stone in the Dirt. The Levites of the Old Law had nothing of their own; with how much greater Reaſon is it forbidden to the Miniſters of the New Law to poſſeſs Riches, and leave them to their Heirs. Jeſus Chriſt doth not adviſe them, as he doth others, but he expreſly forbids them having either Gold, or Silver. The Monks are more obliged than others to renounce them entirely, becauſe 'tis their State and Profeſſion. If he doth not beſtow his Goods to atone for our Sins, we muſt give them to buy Heaven; But may we not lay them up for the Neceſſities of Life? I grant we may, ſays Salvian, but then we muſt content our ſelves with what's ſimply neceſſary, and cut off all Superfluities. We ought never to think either of getting Riches, or increaſing them, or be troubled in keeping them. Laſtly, ſome Goods, which we have in this Life, muſt be diſtributed at our Death. That is, to be ſo much our own Enemies, as not to run to the laſt means to obtain Health. But I have Children, may ſome ſay, (here begins Salvian's third Book,) Hear what Jeſus Chriſt ſaith, He that loveth Son or Daughter more than me, is not worthy of me; The Riches which you leave them will nothing avail for their Salvation. But if I owned that the Affection of Parents, who leave their Children ſomething to live on, be excuſable, yet what can we judge of thoſe who are ſollicitous to enrich their collateral Heirs, and give Legacies to rich Men? Oh unhappy Men, as ye are, you are full of carking Thoughts, that you may make others to live at Eaſe when you are dead, and do not think upon your unhappy End You are going to appear before God's Tribunal, the Devils attend you to torment you eternally, and you are thinking on the Pleaſures which your Heirs will have in enjoying the Wealth which you have gotten I do not ſpeak this to hinder Chriſtians altogether from leaving any thing to their lawful Heirs, but to teach them above all things to take Care of their Salvation. There are ſome Caſes in which it is not only juſtly allowable to leave to their Heirs, but it were the greateſt Injuſtice not to do it. As for Example, if a Man leaves his Father, or Mother, Brethren, or Wife, in Neceſſity, if he hath poor Friends, he is obliged to leave them ſomething, and ſo much the more, if they are dedicated to God; although we now do juſt the contrary, and Fathers leave none of their Children leſs than thoſe they have offered to God. But why is it neceſſary to give to the Religious, mayſt thou ſay! How, muſt they be forced to beg their Bread, becauſe they are Religious? It is true, that they need not the things of this World, but no thanks to their Parents, that they are not in want. Their Inhumanity and Hardneſs would reduce them to it, if they had not other Helps. You will demand, what good would it do them to have an equal ſhare of their Father's Eſtate with their Brethren? I anſwer, that it would be uſeful to maintain the other Religious, to impart to thoſe that have nothing; that their Charity may make them not to have it ſoon, but may be more happy in having had it. Why do you reduce them to Poverty againſt their Wills? Suffer them to embrace Poverty voluntarily, to chuſe it out of Devotion, without obliging them to endure it thro' Neceſſity. There are ſome that think it ſufficient to leave the Profits to their Religious Children: This is a kind of Impiety, and Infidelity, ſays Salvian, for beſides that the propriety of their Goods belongs to their Children, this is a way found out to provide for their Children without giving any thing to God. They would have the holy Monks to live in Riches, but die in Poverty. In fine, Salvian after he hath exclaimed much againſt that Abuſe, which is become a kind of Law among us, to leave nothing to the Religious, or only an Allowance for Life; he ſpends the reſt of this Book, and all the fourth in proving, that Men are obliged at their Death to leave a part of their Eſtate to be employed in pious Uſes. Salvian cites one place of theſe Books in his fourth Book, Of the Government of God, which ſhews, that they were written before the Year 440. He alſo gives the reaſon of the Title of theſe Books in his Letter written to Salonius, where he ſays, 1. That he dedicated them to the whole Church, becauſe the Diſorders were general. 2. That he concealed his Name for two Reaſons, for fear it ſhould be an occaſion of Pride, and and upon the account of that ſmall Authority and Eſteem he had, leſt they ſhould hurt the important Truths contained in his Work. 3. That he choſe the Name of Timotheus, according to St. Luke's Example, who took Theophilus's, becauſe that Name may agree to all Men that honour God, and that being fearful of telling a Lye, he aſſumed a Name which agreed to the Deſign of the Work compoſed for the Honour of God. But that it was needleſs Curioſity to ſearch after the Author, becauſe he was not willing to be known. There are beſides theſe, eight Letters of Salvian's, which are all written with a great deal of Elegancy. The beſt of them is that which is written to his Wife's (a) Father and (b) Mother, in his own, their (c) Daughter's, and their (d) little Daughter's Name, to appeaſe the Anger in which their Mother and Father were, becauſe they were retreated, and had conſecrated themſelves to God.

Salvian.

(a) Hypatius.
(b) Palladia.
(c) Quieta.
(d) Auſpiciora.]

It is not neceſſary to commend the Beauty and Elegancy of St. Salvian's Style; it is ſufficiently known to all that have but a little ſmattering of Learning. It would be hard to find a more neat, beautiful, ſmooth, and pleaſant Diſcourſe. He is not ſo diffuſive, but he is more diverting, and full of Inſtructions, than Lactantius; and he proves what he aſſerts by Texts of Scripture, which he alledges much to his purpoſe, and which come up very well to the Subject in hand. He makes very natural Deſcriptions of Vices to create Hatred of them, he produces very plauſible Reaſons to induce Men to forſake them, and he confutes ſolidly and ingeniouſly the idle Pretences which they made uſe of to defend their purſuit of the World. His Morals are ſtrict, without being unreaſonable, but he lays down ſome Principles a little too largely, and which he cannot maintain in their ſtrict Senſe, but it is the common Fault of all, that are too rigid Cenſors of Manners, and it is hard to inveigh ſtrongly againſt a Vice, and not fall into the contrary Extream. Salvian.

There are three Books of Queſtions, [Printed with Salvian at Baſil, and elſewhere,] to reconcile ſome places of the Old and New Teſtament together. Some attribute them to Salvian, but 'tis certain they are not his. [They are commonly imputed to Julian Biſhop of Toledo.]

The Works of Salvian have been printed in the former Age in ſeveral places, as at Baſil in 1530, [with the Notes of Alexander Braſſicanus in Folio] at Paris in 1570, and in 1575, at Rome by Manutius in 1564. M. Pitthæus reviewed them by ſeveral Manuſcripts, and put out a new Edition at Paris in 1580. After him Ritterhuſius cauſed them to be reprinted in 1611, [at Altorf in 2 Vol Octavo] to which he added long Comments. Pitthæus's Edition was again printed in 1645, [and in 1640 at Paris.] Laſtly, M. Baluzius having reviewed them by four Manuſcripts, publiſhed them with ſhort Notes. This Edition which is the laſt, and the beſt, was Printed for Muguet in 1663, [at Paris, where it was reprinted again in 1669, Octavo. Beſides theſe Editions they were Printed at Norimberg in 1623, at Rouan in 1627, Twelves, with Braſſicanus his Notes. At Oxford in 1633, with the aforeſaid Notes.]

ARNOBIUS Junior.

Arnobius, junior.

THE Author of the Commentary upon the Pſalms dedicated to Laurentius, or rather Leontius, and Ruſticus, commonly bears the Name of Arnobius. It is hard to ſay, Whether it be the true Name of this Author, or ſome feigned Name; but however that be, we muſt not confound him with Arnobius the Apologiſt for Religion, this laſt having lived after the Hereſie of Pelagius, in the time when there were ſuch hot Diſputes about Predeſtination. He took part, and ranked himſelf on the ſide of the Prieſts of Marſeilles, againſt the Scholars of St. Auſtine, which makes me think he was a French Man brought up in the Monaſtery of Lerins. The Biſhops to whom he writes are without doubt Leontius of Arles, and Ruſticus Biſhop of Forum-Julii. It appears by what he ſays upon the 105*th*. Pſalm, that he was in the Prieſthood.

His Commentary is extremely ſhort. He applies himſelf to the Allegorical Senſe, and referrs all the Text of the Pſalms to Jeſus Chriſt, and his Church. He doth it with a great deal of Wit and Elegancy, and mixes now and then ſome Moral Obſervations, but his chief deſign is to find in the Pſalms the whole Oeconomy of the Incarnation of Jeſus Chriſt, and particularly the benefits of the Redemption. He ſeems to favour the Error of Pelagius in his Commentary upon the 50*th*. Pſalm, where he ſays, that Man is born ſubject to the Sentence paſſed upon Adam, without partaking in his Sin. Qui naſcitur, ſententiam Adæ habet, peccatum vero non habet. Nevertheleſs he acknowledges, that the Nature of Man is decayed thro' the Sin of the Firſt Man. He owns the effects of Original Sin, and the Neceſſity of Redemption; and he obſerves all along, that we can do nothing without the Divine Help; that it is he that delivers us from our Irregular Motions, who inſtils into us the knowledge of Good, who makes us love it and practiſe it. He goes yet further, and will not have Man attribute any Good Work to himſelf, nor preſume upon the ſtrength of his Free-Will, becauſe the Will, ſays he, upon Pſalm 117, may be over-powered, but God cannot. The Freedom of Man cannot ſay, I have conquered my Enemies, for no Man ever overcame either his viſible, or inviſible Enemies, without the help of God. To God then we owe our Victory, his Almighty Arm works that little Goodneſs that we have in us, he hath the power of Life and Death, he makes us ſing his Divine Praiſes. But altho' he extols the ſtrength of Grace ſo much, yet he oppoſes thoſe that teach Predeſtination, or as he ſays on Pſalm 109. thoſe that have predeſtined ſome to Good, and others to Evil, and deny Free-Will. He maintains, that Grace doth not expel Freedom, but that we may requeſt, pray, knock at the Gate for it, and God will not deny his Grace to thoſe Perſons who do ſo. That there is an Univerſal preventing Grace, which Jeſus Chriſt hath diffuſed upon all Men, which goes before all their deſires, and by the help of which they have recourſe to God for his Special Graces. That their Freedom is not utterly deſtroyed, but yet they muſt impute all the Good they do to God. God commands nothing impoſſible. Men never are guilty of Sin, but when they have no Will to do that thing which they are able to do. God never rejects them who have recourſe to him. Read the Commentaries upon Pſalm 37, 77, 91, 109, 117, 118, and 146. In his Commentary upon the 138*th*. Pſalm he oppoſes the Novatian Hereſie. In the 139*th*. Pſalm he notes, that Excommunication is to terrifie, not deſtroy, becauſe it excludes from Eternal Life. He adds, that Hereticks can have no place in the Kingdom of Heaven becauſe they corrupt the Word of God; and he ſays further, that Biſhops who have no care to feed their Flock with this Divine Word, ſhall be puniſhed in the ſame manner. He ſpeaks of Guardian-Angels in his Commentary upon the 37*th*. Pſalm, and aſſerts, that they with-draw themſelves from Men, when they run into Sin. Arnobius, junior.

This Commentary is not the Style of the Ancient Arnobius, nor written with ſo much clearneſs as it might, but yet the Style is not bad. [It hath been Printed alone at Baſil in 1522, and by Eraſmus at Cologne in 1532, Octavo, and more correct at Paris in 1639. 'Tis extant alſo in Bibliotheca Patrum Tom. 8.]

We have alſo under the Name of Arnobius a Dialogue about the Trinity and Incarnation, [firſt Printed by Feuardentius, at the end of his Edition of St. Iræneus, at Cologne in 1596, and ſince with all Iræneus's Works. 'Tis alſo in Bibliotheca Patrum Tom. 8.] and ſome Notes upon the Goſpel; [Printed at Baſil in 1543, Octavo, and reviewed and amended by Schottus, at Paris in 1639.]

HONORATUS, Biſhop of Marſeilles.

Honoratus of Marſeilles.

Gennadius ſays, that this Biſhop was eloquent, and that he had an excellent Faculty of making Sermons Extempore, for being filled with the fear of God, and well skilled in Eccleſiaſtical Matters, as ſoon as he opened his Mouth Divine Inſtructions flowed from it, as from a Magazine. He compoſed ſeveral Homilies, in which he ſet himſelf eſpecially to explain the Myſteries of Religion, and confute the Hereticks. The People and Clergy came in throngs to hear him, and the other Biſhops deſired him often to come and preach in their Churches. Pope Gelaſius acknowledges under his Hand, that he was ſound in the Faith, and ſhews the great Eſteem he had for him in a Letter. He compoſed the Lives of the Saints for the Edification of the Faithful, and chiefly inſiſts upon the Life of St. Hilary, to whom he was obliged for his Education. He often joined devoutly with his People in the Litanies, to implore the Mercy of God. This is what Gennadius, or ſome other Author of the ſame time, ſays, in Commendation of Honoratus. I ſay, Gennadius, or ſome other Author, becauſe this Clauſe is not to be found in ſome Manuſcripts of Gennadius's Treatiſe of Eccleſiaſtical Authors, and it ſeems not to be his Style. But however that be, it is not to be doubted, but that it was written by ſome Author of that time. Honoratus of Marſeilles.

We have the Life of St. Hilary Biſhop of Arles, but it is queſtionable, whether it be Honoratus's, becauſe in the Manuſcript of the Church of Arles, where it is found, 'tis attributed to Reverentius, Hilary's Succeſſor. There never was a Biſhop of Arles of that Name, but perhaps the Name of Ravennius who was immediate Succeſſor to Hilary, was intended.

tended. Now it is evident, that this Life cannot be his, ſince the Author ſays, that Ravennius was ſent to Rome by St. Hilary, and that afterwards he was his Succeſſor. It is certain, that it was written by one of St. Hilary's Scholars, and why ſhould it not be Honoratus, ſince it is manifeſt he wrote one, and this is very worthy of him? It is excellently well written, and full of very uſeful Maxims. There is nothing in it mean, or childiſh, and the Marks of Truth and Sincerity are viſible quite thro' it, it gives us a full Idea of St. Hilary's Perſon, and lays before us a Platform of a Life becoming a Biſhop. The Author proves what he ſays by the Teſtimonies of thoſe who had ſeen and written to St. Hilary. He recites their very words, as alſo St. Hilary's. Laſtly, it may be ſaid, that it muſt needs be he that wrote the Lives of the Saints. I ſay no more here, becauſe I have made an Extract of it, when I ſpoke of Hilary Biſhop of Arles. [It is Extant in Surius on May the 5th.]

Honoratus of Marſeille. Honoratus of Marſeilli.

SALONIUS and VERANUS.

Salonius and Veranus.

Salonius and Veranus, the Sons of St. Eucherius, were brought up in the Monaſtery of Lerins, under the Government of Honoratus, and Hilary, and inſtructed afterward by Vincentius, and Salvian. They were Biſhops in France, but it is not well known of what City (a), but it is very probable, that they were Biſhops in the Province of the Alps, bordering upon the Mediterranean Sea, of which Ambrun was the Metropolis. They wrote with Ceretius a Letter to St. Leo, to thank him for ſending them a Copy of his Letter written to Flavian. Their Letter is found among St. Leo's Letters. Veranus wrote alſo to this Pope in defence of the Rights of Ingenuus Arch-Biſhop of Ambrun, and received an Anſwer from Hilary, St. Leo's Succeſſor. Salonius was preſent at the Council of Orange held in 441, and Veranus was commiſſioned by Pope Hilary to put St. Leo's Orders in execution, touching the Uniting the Caſtle of Nyſſa to the Church of Cemele. We have under the Name of Salonius an Explication of the Proverbs of Solomon in the form of a Dialogue between himſelf and his Brother Veranus, which clears by Queſtion and Anſwer the Text of this Book of Solomon. He hath alſo a Myſtical Expoſition [of the Book of Eccleſiaſtes] compoſed in the ſame way. The Style of theſe Dialogues is plain, and neat, the greateſt part of his Explications are inclining to Morality. [They are extant in Bibliotheca Patrum Tom 8.]

Salonius and Veranus.

[Ebredunum.*]

(a) It is not well known, &c.] There is no doubt but that they were Biſhops, Salvian ſays, that after they had been his Scholars they became Maſters of the Church. Gennadius alſo ſays, that they were Biſhops, and the Letter written to St. Leo, as well as the Anſwer of Pope Hilarius are Authentick Teſtimonies of their Dignity, but none of the Ancients have taken notice of what City they were Biſhops. Sidonius Apollinaris in Letter 15. Lib. 7. directed to Salonius, tells us, that they inhabited a Country near Vienna, which makes ſome think, that Salonius was Biſhop of Vienna, but he was not then Biſhop when Sidonius wrote that Letter to him. Ado, who hath made a Catalogue of the Biſhops of Vienna, doth not put Salonius among them. Others have believed Salonius and Veranus Biſhops of Lyons ſucceſſively, after their Father St. Eucherius. This Opinion is grounded upon the Catalogues of the Biſhops of Lyons, which are manifeſtly faulty, for after Eutherius, his Sons Salonius and Veranus are placed, and after them Deſiderius who was Biſhop of Vienna, and not of Lyons. Beſides, Salonius ſubſcribed the Council of Orange in 441, as a Biſhop, where St. Eutherius was preſent. Wherefore he was Biſhop of ſome other City in his Father's life-time. The 4th Letter of Pope Hilary informs us, that Veranus had written in favour of Ingenuus Arch-Biſhop of Ambrun, in the Province of the Sea-Alps, and that he was in Commiſſion for the Affairs that concerned the Biſhopricks of that Province, which gives reaſon to conjecture that he was a Biſhop of that Province. This agrees alſo with an Ancient MS. of the Monaſtery of Lerins, where Veranus, who is intitled Biſhop of Vincium, is reckoned among the Saints of that Monaſtery. This is the Judgment of Baralis in his Chronology of Lerins, where he attributes the ſame Biſhoprick to Veranus. It is probable, that Salonius was Biſhop of the ſame Province, as well as Ceretius, ſince they have all three written to St. Leo together, and they ſeem to have done it diſtinctly from the other French Biſhops, for fear only leſt they ſhould prejudice the Rights of their Metropolitan, and their Province, by joining with other Biſhops, who would have them depend on them. It is likewiſe very probable, that Salonius was Biſhop of Geneva, and 'tis of him that it is obſerved in Uſuardus's Martyrology, on September the 28th. Civitate Januis Sancti Salonii Epiſcopi & Confeſſoris; And in other Martyrologies, Genevæ Civitate depoſitio Sancti Salonii. This Name hath been altered in Bede's Martyrology, and hath been made Salomon. Of Salonius is made Salomus, as we find in ſome Manuſcripts, and Salomus hath been changed into Salomon, as it is in the Roman Martyrology. Genua, or Januis, is taken for Genuæ, and that is Geneva. In the Subſcriptions of the Council of Lyons, held in 570, under King Guntheram, we find Epiſcopus Eccleſiæ Genevenſis. If that Subſcription be true, there muſt have been two Biſhops of Geneva of the ſame Name. There was alſo at that time another Salonius Biſhop of Ambrun famous for his Crimes.

PAULINUS PETROCORIUS.

Paulinus Petrocorius.

THere are many Paulinus's in this Age, for beſides the Biſhop of Nola, and Paulinus Scholar of St. Ambroſe, Biſhop of Biterræ, who wrote a Letter, of which Idacius makes mention in his Chronicon upon the Year 420, there was alſo Paulinus Nephew of Auſonius, the Author of a Poem of Thankſgiving to Auſonius, and this Paulinus who hath made ſix Books in Verſe concerning the Life and Miracles of St. Martin. In the Manuſcripts he is called Petricordius, i. e. of Perigueux (as it is now called). F. Sirmondus affirms, that it is Petrocorius, and that Petrocorium ſignifies Beſancon, and ſo thinks that this Paulinus is that Rhetorician who dwelt in that City, of whom Sidonius Apollinaris ſpeaks, L. 28. Ep 11. But this Conjecture is not well ſupported. This Poem hath nothing elegant nor ſublime in it, the Terms are harſh and barbarous, and the Verſes are pitiful, and Story very troubleſome. [It is Publiſhed by Juret at Paris in 1585, under the Name of Paulinus of Nola, and in the Bibliotheca Patrum Printed at Paris. In his own Name it hath been Printed at Leipſick in 1686, Octavo, and in Bibliotheca Patrum Tom. 6.]

Paulinus Petrocorius.

MUSÆUS.

Muſæus.

MUſæus, or Muſſæus, a Prieſt of Marſeilles, was a Man mighty in the Holy Scriptures, who by continual Exerciſe had accuſtomed himſelf to find out unuſual Senſes of it, and make very pertinent Applications. His Style was very polite. At the deſire of Venerius Biſhop of Milan, he ſelected out of Scripture [They are extant in Bern. Guido] proper Leſſons for all the Feſtivals of the Year, with Reſponſes and Pſalms ſuitable to the time, and to the Leſſons. The Neceſſity of this Work is generally acknowledged by all Readers, becauſe when they make uſe of it, it prevents confuſion and delay, and is of great uſe in inſtructing the People, and rendering the Solemnization of the Feaſt more venerable. He hath alſo compoſed and directed to Euſtathius that Holy Man's Succeſſor, a great and elegant Treatiſe of the Sacraments, divided for conveniency ſake into many parts, according to the different Offices, Times, Leſſons, and Pſalms, which are ſung in the Church, but which all along inclines us to pray to God, and thank him for his Benefits.

Muſæus.

This Work ſhews him to be a Man of great Senſe, and very polite Eloquence. 'Tis ſaid alſo that he preached ſome Homilies, [they are loſt, Dr. Cave,] which are, as I underſtand, in ſome pious Men's Hands, but I have never read them. He died in the Reign of the Emperors Leo and Majorian, i. e. about the Year 460. This is what Gennadius tells us of this Author in Ch. 79. of his Book of Eccleſiaſtical Writers.

VIN-

VINCENTIUS.

Vincentius. VIncentius, a Priest of France, but distinct from Vincent the Monk of Lerins, was very well versed in Scripture, and had acquired an Ability of Reading and Writing in a very elegant Style. He hath written a Commentary upon the Psalms; I have heard him read to Cannatus something of this Work in the presence of that Servant of God, and he promised us, that if God gave him Strength and Health, he would do the like upon the whole Psalter. We have taken all this from Gennadius. He places this Author immediately after Musæus. Vincentius.

SYRUS.

Syrus. SYrus, or Cyrus of Alexandria, a Physician by Profession. Of a Philosopher he became a Monk. He knew exactly how to write well. He composed a Treatise against Nestorius, and confuted him with a great deal of Strength and Eloquence but he was carried too far against him, and opposed him rather by Syllogisms, than by Testimonies of Scripture. He also declined to the Judgment of Timotheus, and thought himself not obliged to follow the Council of Chalcedon's definition, which ties to believe, that there are two Natures in Jesus Christ after the Incarnation. He flourished under the Emperor Leo. This is taken out of Gennadius, Ch. 81. for we have not the Treatise it self. Syrus.

SAMUEL.

Samuel. THe Relation which Gennadius gives of this Author, is this: He saith, that Samuel, a Priest of the Church of Edessa, wrote in the Syrian Tongue several Books against the Enemies of the Church, principally against the Nestorians, Eutychians, and Timotheans, all different Hereticks, which he hath often described as a Beast with three Heads, and confutes them by the Doctrine of the Church, and the Authority of Holy Scripture, demonstrating against the Nestorians, that the Word is God-Man, and not a mere Man born of the Virgin; against the Eutychians, That God took real Flesh in the Womb of the Virgin, that he had it not from Heaven, and that his Flesh was not formed out of condensed Air; and against the Timotheans; that the Word was made Flesh, but so that he retained his Substance, as well as the Humanity, its Nature. He was made one Person by the Union, and by the Mixture of the two Natures. He is said to be yet at Constantinople, for it was in the beginning of the Empire of Anthemius, that I heard this News of him, and his Works. Anthemius, began his Reign in the Year of Christ 467. Samuel.

CLAUDIANUS MAMERTUS.

Claudianus Mamertus. CLaudianus Mamertus, a Priest of the Church of Vienna, and Brother of the Bishop of that City, commended by Sidonius Apollinaris, hath composed three Books of the State, or Nature of the Soul, which are found in Biblioth. Patr, [Tom. 6.] Gennadius informs us, that he wrote some other Treatises, and that he is the Author of the Hymn upon the Passion, which begins with these Words, Pange Lingua Glorioſi, which others attribute to Venantius Fortunatus; but besides that Gennadius, and the Ancient Scholiast, restore it to Claudius Mamertus, it likewise appears, that this is that Hymn which Sidonius extols in Ep. 3. Lib. 4. Claudianus Mamertus.

The Books of the Nature of the Soul are a confutation of Faustus Reiensis, who had made a little Book, in which he maintained, that God only is Incorporeal, and that all Creatures, and the Soul of Man it self, are Corporeal. To prove this, he brings the Authority of St. Jerome, and Cassian. Afterwards he makes use of several Reasons. The Soul, says he, is in a Place, it hath its Dimensions. It is therefore Corporeal. Its Thoughts and Fancy can extend themselves to things far distant, but it's Substance is inclosed in the Body, for 'tis that which animates it, and gives it Life. So long as Lazarus's Soul was in his Body he lived, but as soon as it was departed from it, he died, and he received a new Life when Jesus Christ made his Soul return again to his Body. The same may be said of the Soul of Jesus Christ. In a word, how can it be said, that a Substance which is contained in the Flesh, which preserves the Life of it, and that dies by the separation, is not in a place? If the Soul hath not a determinate place, how can it be said that the Souls of Sinners are in Hell, and of Just Men in Heaven? What is that Chaos that separates them? Why are not they also happy? Are not also the Angels in a determinate place? Are they not said to ascend and descend? Lastly, if any Creature be not in a place, it must be said to be every where. Now nothing is in all Places but God. These are the Reasonings, which Faustus of Ries uses in that little Book which he published without putting his Name to it, as Mamertus upbraids him in the beginning of his Confutation. He knew not whose it was, or at least doth not say he did. 'Tis from Gennadius that we learn that it was Faustus's of Ries.

It is evident by Mamertus's Answer, that we have not that Writing perfect, for in the first part he had asserted, that the Divinity suffered in Jesus Christ, not in its own Nature, but by a compassionate Sense. This Mamertus confutes in the first place, shewing that that Expression is false and new, because it cannot be said in any Sense, that the Divinity of Jesus Christ hath endured Grief, altho' it may be asserted by Reason of the Unity of the two Natures in one Person, that God suffered. In the next place he proves, that the Soul is Incorporeal, because it was made in the Image of God. He confesses, that all things that are invisible, are not spiritual, and gives for an Example of it, the Judgment of the Senses, which is invisible, but he asserts, that the Bodily Sense is of the same Nature with the Elements, whereas the Soul doth not depend upon them, nor was formed out of them, but enlivens the matter. To confute the Objections of the Book which he undertakes to answer, he says, that every thing that is incorporeal is not uncreated; that the Angels have Bodies really, but they have also a Spirit and Soul. He maintains, that St. Jerome, and the Philosophers likewise, were of the same Opinion, when they held, that Men after the Resurrection would be exactly like the Angels, because they would have a Body as thin and subtile as theirs, and a Soul. He wonders, that any Christians should be so very dull as to imagine, that they shall see God with their Bodily Eyes. Having made some such like Observations, he comes to the great difficulty. The Soul is in the Body, it is in a place, Ergo, 'Tis extended and consequently corporeal. He demands of his Adversary in what part of the Body it is. Is it in the whole, and in every part? If it be in all the Body, why doth it exercise its thoughts in one place only? If it may be divided into parts, why doth it not lose its strength when any Member is cut off? This he says to entangle his Enemy. But he must answer the difficulty, and for the perfect resolution of it he distinguishes Motion into three sorts, Stable, Local, and that which is performed in no place. The first agrees to God only, the second to Corporeal Creatures, and the last is that which is proper to Spiritual Creatures. God wills always the same thing, this is a Stable Motion; A Body moves from one place to another, this is a Local Motion; the Soul chuses a thing, and again refuses it, sometimes loves, sometimes hates, is sometimes Humble, sometimes Proud, sometimes Merry, sometimes Sad, &c. These are the Motions of a Creature which are not Local: The effects are perceived in a place, but they are not done in a place. As for example, If a Man thinks upon a Mathematical Figure, and to write some Name, his Soul contemplates the immutable Idæas of these things, his Arm and Hand writes them on the Paper by a Local Motion. 'Tis not his Soul that is Locally moved, but without it his Arm could not perform so regular Motions. You will say, perhaps, that it is that part of the Soul which is in the Arm that is Locally moved; if that be so, then the Soul is divisible. Now that can't be, for all things that can be divided, may be handled by Parts, and act according to their Parts. Now the Soul acts altogether in all its Motions, it has neither length, nor breadth, nor heighth; it is neither moved upwards nor downwards, nor in a circle; it hath neither inward nor outward parts; it thinks, perceives, and imagines, in all its substance; it is all Understanding, Sense, and Imagination; and in a Word, we may name the Quality of the Soul, but no Man knows how to express the Quantity of it. Wherefore 'tis neither extended, nor in a place. Claudianus Mamertus.

Claudianus Mamertus.

Having thus ſettled the Nature of the Soul of Man, he ſhews how it differs from the Soul of Beaſts, and Plants. The main difference is this, that theſe laſt have no knowledge. The Beaſt may have the Images of Bodies impreſſed on their Brain, but they know them not, nor know the things themſelves, whereas the Soul of Man knows things Corporeal by the Body, and Spiritual without a Body; ſometimes it doth not apply it ſelf to things which make an impreſſion upon its Body. I read, another hears me, and underſtands what I read, but I my ſelf, if my Mind be elſewhere, know not what I have read. My Soul is preſent to make me perceive the Letters, but not to make me underſtand what I read.

But may ſome ſay, the Subſtance of the Soul is one thing, its Operation is another. You are miſtaken in confounding the Thoughts of the Soul with the Subſtance of the Soul. The Soul is ſometimes without Thoughts; beſides, when the Soul thinks, 'tis in the Body, and by the Body that it thinks. They are the Corporeal Images of Objects that make it think, and it would never remember any thing if theſe Images were not impreſſed upon the Brain. This is as far as the difficulty can be urged. But Mamertus gives ſuch an Anſwer as leaves no intricacy behind it. The Soul, ſaith he, is not different from the Thoughts, altho' the things, upon which the Soul thinks, are different from the Soul it ſelf. It is not true, that the Soul is at any time without thoughts; it can very eaſily change its thoughts, but to be without is impoſſible, and it is wholly there where its thoughts are fixed, becauſe it is all Thought. You are miſtaken in diſtinguiſhing the powers of the Soul from the Soul it ſelf; altho' it be accidental to it to think upon this or that Object, yet its Eſſence is, that it is a thinking Subſtance. The ſame is to be ſaid of the Will, it is by accident that it chuſes this, or that, but its Subſtance is to will. It is all Thought, all Will, all Love. It is ſaid of God, that he is Love, but he is Eſſentially Love, Eſſentially loving that which is Good. The Soul is alſo Love, but ſuch a Love as can incline it ſelf to God, or the Creatures, to Good or Evil. But upon whatſoever Object it is fixed, it is always truly ſaid, that the Soul is all Love, no ſuch thing can be found in the Body. Now to prove, that the Thoughts of the Soul do not depend on the Body, and are not Corporeal, our Author makes uſe of ſome Examples in Geometry. We conceive, ſaith he, what a Point, Line, Circle, and perfect Triangle is; Can the Corporeal Figures of theſe things be repreſented? They never have been, and never will be. Yet the Soul conceives them, and knows the Properties of them. The Soul knows its Thoughts, its Deſires, its Love. Is this done by any Corporeal Image? No certainly, it is the inward Truth, which ſpeaks to it, which makes us underſtand, that the Thought is diſtinct from the Speech. Laſtly, the Soul enquires after God, knows him, Hath it any Image of the Divine Nature but it ſelf?

Theſe are the Principles which Mamertus hath laid down in his firſt Book concerning the Subſtance of the Soul. I have added nothing, but kept my ſelf almoſt always to his Words, which I think fit to remark, becauſe his Philoſophy hath ſo great a reſemblance to the Meditations of a Famous Modern Philoſopher, that I may ſeem to have this rather from him than Mamertus, or at leaſt that I have put ſome new Air upon it. But 'tis no ſuch thing, 'tis the Truth it ſelf, which cauſes this Agreement between two Philoſophers. They had both of them rational and exact Minds, they followed the ſame train of Thoughts, and having freed themſelves from all Natural and Childiſh Prejudices, they found out the true Nature of the Soul, and the Adequate Idæa of a Spiritual Subſtance. The only difference between them is, that Mamertus enlarges upon, proves, and throughly diſcuſſes thoſe Principles, which this Modern Philoſopher contents himſelf to propound as Truths well enough known. He doth not relie upon what he hath ſaid in his firſt Book, but confirms his Arguments in the ſecond and third Book. In the ſecond he examines more at large, what he had aſſerted in the firſt, that the Soul had neither Weight nor Meaſure according to Quantity, but according to Quality. He proves this to be the Opinion of the Heathen Philoſophers, the greateſt part of whom he maintains to have thought the Soul Incorporeal. He adds the Teſtimony of the Eccleſiaſtical Writers, and cites in particular St. Ambroſe, St. Auſtine, and St. Jerome. He owns, that St. Hilarius Pictavienſis did not favour his Opinion, becauſe he hath written, that that all Creatures were Corporeal, and believed that Jeſus Chriſt had not ſuffered: Yet in his defence, he ſaith, that he did extinguiſh the Crime by the Vertue of Confeſſion, and tho' theſe places of his Writings might be reproved, yet that did not leſſen his Worth. He quotes St. Eucherius with Applauſe, and ſpeaks contemptibly of his Adverſaries. Laſtly, he proves the Soul to be an Immortal Spirit from Texts of Holy Scripture.

In the laſt Book he explains the other Difficulties that ſtill remained. It was objected, that the Soul is contained in the Body, and conſequently, is in a place. He demands how it can be, that the Soul ſhould be in the Body, and yet penetrate all parts of the Body. Is it without, and not within? Or is it within, and not without? Or is it within, and without? It is harder to reſolve, than to underſtand, how a Spirit can move a Body locally, altho' it be not locally in the Body. But how, may ſome ſay, can the Soul be in a place, and not be there locally? I ask you, whether the World be in a place, or not? If you ſay, that it is in a place, you will be obliged to tell, what that place is. Is it in the World, or not? If it be out of the World, where is it? You are then obliged to hold, that the World is infinite, or ſay, that it is in no place. But how, ſay they, that the Soul of Jeſus Chriſt departed from his Body after his Death, if it were not in his Body as in its place? If this be a good conſequence, ſaith Mamertus, we muſt alſo aſſert, that the Divinity of Jeſus Chriſt was alſo in his Body as in a place, becauſe it was no longer united to the Body of Jeſus Chriſt. The Angels have Bodies, by which they become viſible. The Devils have one, by which they ſuffer. Theſe Bodies are not borrowed, but their own proper Bodies, yet they have alſo ſpiritual Souls. Laſtly, to reſolve the laſt Objection, that the Souls of the Wicked are in Hell, and the Souls of the Juſt in Heaven, he ſays, if this ought to be underſtood of different places, how could Abraham and Dives hear and talk to one another? How could he ſee Lazarus in Abraham's Boſom? Hell and Paradiſe ought not to be thought different places, but different Conditions. The Juſt and the Unjuſt may be locally in the ſame place, but their State is not at all altered. The Soul ſees things incorporeal, which are not locally preſent with it, yet diſcerns not things corporeal, which are united to it, when it cannot make uſe of the bodily Eyes to ſee them. Nothing is more nearly joined to the Soul, than the Heart, Bowels, or the Brain, and yet doth it ſee them?

Claudianus Mamertus.

But ſome may ſay, that the Soul is corporeal in the Eyes of God, but ſpiritual in its own Eyes. This is a falſe Diſtinction, ſaith our Author, for either it is ſpiritual, or corporeal. If it be ſpiritual, God knows it to be ſuch; if it be corporeal, it knows its ſelf to be ſuch, as it really is.

And what is the Concluſion of the whole? That Man is compounded of two Subſtances, the one ſpiritual, the other corporeal; the one immortal, the other mortal, that is, a Soul and a Body. This is alſo the Concluſion of Claudianus Mamertus, who at the end of his Treatiſe hath ſummed up all he had ſaid in theſe ten Principles following.

I. God is incorporeal; the Soul of Man is the Image of God, which it could not be, if it were not ſpiritual.

II. Whatſoever is not in a place is incorporeal: The Soul is the Life of the Body; this Life is equally in all, and every part of the Body. Therefore the Soul is in no place.

III. The Soul thinks, and its Nature is to think; Thinking is an incorporeal thing, and is in no place, Ergo, the Soul is incorporeal.

IV. The Will is of the Subſtance of the Soul, all the Soul wills, it is all Will; the Will is not a Body, Ergo, the Soul is not a Body.

V. The Memory is not in a place, it is not extended; the great number of things which it remembers, doth not make it bigger, nor the ſmall number leſſen it; it remembers corporeal things after an incorporeal manner. The whole Soul remembers, 'tis all Memory, Ergo, it is not a Body.

VI. The Body cannot be ſmitten but in that place only that is affected; the Soul feels all at once, when any part of the Body is touched, Ergo, this Senſation is in no place, and by conſequence is ſpiritual as well as the Soul that feels.

VII. The Body neither draws near to, nor departs from God; it approaches to, or removes from other Bodies. Now the Soul draws near to, or departs from God; it comes not near, nor goes far from Bodies locally, Ergo, it is not a Body.

VIII. The Body moves in a place, and changes its place. The Soul moves not it ſelf after that manner, Ergo, it is not a Body.

IX. Bodies are extended in length, breadth, and thickneſs. The Soul hath none of theſe Properties.

X. All Bodies have ſeveral Sides, the right Side, the left Side, the upper Side, the under Side, the fore Side, the back Side, all this doth not agree to the Soul, Ergo, it is incorporeal.

This Book is dedicated to Sidonius Apollinaris, who recompenſes the great Honour Mamertus did him, by the large Encomium he gives the Author, and his Work. He preferrs him above all the Writers of that time. He commends him as the moſt able Philoſopher, and learneſt Man, which was then among the Chriſtians. He ſays, that he was an abſolute Maſter of all the Sciences; that the Purity of his Language equalled, or ſurpaſſed Terence's, Varro's, Pliny's, &c. That he knew how to uſe terms of Logick eloquently; that his ſhort and conciſe way of Writing contained the moſt deep Learning in a few Sentences, and he expreſſed the greateſt Truths in a few Words. That his Style was not ſwelled with empty Hyperboles, and did not degenerate into a contemptible Flatneſs. In fine, he ſcruples not to compare him with the moſt eminent Philoſophers, moſt eloquent Orators, and moſt learned Fathers of the Church. He judges, ſaith he, like Pythagoras, he divides like Socrates, he explains like Plato, he puzzles like Ariſtotle, he delights like Æſchines, Claudianus Mamertus.

Æschines, he stirs up the Passions like Demosthenes, he diverts with a pleasing Variety like Hortensius, he embroils like Cethegus, he excites like Curio, he appeases like Fabius, he feigns like Crassus, he dissembles like Cæsar, he advises like Cato, he dissuades like Appius, he persuades like Cicero. And if we will compare him to the Fathers of the Church, he instructs like St. Jerome, he overthrows Error like Lactantius, he maintains the Truth like St. Austine, he elevates himself like St. Hilary, he speaks also as fluently, and as intelligibly, as St. Chrysostome, he reproves like St. Basil, he comforts like St. Gregory Nazianzen, he is copious like Orosius, and as urgent as Rufinus, he relates a Story as well as Eusebius, he excites as St. Eucherius, he stirs up like Paulinus, he holds up as St. Ambrose.

Although all these Commendations are excessive, yet we must own, that this Treatise of Mamertus is very well written, and that he hath joined a great deal of Elegancy with his great Acuteness, and that he handles the most Metaphysical Questions with all the Clearness and Pleasantness possible. But that which is most worthy of Commendation in him, is the Fitness of his Arguments, and Subtlety of his Wit, by which he hath discovered and explained such very abstruse Truths, as most others have hardly so much as taken notice of.

Sidonius also commends a Poem of Mamertus's, and gives it these Praises, It is, says he, solid, witty, pleasant, lofty, and far excelling all sorts of Verses of that Nature, as well for the Elegancy of the Poetry, as for the Truth of the History. It is plainly the Hymn Of the Passion, which begins with Pange Lingua Glorioſi, of which he speaks, as the following Description of it sufficiently evidences. He speaks as highly of it as possible, and wonderfully extols its Beauty. And indeed it is no marvel, being an Orator, and Mamertus's special Friend. The last of these Qualities taught him to spy out those Excellencies in Mamertus's Books, which others would not perceive, and the first gave him freedom and easiness to render them both admirable and credible to others.

No fitter Person could have been pitched upon to make his Epitaph, so well hath he acquitted himself, and hath not omitted any Epithet which could well be bestowed upon him, [as you may see,

Claudianus Mamertus.

Germani Decus, & Dolor Mamerti,
Mirantum Unica Gemma Episcoporum,
Hoc dat Cespite membra Claudianus,
Triplex Bibliotheca quo Magistro,
Romana, Attica, Christiana fulsit,
Quam tota Monachus virente in ævo,
Secretâ bibit Institutione,
Orator, Dialecticus, Poeta,
Tractator Geometra Musicusque,
Doctus solvere vincla quæstionum,
Et Verbi gladio secare Sectas
Si quæ Catholicam fidem lacessunt.]

The Honour and Grief of his Brother. The Pearl of Bishops. A threefold Library, Greek, Latin, and Christian. He hath joined Divinity with prophane Sciences. An Orator, Logician, Poet, Writer, Geometrician, Musician; Expert in resolving Difficulties, opposing Heresies, and in composing Hymns and Psalms in Honour of our Saviour.

Altho' he was but a Priest, he performed the Office of a Bishop, his Brother had the Honour, but he had the Burden of a Bishoprick. Thus much Friendship, and a Poetick Faculty, enabled Sidonius to speak of Mamertus his Friend, who had certainly a large share of those Accomplishments which he attributes to him, tho' it may be he possessed them not in so excellent a Degree, as he describes him. We have also a Poem of his, wherein he shews, that Christian Poets ought to abandon prophane Subjects, and sing sacred Histories, and holy Things.

PASTOR.

Pastor.

Pastor the Bishop hath composed a little Book in the form of a Creed, which contains in Sentences all that a Christian ought to believe. Among the Errors, which he condemns, without naming the first Teachers of them, he accurseth the Priscillianists with their Head. It is Cum ipso Auctoris Nomine, with the very Name of the Author: I believe, it should be Prætermisso Autoris Nomine, The Author's Name being left out.

Pastor.

VOCONIUS.

Voconius.

Voconius, as Gennadius calls him, or Buconius, according to Honorius, and Trithemius, Bishop of Castellanum a City of Mauritania has written against the Enemies of the Church, Jews, Arians, and other Hereticks. He hath also composed an Excellent Work upon the Sacraments, and other Religious Mysteries.

Voconius.

EUTROPIUS.

Eutropius.

Eutropius the Priest hath written two Letters to two Sisters, very devout Servants of J. C. who had been disinherited by their Parents, [for their Love to Religion, and Vowing a Single Life] in which he comforts them for that loss. These Letters are written with a great deal of Wit and Elegancy. In them he makes use not only of Reasons, but also Testimonies of Holy Scripture to comfort them. This is what Gennadius says of this Author, whom we must beware not to confound with Eutropius, who has made the Abridgment of [the Roman] History. This of whom we are speaking, was the Scholar of Saint Austine.

Eutropius.

EVAGRIUS.

Evagrius.

THis Evagrius, a distinct Person from Evagrius of Pontus, is by Gennadius reckoned among the Ecclesiastical Writers of the V Age. He attributes to him a Disputation between a Jew named Simon, and a Christian called Theophilus, which was very well known in his time, but is now lost.

Evagrius.

TIMOTHEUS.

Timotheus

Timotheus the Bishop hath written a Book of the Nativity of our Lord, according to the Flesh, which he believes to have happened on the Feast of Epiphany, as Gennadius informs us Chapter 58.

Timotheus

EUSTATHIUS.

Eustathius

THis Eustathius hath translated nine of St. Basil's Homilies upon the beginning of Genesis into Latin, and dedicated his Translation to his Sister Syncletica, who was a Deaconess. Cassiodorus says, that his Version equals the Original in Elegancy. Sedulius commends this Syncletica in the Preface to his Book of Easter. Junilius, Cassiodorus, Bede, and Sigibertus mention this Translation, which is to be found among the Latin Works of St. Basil.

Eustathius

THEODULUS.

Theodulus. THeodulus, a Prieſt in Cæloſyria is ſaid to have written many Works. Gennadius tells us Chapter 91. that he had never ſeen but one of his Books, which he compoſed about the agreement of the Scriptures of the Old and New Teſtament againſt thoſe ancient Hereticks, who obſerving a difference between the Commands and Ceremonies, held; that the God of the Old Teſtament was not the God of the New. He ſhews, that it was by a Diſpenſation of Providence, that God had given to the Jews by Moſes, a Law incumbred with Ceremonies and Judicial Statutes, and to us another by Jeſus Chriſt, made up of ſacred Myſteries and Promiſes of future good things; but for all this we muſt not look upon them as diſtinct; that it was the ſame Spirit that dictated them, and the ſame Author that eſtabliſhed them, and that the Old Law, which brings Death, being obſerved in the Literal Senſe, beſtows Life being underſtood Spiritually. This Author dy'd three Years ſince, under the Empire of Zeno. Zeno ended in 490. Gennadius wrote in 493. There is in the Bibliotheca Patrum, [Tom. 8.] a Commentary upon St. Paul's Epiſtles, which bears the Name of Theodulus, but it can't be his, becauſe it ſpeaks of Æcumenius and Photius, who lived a long time after. It is an Abridgment of Æcumenius's Catena. Theodulus.

EUGENIUS.

Eugenius. EUgenius Biſhop of Carthage and Confeſſor, being ſummoned by Hunnericus King of the Vandals to explain the Faith of the Church, and the true ſignification of the Word, Conſubſtantial, made a Treatiſe of the Faith, approved by all the Biſhops, and all the Orthodox Confeſſors of Africa, Mauritania, Sardinia, and Corſica, in which he confirms the true Faith, not only by the Authorities of the Scripture, but alſo by ſeveral paſſages of the Fathers. This Book was preſented by his Fellow Biſhops, when he was in Baniſhment, becauſe he had ſo freely confeſſed the Faith as a Good Paſtor. He left behind him ſome Letters to his Flock to ſtrengthen them in the Faith, into which they were baptized. He alſo ſent in Writing the Diſputes, which he had had with the Arian Biſhops by Proxie, and conveyed them to Hunnericus by the Steward of his Houſhold. He alſo offered a Petition in form of an Apology to that Prince, endeavouring to obtain Peace for the Chriſtians. He is ſaid to be yet alive, and to continue his Service to the Church, by confirming the Faithful. The Treatiſe of Eugenius to Hunnericus is found in the third Book of the Hiſtory of Victor Vitenſis; [as alſo in Tom. 4. of the Councils, and in Bibliotheca Patrum Tom. 8.] and Gregory in his ſecond Book of his Hiſtory of France recites one of his Letters written to the Church of Carthage. Eugenius.

CEREALIS.

Cerealis. CErealis, an African * Biſhop, being required by Maximinian a Biſhop of the Arians in Africk, to explain and confirm the Catholick Faith by a few Texts of Holy Scripture, having implored the Divine Aſſiſtance, gave a Satisfactory Anſwer to his Demand, by propounding a clear proof of the Faith of the Church, not only in a few Texts of Scripture, as Maximinian had demanded of him, but alſo in a greater number, taken out of the Old and New Teſtament, and made one Book of them. This Writing is in the Bibliotheca Patrum [Tom. 8. and in the Hæreſiologia, printed at Baſil in 1556.] Cerealis.

* Epiſcopus Caſtulenſis, vel Caſtello ripenſis. C.

SERVUS DEI.

Servus Dei. THe Biſhop Servus Dei hath Written againſt thoſe that ſay, that Jeſus Chriſt did not ſee his Father in this Life with his bodily Eyes, until after his Reſurrection from the Dead and Aſcenſion, when he was tranſlated into the Glory of his Father; and that that Viſion was the Reward of his Sufferings. He ſhews, I ſay, againſt theſe Opinions as well by Teſtimonies of Holy Scripture, as by Rational Argument; that our Lord Jeſus Chriſt did always ſee the Father and Holy Spirit with his bodily Eyes, from the very time of his Conception by the Holy Ghoſt, and Birth of the Virgin; and that this Privilege was granted him upon the account of the intimate Union that there was between the Humane and Divine Nature. This is all Gennadius ſaith of this Author. The Common Opinion of Divines is, that the Humane Nature of Jeſus Chriſt did always enjoy the clear Viſion of God, which they call the Beatifick Viſion; but they do not believe, that he ſaw him with his bodily Eyes. The Viſion of God is Spiritual, in which the bodily Eyes have no ſhare. It is alſo queſtion'd, whether they may not be able to do it, thro' the infinite power of God. If this Author believed, that Jeſus Chriſt ſaw the Divine Nature with his bodily Eyes, he muſt be very groſs in his conceptions. St. Auſtine had confuted him long before, but it may be he will ſay, as the Schoolmen do, and underſtand by the bodily Eyes, the humane intellectual Faculty in Jeſus Chriſt. Servus Dei.

IDACIUS.

alias Hidatius. IDacius of Lamecum in Gallicia, Biſhop of Auguſti-Lucus (a) the Metropolis of the ſame Province, hath made a Chronicle, in which he continues St. Jerome's to his own time. It begins at the firſt Year of Theodoſius the Great, and ends at the eleventh Year of the Reign of Leo, and contains the Hiſtory, or rather a Chronicle of 86 Years, from the Year 381, to 467. To the Year 437 it is made up of the Writings and Hiſtories of others, but from that time of his own Obſervations. In this Chronicle he ſets down the moſt conſiderable Events of the Empire, the Years, and Alterations of the Emperors, the Names and Years of the Popedom of the Biſhop of Rome, and particularly the Eccleſiaſtical and prophane Hiſtory of his own Country. He makes uſe of three Epochas; The firſt is of the Years of the World according to Euſebius; the ſecond is the Spaniſh Æra, which begins 37 Years before the Nativity of Chriſt, and the laſt is of the Olympiads, which he brings lower than Socrates, who makes them to end in 440. We may ſee there the Years of the Emperors. This Chronicle is in a rough and barbarous Style, but eaſie enough to be underſtood. Canaſius and Scaliger had printed ſome Fragments of it, but F. Sirmondus hath publiſhed it entire in 1619, [Octavo at Paris out of a MS. in the Jeſuits Library of the College of Clermont, which came from Metz. It had been already printed at Rome before him, ſince 'tis inſerted in Euſebius's Chronicon. alias Hidatius.

F. Sirmondus found in the ſame MS. a very exact Computation of Years by the Conſuls, which begins with the Year 269, and ends at 423. It is thought to belong to the ſame Idacius, not only becauſe it is in the ſame MS, but becauſe they are very like to one another in Style and Chronology. F. Labbe hath alſo publiſhed the ſame ſince, under the Name of Idatius, but much enlarged; for they begin at the Conſulſhip of Brutus and Collatinus, which was in the 245 Year from the Building of Rome, and end in the ſecond Conſulſhip of Anthemius, that is to ſay, at the Year 468, where alſo Idacius's Chronicle ends. [Both are extant in Biblioth. Patr. Tom. VII.]

(a) Of Auguſti-Lucus.] He obſerves in the Preface, that he was born ex Lemica Civitate, and was Biſhop in Gallicia, and ſays likewiſe, that he was preferred to that Dignity in the third year of Valentinian III. but doth not tell us of what City. They who ſpeak of him, have ſuppoſed that he was Biſhop of the ſame City where he was born, but what he notes upon the 310 Olympiad, that he was taken in the Church, which he had called Aqua Flavienſis, when Auguſti-Lucus was pillaged, ſhews, that he was Biſhop of that City, for Aqua Flavia, is not a Biſhoprick but a Church ſubject to Auguſti-Lucus. St. Leo ſpeaks of this Biſhop in his Letter to Turribius, or rather to the Synod of Gallicia, heretofore the 93, now the 15th; and he gives him an Anſwer in the following Letter.

VICTO-

VICTORIUS.

Victorius. Victorius born at Lemovicum a City of Aquitain, an exact Chronologer, made in the Year 457 at the desire of Hilary, then Arch-deacon, and after Bishop of Rome, a new Paschal Cycle wonderfully curious. It was for 532 Years, because according to his Calculation, at the end of that time Easter-day ought to fall upon the same day of the Month, and of the Moon, on which it happened in the Year of the Death of Jesus Christ. Bucherius the Jesuit published this Cycle in 1634, [in Fol. at Antwerp,] corrected it in many places, and explained it by a learned Commentary. He hath put before it a Letter of Hilary to Victorius, and a Preface of his own. This Author was the first among the Christians, who made use of the space of 19 Years for the Cycle of the Moon.* His Cycle begins at the Year 73, which is the 28 of the common account, and ends at the Year 559 of the same Æra inclusively. It contains 8 Columns. In the first are the Names of the Cos. In the second are set down the Numbers of the Years of his Revolution. In the third are observed the Leap-years. The fourth shews upon what day of the Week the first day of every year falls, which is instead of the Dominical Letter, that was not yet found out. The fifth notes how old the Moon was upon the same day, this is instead of the Epact. The sixth shews, on what day Easter-day falls. The seventh discovers the Age of the Moon on that day. The last contains the Indictions. Bucherius hath added the Golden Number, and hath marked in another Table by the Side of the Years of World, according to Eusebius, the Years of the Vulgar Æra, the Cycles of the Moon and Sun, the Years of the Epocha of the Building of Rome according to Varro, the true Order of the Consulships, and the Years of the Roman Emperors. This Cycle hath been very famous. The fourth Council of Orleans held in 541, decreed, that all Bishops should make use of it in ordering the Celebration of Easter. It is commended by Gennadius, Cassiodorus, Gregory Bishop of Tours, St. Isiodore of Sevil, and many others. We know nothing particular of the Life of the Author of it. Victorius.

* Now called the Golden Number.

GENNADIUS Patriarch of Constantinople.

Gennadius. Gennadius was chosen Patriarch of Constantinople in the room of Anatolius, in the year 458. He nominated one Marcian, who had been heretofore a Montanist, to be Receiver of the Church of Constantinople. This was that Receiver, if we may believe Theodorus, who ordered, that the Clergy of every Church, should distribute among themselves the Oblations made to their Church, whereas before they belonged to the Patriarchal Church. But it was not only the Receiver of Gennadius, that made this Reformation in the Church of Constantinople. This Patriarch also laboured much in it. He held in 459 a Synod, in which he revived the Decrees made against Simoniacal Persons. He made also a Law, that no Priest should be ordained who could not say the Psalter by heart. 'Twas in his time, that Studius built the Monastery of the * Acæmetæ at Constantinople, and dedicated it to St. John [Baptist.] Gennadius died in the year 471. He had been advertized of his Death some time before by a Ghost, which appeared to him while he was at Prayers in the Church by Night, and foretold him the great trouble that should befal his Church after his Death. Gennadius, a Priest of Marseilles, reckons this Patriarch among the Ecclesiastical Writers, and says, that he had an elegant Style, and a brisk Wit, that he was grown very learned by reading the Ancients, that he had composed a literal Comment upon Daniel, and that he had made some Homilies. We have none of his Works, but there are preserved only two Fragments of this Gennadius, the one recited by Facundus, Lib. 2, c. 4. and the other by Leontius in his Treatise of common places about the Original of Souls. We do not know out of what Book the first is taken. It is a Declamation against St. Cyril, which seems to be taken out of a Letter written against St. Cyril's 12 Chapters. 'Unhappy I, saith he, who live in a time, when 'the Church is afflicted with so great Evils? Alas! Alas! 'for from whence doth it proceed but from hence in the 'time, wherein we are? How much have I heard of the 'Blasphemies of Cyril of Ægypt? Wo to the Scourge of 'Alexandria, this is the second. Can we sufficiently lament 'it, that he hath been corrupted himself, and that he hath 'corrupted others. He hath cast forth all manner of Blasphemies against the holy Fathers, the Apostles, yea against Jesus 'Christ himself. He destroys the human Nature, that the Word 'assumed from us, and for us, and would make that Nature 'subject to Sufferings that is impassible.' Facundus also recites the beginning of the Confutation of the first of St. Cyril's Chapters, wherein he shews as much passion. Gennadius must needs write this when he was very young, in the time of those hot Contests between St. Cyril, and the Oriental Bishops. Gennadius.

The second Passage of Gennadius is taken out of the second Book to Parthenius; it is cited by Leontius in his common places about the Original of the Soul. We do not here speak of the Letter against Simoniacal Persons, because it is a Synodical Letter, which shall be found among the Acts of the Councils.

* The watching Monks because one third part of them was always serving God. Ἀκοίμηται.

ANTIPATER of Bostra.

Antipater. This Author flourished about the end of the fifth Age. He wrote a * Confutation of Eusebius's Apology for Origen, divided into several Discourses. A Fragment of it is cited in the Acts of the second Council of Nice, Act. V. Tom. 7. of the Councils, p. 367, where he owns, that Eusebius was very skilful to write History; but maintains, that he was not expert in handling Doctrinals. He blames him for defending the Opinion of Origen, concerning the Præ-existence of Souls, and the Subjection of the Son of God in respect of his Father. Leo Allatius mentions a Sermon of this Author's upon St. John Baptist. Diatriba, de Simeon, p. 89. Antipater.

* Ἀντίπατρος.

HILARUS or HILARIUS Bishop of Rome.

Hilarius. Hilarus, or rather Hilarius (a) an Arch-Deacon of the Church of Rome in the Popedom of St. Leo, was one of the Legates, which this Pope sent into the East about the Affair of Eutyches. He was present in that quality in the Sham-Council of Ephesus, and because he would not consent to the Condemnation of Flavian, he made his escape into Italy. It was at this time, that he wrote his first Letter to Pulcheria the Empress, in which he lets her know, that the Pope and all the Western Bishops disallowed all that was done in the Council. He remained in the Office of an Arch-Deacon till the Death of St. Leo. We have a Letter of his written in 457 to Victorius, in which he desires the resolution of such difficulties, as arose about Easter-day. This Letter, as we have said, is at the beginning of Victorius's Paschal Cycle.

Arch-Deacons having had a share in the Government of the Church, it hath been thought, that no fitter Person could be chosen to succeed the Bishop than they: Upon which account it is, that they have ordinarily been pitched upon. Hence it was, that after the Death of St. Leo, Hilarius was chosen into his Place. He was ordained November 17. in the Year 461. We have a Letter of his to Leontius Bishop of Arles, dated Jan. 25. Anno. 462. wherein he tells him of his Election, and desires him to let all the Bishops of his Country know it, that they may joyn their Prayers with his for the Good of the Universal Church. This Letter is unfitly put in the 5th, place, since it is dated before any that Hilary wrote, when he was Bishop. He therein put him in mind, that those who are Observers of Tradition, are sensible what respect hath been given all along to St. Peter and his See. Leontius, to whom this Letter is written, before he received it, had written a Letter to Pope Hilary, which he sent by Pappolus, seeking the Pope's favour, that he might procure his own Settlement in all those Hilarius.

(a) OR rather Hilarius.] He is commonly called Hilarus, and so his Name is found written in the ancient Marble Inscriptions. He is named in St. Leo's Letters, and in that of Nicholas first, to the Emperor Michael. Hilarius Marcellinus, in his Chronicon calls him after the same manner. 'Tis probable, that he is called Hilarus corruptly only.

Hilarius. Rights, which St. Leo had attempted to take from the Biſhop of Arles. Hilary returned him a very obliging Anſwer, telling him that he had written to him already, doing thereby as the Ordinary Cuſtom, and Mutual Charity required of him. He ſent him likewiſe a Copy of the preceding Letter, to ſhew him that he had not been defective in his Duty. He tells him, that he hoped to have a frequent Correſpondence with him by Letter, and promiſes that he will obſerve the Canons, and uſe his utmoſt power to cauſe others to obſerve them, and to procure the Peace and Agreement of all the Biſhops. This Letter, which is the fifth, is without date, but it ſeems to be written ſoon after the former.

Hilarius ſoon gave proof of his Care and Vigilance. A Perſon named Hermes, a Man unworthy of the Prieſthood, had procured himſelf to be ordained Biſhop of Biterræ, and being thruſt out of that Biſhoprick, he uſurped the Dioceſs of Narbonne. The Pope having intelligence of it, wrote firſt to Leontius to inform him of that affair; this appeareth by the 7th. Letter, dated Nov. 3. 462. He ſoon after propounded it to a Council of Rome held in November 462, at which Fauſtus, and Auxanius two French Biſhops were preſent. It was reſolved in this Council, that the Uſurpation of Hermes was diſorderly, and therefore they deprived him of the Right of Ordaining Biſhops of his Province, which was granted to the Biſhop of Uzetia during his Life. Pope Hilary ſent this Decree to the Biſhops of the Provinces of Vienna, Lyons, the two Provinces of Narbonne, and the Province of the Sea-Alps, and at the ſame time exhorts them by the eighth Letter to hold Councils every Year, which ſhould be ſummoned by Leontius Biſhop of Arles. He adds alſo in that Letter, that no Biſhop nor Clergyman, may go out of his Province without having the Letters of his Metropolitan; and in caſe he will not grant him them through hatred or enmity to him, he may addreſs himſelf to the Biſhop of Arles, who ſhall not give any leave but upon good reaſons. He declares further, that upon the complaint of the Biſhop of Arles, who had complained that his Predeceſſor had left the Churches ſubject to him to others, he had communicated that buſineſs to them, that they might examine it. In fine, he admoniſhes them not to ſuffer the goods of the Church to be alienated, if the alienation be not allowed by a Council. This Letter bears date December 3. 462.

The Rights which Pope Hilary was about to reſtore, in favour of the Biſhop of Arles, ſeemed to receive ſome Check by the attempt of Marcian Biſhop of Vienna. There had been for a long time a Conteſt between the Biſhops of Vienna, and Arles, about their Prerogative. The Popes had ſometimes favoured the one, and ſometimes the other. Saint Leo, who had at firſt very much oppoſed the pretenſions of the Biſhop of Arles, upon the account of his diſpleaſure, which he had againſt Hilary, was afterwards reconciled to him; and had ordered by his 51 Letter, that the Arch-biſhop, of Vienna, ſhould content himſelf with having the Rights of a Metropolitan over four Cities, viz. Valentia, Tarantaſia, Geneva, and Gratianople, and that all the other Cities ſhould be ſubject to the Metropolis of Arles. Saint Mamertus, whether it was that he would not obey this Order, or that he thought that Leontius would not take it ill, ordained a Biſhop of Dia. Pope Hilary having heard of it by an Officer, wrote immediately to Leontius, blaming him for not giving him notice of this action, and commanded him to have the matter examined in a Synod; and give him a relation of it in a Synodal Letter. The Letter of Hilary to Leontius is the ninth, and is dated Octob. 10. Anno. 463.

Leontius, and the Biſhops aſſembled in his Synod, returned Anſwer to Pope Hilary, that it was true, that Mamertus had ordained a Biſhop of Dia. But it appears by the Pope's Anſwer, that they ſpoke of that action with much moderation, not ſhewing themſelves troubled at all at it. The Pope did not take it in the ſame manner, but looked upon it as an Unpardonable Crime. He accuſed St. Mamertus of Pride, Preſumption, Treachery, and a Sinful Attempt, and threatned to deprive him of all his Privileges, and out him of all the Right he had over his four Churches, if he did maintain what he had done as lawful, and perſiſted to do the like for the future. And as to the Biſhop of Dia, whom he had ordained, he enjoyned him to accept the Confirmation of Leontius, Biſhop of Arles, who ought regularly to have ordained him, and gave Veranus a Commiſſion to deliver theſe Orders forthwith, and ſee that they be put in Execution. All this is contained in the fourth Letter of this Pope ſent to Leontius, and the other Biſhops of this Synod, which is dated Feb. 24. Anno. 464 He wrote alſo a little time after, another Letter to the Biſhop of the Provinces of Vienna, Lyons, Narbonne, the Pœnine-Alps, in which he repeats and confirms, what he had ſaid in his former Letter, for the upholding the Rights of the Church of Arles, and orders the Biſhops of thoſe Provinces to come to the Synods, to which they ſhall be called by the Biſhop of Arles.

In the Year 465, the Church of Rome had the Honour to be conſulted by Aſcanius Biſhop of Tarraco, and other Biſhops of his Province, who wrote two Letters to Hilary, about two important Matters which fell out in their Countries. They ſpeak in both of them with a great deal of Reſpect and Submiſſion to the Holy See. In the firſt, having told him, that they reſorted to him as to the Succeſſor of St. Peter, whoſe Primacy ought to be feared, and loved by all Chriſtians. Cujus Vicarii principatus, ſicut eminet, eſt metuendus ab omnibus & amandus; to receive ſound Anſwers from a place, where things are not judged of erroneouſly, or with prejudice; but after a truly epiſcopal deliberation, I ſay, after this compliment, they tell him that Sylvanus Biſhop of Calaguris, which is a City of their Province fartheſt diſtant from the Metropolis, had ventured to ordain a Biſhop in a certain City againſt the Conſent of the People, and to take a Prieſt of another Biſhop, and make him Biſhop againſt his Will. That the Biſhop of Cæſaraugusta had oppoſed theſe his Undertakings, and had cauſed the Neighbouring Biſhops to ſeparate from him, but that had not reduced him, he continued in his Obſtinacy, and Schiſm. Whereupon they deſire the Pope to command them, what he thought fit to be done by them upon this occaſion, that being aſſiſted by his Authority and Counſel, they might know how they ought to deal with the Biſhop who ordained, and the Biſhop who was ordained. The 2*d.* Letter from the ſame Biſhop is about another buſineſs; it begins alſo with a Compliment to the Pope, and goes on with a Requeſt, which theſe Biſhops made to him to confirm the Choice, which they had made of Biſhop Irenæus, to fill up the See of Barcino, which was vacant by the death of Nundinarius. They ſhew him that they followed the judgment of his Predeceſſor in ſo doing, who had named him for his Succeſſor and had alſo the approbation of the People and Clergy, and that they had conſidered the good of that Church. They added, that they had complained to him ſome time ſince, of the attemps of Sylvanus, but had received no Anſwer, and therefore deſired him to give them an Anſwer of all together. Hilarius.

Theſe Letters being delivered to him at the time, when he had aſſembled the Biſhops at Rome for the Anniverſary Solemnity of his Exaltation, he read them in a full Council, and the Biſhops diſcovered by their Acclamation and Conſent, that they condemned the actions of Sylvanus, and did not approve of the Ordination of Irenæus, becauſe it was performed contrary to the Rules of the Church. 1. Becauſe it was never allowed any Biſhop to chooſe his Succeſſor. 2. Becauſe Irenæus being Biſhop of another Church, could not be tranſlated to Barcino. This being decreed after this manner, the Pope wrote two Letters, one to Aſcanius, and the Biſhop of the Province of Tarraco, and the other particularly to Aſcanius; in which he declares, purſuant to the Judgment of his Colleagues, and the determination of the Canons, that Sylvanus had offended in celebrating Ordinations without the Authority and Conſent of the Biſhop of Tarraco his Metropolitan; that Irenæus ought to relinquiſh the Church of Barcino, and that Aſcanius ought to ordain ſome other Perſon, every way fitly qualified for that See; That as to thoſe Biſhops that had been ordained without his Conſent, he might let them alone, if they have not been twice married, or have not married a Widow; that he ſhould take ſpecial Care, that there be not two Biſhops in one and the ſame Church; that he ought not to ordain any ignorant or lame Perſon, no more than thoſe that have done Penance; that he ought not to hearken ſo much to the Prayers of the People, as to depart from the Will of God, or the Laws of the Church to pleaſe them. Laſtly, he ſubjoyns that if Irenæus will not quit the See of Barcino, he deſerves to be wholly deprived of the Epiſcopal Dignity. This Council was held in the Month of November, Anno. 465, and the Pope's Letters are written at the end of December in the ſame Year.

Ingenuus Biſhop of * Ebredunum, who was preſent at this Council of Rome, reminded Pope Hilary, that what he had ordained at the Requeſt of Auxanius in the Council held Anno. 462. and confirmed in another in 464, was prejudicial to the Metropolitical Right, which he claimed in the Province of the Sea-Alps. The Pope reſpecting this his Remonſtrance, wrote to Leontius, Veranus, and Victurus, French Biſhops to regulate this matter according to the Laws of the Church, and the Conſtitutions of his Predeceſſor, not having regard to thoſe Declarations, which have been obtained of him fraudulently, when they are found oppoſite to the Holy Canons and Decrees of his Predeceſſors. Wherefore he confirmed the Metropolitical Right of the Biſhop of Ebredunum, and ordained, that what had been decreed by St. Leo touching the Biſhopricks of Cemele and Nice, ſhould be exactly obſerved. So that it was the Ambition of the Biſhops that gave the Popes an Opportunity of Greatning their own Authority every day, and making them ſubject to him, by favouring the Pretenſions ſometimes of the one, and ſometimes of the other. The Style of Pope Hilary is not ſo florid as St. Leo's, but it is elegant and eaſie to be underſtood. He was very knowing in the Laws and Diſcipline of the Church, and enlarged his Authority to make them obſerved. As we have not obſerved the common Order of his Letters, but placed them according to time, it is convenient to compare Ours, with the Ancient, as in this Table. * Ambrun.

I. The Letter to the Empreſs Pulcheria, Written Anno. 451. In the Acts of the Council of Chalcedon, Part 1. Chap. 24.

II. The

Hilarius.

II. The Letter to Victorius, Written Anno. 456. at the beginning of Victorius's Paschal Cycle.

The Ancient Figures.

III. The Letter to Leontius Bishop of Arles, Written Jan. 25. Anno, 462. — V.

IV. Another Letter to the same Person, Written a little after. — VI.

V. A Third Letter to the same Person about the affair of Hermes, Written Nov. 3. Anno 462. — VII.

VI. A Letter to the Bishops of the Provinces of Vienna, Lyons, both Narbonns, and the Pœnine-Alps upon the same Subject, Decem. 3. 462. — VIII.

VII. A fourth Letter to Leontius about the business of St. Mamertus, Oct. 10. 463. — IX.

VIII. A Letter to the Bishops Victurius, Ingenuus, Idacius, &c. about the same business February 24. 464. — X.

Hilarius.

IX. A Letter to the Bishops of the Provinces of Vienna, Lyons, both Narbonns, and Alps, upon the same Subject, Written sometime after the former. — I.

X. A Letter to the Bishops of the Provinces of Tarraco, about the Ordination of Irenæus, dated January 3. 465. — II.

XI. A Letter to Ascanius Bishop of Tarraco, upon the same Subject, Written at the same time. — III.

XII. A Letter to Leontius, Veranus, and Victurus, about the business of Ingenuus Bishop of Ebredunum, Written in the same year. — IV.

SIMPLICIUS, Bishop of Rome.

Simplicius.

Simplicius was chosen Pope in September, Anno 467, and governed the Church of Rome 15 Years and some Months. He was very full of business all the time of his Popedom; the Church, and Empire having been subject to great Revolutions; for on the one hand the Western Empire miserably harassed, ended in the Person of Augustulus, and Odoacer an Arian Prince, King of the Heruli, possessed himself of that Empire. On the other hand Zeno the Eastern Emperor, was first dethroned by Basiliscus, who declared himself against the Council of Chalcedon; and Zeno being restored always privately favoured the Eutychians, and stirred up great troubles in the Church upon that Account. Nor were other Kingdoms better governed, the Goths, who were Arians, had made themselves Masters of Spain. Gensericus also, an Arian, King of the Vandals, exercised his Tyranny over the People, and against the Church of Africk. The Churches of Antioch and Alexandria, were become a Prey to the Ambitious. Lastly, the Bishops of Constantinople and Rome, began to disagree. But notwithstanding all these Troubles and Confusions, Simplicius did vigorously maintain the Discipline of the Church in all places, and upheld his own Rights with Courage. His Letters are an Authentick Proof of it.

The first is directed to Zeno Bishop of Sevil in Spain. He gives him the Title of Vicar of the Holy See, that he might have the greater Authority to hinder, that the Apostolick Laws and Decrees of the Holy Fathers be not any ways violated.

The second is directed to John Bishop of Ravenna. He closely reproves this Bishop, because he had made one named Gregory Bishop of a Church without his consent, and by force. He orders, that he shall be Bishop of Modena, and not be subject to the Bishop of Ravenna; and that if he had any business, he should bring it directly to the Holy See. He desires the Grant of the possession of the Inheritance of a certain Sum in the Bishoprick of Bononia, during his Life, upon condition, that the Property of it shall remain to the Church of Ravenna. He threatens John, to oblige him to the Execution of his Orders; he tells him, that he deserved to lose the Privilege he hath abused, and that he will handle him with great Severity, if he doth not obey what he hath commanded. Lastly, he reminds him that if he shall dare to do the like hereafter, and ordain either Bishop, or Priest, or Deacon against their Will, he will deprive him of the right of Ordaining in the Province of Ravenna, and Æmilia. This Letter is dated June 29. Anno. 482.

Simplicius had already used Gaudentius Bishop of Assisium very severely, because he had celebrated Ordinations contrary to the Rules, and entirely deprived him of the right of Ordaining; and had given the power of Ordaining in the Church of that Bishop to one of his Colleagues, called Severus. He also took from him the Administration of the Revenues, because he had made a bad use of them, leaving him no more than a fourth part, and expending the other three in building, nourishing the Poor and Strangers, and for the maintenance of the Clergy, and ordering him to restore the three parts, which he had received during the three years past, and to oblige them to whom he had given the Church-goods, to quit them. The Letter which contains this Decree is dated Novem. 29. in 475. It is directed to Florentius, Æquitius, and Severus, and placed the third among Simplicius's Letters.

The fourth sent to the Emperor Zeno, dated Jan. 10. 476. is written against Timotheus Ælurus, who having permission to go from the place of his Exile, after he had endeavoured to thrust himself again into the See of Alexandria, came to Constantinople, where he was very active to establish his Doctrine, gathered him a Party, and celebrated the Holy Mystery also clandestinely. Simplicius exhorts the Emperor Zeno not to suffer this Disorder, and to imitate the Zeal of his Predecessors Marcian and Leo, to maintain the Faith of the Incarnation, contained in the Letters of St. Leo, which had been approved by the Council of Chalcedon, to reject all such Errors as have been condemned, to hinder that they be not revived, and certain Truths be not brought into Dispute, to take care that an Orthodox Person be ordained Bishop of Alexandria, and Timotheus the Ring-leader of the Hereticks be banished from Constantinople.

Simplicius.

At the same time he wrote a Letter, to Acacius, which is his fifth, in which he congratulates him, that he did not suffer Timotheus Ælurus to be received into Communion at Constantinople, and desires him to oppose the Proposal of calling a new Council, because a Council ought not to be assembled, but only when some new Error springs up, and it is something difficult to find out the Truth. But this is not the present Case, since the Question hath been judged, and determined clearly in the Council of Chalcedon, which hath been approved by all the World. Simplicius sent a Copy of this Letter to the Emperor, with a Copy of St. Leo's Letter to Flavian.

He repeats the same Admonitions in his sixth Letter to Acacius, and in another Letter directed to the same Bishop, which hath been published by Holstenius. It is dated the same time. In it he particularly advises Acacius to request the Emperor to grant his Edict for the Banishment of those who shall be ordained by Timotheus, and implore him to include Peter and Paul in it, of whom one was banished to Ephesus, the other to Antioch; as also Anthony, one of the Principals of the Party, and John who was ordained Bishop of Apimea.

He commends in the 7th. Letter the Courage of the Clergy and Monks of Constantinople, who would not receive Timotheus, and shews them that they ought not to hearken to him, since he hath been several times condemned. All these Letters bear the same Date.

The Emperor Zeno was immediately put to flight by Basiliscus, who invaded his Throne. He declared himself openly for Timotheus, but his Kingdom was not of long Duration. Zeno was re-established within ten Months after. As soon as Simplicius heard of it, he testified to him the Joy he had for his Restoration, and exhorts him to maintain the Faith of his Predecessors, and the Doctrine of the Council of Chalcedon, and to depose Timotheus Ælurus from the See of Alexandria; and settle in it again a Lawful and Orthodox Bishop. This Letter bears date Oct. 8. 477.

Zeno being moved by his Admonitions went about to expel Timotheus, but his Death prevented, that this Usurper did not suffer the punishment which he deserved. He poisoned himself, if we believe Liberatus. After his Death, Petrus Mongus endeavoured to make himself Bishop of that See: But Timotheus Salophaciolus an Orthodox Bishop was settled in it. This Acacius Bishop of Constantinople informs Simplicius of by the Letter which goes before Letter 9. of this Pope.

In this Simplicius shews how much he rejoyced at the establishment of Timotheus, and prays him to take care to carry himself unblameably, because he had taken notice of some Failings in him, when he was obliged to rehearse the Name of Dioscorus at the Altar. This Letter is dated March 13. 478.

He wrote also, the same time, the 10th. Letter to the Emperor Zeno, in which he thanks him for settling Timotheus, and prays him to eject entirely P. Mongus.

In the next Letter to Acacius, he tells him, that Timotheus had excused himself for reciting the Name of Dioscorus at the Altar, and that he was satisfied by him as to that particular.

In the 12th. he also desires the Emperor Zeno to defend Timotheus; and banish Petrus Mongus, and in the thirteenth Letter he commands Acacius to contribute his Assistance to it. These Letters are dated Oct. 478.

The Church of Antioch was in no less disturbances, than that of Alexandria. Petrus, firnamed Fullo having slain Stephen, who was the lawful Bishop, got possession of it by force. The Emperor Zeno did not let this Crime go unpunished, but made those seditious Persons suffer the Punishment they deserved, and banished Petrus Fullo. But because the Spirits of the People were extremely heated, he thought it would be hard to get a Bishop ordained quietly in the City of Antioch; he resolved to have the Ordination performed at Constantinople by Acacius. Pope Simplicius believed, as indeed it might well enough be, that it was only Pretence, and that the Biſhop of Conſtantinople would by this means enlarge his Juriſdiction over the Eaſt, tho' the Emperor wrote to him, that it ſhould be ſo for this once only, and that for the future the Biſhop of Antioch ſhould be ordained according to the Cuſtom, by an Eaſtern Synod. The Pope makes anſwer to him by Letter 14, dated Jn. 22. 479, in which having commended his Juſtice, which he had executed in puniſhing thoſe who had murthered the Biſhop of Antioch, he tells him, that this Miſchief would never have happened, if he had followed his Counſels, and baniſhed out of the Empire, as he had written to him, Petrus Mongus, and the other Enemies of the Faith, and Diſturbers of the publick Peace. Laſtly, he approves the Ordination of the Biſhop of Antioch made by Acacius, but upon Condition that the Biſhop of Conſtantinople ſhall not attempt the like for the future, and the Biſhop of Antioch ſhall be ordained by the Biſhops of his own Country, according to the ancient Cuſtom. He ſays almoſt the ſame thing to Acacius in the next Letter.

Simplicius.

He, whom Acacius had ordained Biſhop of Antioch, died in 482, in the third year of his Pontificate; and Calendion was ordained in his place. 'Twas Acacius himſelf who ordained him if we may believe the Record of the Acts of the Condemnation of Acacius. However that be, it is evident that Calendion had his Ordination approved by a Council of Eaſtern Biſhops. This did plainly diſpleaſe Acacius, who was never friends with this Patriarch. Simplicius.

At the ſame time Timotheus, Biſhop of Alexandria, being dead, John Talaia was choſen in his place, and wrote to Pope Simplicius, under the Title of the Biſhop of Alexandria: But the Emperor told him at the ſame time, that he was a perjur'd Perſon, and unworthy of the Prieſthood. This hinder'd the Pope for ſome time from acknowledging him; but when he underſtood, that he had deſigned to put in P. Mongus into that See, againſt whom he had written ſeveral Letters, he oppoſed him with all his force, and received John Talaia, who eſcaped into the Weſt. All theſe things were done with the conſent of Acacius, or at leaſt without his Oppoſition. This made Simplicius, after he had written Letter 16. in favour of Calendion, to urge him earneſtly in Letter 17, and 18. to oppoſe the attempts of P. Mongus, and to repreſent them to the Emperor, that he may not continue in the poſſeſſion of the See of Alexandria. Theſe Letters are dated Anno 482. This was the Cauſe and Beginning of the Diſcontent, which the Holy See had againſt Acacius, which broke out fully under Felix the Succeſſor of Simplicius. [Theſe Epiſtles are extant among the Councils, Tome IV. p. 1067.]

FAUSTUS, Biſhop of † Ries.

† Reium. Regium.

Fauſtus, Biſhop of Ries.

Fauſtus (a) an Engliſhman, or Britain, a Prieſt and Monk of Lerins, was choſen Abbot of that Monaſtery, when St. Maximus removed to the Government of the Church of Ries. While he was Abbot there, he had a Controverſie with Theodorus Biſhop of Frejus, about the Exemption which was decreed in the Council of Arles, which is called the III, held in 455, which ordained, that the Biſhop ſhould perform all Ordinations, confirm Novices, if there be any in the Abby; and that no ſtrange Clergy-men ſhould be admitted but with his Conſent, but that the Care of the Lay-men of the Monaſtery belongs to the Abbot; that the Biſhop hath no Juriſdiction over them, and that he cannot ordain any one without conſent of the Abbot. After the Death of Maximus, Fauſtus was choſen to fill his place: So that he was his Succeſſor twice, once in his Abbacy, and the ſecond time in his Biſhoprick. This gave occaſion to Sidonius to addreſs theſe Verſes to him.

——Fuerit Quis Maximus ille
Urbem tu cujus, Monachoſque Antiſtes, & Abbas
Bis Succeſſor agis——

He was preſent at the Council of Rome, held under Pope Hilary in 462. Being returned into France he compoſed ſeveral Books, governed the Church unblameably, lived a very holy Life, was commended and honoured by the greateſt Men of his time; and dyed at laſt in Peace, and in the Communion of the Church.

Gennadius gives us a Part of the Catalogue of this Author's Works: 'He hath written (ſaith he) on the occaſion of 'explaining the Creed, a Book concerning the Holy Spi- 'rit; wherein he proves agreeably to the Doctrine of the 'Holy Fathers, that he is of the ſame Subſtance with the 'Father and the Son, and is as well eternal as both the o- 'ther Divine Perſons in the Holy Trinity. He hath alſo 'compoſed an excellent Work about Saving Grace, in 'which he teacheth, that the Grace of God always allures, 'precedes, and aſſiſts our Will, and that all the reward 'which our Free-will obtains by its Labour, is not merited by it, but is the Giſt of Grace. I have read alſo, (ſaith 'the ſame Perſon) a little Book of his written againſt the 'Arians and Macedonians, in which he ſhews, that the three 'Perſons of the Trinity are of the ſame Eſſence; and another Treatiſe againſt thoſe, who ſay, that there are incorporeal Creatures, in which he pretends to prove by Teſtimonies of Holy Scriptures, and by the Authority of the 'Holy Fathers, that we ought to believe nothing incorporeal but God only. There is one of his Letters written in 'form of a Book dedicated to a certain Deacon called Gratus, who having departed from the Orthodox Faith, went 'over to the Neſtorian Hereſie. He advertiſeth him in that 'Letter, that we muſt not ſay, that the Virgin hath brought 'forth a Man into the World, who afterward became a 'God; but that ſhe hath brought forth a true God in a true 'Man. There are other Works of his, which I do not 'ſpeak of, becauſe I have not read them.' It is known, and his Diſcourſes make it plain, that he was an able Preacher. He hath written ſince a Letter to Felix, the Præfectus-Prætorio, a Perſon deſcended of the Patricii, and Son of a Conſul, in which he exhorts him to Piety. This Writing is very ſuitable for thoſe who will fit themſelves for ſincere Penance.

Fauſtus, Biſhop of Ries.

We have ſtill ſome of thoſe Works of which Gennadius makes mention, but he doth not ſpeak of his Letter to Lucidus the Prieſt, who was the occaſion of writing his two Books of Free-will, and Grace. This Prieſt was a ſtiff Defender of St. Auſtine's Doctrine about Grace and Predeſtination, and did evidently carry his Principles too far, or at leaſt delivered them in too harſh terms. The greateſt part of French Biſhops were then of a very contrary Judgment, and Fauſtus was one of the greateſt Oppoſers of that Doctrine. Having had ſeveral Conferences with Lucidus, but not being able to make any Change in him, he ſent this Letter, of which we are ſpeaking, to him, to oblige him to change his Opinion. In the beginning he ſays, 'That Charity made 'him undertake to endeavour by the Aſſiſtance of God, 'to recover his Brother from the Error, into which he was 'unwarily fallen, rather than excommunicate him as ſome 'Biſhops deſigned to do. He then puts him in mind, that in 'ſpeaking of Grace and Man's Obedience, we muſt be very cautious, that we fall into neither of the Extreams; 'That we muſt not ſeparate Grace and human Induſtry; 'That we muſt abhor Pelagius, and deteſt thoſe that believe, that Man may be among the number of the Elect 'without labouring for Salvation. He ſets down ſome A- 'nathemas which he would have him pronounce. The firſt 'is againſt the Doctrine of Pelagius, who believes that Man 'is born without Sin; that he hath no need of the Aſſiſtance of Grace, but he may be ſaved by his own Works. 'The ſecond Anathema is for all thoſe who dare aſſert, 'that Man, who having been baptized hath made profeſſion of Faith in Jeſus Chriſt, falling into Sin, is damned 'upon the account of Original Sin. The third Anathema is 'to him, who affirms that the Preſcience of God is the 'Cauſe of Damnation. The fourth is to all thoſe that ſay, 'that he which periſheth, hath not received a ſufficient 'Strength and Ability to ſave himſelf, which ought to be 'underſtood of Perſons baptized, or of an Heathen, who 'lived at a time when he might have believed, and would 'not. The fifth is to all thoſe, who hold that a Veſſel of 'Diſhonour, cannot be made a Veſſel of Honour. The 'ſixth and laſt, is to him that ſhall aſſert, that Jeſus Chriſt 'is not dead for all Men, and wills not that all Men ſhould 'be ſaved. He adds, that he will bring Teſtimonies to prove 'theſe Orthodox Truths, and overthrow the Errors, whenever he pleaſes to come to him, or he ſhall be ſummoned before the Biſhops. In ſum, he aſſures him with Confidence and Truth, that he that periſhes by his fault, might 'be ſaved by Grace, if he had obeyed it by his Labour, 'which ought to follow Grace; and that he that is ſaved 'by Grace, may fall by his Negligence and Fault. So that 'to fix an exact Medium, he joyns the Labour of a voluntary Service to Grace, without which we are nothing; 'but he excludes Pride and Preſumption, which may creep 'in upon the account of our Labours, knowing that it is 'our Duty to do what we can. He calls upon him to declare his Opinions thereupon, adverting him, that if he 'will not follow the true Doctrine, he will deſerve to be 'baniſhed from the Church, in whoſe Boſom he hopes that 'he abides.' Laſtly, he adds, that he keeps a Copy of this

(a) AN Engliſh man or Britain.] Avitus in his 4th. Letter, ſays, that he was ortu Britannus, habitatione Rienſis. Sidonius Epiſt. 9. l. 9. writing to Fauſtus ſays Britannis tuis. Facundus calls him a Frenchman in his Book againſt Marcion, Fauſtus Gallus; but he evidently reſpected the place he dwelt in. F. Sirmondus ſays, that he was of the Province of Armorica. I am rather of Uſher's Judgment, who thinks him an Engliſhman.

Letter

Faustus, Bishop of Ries.

Letter to make it appear, if it be necessary, in the Assembly of Bishops, which must * meet; and exhorts Lucidus to subscribe it, or to abandon fairly and clearly in Writing, the Errors, which it condemns.

Altho' we find at the end of this Letter the Subscriptions of several Bishops; It is nevertheless true, as F. Sirmondus thinks, that it is no Bodies but Faustus's; and that it is he only, that wrote it in his own Name: Also from the time of Hincmarus, it hath been subscribed by none but him, as in the best MSS. and particularly in that which Canisius used.

* were to

It is then certain, that it is not the Letter of a Council, but he speaks of a Council to be held soon after, to which Lucidus was to be cited, if he persisted in his own Error; but this good Priest being come to the Council, soon yielded to the Opinions of Faustus and his Colleagues, and did not satisfie himself to pronounce the Anathemas set down in his Letter; but he likewise added it against other Propositions, and directed his Letter, or rather Retractations, to Leontius Bishop of Arles, and twenty four other Bishops, who had made up a Council, where they compelled Lucidus to recant; for he saith, that he made that Retractation juxta prædicandi recentia Statuta Concilii; and he condemns with these Bishops:

I. Him that asserts that we must not joyn the Labour of human Obedience to the Grace of God.

II. Him that saith, that since the Sin of the first Man, the Free-will of Man is entirely lost.

III. Him that affirms, that our Saviour Jesus Christ dyed not for all Men.

IV. Him that says, that the Fore-knowledge of God forces Man, and damns by Violence, and that those that are damned, are so by the Will of God.

V. Those that say, that they that sin after Baptism dye in Adam.

VI. Those that teach, that some are destined to Death, and others predestined to Life. The Bishops of the Council of Valentia seem to have determined since the contrary to this Proposition in the third Canon; where they deliver, that they boldly own a Predestination of the Elect to Life, and of Sinners to Death.

VII. He condemns the Doctrine of those who teach, that from Adam to Jesus Christ, none among the Heathens hoping in the Coming of Jesus Christ, were saved by the first Grace, i. e. by the Law of Nature, because they have lost their Free-will in Adam.

VIII. Those who affirm, that the Patriarchs and Prophets, and the great Saints before the Redemption, have their Habitation in Paradise.

He adds afterwards some Propositions, contrary to the foregoing. He saith then,

I. That he acknowledgeth the Grace of God; but after such a manner as that he joyns Man's Endeavour and Labour with it.

II. That he doth not say, that the Free-will is lost, but only that it is weakened and impaired; and that he that is saved might have been damned, and he that is damned, might have been saved.

III. That our Saviour out of the Riches of his Goodness hath tasted Death for every Man.

IV. That he desireth not the Death of him that dieth, but is rich unto all that call upon him.

V. He professes that Jesus Christ died for the Wicked, and for those, who have been damned contrary to his Will.

VI. He confesseth also, that according to the Disposition and Order of Ages; some have been saved by the Law of Moses, and others by the Law of Nature, which God hath written in the Hearts of all Men, by the hope of the Coming of Jesus Christ. It is very hard to salve this Proposition as well as the Condemnation in the seventh, if we understand it literally, since none but Pelagius hath dared to affirm, that Men have been saved by the Law of Moses and by Nature. But Faustus and others understand it plainly in another Sense, i. e. that the Law and Nature have contributed to their Salvation: And for this reason it is, that Lucidus adds, that no Man can be purged from Original Sin, but by the Intercession of the Blood of Jesus Christ. In the last place, he acknowledges Hell-Fire, and unquenchable Flames are prepared for those who have committed heinous Crimes; because they continue in their Sin, they are justly condemned to Punishment, which they also deserve that do not believe these Truths. The Letter concludes with these Words, Orate pro me, Sancti & Apostolici Patres, &c. O Holy and Apostolick Fathers, pray for me: I Lucidus the Priest have subscribed this Epistle with my own Hand; and I affirm all that is affirmed in it, and condemn all that is condemned in it.

The Bishops of the Council of Arles appointed Faustus Bishop of Ries to write upon this Subject, as he tells us in the Preface to his Treatise of Free-will and Grace, dedicated to Leontius Bishop of Arles. These are his Words. You have done, O my blessed Father, a great deal of good to all the French Churches, in assembling a Council of Bishops to condemn the Error of Predestination. But methinks you have not sufficiently provided for your Reputation, in commanding me to put in order, and set down in Writing what was said in your Conferences; for I am sensible of my Inabilities to perform it as it ought to be. The honourable Judgment which your Charity hath passed upon my Abilities, hath caused you to make a Choice of which you have Reason to repent. At the End of this Preface, he says, that after this Work was finished, the Council of Lyons had ordered something to be added to it.

Faustus, Bishop of Ries.

F. Sirmondus concludes from these Records, that the Council of Arles was held about the year 475, consisting of 30 French Bishops against the Predestinarians Heresie, which began in the time of St. Austine, and had its Original in the Monastery of Adrumetum; from whence it passed into France, where it was opposed by Hilary and Prosper, and condemned by Cœlestine; that it was supported by St. Austine's Writings not rightly understood, as is observed in the Chronicon of Tiro Prosper and Sigibert, opposed by the Author of the Book of Heresies, intitled Prædestinatus, and by Arnobius Junior; ranked among the Heresies by Gennadius at the end of St Austine's Book; revived in the ninth Age by Gottescalci, and confuted at the same time by Rabanus and Hincmarus. That Lucidus, who was engaged in this Heresie, was summoned to the Council of Arles, where this Question was disputed; and he was ordered by this Council to make the Recantation of which we have already spoken. That Faustus in his Books of Grace doth only deliver the Judgment of this Council; that his Work was afterward approved in another Council of Lyons; that this Bishop is of very Orthodox Sentiments, and is still honoured as a Saint; and that Joannes Maxentius, and Gottescalci do wrongfully inveigh so much against him. This is almost all that F. Sirmondus saith about this matter, in his History of the Predestinarians.

But on the other side some able Divines maintain, that this Heresie is a meer Chimæra, and a Calumny which the Semi-Pelagians made use of to blacken the Scholars of St. Austine: that there were no Predestinarians in the time of St. Austine; that the Monks of Adrumetum who are made the first Authors of this Heresie, never thought of any such thing, but that all the Contest, that was among them, proceeded from hence, that they were not rightly understood; that Cresconius and Felix had accused Florus of denying Free-will, and the Judgment which God will render to every Man according to their Works, because they did not well understand his Sentiments, and that indeed St. Austine, who upon the relation of these two Monks, had believed that Florus was in an Error, having heard him himself, found, that he had not a false Opinion touching Grace, and that it was not he, that deserved reproof, but they, who did not understand him, when he explained his Judgment. That as to the Controversie, which arose among the French some time after; it is evident, that they are not the Predestinarians, which St. Prosper and Hilary oppose, but the Enemies of the Doctrine of St. Austine, who imputed to his Scholars the same Doctrines, which were attributed to the Predestinarians. The Authors alledged for the justification of this Heresie are much to be suspected. The first is Tiro Prosper, an Author of little Credit, who says, that this Heresie is not taken out of St. Austine's Books not rightly understood, as Sigibert hath corrected it, but out of St. Austine himself quæ ab Augustino accepisse dicitur initium, which proves, that he that inserted this place in St. Prosper's Chronicon was an Enemy to St. Austine. Prædestinatus is an Author full of Faults and Pelagian Errors. The same may be said of Arnobius, who doth not acknowledge Original Sin. Gennadius was a Learned Man, but well known to be a Favourer of the Semi-Pelagians. As for Faustus, 'tis certain he was their Head; that Gelasius hath condemned his Books. That St. Fulgentius hath confuted them in seven Books, approved by the Council of Sardinia; that Cæsarius hath written against his Doctrines in a Book approved by Pope Felix; that Pope Hormisdas hath rejected them; that Petrus Diaconus hath pronounced Anathema against him; that the Head of a Sect so often condemned, ought not to be looked upon as a Saint; that he was in another very dangerous Error, maintaining, that all Creatures are Corporeal; that all that he says of the Council of Arles, and the approbation given to his Books by the Council of Lyons, is not true; or that the Authority of these Councils is of little consequence, since they were made of Semi-Pelagian Bishops. Lastly, that this Ancient Calumny against the Scholars of St. Austine being revived in the 9*th*. Age, the Church of Lyons maintain'd that this Heresie of the Predestinarians was a Chimæra; that there never was any such Hereticks, or to be sure, none in his time. If we now pass from Authority to Reason, and come to examine the Doctrines, the pretended Errors, which are fastened upon the Predestinarians, are the very same, which the Semi-Pelagians upbraided the Scholars of St. Austine withal, as it is easie to see by comparing them with the Objections of Vincentius the French, the Priests of Genoua, which St. Prosper hath fully answered.

This is the Sum of what is said on both sides on this Subject. 'Tis not for us to judge between so knowing Persons as F. Sirmondus and his Adversaries, in a matter of this Concernment. Non nostrum inter vos tantas componere lites. We freely own, that both have reason on their side. Et Fauſtus, Biſhop of Riez.

Vitulâ tu dignus, & hic, &c. but we take our ſelves obliged to ſay on the contrary, that neither of them have hit upon the right, and their prejudice hath made them judge of things not as they are, but as they thought they ought to be. Now that which ſeems to us to be moſt probable in this buſineſs, is this. The Books which St. Auſtine wrote againſt the Pelagians, being publiſhed, made different impreſſions upon the Minds of the Orthodox. They confeſſed all, that he had reaſon to maintain Original Sin, and the neceſſity of Grace, in order to Salvation; but after that for the confutation of the Pelagians, he had raiſed ſubtile and nice Queſtions, ſpoken in a way different from the greateſt part of the Fathers, that went before him, and laid down Principles about the way in which Grace is given, and operates in the Heart of Man, about Predeſtination, and the Calling of the Elect, ſo uncommon before his time, as he himſelf owns, and which he was himſelf ignorant of before he was wholly engaged in this Diſpute. Theſe Matters being extremely abſtract and difficult, put thoſe to a great deal of pains, who lived in his time. And from that time they were the Original of Quarrels, Diviſion and Hatred among the Orthodox, and have been ſo ever ſince, as often as they have been revived. Caſſian, the Prieſts of Marſeilles, Hilary Biſhop of Arles, Vincentius Lerinenſis, and the greateſt part of the French could not entirely approve the Doctrine of St. Auſtine, being perſuaded that it was too rigorous, and that bad conſequences might be drawn from it. This appears by the Letters of St. Proſper and St. Hilary, written to St. Auſtine about that Matter. It is probable that ſome unskilful Perſons, who had not Wit enough to underſtand throughly the true Sentiments of St. Auſtine, nor Sagacity enough to find out the agreement between them, and that which we ought to believe, concerning the Freedom of Man and the Neceſſity of good Works, have given occaſion of drawing theſe pernicious Conſequences; either becauſe they came very near them, or becauſe they were not interpreted right. And indeed we muſt own it, and St. Auſtine himſelf confeſſes as much, that it is neceſſary to uſe great circumſpection in explaining Vocation and Predeſtination, according to his Principles, in ſuch a manner as may incline us neither to negligence nor deſpair. This was it which raiſed the Diſpute in the Monaſtery of Adrumetum. Florus having brought thither from Uzel the Writings of St. Auſtine concerning Grace, and explaining his Doctrine in a very coarſe manner, had given the Monks ground to believe that he denied Free-will, and that Juſtice by which God muſt render to every Man according to his Works. Valentinus the Preſident of that Monaſtery was forced to permit two Monks, named Creſconius and Felix, to go to St. Auſtine, and propound their Scruples to him, which they did. They perſuaded him that there were ſome Monks, in their Monaſtery which denied Free-will. Wherefore he wrote the* 224*th.* Letter to free them from that Error, and ſhew them how his Principles are made to accord with Man's Free-will. Afterward having ſpoken to Florus, he declares that this Monk had not interpreted him aright, or did not well underſtand him, wherefore he made a Book on purpoſe to reconcile Grace and Free-will together. But his Explication not yet ſatisfying theſe Monks, he wrote his Book * of Correction and Grace, to anſwer their Principal Objection. We know not what effect this Book wrought among the Monks of Adrumetum; but it did not content the Prieſts of Marſeilles, but on the contrary their doubts were increaſed by the reading of it. St. Proſper and Hilarius ſent St. Auſtine word of it, and wrote him what were the Principles of theſe Perſons. We have related them in making the Extracts of their Epiſtles, which are 225, 226, among St. Auſtine's. This Saint endeavours to explain theſe Opinions in his Books of the Predeſtination of Saints, and of the gift of Perſeverance; but the more he explained himſelf, the leſs his Principles pleaſed the French; and the more they were perſuaded, that he denied Free-will and introduced a Fatal Neceſſity. This was the Rumour that was current among the French about the Subject of theſe Books. They alſo made an abundance of Objections againſt his Doctrine. Theſe Objections conſiſted in Erroneous Opinions, which they imputed to him, in pernicious Conſequences, which they pretended to follow from his Doctrine, and in odious Interpretations of ſome of his Opinions. His Death did not put an end to this Controverſie, but on the Contrary augmented it. St. Proſper, who hath declared for his Doctrine, defended it by publick Writings, and anſwered the Objections, which were propoſed againſt it. On the other ſide, his Adverſaries extolled thoſe Prieſts, who oppoſed St. Auſtine's Doctrine, and accuſed his Scholars of Error; inſomuch that St. Proſper and Hilary, being badly uſed among the French were forced to appeal to St. Cœleſtine, who wrote to the French Biſhops to enjoyn thoſe Prieſts Silence, and not endure them to diſgrace the Memory of St. Auſtine. Nevertheleſs this did not appeaſe the Diſputes; they ſtill continued, and were managed with more heat and paſſion. Altho' neither of them were ſeparated from the Church; yet they began to uſe each other cruelly. St. Proſper accuſes his Adverſaries of reviving the Errors of the Pelagians about Grace, and calls them Ungrateful and Preſumptuous: And theſe on the contrary called their Adverſaries Predeſtinarians, upon the account of the Errors which they imputed to them, and which ſome maintained, perhaps for want of rightly underſtanding things, or of well explaining themſelves. The ſtrongeſt Party among the French was that, which was not of St. Auſtine's Opinion. Fauſtus was not the only Enemy which thoſe which they called Predeſtinarians had; the greateſt Party of the French Biſhops were, as we have ſaid, of the ſame Sentiments. We muſt not wonder then, if they held a Council at Arles in 475, againſt theſe pretended Predeſtinarians; if they made Lucidus to retract, charged Fauſtus to write againſt this Error; and if they approved his Book afterward in another Council. Theſe are Matters of Fact, too well confirmed to be called in Queſtion; but this doth not really prove, that there was an Hereſie of Predeſtinarians at that time, no more than that theſe Biſhops were Hereticks; it only proves that there were then Diſputes about Grace; that as is uſual in the heat of Diſpute, both Parties carried things too high, and that as thoſe, who held the Doctrine of St. Auſtine, not explaining themſelves well, gave occaſion to others to impute Errors to them; ſo theſe on their ſide afforded them a cauſe againſt them, by condemning St. Auſtine's Opinions. It is true, that both of them accuſed each other of Hereſie and, Error; but we muſt not truſt to ſuch ſort of Accuſations propounded by Perſons ſuſpected on both ſides. For all the Authors who ſpeak of the Hereſie of the Predeſtinarians, are much to be ſuſpected as a ſufficient Proof, becauſe they are on the Contrary Party; And they that accuſe Fauſtus of Hereſie, and thoſe of his Party, do it only becauſe they oppoſed ſome of St. Auſtine's Principles, not regarding that at the time when he wrote, he might do it without being accounted an Heretick; and that ſeveral Fathers before and after St. Auſtine have ſpoken and thought as he did, without being accuſed for Hereticks for it. His two Books of Grace and Free-will are written with a great deal of Moderation and Caution; he rejects moſt plainly and ſincerely the Errors of Pelagius; he acknowledges Original Sin, and the neceſſity of Grace to do well, and obtain Salvation; he owns, that the Free-will is much weakened ſince the Sin of Adam; but he maintains, that there remains ſome ſlender knowledge of good, ſome ſeeds of Virtue; that we can know, and deſire to do good with the aſſiſtance of Grace, and cannot do it without it, but that God denies his Grace to no Man; that the Labour of Man accompanies this Grace, and that he muſt obey his motions; that God knows from all Eternity the Good and Evil, which all Men ſhall do; that he foreſees all their Actions, and the end they will have, but he predeſtines no Man to Salvation or Damnation. He thereupon ſets down all the Texts which are alledged for Predeſtination and Grace, and expounds them according to his own Opinions. Theſe are the Contents of theſe two Books, which are to ſay truly, an Explication of thoſe Propoſitions only, which are delivered in his Letter to Lucidus. Many Orthodox Authors have written and ſpoken thus, and there is nothing in them but may be defended; but although there were ſomething to be reproved, he ought not for all that to be uſed as an Heretick, much leſs to be made the Ring-leader of Hereſie, ſince there hath not been any thing defined thereupon. I will not purſue this Hiſtory further, becauſe we ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak hereafter of the Renovation of theſe Diſputes, which were never managed without Noiſe and Heat. And indeed two Reaſons ſeem to make it unavoidable. 1. The Subtelty and Depth of theſe Queſtions, wherein Human Underſtanding is eaſily loſt. 2. The Conſequences which each draw from the Principles of their Adverſaries, of which ſome ſeem to inſpire Men with Pride and Preſumption, and the other to caſt them into Negligence and Deſpair. But if we would conſult our own Reaſon a little, we ſhall ſee on both ſides ſo many Depths, Precipices, and Rocks, as would make us tremble. So that it were better and more advantageous to the Church of God, and every Chriſtian, to live in Peace and Silence, and not deſire to dive into ſuch impenetrable Secrets, to hold that for a certain Maxim, that we ought to beg the Divine Aſſiſtance continually; but at the ſame time to work out our own Salvation with fear and trembling. But 'tis time to return to Fauſtus's Works. We have alſo a Letter to Gratus, wherein he confutes the Errors of Neſtorius, and lays down the manner, how the Orthodox ſhould ſpeak concerning the Perſon of Jeſus Chriſt. We have alſo a ſmall Tract, wherein he explains, how that Son, who is begotten of the Father, is of the Subſtance with the Father, and Co-eternal. To this he adds an Explication of what he ſaid in his Letter to Gratus, that God did not ſuffer by the Senſes, but only by a kind of Compaſſion. The laſt Queſtion which he treats of in this Writing, is of the Nature of the Soul, he maintains, that it, and all Creatures are corporeal. Gennadius hath divided this Treatiſe into two Parts, and ſpeaks of the laſt as a diſtinct Treatiſe. This is that, which Mamertus endeavours the Confutation of Fauſtus, Biſhop of Riez.

The Letter to Felix, which Gennadius mentions, is yet preſerved, but we have not the Treatiſe of the Holy Ghoſt, of which that Author ſpeaks; nor another Treatiſe compoſed by way of Dialogue, commended by Sidonius Apollinaris; but we have two Diſcourſes to the Monks, ſome other

* It is the 46th. Ep. in Trob. Edition.

* De Correptione & Gratia.

Faustus Bishop of Rii.

other among the Sermons which bear the Name of Eusebius Emisenus, and a Letter to one named Paulinus, in which he answers some Questions which he had proposed tohim. The first is concerning the Penance of those who are at the point of Death. Faustus answers, that that is very uncertain. The second is, whether the Faith in the Trinity be sufficient for Salvation? Faustus answers, that it is useless, unless it be accompanied with good Works; and altho' they have been baptized, yet if they commit one of the three Deadly Sins, Sacrilege, Murther, and Adultery, they shall be Damned eternally, if they do not make an Attonement by Penance. The last is about the Nature of the Soul, and Punishments after Death. Faustus holds the Soul to be Immortal, altho' it be Corporeal; and Eternal Punishments, but more or less severe according to the greatness of Sins. He hath also five Letters to Ruricius, but they contain nothing remarkable in them.

Faustus Bishop of Ries.

The Style of Faustus is plain, easie and clear, full of Antitheses and Rhymes. His Notions and Arguments are very rational and apposite. He is full of Spiritual Maxims, and Moral Precepts. One part of his Works, which we have already spoken of was in the Old Bibliotheca Patrum, Canisius hath published the rest. They are also in the last Bibloth. Patr [Tom. 8. p. 523.] printed at Lyons.

RURICIUS, DESIDERIUS, and some Others.

Ruricius, Desiderius, &c.

WE have a Collection of 64 Letters of Ruricius Bishop of Lemovicum, who lived about the end of the Age, and died at the beginning of the Next; of 14 Letters of Desiderius Bishop of Cadurcum, and some other Letters written to these two Bishops by some of their Colleagues; but they are Ordinary Letters pleasantly written, which contain nothing remarkable in them. We may find them in Canisius, and in the last Bibliotheca Patrum, printed at Lyons.

Ruricius, Desiderius, &c.

APOLLINARIS SIDONIUS, Bishop of Clermont.

Ap. Sidonius, &c.

CAius Sollius Ap. Sidonius, descended of an Illustrious Family, whose Father and Grand-Father had been Præfecti-Prætorio's among the French, was born at Lyons about the Year 430. He was brought up with Care, performed his Studies under the most excellent Masters of that time, and became very skilful in all Parts of Learning, but especially in Poetry. He married Papianilla, the Daughter of Avitus, who from a French Præfect was raised to the Imperial Throne after the Death of Maximus. But Majorianus, whom Leo had taken to be a Partner with him in the Empire, forced him to lay down his Crown, and came to besiege the City of Lyons, where Sidonius had shut up himself. The City being taken, he fell into the hands of his Enemy, but the reputation of his Learning made him his Friend; so that he received all the Favours from him which he could desire, or hope for; and as a grateful acknowledgment of them he made a Panegyrick in his Honour, which was so well taken, that he erected Sidonius's Statue in the City of Rome. The Emperor Anthemius did more honourably requite the Panegyrick, which Sidonius made in his Honour, by making him Governor of the City of Rome, and afterwards raised him to the Dignity of a Patrician; but he soon quitted his Secular Employments to follow the Calling of God, who called him to the Government of the Church. The See of Clermont being Vacant in 472, by the Death of Eparchius, Sidonius who was no more than a Lay-man as yet, was chosen to take his place without competition. Immediately he applyed himself to those Studies, which were most agreeable to his Ministry, of which he performed all the Offices with all the Care and Prudence possible. The reputation of his Wisdom was so much confirmed, that being summoned to the City of Bourges, whose See was vacant, all the Bishops that were there, did with with one consent refer the Election of the Bishop to him. He appointed Simplicius, and his Choice was approved, and followed by all the World. He had a truly Pastoral Charity for all the Poor of his Dioceses; he distributed all his Estate to them, and sold also all his Plate for their Relief; which being done without the Knowledge of his Wife, she was forced to redeem it. He maintained at his own Charge, with the help of his Wife's Brother Ecdicius, more than 4000 Burgundians, who were banished out of their own Country. He often went his Visitations in his Dioceses, and was one of the first of the French Bishops, who introduced into his Church the Use of Rogations, which were then newly appointed by Mamertus Bishop of Vienna.

Clermont being besieged by the Goths, he encouraged the People to stand upon their defence, and would never consent to the Surrender of the City; insomuch, that when it was delivered up, he was forced to fly out of it, but was soon restored, and continued to govern his Church, as he did before. Some time after he was assaulted by two Priests, who deprived him of the Government of his Church; but but one of them coming to a miserable end, Sidonius was again settled with Honour at the End of the Year. He dyed in peace, Aug. 21. Anno. *487, after he had been Bishop 15 years, and had lived 66 years. His Festival is kept upon the same day in the Church of Clermont, where his Memory is in great Veneration. Before his Death he nominated Aprunculus for his Successor, who having been heretofore Bishop of Langres was forced to retreat.

* 482. Dr. Cave.

Of all the Writers of that time there was none more learned, or that wrote more elegantly either in Prose or Verse, than Sidonius; from whence it is, that Cl. Mamertus calls him the most eminent of the eloquent, the most skilful of all the learned Men of his Age, and the Restorer of the ancient Eloquence. His Writings confirm this honourable Censure, for they are full of Ingenuity and Vigor; His Notions are curious, grateful, and well handled; He hath such plenty and Variety of Subjects, as is very surprizing and charming; He uses proper, significant, and extraordinary Words, and sometimes mixes some that are not true Latin; He hath many Flights of Wit; His Discourses are truly epistolar, i. e. concise, pleasant, full of Points, and diverting Fancies; He is excellent in his Descriptions and Draughts, which are the principal Ornaments of his Writings: Nevertheless his Style is too lofty and subtle for his Sense, and he offends, as I may say, in being too witty. This great Subtlety, together with his profound Learning makes him sometimes obscure and hard to be understood. He ventures at some Expressions, Metaphors, and Comparisons, which not many in the World can relish. He had a very poetical Wit, and ready Faculty of making Verses, of which he composed many Extempore; but he never bestowed the pains to polish and perfect them. He wrote several small Treatises in Prose and Verse, but he preserved them only that he thought fittest to be left to Posterity. He collected himself nine Books of Letters; He began an History of Attilas's Wars, but he left it unfinished, and therefore would not have it published; His principal Poems are three Panegyricks upon three Emperors, Avitus, Majorianus, and Anthemius: The other are a Collection of Poems upon particular Subjects directed to his Friends.

Ap. Sidonius, &c.

His Letters are full of infinite Points of Learning, and prophane History. There are very few of them, wherein he speaks of Religion; yet there are some from which we may draw Observations of the Discipline then in use. So in Letter 24. l. 4. he describes the Bishop of Tholouse called Maximus, to whom he went to desire him to give a Friend of his a longer time for the payment of a Sum, which his Friend's Father had borrowed of Maximus before he was Bishop. He says, that having known him heretofore, he found him wholly changed, that his Cloathing, Countenance, and Discourse savoured of nothing but Modesty and Piety; that he had short Hair and a long Beard; that his Houshold-stuff was plain; that he had nothing but wooden Benches, Stuff Curtains, a Bed without Feathers, and a Table without a Carpet, and that the ordinary Food of his Family was Pulse more than Flesh. Sidonius being surprized to see so great an Alteration in him, asked him of what Profession he was, whether he were a Monk, a Clerk, or a Penitent; and he answered him, that lately he had been made a Bishop against his Will. This teaches us, that the Life, Habit, and Houshold-stuff of a Bishop ought to be like a Monk's, and a Penitent's. He ought to do that out of Humility, which others are obliged to do by their Profession and Condition. This Bishop forgave the Interest, which amounted to as much again as the Principal, and gave his Debtor time to pay him, joyning Mercy with Humility.

Sidonius teaches us in Let. 14. Lib. 5. and Let. 1. L. 6. that the Rogations were instituted by Mamertus Bishop of Vienna. 'Tis to no purpose to say, that they were appointed before, and that he only restored them; for Sidonius says positively, that it was St. Mamertus, qui primus invenit, instituit, invexit. Processions indeed were used before, but there was no determinate time for them, and they were performed indevoutly, seldom, and very negligently. They were intermingled with Feasting, and never performed but to procure Rain or fair Weather, Vagæ, tepentes, infrequenteſque atque ut ita dicam, oſcitabundæ ſupplicationes, quæ ſæpe interpellantum prandiorum obicibus hebetabantur. But St. Mamertus fixed the time, and Manner of them, and commanded them to joyn Faſting, Prayers, Singing of Pſalms and Lamentations with them. According to the Example of St. Mamertus, the Church of Clermont, and ſeveral others took up the ſame Cuſtom, which in a ſhort time ſpread into all the Churches of the World.

Ap. Sidonius, &c.

He obſerves in Let. 17. Lib. 5. that the annual Feſtivals of the Saints were kept with very great Solemnity; that the People flocked to the Church in throngs before Day; that they light up a great many Tapers; that the Monks and Clerks ſung the Vigils in two Choirs; and that about Noon they celebrated the Maſs.

The Diſcourſe which he made at the Election of the Biſhop of Bourges, recited afterward in Let. 9. Lib. 7. demonſtrates how weighty an Affair it is to have the Choice of a Biſhop devolved on him; and how hard it is to content all the World. 'If I nominate a Monk, ſaith he, it will be 'ſaid that he is fit to make an Abbot, and not a Biſhop; 'If I chooſe an humble Perſon, they will fear, leſt he ſhould 'be contemptible. On the contrary, if I take a courageous 'and reſolute Perſon, they will accuſe him of being proud; 'if I pitch upon a learned Man, they will ſay immediately, 'that he will be arrogant; if he be a Perſon of mean Learning, they will deride his Ignorance; if I name a ſevere 'Man, they will look upon him as a cruel Man; if he 'be mild, they will blame his Eaſineſs, &c. If I chooſe a 'Clergy-man, they that are above him, will deſpiſe him, 'and they that are inferior to him will envy him. Age and 'Antiquity among the Clergy are the only things almoſt 'that are conſidered at preſent; as if the number of years 'that they have been in the Clergy, did confer Worth upon 'thoſe that have none, and as if it were a ſufficient Qualification for the Prieſthood to have lived long, tho' they 'have not lived well. There are Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, 'who having been all their Lives careleſs of the Diſcharge 'of their Miniſterial Function, ready to anſwer, accuſtomed to make idle Diſcourſes, Heads of Parties and Factions, defective in Charity, always wavering, always envious, yet contend for a Biſhoprick at the end of their 'Lives, and deſire to govern others at an Age wherein 'they have need to be governed themſelves. But ſince this Diſcourſe might diſpleaſe the Clergy of the Church to whom he ſpoke, he cunningly appeaſed them, by ſaying, that his Deſign was not to blame many for the Ambition of a few, but by naming no Man particularly, thoſe, who took offence at what he ſaid, would diſcover their Diſpoſition; that there were ſeveral in that Church that deſerved to be Biſhops, but all that were worthy of it could not be. Having thus diſpoſed their Minds to approve his Choice, which he was about to make, he ſwore by the Name of the Holy Spirit, that he was not ſwayed by any human Conſideration, by Money or Favour to proceed in it, and then declared, that he had fixed his Eyes upon Simplicius, who was the Clerk of that Church, whom he commended: And ſince they had all ſworn, that they would ſubmit to his Judgment in the Election, he pronounced in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt, that it was Simplicius, who ought to be Biſhop of Bourges, and Metropolitan of his Province. This is all that is obſervable in Sidonius's Letters concerning the Diſcipline of the Church. They alſo diſcover to us the Names of many Biſhops of that time, to whom theſe Letters are directed, and which are all called Popes, according to the Cuſtom of that time.

Ap. Sidonius, &c.

The learned Savaron publiſhed the Works of this Author in the laſt year of the former Age, * cleared from a great number of Faults, and enriched with many very learned Notes, which make the Text very plain, and contain in them ſeveral very uſeful and curious Remarks. To undertake a new Edition after ſo learned a Man, as no body ſeemed to deſire it, ſo it might be looked upon as a thing needleſs and inconſiderate. Yet this did not much diſcourage F. Sirmondus, who had taken much pains upon this Author, before the Work of Savaron appeared, from putting out his Labours, by cauſing Sidonius's Works to be printed [at Paris] in 1614 [8*vo.*] which have given an ample Proof of the Excellency of his Underſtanding, and Depth of his Learning; for altho' there ſeemed nothing to have eſcaped the exact Obſervation of Savaron, yet F. Sirmondus hath found many things fit to be taken notice of and explained, which Savaron had paſſed over; and hath made ſuch rational, learned, curious, and well choſen Notes, that they far excel Savaron's in the Judgment of all the World almoſt. Nevertheleſs 'tis good to have both the Editions, and it were to be wiſhed, that one were put out with the Notes of both theſe learned Men. Since the Death of Sirmondus his Sidonius hath been reprinted with ſome Augmentations. This Edition was by Cramoiſy in 4*to*, in the Year 1652. There is alſo found at the End of it a Catalogue of Sirmondus's Works. [Beſides the forementioned Editions of Sidonius's Works, we have alſo others viz. at Baſil in 1542, 4*to*, with the Commentary of Joan. Bapt. Pius, which being reviſed by Elias Vietus was printed at Lyons in 1552, 8*vo.* They are alſo printed in the Bibliotheca Patrum. Tom. VI. p. 1075.]

* Printed at Paris in 4*to, and after at* Hannover in 1617, 8*vo.*

JOANNES TALAIA, or TALAIDA.

J. Talaia.

Joannes Talaia, or Talaida, a Monk of Tebenna, was choſen Biſhop of Alexandria in 481. Immediately after his Ordination he wrote Letters of Communion to Simplicius Biſhop of Rome, and Calendion; but he omitted to write to Acacius Biſhop of Conſtantinople. Acacius being offended at theſe Proceedings, ſtirred up the Emperor Zeno againſt him, accuſing him as guilty of Perjury, and a Favourer of Hillus; inſomuch, that he was forced to fly into Italy a little after his Election. Since he could not return to his own Biſhoprick, the Church of Nola was committed to his Care and Government. Photius mentions an Apology, which he wrote to Gelaſius Biſhop of Rome; in which he condemns not only the Hereſie of Pelagius, but alſo Pelagius, Cœleſtius, and Julian, who ſucceeded them in that Sect. We have not this Work. It was compoſed about the Year 492.

J. Talaia.

JOHN, a Prieſt of Antioch.

John.

John, who of a Grammarian was made a Prieſt of Antioch, hath written, ſaith Gennadius, againſt thoſe that maintain, that we ought to worſhip Jeſus Chriſt, as having only one Nature, and that acknowledge but one Nature in his Perſon. In it he oppoſes ſome Propoſitions of St. Cyril. He ſays, that he ſpake them inconſiderately againſt the Neſtorians; but they confirm, and help to uphold the Error of the Timotheans, which he himſelf ſays impertinently and groundleſly, according to the Teſtimony of Gennadius: He was alive when Gennadius wrote this. He made Sermons Ex tempore, and without any Preparation. We have not any thing of his Writing remaining.

John.

JOANNES ÆGEATES.

J. Ægeates.

Joannes Ægeates * a Neſtorian Prieſt hath compoſed a Church-Hiſtory, which begins at the Empire of Theodoſius the Younger, when Neſtorius divulged his Hereſie, and was depoſed; and ends with the Empire of Zeno, and the Depoſition of Petrus Fullo. The Style of this Author was noble and florid. He relates the 3*d*. General Council held at Epheſus, and that of the other Council held at the ſame Place under Dioſcorus, to which they give the Name of an Aſſembly of Thieves, but yet this Author makes it an holy Synod; and Dioſcorus and his Companions Saints. He alſo made the Hiſtory of the Council of Chalcedon, but it was full of Abuſes and Calumnies. The ſame John Ægeates hath alſo written a Book on purpoſe againſt the Council of Chalcedon, he had promiſed 10 Books, but Photius, from whom we have taken all this, had never ſeen but five; which begin, as we have ſaid, with Neſtorius, and ended at the Depoſition of P. Fullo. We have nothing of them, but only ſome Fragments recited in the ſecond Council of Nice, Tom. 7. of the Councils, p. 369. and in the Collections of Theodorus, L. 2. p. 563.

J. Ægeates.

VIC-

VICTOR VITENSIS.

Victor Vitensis.

Victor Bishop of Vita, a City of Byzacenum, rather than of Utica, (a) a City of the Proconsular Province, hath written an History of the Persecution of the Orthodox of Africk under Genfericus and Hunnericus, Kings of the Vandals. This Persecution began in the Year 427, when Genfericus went into Africk with twenty four thousand Persons, as well Men, as Women and Children. He made strange Devastations in that Country, and laid it all waste by Murthers, Plunders, and Flames. He chiefly fell upon the Churches and Monasteries, which he destroyed with Fire and Sword. He slew a great number of Bishops and Clergy-men; after he had put them to a thousand Tortures, that he might force them to discover the Treasure of the Church. Having made himself Master of all the Provinces of Africa in a short time; he besieged Carthage, and having taken it, he banished the Bishops and Clergy, possessed himself of their Churches. He banished also the greatest part of the Bishops of other Churches. He passed from thence into Italy; took and sacked the City of Rome in 455. Being returned into Africk, grown proud and insolent, with the Thoughts of his Victory, he continued to afflict the Churches of that Country; and to persecute the Orthodox with greater Cruelty than ever: This Persecution continued 37 Years. After his Death his Son Hunnericus did at first use them with more Lenity, having granted at the Request of the Emperor Zeno, and the Empress Placidia, that they should ordain an Orthodox Bishop at Carthage, upon condition that the Arian Bishops should have liberty of using their Worship in the City of the Empire. This Condition was never performed, but yet they ordain'd Eugenius Bishop of Carthage. But the Arians soon raised a cruel Persecution against the Catholicks, and sent them an Edict, in which it was commanded, that Eugenius, and the Orthodox Bishops should come to Carthage to confer with the Bishops of the Vandals, about their Doctrine. This Order being shewed Eugenius, he made Answer, that the Bishops of other Provinces ought to be cited to this Conference, because it being the common Concern of all the Orthodox Church, it was reasonable that the Bishops of the whole World should be present at it; and especially the Bishop of the Church of Rome, who was the Head of other Churches. Nevertheless, being constrained to appear, he did so, and after some Contests, he read the Confession of Faith, which he had already prepared. But this Conference was but a Pretence, which they made use of to persecute the Orthodox. King Hunnericus published an Edict against them, which contained the same Punishments against the Orthodox, which the Orthodox Emperors had decreed by their Edicts against the Arians. He shut up the Churches of the Orthodox, which he gave to the Arians; and banished the Orthodox Bishops to the Isle of Corsica. They were in number 466, of which 88 dyed at Carthage, and the rest were conveyed to the Isle of Corsica. This was followed by an horrible Persecution against the Orthodox, upon whom they laid infinite Torments. Such was the deplorable Estate of the African Churches at that time, which had been heretofore most flourishing and glorious. Victor of Vita, who was a sharer in this Persecution hath described it in five Books, in a very plain and affecting Style. This Work hath been printed in several Collections, and published at Dijon in 1664. by F. Chiffletius, with the Works of Vigilius Tapsensis, [at Cologne, in 1535, at Paris in 1541, by the care of B. Rhenanus, at Paris in 1569, 8*vo*. at the End of Optatus Milevitanus, with Baldwin's Notes, as also in the Bibliotheca Patrum. Tom. 8. p. 675.]

Victor Vitensis.

(a) Rather than of Utica.] The ordinary Editions give him the Title of Bishop of Utica, but it is through an Error, because Utica is better known than Vita, for in the best MSS. he is named Vitensis. In an ancient Edition put out by the care of Rhenanus in 1541; he is also called Vitensis, as well as in another, which is at the End of an old Book of Rufinus's Church-History, and in the Epistle Dedicatory of the Collection of St. Austine's Sermons, printed at Louvain in 1504. He could not have been Bishop of Utica; for when the Bishops were banished Africa, Florentinus was Bishop of that City, as appears.

VIGILIUS TAPSENSIS.

Vigilius Tapsensis.

Vigilius Bishop of Thapsus, a City in the Province of Byzacenum in Africa, was one of those who was banished Africa by King Hunnericus (a). As he lived in a time, when Africa was under the Government of the Arians, and the East infected with the Errors of the Nestorians and Eutychians; he applied himself diligently to oppose these three Heresies, but he did it ordinarily under the Name of those Fathers of the Church, who had lived before him, either because by suppressing his own Name he might avoid Persecution, or because his Works would be of greater Weight, and have a better Effect, being put out under the Name of such illustrious Persons. Wherefore he published under the Name of St. Athanasius twelve Books upon the Trinity, by way of Dialogue; a Treatise against an Arian called Varimadus, under the Name of Idacius Clarus; a Book against Felicianus the Arian under the Name of St. Austine. He hath also made two Conferences, in which he brings in Athanasius disputing against Arius before a Judge, whom he calls Probus, who gives Sentence for Athanasius. There are two Editions of these Conferences. The first, which is the most ordinary, is divided into two Books, wherein all the Dispute is managed between Athanasius and Arius; but he brings into it * in the second Edition, which is larger than the first, and divided into three parts, I say, he brings in Sabellius and Photinus. It cannot be doubted, but that this last Work belongs to Vigilius Tapsensis since he cites it in his five Books against Eutyches, which are the only Work he hath published under his own Name. In this Work he confutes the Eutychian Doctrine, by Scripture, and the Testimony of the Fathers of the Church. He defends St. Leo's Letter, and the Definition of the Council of Chalcedon, against the Objections of those Hereticks. He observes by the by, that the Custom of universal and orthodox Councils, is to make new Decisions against new Heresies, without meddling with what hath been determined in former Councils, which remains in full Force and Vigor. There is also a place in the third Book worthy our Notice, wherein he says, that the Christians have received by Jesus Christ, the Abundance of Corn, Wine, and Oyl, promised to the Posterity of Esau; having been consecrated by the Mystery of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, and by the Holy Chrism. Corporis, & Sanguinis Christi & Chrismatis ejus Mysterio consecratis.

*This Edition was put out by Cassander at Cologne, in 1675.

This Author wrote well enough for his time; His Discourse is plain, and natural, without being base and childish, he unfolds the Mysteries of our Religion with much Elegancy; he proves them very solidly; he discovers the Opinions of the Hereticks with great Sagacity, and confutes them very subtly, forcing them out of their strong Holds. He had read the Writings of the Fathers, but knew little of the Ecclesiastical History; and therefore for want of an exact knowledge of it he hath committed several mistakes.

Vigilius Tapsensis.

The five Books against Eutyches bearing the Name of Vigilius, have always been printed under his Name both in the Collections, which have been made of those who have opposed the Hereticks, and in the Orthodoxographers, and Bibliothecæ Patrum; but they are very unfitly attributed to Vigilius Bishop of Trent. They have also been printed by themselves at Basil, in 1539. Cassander hath caused them to be printed since at Collen [in 1575, 8*vo*.] with the Dialogues against Arius; which he restored first of all to this Author; and lastly, Josias Simlerus had them printed again [at Basil, in 1571.] with some other Treatises against the Eutychians.

The twelve Books of the Trinity have been printed among the Works of St. Athanasius, whose Name they bear [at Heidelburg, in 1601,*] but they were soon known to belong to a Latin Author. F. Sirmondus having found them in a MS. of the Abby of St. Flurii (which is now in the Library of the Jesuites College) after the five Books of Vigilius against Eutyches, and his Dispute against Arius, as being the same Author's, hath observed in his Notes upon Theodulphus, [printed with that Author at Paris in 1646. 8*vo*.] that this Author, and Hincmarus have been quoted under the Name of Athanasius. Yet they were Vigilius's of Tapsus. His Judgment hath been followed by all the Learned, and is confirmed by the Authority of several MSS. where they are joyned with the Conference against Arius, and by the Testimony of the Preface of the Books against Varimadus, where the Author alludes to these two Books. F. Chiffletius hath also restored the Treatise of the Trinity against Felicianus, attributed to St. Austine, to him because he found them in the MSS, with the Works of Vigilius, and they are of the same Style. The three Books against Varimadus bear the Name of Idacius; but Vigilius, discovers himself to be the Author of it in the second Book of his Conferences against Arius.

*And at Paris in 1627.

(a) Under King Hunnericus.] He is cited by Theodulphus as a Bishop of Africa, and in an Ancient MS. of the Work against Eutyches. The City of Tapsus is named for the Place of his Bishoprick. His Name is found in the Catalogue of the African Bishops, composed at that very time. He is the last, and by consequence the youngest of the Bishops of the Province of Byzacenum.

Vigilius Tapſenſis.

Laſtly, F. Chiffletius attributes to him a Treatiſe of Faith againſt Palladius, which is printed in St. Ambroſe, and among the Works of St. Gregory Nazianzen's; but he doth not ſufficiently prove, that this Work is Vigilius's of Thapſus.

The ſame Author is of Opinion, that the Acts of the Council of Aquileia are alſo the invention of Vigilius of Thapſus; but in that he is miſtaken, as we have already ſhewn. Yet the Creed which is attributed to Athanaſius, may with much more Reaſon be attributed to Vigilius. [The above-mentioned Works of Vigilius of Thapſus have been collected into one Volume, by F. Chiffletius and printed with his Notes at Dijon, in 1664. 4*to*, and have been ſince put into the Bibliotheca Patrum. Tom. 8. p. 722.] Vigilius Tapſenſis.

FÆLIX III. Biſhop of Rome.

Felix III.

Cælius Felix was ordained Biſhop of Rome, in the beginning of the Year 483. A little time after his Ordination he held a Council at Rome, in which John Talaia, who being baniſhed from Alexandria, by the Authority of Acacius Biſhop of Conſtantinople, was fled into the Weſt, preſented a Petition to him, in which were contained ſeveral Heads of Accuſation againſt Acacius. This obliged Felix to ſend to the Emperor, Vitalis Biſhop of Trent, and Miſenus Biſhop of Cumæ to requeſt him to cauſe the Council of Chalcedon to be confirmed, to baniſh Petrus the Heretick from the See of Alexandria, and compel Acacius to condemn Peter, and to anſwer to the things of which he was accuſed. Felix gave two Letters to his Legates, the one directed to Acacius, the other to the Emperor. In both of them he is very urgent to have Peter expelled from Alexandria. In the Letter to Acacius, he earneſtly exhorts that Biſhop to free himſelf from the ſuſpicions which might be had againſt him, and to uſe his Intereſt with the Emperor to bring them to an end, and upbraids him for want of Zeal in this Affair, and his diſſimulation or allowance given to this Heretick. In the Letter to the Emperor, he boldly tells him, that he ought not to ſuffer an Heretick condemned a long time ſince, and baniſhed by his own Edicts, to remain in poſſeſſion of the See of Alexandria. Vitalis and Miſenus parted with theſe Letters and Inſtructions. While they were in their Voyage, Cyril Abbot of the * Acœmetæ wrote to Felix, that there were daily Innovations againſt the Orthodox Faith; and that he ought to be ſo much the quicker in providing ſome Remedy againſt them. Felix having received this News, wrote to his Legates, that they ſhould do nothing without the advice and approbation of this Cyril and ſent them a Letter ſubſcribed to the Emperor, wherein he tells him of the Authority of the Council of Chalcedon, and writes to him about the Perſecution of the Orthodox in Africa. We have neither of the Letters, which Evagrius mentions. The Legates being arrived at Abydos (a) were ſeized by the Guards, who took away their Papers, and put them into Priſon. They had orders not to communicate with the Adherents of Petrus Mongus, nor Acacius, who was joyned with him: But the Emperor firſt made uſe of Threatnings to force them to it, but not prevailing that way, he tryed them by Kindneſs and Promiſes, and gained their Conſent to communicate with Petrus Mongus and Acacius, upon Condition nevertheleſs, that it ſhould be no prejudice to the Merits of the Cauſe, which they entirely referred to the Judgment of Holy See. Upon this Promiſe they received the Sacrament with Acacius, and with the Deputies of P. Mongus. The more Zealous of the Orthodox immediately made Proteſtations againſt the Action; One they faſtened upon the Cloaths of the Legates with an Hook, the other they ſent them in a Book; and a third in a Basket of Herbs. Vitalis and Miſenus having ſped ſo ill, departed to go again into Italy. But they had with them an Advocate of Rome named Felix, who was forced to ſtay behind, being taken Sick at Conſtantinople. This Man, becauſe he would not conform to the Example of the Legates, was cruelly handled by Acacius. Vitalis and Miſenus being returned to Rome, found that the Acœmetæ Monks had already given a Relation of what had paſſed, and had likewiſe ſent one of their Monks called Simeon, to give the Pope an Account of it. Felix called a Council of Sixty ſeven Biſhops, where they appeared to give an account of their Embaſſage; and brought the Letters of Zeno and Acacius full of Invectives againſt John Talaia, and the Praiſes of Peter. They laboured to excuſe themſelves, by ſaying, that they had forced them and ſurprized them, and they knew not that they had communicated with Peter Biſhop of Alexandria. But Simeon proved it to their Faces, that they knew what they did, and that they never would hearken to the Orthodox, which came to them. Sylvanus, who had been at Conſtantinople with them, confirmed the Depoſition of Simeon; Inſomuch, that Vitalis and Miſenus being Convicted of acting contrary to the Orders they had received, were depoſed and excommunicated. They next examined the Conduct of Acacius, and condemned him with Petrus Mongus. This Judgment was paſſed July 28 Anno. 484.

 An Order of Monks.*

Felix gave Notice of this Sentence to Acacius, by his 6th. Letter, wherein he tells him, that being found guilty of divers Crimes, of breaking the Canons of the Council of Nice, of uſurping the Juriſdiction of thoſe Provinces that were not ſubject to him, of having not only received into his Communion, but alſo preferred to the Epiſcopal Dignity, Hereticks, whom he had heretofore condemned, ſuch as that John, whom he made Biſhop of Tyre, although he was not received at Apamæa by the Orthodox, and has been ſince expelled out of Antioch; ſuch was alſo the Deacon Numerius, who was depoſed, whom yet he raiſed to the dignity of the Prieſthood. Beſides this, he ſtood convicted of having placed Petrus Mongus upon the Throne of St. Mark, and received him into his Communion; of having corrupted Vitalis and Miſenus to gain their conſent to what he deſired, inſtead of obeying and following the Commands, which they had been injoyned on the part of the Holy See; and by refuſing to anſwer to the Heads of the Accuſation, which John had drawn up againſt him, he ſeemed to acknowledge them; That he had ſince contemned the Deacon Felix, and communicated with the Hereticks, and that he did perſiſt in it; ſo that he did not deſerve to be ranked among thoſe that he received to his Communion, and that by this Sentence he declared him to be deprived of his Prieſthood, and the Communion of the Catholick Church, falen from the Rights of the Prieſtly Office, condemned by the Judgment of the Holy Spirit and his Apoſtolick Authority, and bound for ever with the Cords of an Anathema. Nunquamq; Anathematis Vinculis exuendus. Beſides this Letter, there is a kind of a ſhort Declaration againſt Acacius, in which Felix declares him deprived of his Prieſthood, for having not obeyed the Admonitions of the Holy See, and impriſoned his Legates; and forbids all Men whatſoever communicating with him, under the Penalty of an Anathema. Felix III.

He wrote alſo to the Emperor Zeno the ninth Letter, in which having complained of the ill Uſage that his Legates had met with, he tells him that he had depoſed them, and deprived them of Communion, for having conſented to what Acacius had deſired of them. He aſſures him, that he will never communicate with Peter, and that he gives him the liberty to chooſe the Communion of St. Peter, or Peter Biſhop of Alexandria; that he hath alſo condemned Acacius for being in Communion with Hereticks, and he hoped that the Piety of the Emperor will incline him to ſuffer the Laws of the Church to be executed; that he ought to hold this for a certainty, that as God hath entruſted the Sovereignty of things Temporal to Princes, ſo he hath made the Miniſters of the Church Miniſters of Spiritual things; and that when the Cauſe of God is in hand, the Will of Kings ought to ſubmit to the Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt; that they ought to learn Holy Things of them, and not to meddle with the Office of teaching others, to follow the Deciſions of the Church, and not take upon him to preſcribe Laws. This Letter is dated Aug. 1. Anno. 484. Laſtly, he lets us know by his 10*th*. Letter to the Clergy, and the People of Conſtantinople, the Judgment paſſed againſt Acacius, that they may not too own him for their Biſhop, but ſeparate themſelves from his Communion.

Tutus the Advocate of the Church of Rome was commanded to carry the Sentence againſt Acacius, and to declare it to him. He diſcharged his Commiſſion by faſtening it to his Prieſtly Habit, when he was celebrating the Holy Myſteries, and by publiſhing the Declaration made againſt him; but afterwards ſuffering himſelf to be corrupted by Maronas he communicated with Acacius, Felix having convicted him of it by his own Letter, he put him out of his Advocates Office, and declared him excommunicated. He ſignifies it to the Monks of Conſtantinople by his eleventh Letter, and adviſes them to ſevere from their Communities thoſe who would communicate with Acacius; permitting them notwithſtanding to receive thoſe, who had been conſtrained to do it by Violence, and did teſtifie their ſorrow for it.

But notwithſtanding all the Endeavours that Felix uſed, his Sentence remained without Execution, nor did he write again to the Emperor ſo long as Acacius lived; but after his Death he thought he had gotten a favourable Opportunity to have his Sentence executed. Flavitus, who was ordain'd in his Place, hoping to be united to the Holy See, wrote to Felix a Letter, wherein he much extols the dignity of the See of Rome, and made profeſſion of the Orthodox Faith and ſent it to him by ſome of his Clergy. The firſt thing that the Pope did before he received them to his Communion, was to demand of them whether they condemned

(a) A*bydos.*] Anaſtaſius Bibliothecarius ſays, that they were ſeized at Heraclea; but Theophanes aſſures us, that it was at Abydos.

Acacius

Felix III. Acacius and Peter. Since they refuſed to do it, he declared to them that he would not receive them to Communion, unleſs they would promiſe him never to recite the Names of Acacius and Petrus in the Holy Myſteries. The Deputies of Flavitus having anſwered, that they had no order about that, the Pope reſolved to write to Zeno and Flavitus, to obtain of them to grant them what he demanded. The Letters are the 12*th*. and 13*th*. He did all he could to defend himſelf againſt the Reproaches, which might be caſt on him, by acting in this matter with Authority, Rigour, and Reſolution. He aſſures them that he carried himſelf ſo only to perform his Duty, and to do nothing againſt his own Conſcience; he tells them that he deſired nothing ſo much as a Re-union with the Church of Conſtantinople, and that the two Romes ſhould be at a perfect agreement, but Union could never be obtained by violating the Laws of the Church; that the Council of Chalcedon having condemned Eutyches and Dioſcorus, he could not, without contempt of its Authority, receive Timotheus and Petrus, who were of the ſame Opinions; and that Acacius having received Peter into his Communion after he had himſelf condemned him, had ſhewed himſelf ſo great a Diſſembler, that he deſerved the ſame Puniſhment; that Peter had manifeſted no ſigns of Converſion, but tho' he had done it, he ought not to be acknowledged as a Biſhop, but only received as a Mere Laick. Theſe are the principal Matters which Felix wrote in theſe two Letters, which are the moſt Eloquent that ever were written by any Pope. He had commanded them a little before by his 14*th*. Letter written during the Vacancy of the See of Conſtantinople, to Thalaſſius Abbot of the Monks called Acæmetæ at Conſtantinople, who were entirely devoted to the Holy See, not to receive the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, nor any other into their Communion, that were not received by the Holy See. 'Twas alſo certainly in the ſame Vacancy, that he wrote the 15*th*. Letter to Biſhop Vetranio, in which after he hath ſpoken of the Diviſion of the Church of Conſtantinople and Rome; and ſhewed that it was only in Obedience to the Council of Chalcedon, that he hath condemned Acacius, that he might not ſeem to joyn with the Hereticks as he had done; he deſires him to uſe his utmoſt intereſt with the Emperor, to gain his conſent, that the Names of Acacius and Petrus might be blotted out of the Catalogue of Biſhops, and by this means the Churches of Conſtantinople may be re-united. Theſe four Letters are dated in the Year 490.

We have not ſpoken of the three Letters in Greek and Latin, written about the Affair of Petrus Fullo, who uſurped the See of the Church of Antioch, of which two were ſent to that pretended Biſhop, and the other to the Emperor; being of the Opinion of the learned M. Valeſius, that theſe three Letters were forged by ſome Greek, as well as the other Letters written to Petrus Fullo under the Name of ſeveral Biſhops, and produced, as ſome pretend, at the Council of Rome, held under Felix in 483, recited in the fourth Tome of the Councils, Pag. 1098. &c. For, 1. All theſe Letters were written Originally in Greek, and ſince tranſlated into Latin, as it appears by the Style, which is barbarous, as well as becauſe there are two different Verſions of them. 2. All theſe Letters are in the ſame Style, although they were written in the Name of the Biſhops of different Countries. 3. They were written in a way unworthy of the Biſhops of that time. Thoſe that are attributed to Felix differ much from the Letters of that Pope. The Sentence which he pronounces againſt Petrus Fullo is ridiculous. 4. The Names of the greateſt part of the Biſhops, which write to Petrus Fullo, are unknown; for who ever heard of Fauſtus of Apollonia, of Pamphilus of Abydos, of Aſclepiades of Tralla, of Antheon of Arſinoe, of Quintianus of Aſcalon, and Juſtin of Sicily? Why ſhould theſe Biſhops, of private and inconſiderable Churches, undertake to write to Petrus Fullo? Have we any Examples like it? 5. 'Tis not true, that Petrus Fullo was condemned in a Synod of Conſtantinople, and another at Rome in 483. He had been ſo under Pope Simplicius, but ſince we have nothing ſpoken of him. He did not begin to re-eſtabliſh himſelf again till 484. when Calendion was depoſed; and therefore 'tis not likely, that they would condemn him without Neceſſity.

I believe alſo, that the two Forms of Citation to ſummon Acacius, which are ſuppoſed to have been given to Vitalis and Miſenus in the Council of Rome held in 483. are a Forgery; for it appears by the firſt Letter of Felix to Acacius, that when he ſent Vitalis and Miſenus, he had no deſign of calling Acacius to Rome, and of proceeding againſt him: He expected only, that he ſhould free himſelf from the Accuſations drawn up againſt him by Letter, and he requiredno thing elſe, but that he would do what he could with the the Emperor to make him deprive Petrus Mongus, not knowing that he had received him to his Communion.

Laſtly, I am perſuaded, that the Letter ſuppoſed to have been written by the Council of Rome, againſt Acacius to the Clergy, and Monks of Bithynia, is alſo a ſuppoſititious Piece. It hath given occaſion to M. Valeſius to maintain, that there were in that Year two Councils held at Rome againſt Acacius, and two Excommunications pronounced againſt that Biſhop, the one in a Council of 67 Biſhops held July the 28*th*. and the other in a Synod of 42 Biſhops held Auguſt the firſt following. 'Tis true, that ſo much is intimated in Felix III. that Letter, but this is the thing that makes it ſuſpected, becauſe theſe two Condemnations are ſpoken of in no place elſe. Nevertheleſs, if this ſecond Condemnation were true, Felix would certainly have mentioned it in thoſe Letters that he wrote afterward againſt Acacius both in his Life-time, and after his Death: He that with ſo much Diligence ſought out all the Reaſons which could be brought againſt Acacius, would he have forgotten the Authority of the ſecond Synod? Would he have paſſed over this ſecond Condemnation? 'Tis ſo much the leſs credible, becauſe it is founded upon a new fault, for having, ſay they, depoſed Calendion, and put Peter Fullo, in his Place. Would Felix have neglected to have urged this Reaſon for the Condemnation of Acacius, being ſo very plauſible an one? Yet he ſpeaks nothing of it in all theſe Letters. The ſame Day on which this Council is ſuppoſed to be held, Felix wrote the Sentence, which he would have to be ſignified to Acacius, wherein he exactly relates all the Reaſons of his Condemnation, but ſpeaks nothing at all of this, which would have been one of the principal and ſtrongeſt. There is therefore no reaſon to believe that he was condemned upon that account. Beſides what likelyhood is there, that there ſhould be two Councils held at Rome in ſo little a time? Let them not ſay that they are two different Seſſions of the ſame Council, for they are under two different Biſhops. Laſtly, the Ancient Record concerning the Affair of Acacius, which relates exactly all the Circumſtances of his Condemnation, ſpeaks of only one, which went before the attempt which he made of putting Petrus Fullo into the See of Conſtantinople.

We cannot then maintain this Letter written in the Name of the Synod of Rome to the Monks and Clergy of Bythinia, at leaſt as to the ſecond Part; for it is to be taken notice of, that it hath two Parts. The firſt is a Relation of the Condemnation of Acacius, as we have already ſaid, which is authorized by Felix's Letters. The ſecond contains the other Condemnation of Acacius, for having reſtored Petrus Fullo, which doth not all agree with the Hiſtory. Nor are either of the Parts in the Style of Pope Felix, but more eſpecially the laſt, which is written after an impertinent manner, and contains the ſordid Praiſes of Pope Felix, calling him Caput Noſtrum, Papa & Archiepiſcopus; Our Head, Pope, and Archbiſhop; Terms, which were never uſed in that Age. In an ancient MS. this Letter is dated Octob. 485. This date is evidently falſe, for 'tis ſaid, that he ſent this Sentence by Tutus the Advocate. Now the Voyage of Tutus was in 484. He had not that Title in 485. I ſpare to mention a great number of Places in that Letter, which are ſuch pitiful ſtuff, that it is impoſſible to believe that it is a Work written at that time.

But the like cannot be ſaid of Felix's, ſeventh Letter concerning thoſe who have been re-baptized by the Arians. In the ordinary Inſcriptions it is directed to all Biſhops: But I believe that we ought to follow the MS. of Juſtellus, where it is directed to the Biſhops of Sicily. In this Letter he orders what the Penance of thoſe Perſons ſhall be, who have ſuffered themſelves to be baptized by the Arians. 1. He obſerves, that there is a great deal of difference between ſuch as were forced to do it, and thoſe that have done it voluntarily. 2. He aſſerts, that all thoſe who have been baptized, ought to do Penance, and ſubmit themſelves to Faſting, Tears, and other Acts of Penance. 3. That the Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons, who have been re-baptized, ought to undergo Penance as long as they live, be debarred the Eccleſiaſtical Aſſemblies, and be excluded the Prayers even of the Catechumens themſelves, and that all the favour that can be granted them, is to receive them into Lay-Communion at the point of Death. 4. He impoſes upon the other Clergy, Monks, and Virgins devoted to God, who have alſo ſuffered themſelves to be re-baptized, twelve Years Penance, three among the Hearers, ſeven among the Penitents, and two among the Conſiſtents, upon condition nevertheleſs, that if they happen to be in danger of Death, they ſhall be relieved either by the Biſhop, who impoſed the Penance, or by ſome other Biſhop, or by a Prieſt. 5. He ordains, that as to thoſe young Children, whom their Age may excuſe, it ſhall ſuffice to keep them ſometime ſubject to the Impoſition of Hands without enjoyning them Penance. 6. He ordains no more than a three Years Penance for the Clergy, Monks and Lay-men, who have been re-baptized by force or ſubtilty, not having conſented to it: But he lays it down as a General Rule, that none of thoſe who have been baptized or re-baptized by Hereticks, ſhould be admitted to Sacred Orders. Laſtly, he forbids the Biſhops and Prieſts to receive to Communion the Clergy, or mere Laicks of another Dioceſs, or Pariſh, unleſs they have the Teſtimonial Letters from their Biſhop or Prieſt. This Letter is dated March 15. Anno 488. We have nothing to obſerve about the eighth Letter to Zeno Biſhop of Sevil, which is nothing but a Recommendation of a certain Perſon called Terentianus, who had told him of the Welfare of that Biſhop. The Letters of this Pope are written in a noble, cogent, and pleaſant Style.

The Author of the Memoir concerning the Affair of ACACIUS.

The Author, &c.

THis Memoir was composed two Years after the Condemnation of Acacius by Felix; that is to say, in 486. It contains an Abridgment of what passed in the Cause of Acacius, from his Condemnation to Acacius's. The things related in it are done very exactly, and in few Words. It discovers a great number of particular Circumstances, which we can find no where else. We may there see the Troubles with which the Church was vexed for 40 Years together, and the frequent Revolutions which happened to the great Sees of the Eastern Churches, and other accidents which it would have been hard to have picked up, if we had not an Author of that time, who hath related them distinctly. It is not certainly known, who composed this Memoir. F. Sirmondus found in a MS. with St. Leo's Letters. It was without all doubt composed by the Order of this Pope.

The Author, &c.

GELASIUS I.

Gelasius. I.

‡ An African, Son of Valerius, Successor of Felix III.

† Febr. 7.

Gelasius ‡ was ordained Bishop of Rome in the † Beginning of the Year 492. and governed that Church four Years, eight Months, and some Days. Some time after his Ordination, Euphemius Patriarch of Constantinople wrote a Letter to him, in which he complains that he had not sent him a Letter of Communion according to the ancient Custom: And having assured him, that he held the Orthodox Faith, he prayed him to conform himself to the Eastern Churches. Gelasius returned this Answer thereupon, that it was true, that it was the ancient Custom of the Holy See, that as soon as any Person was ordained Bishop of Rome, he imparted his Election to his Colleagues by Letters of Communion; but he dare not give that Mark of Union to such Persons, as preferred Communion with Hereticks before that of the Holy See. That the Letter which he now writes to him, ought not to be taken as a Mark of Communion, but only as an Effect of that general Charity, which Christianity obliges us to have for all the World. As to the Conformity, which he desires of him, he could not yield to it, without departing from the Truth. That as for those who have been baptized, and ordained by Acacius, he allows them to act in that manner, which Euphemius hath prescribed in his Letter, but he cannot consent to their putting Acacius's Name among those, who are in Communion with the Church. That tho' that Bishop never espoused any Heretical Opinions, yet he hath rendered himself blame-worthy by receiving Hereticks into his Communion: That Eutyches having been condemned by the Council of Chalcedon, Timotheus and Petrus, who were of the same Judgment with that Heretick, ought to be looked upon as subject to the same Condemnation, as also all those that are united with them, so that it is not sufficient for Euphemius to condemn Eutyches, and to declare himself Orthodox, unless he condemn them, who are of the same Sentiments, or communicate with them: That without this he can never come to a firm Reconciliation with him. Euphemius had told him in his Letter, that he was very ready to satisfie him in this Matter, but he could not do it without offending the People of Constantinople, and therefore desired him to send such Persons as he thought best of. Whereupon Gelasius answers him, that it is the People's Duty to follow their Pastor, and the Pastor's to govern his People; and if his Flock hears not his Voice, it will give less heed to another Pastor whom it suspects. Lastly, he cites him before the Tribunal of Jesus Christ, where he says it will be known, whether he be in the fault, or no, in so acting. This is the Sum of Gelasius's first Letter.

The second is a Circular Letter to the Bishop of Illyria, which contains a Profession, or Declaration of his Doctrine, wherein he condemns the Errors of the Eutychians, and establisheth the Distinction of the two Natures. He also tells them, how joyful he was to see them follow the Sentence passed against Acacius by his Predecessor, and pronounce Anathema against that Bishop.

The third is another Circular Letter to the Bishops of Dardania, in which he exhorts them to condemn the Eutychians, and all that communicate with them. They satisfie him in their answer, which goes before this Letter.

In the fourth Letter directed to Faustus, the Ambassador of Theodoricus at Constantinople, he complains of the Obstinacy of the Greeks in the business of Acacius; and because they desired him to pardon him, he says, That he could not pardon a Man who died out of the Communion of the Church; nor absolve him from his Excommunication after his Death, because he had no Precedent for such an Action. And whereas Euphemius had said, That Acacius could not be condemned by the Bishop of Rome only; he answers, That having been condemned by the Authority of the Council of Chalcedon, and his Predecessor having done no more but put the Decree of that Council in Execution, he could not disallow of his Condemnation, because it was not only permitted to the Bishop of the Holy Apostolick See, but also to all Bishops, to withdraw themselves from their Communion, who embrace an Heresie condemned by the Church: That it is to no purpose to object the Canons, since the very Canons themselves refer the Examinations of the Appeals of all Churches to the Holy See, so that there can be no Appeal from his Judgment: That Timotheus, Peter of Antioch, Paul, and several other Bishops, had been condemned by the Authority of the Holy See only, with the Approbation of Acacius himself, who executed the Sentences against them. Lastly, He accuses the Greeks, who alledged the Canons in defence of their carriage of breaking the Canons; and maintains, that Acacius hath transgressed them in many Particulars.

Gelasius I.

The fifth Letter to Honorius a Bishop in Dalmatia, was written by Gelasius, about the News which he had heard, that the Heresie of Pelagius was sprung up again in Dalmatia. He exhorts that Bishop to oppose it vigorously. This Admonition much surprized him, and he could not but discover it to the Pope, who answers him in his sixth Letter, that he ought not to find fault with his Pastoral Care and Vigilance.

The seventh Letter is directed to the Bishop of Picenum. Gelasius wrote it against an * Old Man, who revived the Errors of Pelagius, by teaching, That there was no Original Sin: That Children that die Unbaptized, are not damned: And that Man may be happy, avoid Sin, and do good without Grace, which is bestowed on him for his Merits sake. Gelasius having confuted these Errors at large, accuseth this Priest also for permitting the Monks to dwell with the consecrated Virgins, and much condemns him for it. For, saith he, if the Mind of those, who have no converse with Women, is often troubled with unclean thoughts, what a deep Impression will the Presence of Women make upon the Minds of them who see them continually? Wherefore he forbids this Abuse, and threatens to punish those, who shall hereafter tolerate it. This Letter is dated Nov. 1. 493.

* Senex de Sepelirus.

The eighth Letter of Gelasius is addressed to the Emperor † Anastasius. After he hath excused himself for not writing to him before, and declared what Zeal and Affection he hath to serve him, he exhorts him to follow the Judgment of the Holy See, by causing the Memory of Acacius to be condemned. In this Letter there are many other things remarkable, but nothing more than what he says concerning the Distinction between the Priesthood and the Royal Authority. There are two sorts of Power, saith he, which exercise a Sovereignty over all the World, the sacred Authority of the Bishops, and the Authority of Kings. The Charge of Bishops is so much the greater, because they must give an Account at the Day of Judgment of the Actions of Kings. You know, Sir, that altho' you are Supreme, and your Dignity excels all others; yet you are obliged to submit your selves to the Authority of those that minister about Holy Things: That you require of them the Principles of your Salvation, and ought to follow the Rules, which they prescribe for the receiving of the Sacraments, and disposing Ecclesiastical Matters. For if the Bishops being perswaded, that God hath given you a sovereign Power over Things temporal, yield Obedience to your Civil Laws, without opposing your Power in temporal Matters; with how great Reverence ought you to be subject in spiritual Things to those, who are set apart for the Distribution of the Holy Sacraments? And if all the Faithful ought to submit themselves in general to all the Bishops, which discharge their Office well; with how much greater Reason ought they to yield to the Bishop of the Holy See, whom God hath made the † first among the Bishops, and the Church hath always acknowledged him for such?

† Who succeeded Zeno.

† First in Order and Dignity, not in Power or Sovereignty.

The ninth Letter to the Bishop of Lucania, Samnium and Sicily, contains many necessary Rules for the Ministers of the Church. The Wars and Troubles of Italy had brought the Churches of that Country to such a miserable Condition, that many of them had no Ministers, in so much that they were forced to pass by the ordinary Forms, and dispense with the strict Observation of the Canons: But lest they should abuse this Indulgence, Gelasius gives them these following Rules.

I. He orders them to observe the ancient Canons, unless some urgent necessity oblige the Churches to dispense with them. He allows them to confer Holy Orders upon the Monks, provided there be no canonical Impediment in them, viz.

Gelasius. I.

viz. That they have not heretofore been guilty of any enormous Crimes; Have not been twice married, nor have married a Widow; That they have no bodily Defects; Be not Servants, nor engaged in any publick or private Office, if they have some Learning, without which they cannot obtain the Degree of a Porter. And if any of the Monks have all these Qualifications, he may immediately be made a Reader, Notary, or Advocate, and three Months after an Acolythus, especially if he be of full Age: After the end of six Months he may be ordain'd a Sub-deacon; and if he behaves himself well and prudently, and leads a good Life, he shall be made a Deacon at the end of nine Months, and a Priest at the end of the Year.

II. Gelasius tells them, that if they admit a Lay-man into the Clergy, they must examine him so much the more in the above-mentioned Particulars; and more especially concerning his Life and Manners, lest under the pretence of the Necessity, which they have of Ministers, they fill the Clergy with vicious Persons. To be the better assured of their Carriage, he requires them to wait six Months after the Year is out, before they be ordain'd Priests. But because this Space of 18 Months was not sufficient, according to the ancient Canons, Gelasius declares, that he shortned the time for the sake of those Churches that wanted Ministers; but in others, and in these very Churches, when a sufficient number of Clerks shall be again established, the ancient Canons shall be observed in the greatest strictness.

III. He forbids the Bishop to consecrate Churches new-built without necessary Abilities, and not to meddle with the Clergy of their Colleagues.

IV. He forbids them to exact any thing for Baptism, or Confirmation, or to demand any thing of such as are newly baptized.

V. He commands the Priests not to raise themselves above their Order, nor to undertake to make the Chrism, nor confirm, nor bless, nor perform any other sacred Office in the Presence of the Bishop, nor to sit down by him, nor to officiate before him, without his Permission. He puts them in mind, that they have no Power to ordain a Sub-deacon, or an Acolythus, without a Bishop.

VI. He enjoyns the Deacons to keep themselves within the Bounds of their Ministry, forbidding them to perform any Offices that belong to the Priests, or to baptize, unless in case of Necessity, without a Priest, or a Bishop. He adds in the

VII. Rule, that they ought not to rank themselves with the Priests, nor distribute the Body of Jesus Christ in the Presence of the Bishops or Priests.

Having thus recommended the exact Observation of the Canons, he forbids them baptizing at any other time but at Easter and Pentecost, unless the Person to be baptized be in danger of Death. He also forbids them to ordain any, unless in the Ember-Weeks, Mid-Lent, Holy Saturday in the Evening; and he thinks, that no case can oblige them to ordain a Priest or a Deacon at any other times. As to the Virgins he says, that they ought not to be consecrated, and vailed, but on the Epiphany, Easter, or on the Feast of the Apostles. He forbids them consecrating a Widow. He will not allow them to ordain, or admit into their Monasteries a Slave, or any Person that lives in a servile Condition. He forbids Clergymen to follow Trades, or use any scandalous Employments. Afterwards he repeats the ancient Canons concerning the Qualifications of such Persons as they ought to ordain. They ought to be learned, have no bodily Defects, not be Eunuchs, nor guilty of any Crimes; to be of a sound Mind, to be but once married. He sentences them who have been ordained for Money, to be put out of the Clergy. He orders them to endure Penance all their Lives, who have corrupted a consecrated Virgin; and only allows them to receive Absolution at the Point of Death, if they have done Penance. He threatens those Clergymen who go from one Church to another. As for those Widows, who marry after they have vowed a single Life, he doth not impose publick Penance upon them, but he thinks it sufficient to admonish them of the Fault that they have committed. He complains of them, who have consecrated Churches without the Allowance of the Holy See, and have given them the Name of such Persons as died not in the Faith. Lastly, he is much displeased that Women ministred at the Altar in some Places.

Having spoken after this manner, of the Degrees of the Clergy, and of their Duties, he treats of the Revenues of the Church. He will have them divided into four parts; whereof one is for the Bishop; the other for the Clergy; the third for the Poor; and the fourth for the Buildings. He adds, that the Bishop ought not to diminish the Clergies part, nor the Clergy the Bishop's, and that the Bishop ought to employ that Part faithfully, which is set a-part for the Buildings of the Church without converting it to his own Advantage; but he must make it appear, what use he makes of it. And as to that Part, which is allotted the Poor, altho' he must one Day give an Account to God, yet he ought also to give proof of his faithful Management of it. Gelasius concludes with an Injunction to all the Clergy to give him Intelligence of those, who shall do contrary to these Rules. This Letter beareth date March 10*th*. Anno 494. Gelasius. I.

The 10*th*. Letter to the Bishops of Sicily, is dated in March of the same Year. He speaks therein of the Use the Bishops ought to make of their Revenues for the Relief of the Poor, and Maintenance of Ministers: And adds, that the Goods, of which the Churches have been in possession for 30 Years past, do belong to them according to the Civil Laws, and are looked upon as the Revenues of the Church.

The 11*th*. Letter to the Bishops of Dardania and Illyria, is about the Business of Acacius. He commends their Zeal which they had shewn in taking part with the Holy See: and not imitating the Bishop of Thessalonica, who sided with the Bishop of Constantinople, and would not condemn Acacius. He declares him to be separated from the Communion of the Church of Rome; and maintains, that Acacius being dead out of that Communion, cannot be absolved after his Death. It is dated Aug. 2. 494.

The following Letter to the Bishop of Arles, is a Letter of Communion, by which Gelasius acquaints him with his Preferment to the Holy See; and tells him, that he desires to live in the united Communion of the Bishops of France. The date of this Letter is Aug. 19. Anno 494

The 13*th*. Letter directed to the Bishops of Dardania, is a kind of Manifesto; in which Gelasius proves, that Acacius hath been lawfully and judicially condemned by the Holy See. His principal Reason is this, that the Bishop of Rome hath done nothing but executed the Decree of the Council of Chalcedon, which principally belongs to the Holy See. That there was no need of a new Synod, since the Matter having been already determined, Acacius hath condemned himself by joyning himself to Persons condemned. In the next place he relates the Business of Acacius, after what manner the Holy See having discovered, that he favoured Petrus Mongus, had admonished him several times of it, but he had never given any Satisfaction to it: That having been accused by John Bishop of Alexandria, Bishop of the second See, and cited before the first See of the World, he would neither appear himself, nor send any other Person to appear for him: How he had likewise corrupted the Legates of the Holy See, and persisted to communicate with Hereticks: That having written to the Holy See against John, he would not condescend to accuse him judicially there: That he, who was Bishop of a small See, had refused to do that which he saw the Bishop of the second See do: That after this Refusal, the Holy See, by executing the Council of Chalcedon, had condemned him: That Timotheus Ælurus, and Petrus Mongus, had been condemned in the same manner by the Judgment of the Holy See only: That the Holy Church of Rome hath right to judge all others, since the Canons allow Appeals to his Judgment from all Parts of the World: That after this Judgment he neither had, nor could be absolved by any Synod: That the Holy See can absolve such Persons as have been condemned by the Synods, as it absolved heretofore St. Athanasius and St. John Chrysostome, and lately Flavian: That on the contrary it had condemned Dioscorus, and rejected his Synod: That there are good and bad Councils: That an unlawful Council is that which doth any thing contrary to Holy Scripture, the Doctrine of the Fathers, and the Decrees of the Church; and which the whole Church, and chiefly the Holy See, doth not approve; and a lawful Synod is that which judgeth according to Scripture, the Tradition of the Fathers, and the Ecclesiastical Laws which all the Church receiveth, and the Holy See approveth: That a Synod of this sort cannot be found fault with; and such was the Council of Chalcedon which condemneth Eutyches and his Followers: That all those that approve the Doctrine of this Heretick, or communicate with those that approve him, altho' they be Bishops assembled in a Synod, are involved in the same Condemnation: That there is no need of another Synod to condemn them, 'tis enough to put the Council of Chalcedon in Execution, which is all the Holy See hath done in this Affair: That Acacius had done well in other Matters, but had thrust out John the Orthodox Bishop of Alexandria, and put into his place, which he had made void by his own Authority, Petrus Mongus an Heretick, whom he himself had condemned; that he also deprived Calendion Bishop of the third See, to put in his place Petrus Fullo a notorious Heretick: That he had not called a Synod to do these things, nor to remove such Orthodox Bishops: That he had arrogated to himself such Prerogatives as did not belong to him: That he could not say, that he was forced by the Emperor to do these things, since he had stoutly resisted the Emperors Basiliscus and Zeno upon other Occasions: That this last did boast that he did nothing in all this Affair without the Counsel of Acacius: That it was certain, that Acacius did not endeavour to hinder the Emperor from troubling the Orthodox, as he was obliged: That he ought not to exalt himself the more because he was Bishop of the royal City, because that doth not give a sovereign Title, since there were several other Cities, which were imperial Seats, as Ravenna, † Milan, Sirmium, which had not for all that any such Prerogatives:

† Mediolanum.

Gelaſius. I. That the Church of Conſtantinople was not to compare with thoſe of Alexandria and Antioch, becauſe not only it was not a Patriarchal See, but becauſe it had not the Dignity of a Metropolis: That the Preſence of the Emperor, and the Præ-eminency of the City, ought not to impart any Eccleſiaſtical Dignity to him: That the Emperor Marcian, who had done his utmoſt to procure him ſuch Prerogatives as were not due to him, had himſelf acknowledged, that St. Leo had reaſon to oppoſe it: That Anatolius, who endeavoured to enlarge his Rights, was forced to abandon them: That altho' it were the Emperor, who had deprived John of Alexandria and Calendion, Acacius ought to have oppoſed him, and not ſtir him up againſt them: That altho' it were true, that the firſt had blotted out the Name of the Emperor, and the other had told him a Lye, yet he ought not to deprive them before they were convicted, and condemned by a Synod. Theſe are ſome of the Reaſons which Gelaſius propounds in this Manifeſto.

The 14*th*. Letter is a Fragment of another Memoir; containing the Acts which might ſerve to juſtifie the Condemnation of Acacius. We have ſtill a Letter of Simplicius to Acacius, wherein this Pope adviſes him not to ſuffer P. Mongus to be received into Communion, before he hath done Penance; and then, to admit him only into the rank of Lay-men: As alſo a Fragment of a Letter of Pope Felix to the Emperor Zeno, againſt the ſame Mongus; a Letter of Acacius againſt *Tim. Æluru*s, and P. Mongus, with ſome Reflections of Gelaſius upon this laſt Piece.

The 15*th*. is a Manifeſto to the Eaſtern Biſhops, which contains almoſt the ſame things with the 13*th*. Letter.

The Letters taken out of the Collection of Canons of Cardinal Deus-dedit are Commiſſions about different Affairs. The firſt, for the Ordination of a Prieſt in a new Pariſh. The ſecond, for the Ordination of a Deacon. The third is about the Affair of thoſe Clergymen of Nola, who were diſobedient to their Biſhop, who had been ſent to the Pope by Theodoricus. The fourth is for the Reſtoration of the Worſhip of God in a Church where it had been diſcontinued, becauſe there were no Revenues. The fifth is a Commiſſion to inſpect the ill Management of a Biſhop, who was accuſed of converting the Goods of the Church to his own uſe. The ſixth is to enquire into the Murther of a Chriſtian Slave, and into an Inſolence offered to a Biſhop. The ſeventh is an Order to ſeparate ſuch Perſons from Communion, as have wronged the Church. The eighth is an Injunction to a Biſhop to reſtore a Chalice which his Predeceſſor had taken from another Church. The ninth is againſt thoſe Biſhops, which incroach upon the Juriſdiction of their Brethren. This imports, that the Metropolitan ſhall ordain all the Biſhops of his Province; and that the Biſhops of the Province ſhall ordain the Metropolitan.

The laſt contains an Abridgment of ſome of the Rules laid down in the 13*th*. To theſe Letters may be joyned the Letter to Ruſticus [Lugdunenſis] publiſhed by F. Dacherius in Tom. V. of his Spicilegium: In which he thanks that Biſhop of Lyons for his Aſſiſtance, and relates how much trouble he had in the buſineſs of Acacius; but this Letter doth not ſeem to me to be Gelaſius's Style.

But Pope Gelaſius hath not only written Letters, but alſo hath compoſed ſome ſmall Treatiſes. We have already obſerved that ſeveral of theſe Letters may paſs for Works, Memoirs, or Manifeſtos. Of this Nature is his Treatiſe De Anathematis Vinculo. He begins it with an Anſwer to the Objection of thoſe, who complained, that he urged the Authority of the Council of Chalcedon in the buſineſs of Acacius too much; but would not conſent to the Privileges which the Council had granted to the Biſhop of Conſtantinople. He anſwers, that all the Church embraced ſuch Definitions of this Council as were conſonant to Holy Scripture, to the Tradition of the Holy Fathers, and the Decrees of the Church concerning the Orthodox Truth, and the common Faith of all the Church. But as to other things therein treated of, which the Holy See gave no Perſon Commiſſion to meddle with, to which the Legates of the Holy See oppoſe themſelves, and which the Holy See never would approve of; which Anatolius himſelf had abandoned, by referring them to the Approbation of the Holy See; and which are contrary to the Privileges of the Univerſal Church, he never would in any wiſe defend them.

After this he diſcourſes of Excommunication and Abſolution. He acknowledges that all Sinners may be abſolved in this Life if they do repent, and altho' it be ſaid in the Sentence given againſt Acacius, that he ſhall never be looſed from the Curſe pronounced againſt him, this ought not to be underſtood, but in caſe he do not repent; for if that be done in this Life, he may be pardoned; but if he go on, and die in that Eſtate, he cannot be abſolved. That the Judgment of Abſolution, which the Emperor had cauſed to be pronounced in favour of Peter of Alexandria, was void, being done by his own Authority contrary to the Canons of the Church, and without the Conſent of the Biſhop of the Holy See, by whoſe Authority he had been condemned.

The ſecond Treatiſe of Gelaſius is a Diſcourſe againſt Andromachus a Roman Senator, and * other Perſons, who endeavoured to reſtore the Lupercalia at Rome, which were at that time utterly aboliſhed, ſuperſtitiouſly believing that the Diſeaſes with which the City was then afflicted, proceeded from the Neglect of thoſe Sacrifices. This Pope ſmartly reproves thoſe who were of this Opinion, and proves, they are unworthy of the Name and Profeſſion of Chriſtians; That they commit a ſpiritual Adultery, and fall into a kind of Idolatry, which deſerves a Separation from the Body of Chriſt, and ſevere Penance. In ſum, that their Opinion was a fooliſh and groundleſs Imagination, becauſe the Lupercalia were not appointed to avert Diſeaſes, but to make Women fruitful, as T. Livius relates in the ſecond Decad of his Hiſtory; That the Plague, and other Diſtempers were as common, when the Lupercalia were celebrated, as they are now; and if Rome be afflicted with Diſeaſes, the Plague, Barrenneſs, &c. it ought to be imputed to the corrupt and diſorderly manners of the Inhabitants; That if the Lupercalia have any thing Divine, they ought to be celebrated with the ſame Ceremonies, and in the ſame Manner that they were heretofore; and what Man is there that will be guilty of ſuch ſhameleſs Impudence? That they were a Remnant of Paganiſm, which was the reaſon that they were aboliſhed; and tho' indeed they remained in uſe a long time under the Chriſtian Emperors; yet it doth not follow from thence, that they ought always to be preſerved, for all Superſtitions could not be aboliſhed at once, but by little and little. Laſtly, he tells them that a baptized Chriſtian cannot, nor ought to do it. And altho' his Predeceſſors did tolerate it, they had ſome Reaſons which hindered them from aboliſhing them, but yet he doubts not but that they did endeavour it. Gelaſius. I.

The third Treatiſe was compoſed * againſt this Doctrine of the Pelagians, that Men may paſs their Life without Sin. He proves the contrary by ſeveral Reaſons grounded upon the Teſtimonies of Holy Scripture. In it alſo he explains, in what Senſe St. Paul ſays, that the Children of the Faithful are holy, and the believing Wife ſanctifieth the unbelieving Husband. [* D. Cave intitles it Dicta adverſus Pelagianam Hæreſin.]

But the moſt eminent Treatiſe of Gelaſius is his Treatiſe againſt Eutyches and Neſtorius [concerning the two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt.] The Criticks at firſt doubted whether it belonged to this Pope, and * Baronius affirms it with greater Confidence than any, that it is not his, but Gelaſius Cyzicenus', and Bellarmine followeth his Judgment. The Conjectures which they bring, ſeem to have ſome reſemblance of Truth, if we conſider them alone. They are as follows, 1. The Author of this Treatiſe quotes the Greek Fathers only, and never mentions the Latins; now what probability is there, that Pope Gelaſius would not alledge St. Jerome, St. Ambroſe, St. Auſtine, and St. Leo. 2. He numbers Euſebius Caſarienſis among the Orthodox Doctors. Now Gelaſius thought him an Arian, and puts his Books among the Apocryphal. 3. The Treatiſe of Gelaſius againſt Eutyches was a large Work, according to the Teſtimony of Gennadius; this that we have is a ſmall Tract. Theſe Reaſons ſeem to prove, that 'tis not probable, that it is Pope Gelaſius's. On the other hand, theſe are no Objections againſt Gelaſius Cyzicenus, all things concur to attribute it to him, for the time and name agree; there is no other Gelaſius to whom it can be attributed, the Style of this Book is very like that of the Hiſtory of the Council of Nice, written by Gelaſius Cyzicenus. Laſtly, the Author of that Hiſtory ſays, in the Preface, that he hath written againſt the Eutychians, and commends Euſebius in the Body of his Work. All this makes it ſufficiently evident, that this Work belongs to Gelaſius Cyzicenus, rather than Gelaſius Biſhop of Rome. Nevertheleſs there want not convincing Proofs, to evince, that it is really the Work of this latter. For firſt, it is found in the MSS. joyned with the Letters of this Pope. Secondly, St. Fulgentius, who is a Witneſs beyond exception, cites it as Pope Gelaſius's [Lib. de 5. Queſt. apud Ferrand. Diac. c. 18.] and John II. uſes the Teſtimony of this Author, as Pope Gelaſius's [in Epiſt. ad Avienum.] Thirdly, Gennadius * aſſures us, that this Pope made a large Treatiſe againſt Eutyches and Neſtorius. This agrees to this Book, which bears the ſame Title, and is very conſiderable; for tho' it be not a great Work in it ſelf, 'tis a great Volume in Gennadius's Senſe. We ought not to wonder, that he doth not quote the Latin Authors, being engaged with the Greeks, againſt whom he might very well uſe the Authority of Euſebius Caſarienſis. Laſtly, the Style of this Treatiſe demonſtrates plainly, that it is Pope Gelaſius's. In it he ſhews, that there are two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt, united in one Perſon, and that theſe two Natures have retained their Properties. This Truth is proved in the firſt Part by the Authority of Holy Scripture, and in the ſecond by the Teſtimonies of the Greek Fathers. About the End of the firſt part we meet with a Paſſage about the Euchariſt, exactly like Theodoret's. [This Treatiſe hath been printed at Baſil in 1528, in Antidoto adverſus Hæreſes, and at Tigur. 1571. 'Tis alſo extant in Biblioth. Pat. Tom. 8. p. 699.]

[* The Popiſh Writers are generally of Baronius's judgment, becauſe there is a clear teſtimony againſt Tranſubſtantiation in this Book. Dr. Cave.]

* De Script. c. 94.

This Pope had made alſo ſome other Treatiſes upon different Subjects, and ſome Hymns in Imitation of St. Ambroſe, of which Gennadius makes mention; but we have no more of his than the Works above-mentioned.

* Catteroſque Romani.

Beſides

Gelasius. I. Besides these Works, which are his alone, the Decree concerning the Apocryphal and Canonical Books composed, or rather approved by a Council of 70 Bishops, held at Rome in 494, may also be attributed to him, for indeed * 'tis the Work of Gelasius. This Decree contains first of all a Catalogue of such Books, as the Church of Rome acknowledges to be Canonical both in the Old and new Testament, like to the Decree of the Council of Trent, save that he reckons but one Book of the Maccabees. Next he establisheth the Authority of the Church of Rome, and its Primacy, which according to him was not before confirmed by any Synodical Decree, but only by the Words of Jesus Christ to St. Peter, to whom St. Paul was joyned, and with whom he suffered Martyrdom under Nero; insomuch, that these two Apostles have consecrated the Church of Rome, and by their Presence and Martyrdom given it a Præ-eminence above all other Churches. So that the first See of the Churches of the World is Rome, and the second Alexandria, and the third Antioch, where St. Peter abode before he came to Rome.

[* Dr. Cave thinks them not the Work of Gelasius. 1. Because it doth not bear his name in the ancientest Editions. 2. Because some Books are cited in it, which were not then written, or unknown as Sedulius's Paschal Work, a Treatise de Revelatione Capitis St. Baptistæ, &c. 3. It contains many absurd things in it, unbecoming the Judgment of Gelasius, and a Synod, &c.]

After this Declaration comes a Catalogue of the Councils, and the Books which are received by the Church of Rome, viz. The four first General Councils, and other Synods received, and authorized in the Church. The Works of St. Cyprian, St. Gregory Nazianzen, St. Basil, St. Athanasius, St. Cyril of Alexandria, St. Hilary, St. Ambrose, St. John of Constantinople, St. Theophilus of Alexandria, St. Austine, St. Jerome, St. Prosper, the Letter of St. Leo to Flavian, and all the Treatises of the Orthodox Fathers that died in the Communion of the Church, and the Decretals of the Popes. As for the Acts of the Martyrs he observes, that although he did not doubt of the truth of them, nevertheless the Church of Rome doth not read them, because the Authors of them are not known, and there are some of them forged by the ignorant Men and Infidels, and others full of falshood, such as are the Acts of St. Quiritius, St. Julitta, St. George, and several others. Nevertheless it receives the Lives of St. Paul, St. Arsenius, St. Hilarion, and other Holy Men; but it is only because they are written by St. Jerome. The Acts of St. Silvester are read in some Churches, altho' the Author be not known. The Stories of the finding of the Cross, and of John Baptist's Head, are Modern Relations which some Christians read, but when such sort of Works fall into our hands, we must then follow the Apostle's direction, who teaches us to try all things, and make use only of that which is good. He commends some works of Rufinus and Origen, although he will not leave the Judgment which St. Jerome gives of them, nor approve what he hath condemned in them; he doth not wholly reject the Ecclesiastical History of Eusebius Cæsariensis, because it relates many Important matters, altho' he condemns the Praises, which he gives of Origen. He commends the History of Orosius, Sedulius's Paschal Work, and the Poem of Juvencus. Gelasius I.

Lastly, he sets down a Catalogue of some of those Apocryphal Works, which the Church rejecteth. After the Acts of the Council of Ariminum, he places the false Gospels; and other Apochrypal Books of Holy Scripture, the Works of Hereticks, and of some Orthodox Authors, who have departed from the Doctrines of the Church in some things, such as Eusebius, Tertullian, Lactantius, Africanus, Commodianus, Clemens Alexandrinus, Arnobius, Tichonius, Cassianus Victorinus Petavionensis, and Faustus Reiensis.

In the next year this Pope held another Council, [of 55 Bishops at Rome,] where Misenus the Legate of his Predecessor, who had been excommunicated for Communicating with Acacius, was absolved, having humbly begged Pardon for his fault.

This is all we have been able to collect of Pope Gelasius. He was a subtile and intelligent Man who much enlarged his Authority. He wrote well, but obscurely. He is guilty of much false Reasoning, and often supposes those things for certain, which never were done. He was very skilful and knowing in the Customs and Usages of the Church of Rome. He loved Order and Discipline, and joyned Prudence and Courage with them both. He gave an ample demonstration of it in the business of Acacius, which he maintained against all opposition, and would not remit any thing for Peace sake, which he might easily have procured, if he had not so severely insisted upon the Condemnation of Acacius. By which it appears, that the Popes were sometimes a little too stiff and resolute; for although Acacius had been more blame-worthy, than indeed he was, yet the Pope ought to have more mildly dealt with him for Peace-sake, and not to have persecuted with so much rigour the Memory of a Bishop, whose Sentiments were Orthodox, and whose Fault seems to have been nothing but this, that he was not careful to please the Bishop of Rome, and was too submissive to the Will of his Prince. [He is also thought to be the Author of the Codex Sacramentarius, which is a Collection of such forms of publick Prayers and Administrations, of the Sacraments as were in use in the Church of Rome in his time, which he digested into one Volume, putting them into a good Order, and adding much of his own. This Book lay hid for many Ages, but at last falling into the Hands of Paulus Petavius, it was published at Rome, in 1680, 4*to*. And not long after it was reprinted with some other ancient Liturgies at Paris in 1685, 4*to*. by the Care of F. Mabillon.] Gelasius I. Additions.

ANASTASIUS II.

Anastasius II. Anastasius II. succeeded Pope Gelasius, and was ordained Bishop of Rome, * Nov. 28. Anno. 496. The first thing he did was to write to the † Emperor, to endeavour the Re-union of the Church. He exhorts him therefore in the first  Letter, and earnestly intreats him to hinder that the Name of Acacius, which gave so much offence, should not be recited in the Church, and by that means procure the Church's Peace. At the same time he advertiseth him, that this would not derogate from the validity of the Ordinations, which Acacius hath conferred, or Baptisms, which he hath administred, because the Holy Spirit works by evil Ministers; and Sinners who administer the Sacraments, hurt none but themselves, nor do hinder the Effect of the Sacraments.

* Sep. 15.
† Anastasius.
 This Letter is in Tom. 4. of Councils. p. 1278.

Anastasius sent * two Legates to Constantinople to Negotiate the Peace, and at the same time Festus a Senator of of Rome, went about some publick affairs. There was also then at at Constantinople a Priest and another Clergy-man, Deputies for the Church of Alexandria, who being desirous of a Re-union with the Church of Rome, presented a † Memoir to the Pope's Legates and Festus, wherein they delivered themselves to this effect; that the Churches of Rome founded by St. Peter, and of Alexandria planted by St. Mark, have always had the same Faith and Doctrine, and were so firmly united, that when any Counells were held in the East, the Bishop of Rome made choice of the Bishop of Alexandria to act in his stead, and hold his place in them; but there began a Division between these two Churches in the time of St. Leo, because his Letter against the Impious Heretick Eutiches being falsified by Theodoret, and some other Bishops of the Nestorian Party, who translated it into Greek, and by the Authority of that corrupt Translation, had maintained the Doctrine of Nestorius, had given the Church of Alexandria occasion to think, that the Church of Rome was of that Opinion and upon that account to separate from her Communion; on the other side the Bishop of Rome being persuaded that the Ægyptians opposed the Doctrine, which he had received from the Apostles, had also separated them from his Communion; that they had sent Deputies to Rome to justifie, that their Church had no other Sentiments than those of the Fathers of the Council of Nice; but there was then at Rome a certain Man of their Country, an Enemy to the Truth, by whose means they were denied Reception and Audience; insomuch, that they returned without effecting any thing, but they understood since by Photinus a Deacon of the Church of Thessalonica, who was sent by his Bishop to Pope Anastasius, that this Pope did not approve of the Additions and Alterations, which had been made in the Version of St. Leo's Letter; that the Legates of this Pope, sent to Constantinople, having assured them of the same thing, they implored them to receive their Confession of Faith; that if it were found agreeable to the Doctrine of the Church of Rome, these two Churches might be re-united. In this Confession of Faith, having asserted with most serious Protestations, that they did receive the Doctrine of the three first General Councils, and the Anathema's of St. Cyril, without mentioning the fourth Council: They confess that Jesus Christ is consubstantial with the Father according to the Divine Nature, and with us according to the Humane; that there is but one Son; that the Actions and Sufferings of Jesus Christ are proper to one Son only. They condemn those that divide or confound the Natures, or introduce a mere Phantom, because in the Incarnation there is no multiplication of Sons, and the Trinity of the Persons in the Godhead still remains, although one of the Divine Persons be Incarnate. They pronounce an Anathema, against Nestorius and Eutyches, but they declare, that the Doctrine of Dioscorus, Timotheus, and Petrus, their Patriarchs was such, as that they do still follow it, and are ready to justifie it. Lastly, they conjure the Popes Legates to present this Confession of Faith to him, that he may approve it and receive them into his Communion. Festus also was commissioned by the Emperor to negotiate the re-union of the Church of Constantinople; and he promised to sway Anastasius ſtaſius the Pope, to ſubſcribe Zeno's Henoticon. But when he came to Rome Anaſtaſius was dead, having been in the See of the Church of Rome but two years wanting ſix days.

† It is extant in Tom. 4. p. 1283. of the Councils.

German. Bishop of Capua, and Crescon. Bishop of Tuder.

Anaſtaſius, II.

* It is extant in Tom. 4. Council. p. 1278.

There is another * Letter of Anaſtaſius to Lewis the French King, wherein he congratulates his Converſion to Chriſtianity. Laſtly, M. Baluzius in Tom. 1. of his new Collections of Councils hath publiſhed ſome Fragments of a Letter of Anaſtaſius to Urſicinus upon the Incarnation. Platina ſays, that he wrote ſome Books De Trinitate, De Libero Arbitrio, de regulis Fidei adverſus Pelagianam Hæreſin, and many Sermons, but we know not upon what grounds. The Letters of this Pope are full of Moral Obſervations and Applications of Texts of Scripture.

Anaſtaſius, II.

PASCHASIUS, a Deacon of the Church of Rome.

Paſchaſius, &c.

THis Deacon flouriſhed in the Popedom of Anaſtaſius, and Symmachus, under this laſt he favoured the Party of Laurentius the Anti-Pope, and ſome hold, that he was put into Purgatory upon that Account, where Germanus, Biſhop of Capua ſaw his Soul, if we may believe the Relation which St. Gregory gives us in his Dialogues. He made two Books concerning the Godhead of the Holy Spirit, * commended by St. Gregory, in which he hath not omitted any material proof, which the Holy Scripture affords to prove the Godhead of the Holy Spirit. This Treatiſe is written in a very good Method, and with much Elegancy. It hath been printed at Cologne in 1539 [8*vo*. and at Helmſtadt in 1613. and put into the Biblioth. Patr. [Tom. 1. p. 806.] Some think, that it is to this Paſchaſius, that Eugippius hath dedicated the Life of St. Severinus.

Paſchaſius, &c.

* Againſt Macedonius.

JULIANUS POMERIUS.

Julianus Pomerius.

JUlianus Pomerius, a Native of Mauritania, and ordained a Prieſt in France, lived about the end of the fifth Age. He compoſed a Treatiſe by way of Dialogue between Julian a Biſhop, and Verus a Prieſt, * about the Nature and Qualities of the Soul, divided into eight Books. In the firſt he tells us, what the Soul is, and in what Senſe it is ſaid to be made in the Image of God. In the ſecond he examines whether it be Corporeal, or Incorporeal. In the third, he enquires how the Soul of the firſt Man was made. In the fourth, he diſcuſſes this Queſtion, Whether the Soul, which is about to be infuſed into the Body, be created a-new, and without Sin, or whether it be generated by the Soul of the Parent? And whether being ſo derived by Propagation from the Soul of the firſt Man, it draws Original Sin from him? The fifth contains a ſhort repetition of the Matters treated on in the fourth, with ſome Queſtions and Diſtinctions, ſuch as this, Whether the Faculty, or Power of the Soul depends only on the Will? the ſixth enquires, from whence proceeds the Oppoſition between the Fleſh and the Spirit, ſpoken of by St. Paul. The ſeventh is about the difference between the Life, and Death, and Reſurrection of the Fleſh and Soul. The eighth explains the Prophecies concerning ſuch things as ſhall happen at the end of the World, and contains an Explication of ſome Queſtions propoſed about the Reſurrection. This Treatiſe is very Logical and Metaphyſical, it teaches us, as Tertullian had done before, that the Soul is Corporeal.

* Dr. Cave takes them for an Abridgment of Nemeſius's 8 Books De Animâ.

This Author hath written another Treatiſe, dedicated to a Perſon, named Principius, about the contempt of Worldly Things; as alſo a Book of Inſtructions for Virgins: three Books * of the contemplative, and active Life; and another Treatiſe of Virtues and Vices. This is all that is ſpoken of this Author by Gennadius and Iſidore in their Catalogues of Eccleſiaſtical Writers.

† De vitâ contemplativâ, ſive de futurâ Vitæ contemplatione, Vel, de actuali converſatione. Dr. Cave.

* They were alſo printed alone under Proſper's Name at Cologn in 1536. 8*o. and before in* 1487.

We have none of theſe Works but his three Books of the Contemplative Life, which have been † printed among St. Proſper's Works, under whoſe Name they have been commonly quoted for above 800 Years, but the diſagreement of Style proves that they are not his, and the Teſtimonies of the two Catalogues above-mentioned oblige us to attribute them to Julianus Pomerius, under whoſe Name they are found in ſeveral MSS. We have long ſince cited an ancient MS. of M. De Montchal Archbiſhop of Toulouſe.

F. Queſnel hath added another MS. in the Abby of Trappe; and we have heard, that there is a very ancient one in the Library of the Chapter-Houſe of Beauvais; where theſe three Books of a Contemplative Life bear the Name of Julian Pomerius, the true Author of them. In the firſt Book, having deſcribed the Happineſs of the Saints, who enjoy the full Contemplation of the Godhead in Heaven, which the moſt Holy Men never have had in this Life, and ſhewed the difference between a Contemplative and Active Life, he exhorts the Biſhops and Prieſts to betake themſelves to a Contemplative Life, ſequeſtring themſelves from the Affairs, and Buſineſs of the World, and applying themſelves wholly to the Study of Holy Scripture. This gives him an Occaſion to write againſt thoſe Biſhops, 'whoſe greateſt 'care it was to increaſe their Eſtates and Dignities; Who 'placed their only Felicity in the enjoyment of Worldly 'Pleaſures; Who ſeek their own Glory more than Jeſus 'Chriſt's; Who have greater care of their Honour, than 'Conſcience; and who place nothing of their Happineſs 'in the hopes of the good things of another Life.' He excuſes himſelf here, that he undertakes to publiſh the Irregularities of his Superiors, but ſtill goes on ſpeaking ſmartly againſt ignorant and vicious Biſhops, 'who neglected the 'Care of their Flock; Who are not at all troubled at the 'Crimes which they ſee committed by Sinners, nor pleaſed 'with the good Actions done in their Dioceſs; Who are 'very little affected with the Senſe of good or evil; Who 'are filled with the love of the World, living in Pleaſures 'and Debaucheries, tranſported with Ambition, full of Injuſtice; dare not preach up contempt of the World, Temperance, a ſolitary Life, Meekneſs, Charity, Juſtice, nor 'other Chriſtian Virtues, which they themſelves do not 'practiſe.' In the next place he ſhews, 'That it is not allowable for a Biſhop to leave his Church to acquire his 'own Eaſe, or to live at Liberty; that he ought to reform 'his Life, and become an Example to his Flock, inſtructing them as well by his Manners as his Words; that he 'is obliged to reprove Sinners ſeverely. Laſtly he gives a 'Deſcription of a good and wicked Biſhop and Preacher.

Julianus Pomerius.

He deſcribes a wicked Biſhop in this manner: 'He is 'one that ſeeks after Honours, Preferments, and Riches, 'not that he may put them to a good uſe, but that he may 'live more at his Eaſe, be more honoured, feared and reſpected; Who chiefly aims to gratifie his Paſſions, confirm his Authority, enrich himſelf, and enjoy his Pleaſures; Who avoids the laborious and deſpiſable parts of 'his Office, but is rejoyced at the pleaſant and honourable; 'Who tolerates Vice, and honours Sinners with his Friendſhip; yea, applauds their Crimes for fear of offending 'them.' To theſe Biſhops he applies the words of the Prophet Ezekiel, Chap. 34. Wo to the Shepherds of Iſrael, &c. He directs, I ſay, theſe terrible words of the Prophet to theſe Biſhops, 'who have no care of their Flock; who 'think upon nothing but how to get the Milk, and the 'Wool; that is to ſay, the Oblations and Tythes, with 'which they enrich themſelves; Who do not cure the Sick, 'nor ſtrengthen the Weak, nor bring back the ſtray Sheep 'into the Ways of Salvation; Who ſeek not thoſe that are 'loſt, as good Shepherds ought to do, nor comfort thoſe 'that deſpair of the Pardon of their Sins; Who never ſhew 'their Authority unleſs it be in domineering tyrannically 'over their People, &c.

On the contrary, he draws the Character of ſuch good Biſhops, as the Doctrine of the Apoſtles requires them to be, thus: 'They are ſuch as convert Sinners to God by 'their Preaching and Example; are very humble, and free 'from Pride and Imperiouſneſs; Who treat all the Members of their Flock with the ſame Love and Kindneſs; 'Who heal the Wounds of their ſick People with mild, 'but effectual Remedies; Who bear with the Incurable 'patiently; Who in their Preaching ſeek not their own 'Glory, but the Glory of Jeſus Chriſt; Who employ not 'their Diſcourſes and Actions to obtain Favour, or Thanks 'of Men, but who give God all the Honour that they beſtow on them, becauſe it is he that lives, and preaches in 'the Biſhops; Who avoid Praiſes and Commendations; 'Who comfort the Afflicted, nouriſh the Poor, cloath 'the Naked, redeem Captives, lodge Strangers; Who 'bring thoſe that err into the way of Truth; Promiſe Salvation to thoſe that deſpair; Quicken the Zeal of thoſe 'who are going in the right way; Haſten thoſe that linger; And who, laſtly, diſcharge well all the Functions 'of their Miniſtry. Theſe are the true Succeſſors of the 'Apoſtles, the true Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt and his Church, 'the Oracles of the Holy Spirit; Such Paſtors as theſe appeaſe the Anger of God againſt his People, and inſtruct 'the People in the Knowledge of God. They defend the 'Faith of the Church by their Writings, and are ready to 'ſeal it with their Blood. Laſtly, they hold themſelves faſt 'to God only, in whom alone they put their truſt.

The difference between a good and a bad Preacher he thus lays down: 'The Life of a Preacher of Jeſus Chriſt 'ought to be anſwerable to his Doctrine; He ought to 'preach as well by his Manners as Words; He ought not 'to raiſe his own Eſteem by an Affectation of Eloquence, 'or placing his chiefeſt care in the Elegancy of his Expreſ-

ſions

Julianus Pomerius.

'sions. He must not seek to please the People, nor gain 'himself Applauses from them, but his main aim is to 'affect them, and convert them. He must weep himself if he 'will make his Auditors to weep. A plain, grave, and 'easie Discourse will work better effect than the most 'studied and curious pieces of Eloquence. There is a great 'deal of difference between a Declaimer and a Preacher: A 'Declaimer useth the utmost strength of his Eloquence to 'gain Reputation; The Preacher seeks the Glory of Jesus 'Christ by explaining his Doctrine in a familiar Discourse. 'The Declaimer handles trifling Matters with choice and 'curious Words; The Preacher on the contrary elevates 'the plainness of his Discourse by the Nobleness and Gran-'deur of the Sense. The Declaimer endeavours to hide the 'Deformity of his Invention by the Fineness of his Dis-'course; but the Preacher mollifies and sweetens the harsh-'ness of his Words by the Beauty of his Notions: The 'one places all his Honour in the Applause of the People, 'and the other in their Virtue. The Declaimer speaks 'plausibly, but his Speech is fruitless: The Preacher makes 'use of an ordinary Discourse, but he instructs those that 'will attend to it, because he corrupts not his Reason with 'the affectation of seeming Eloquence.'

The second Book is about the Duties of an Active Life. The Author therein explains, how we must reprove, and bear with Sinners. He affirms that the most holy Bishops are sometimes forced to tolerate Sinners, either because they foresee that Reproofs and Chastisements will but harden them, or because their Sins are hid. As to those, who come to confess their Sins to your Pastors, as Sick-Men come to shew their Wounds to the Physicians, they should labour to cure them immediately, and apply fit Remedies to them without flattering them, or assuring them that they are cured, when they are not. As to those whose Crimes are manifest before Confession, if we cannot heal them by gentle Medicines, we must apply to them the Fire of Reproof; and if that effect nothing, but they continue in their irregular Lives, they must be separated by the Sword of Excommunication as putrified Members, lest they corrupt others by their evil example: But as to those, whose Sins are altogether secret, being neither discovered by the Confession of the Sinners themselves, nor the Testimony of others, if they do not amend, as they have God for a Witness, so also they shall have God for their Avenger. For though they may escape the Judgment of Men, yet since they continue in their Sin, they shall be condemned to Eternal Torments, at least, if they do not judge themselves, and revenge their Sin upon themselves by a very severe Punishment, for so they may change Eternal into Temporal Punishments, and by the Tears which flow from a wounded Heart, extinguish the burning of Eternal Flames. Lastly, as to those who are in the Ecclesiastick State, they are mistaken, if they imagine, that they may remain in the Communion of the Church, and in their Ministry, because they deceive Men by concealing their Sins, because unless they be such small Sins as we cannot avoid, and for which we daily beg of God in the Lord's Prayer, That he would forgive us our Debts, they ought to be free from all such Crimes as being committed render Men obnoxious to Civil Justice: That as to those that have committed them, but dare not confess them for fear of being excommunicated, they are guilty of a great fault in Communicating, because they feign themselves innocent before Men, and through an intolerable contempt of the Judgments of God, are ashamed to withdraw themselves from the Altar. On the contrary, they, who not being convicted of Sin, do acknowledge and confess it, or at least, not discovering it to any Man, keep themselves from the Sacrament, and withdraw themselves from the Altar, at which they ministred, not out of Courage, but Duty, bewailing their Sin in Secret, they may reconcile themselves to God by Repentance, appease his Anger, and render themselves worthy of the Heavenly City, and of Eternal Happiness.

Julianus Pomerius.

In the next place, the Author goes on to shew how loose Bishops ought to be from the desires of Worldly Riches. He maintains, that those that enter into the Clergy, ought to renounce their Estates, sell all, and give to the Poor, contenting themselves with the Revenues of the Church, which they ought not to possess as their own, being only properly the Managers of them; that they ought to think the Revenues of the Church to be the Vows of the Faithful, the Attonement for Sins, and the Patrimony of the Poor. So that they ought not to appropriate them to themselves, as properly belonging to them, but to distribute them to the Poor, as a trust belonging to them; that the Ministers of the Church have no right to them, but under the title of Poverty, and if they are Rich otherwise, and yet live of the Revenues of the Church, they rob the Poor; that they, who suppose, that these Revenues of the Church are a reward for their Service, deceive themselves by expecting Temporal Rewards for that which deserves Eternal; that those, who have an Estate, ought to be so far from living at the Charge of the Church, that they ought to impart their Incomes to the Church, without being in the least proud of it. 'These Precepts, saith our Author, may appear hard. 'And I own it, but 'tis to them that have no mind to ob-'serve them, for to those that are willing to keep them, no-'thing is more easie, for practice will soon make them so: 'for what difficulty is there in contenting themselves with the 'Revenues of the Church, when they have enough to main-'tain them, or forsake their own Estates, when the Church 'allows them a sufficient maintenance?' These are indeed good Rules, but very rarely put in practice. Julian Pomerius confirms them, by shewing how all Christians, but principally Clergy-men, ought to despise Riches.

The last part of this Book is concerning the Abstinence and Temperance of the Clergy. He shews how necessary this Virtue is, and how dangerous the contrary Vice. He makes Temperance to consist in two things viz. in neither Eating nor Drinking more than is necessary, and in not seeking out exquisite Dainties and Liquors. He tells us at the end, that we must break our Fast for our Hosts sake

The last Book treats of Virtues and Vices in particular. He therein discovers the pernicious effects of Pride, Covetousness, Envy and Boasting. He speaks very largely of Charity, of the four Cardinal Virtues, Prudence, Temperance, Fortitude, and Justice. This Book is full of definitions, and divisions of Virtues and Vices, natural descriptions of them, and very profitable Maxims.

The Discourse of this Author is not excellent for the Elegancy of the Expressions, but for the acuteness and neatness of the Notions.

GENNADIUS.

Gennadius.

Gennadius a Priest of Marseilles. did himself make a Catalogue of his own Works, at the end of his Book of Ecclesiastical Writers. 'I have written, saith 'he, eight Books against all the Heresies, six Books a-'gainst Nestorius, three Books against Pelagius. A Treatise 'concerning the Millennium 'and St. John's Revelation.* 'A Book of the Ecclesiastical 'Writers; and a treatise of the 'Doctrine I hold and believe, 'sent to Pope Gelasius.' We have nothing of his but the two last. It is needless to speak of the first here, because we have copied it out wholly in this Volume. The last, which bears this Title at present, Of the Doctrines of the Church, hath gone a long time under the Name of St. Austine, although the Authors of this Age have told us, that it is Gennadius's, and it carries his Name in some ancient MSS. See what we have already said, when we spoke of the Additions to the 8*th*. Tome of St. Austine's Works. It is composed in the form of a Confession of Faith; but in delivering the Orthodox Truths he rejects the Contrary Errors, and names the Maintainers of them. The five first Articles are about the Trinity, and Incarnation; the four following upon the Resurrection. In these last, he rejects the fabulous Opinion of the Millennaries and the Errors of Origen and Diodorus, and proves that there shall be but one Resurrection of the Flesh which shall be real, though incorruptible. He thinks, that it may be said, that those, who shall be found alive at the day of Judgment shall not die, but shall only be changed, but it can't be asserted, without an Error, that the Torments of the Devils or wicked Men shall one day have an end. He is of Opinion, that none but God is Spiritual; that all Creatures are Corporeal, although Intellectual Creatures are Immortal. He rejects the Opinion of Origen about the Pre-existence of Souls, as also of those that hold that they are produced by Generation. He says, that God creates, and at the same time infuses them into the Body. He asserts, that only the Soul of Man exists separately from the Body; that Man is made up of a Soul and Body, but there is no difference of Substance in him. He holds, that Man was created free, but by Sin he hath lost the strength of that Liberty; but yet he has not quite lost the power of chooSing Good, and refusing Evil, and to seek after his own Salvation, because God exhorts him, stirs him up, and encourages him to do it. So that the beginning of Man's Salvation proceeds from his Free-will strengthened by Grace, because he can freely yield to its Inspiration, but it is the gift of God to be able to attain the End we desire; that it depends upon our Labour, and assistance of God, that we do not fall from the state of Grace, and when we do fall, we ought to impute it to our own Negligence, and the viciousness of the Will.

Gennadius.

He passes next to the Sacraments, and affirms that there is but one Baptism, and that we must not baptize them again, who have been baptized by the Hereticks, with the Invocation of the Name of the Trinity; but they who have not been baptized in the Name of the Trinity, ought to be re-baptized, becauſe ſuch a Baptiſm is not true. He neither commends nor blames the practice of thoſe, who received the Sacrament every day. But he exhorts and requires them to receive the Sacrament every Sunday, provided they are not linked to any Sin; for thoſe who are accuſtomed to any Sin, are rather loaden by the guilt, than purged from it by the Sacrament, but yet he that finds himſelf averſe from Sin, may receive the Sacrament, although he had ſin'd, which he underſtands, as himſelf ſays, of him, who hath not committed any grievous, or heinous Sins; for whoſoever hath committed any of thoſe ſort of Sins after Baptiſm, he exhorts him to teſtifie his ſorrow for them, by performing publick Penance, and ſo be reſtored to the Communion of the Church by the Abſolution of the Prieſt, if he will not ſubject himſelf to Condemnation by receiving of the Sacrament. Not that I deny, that heinous Sins can be pardoned.* *remitted by a Private Repentance; but then it muſt be done by an entire change of the Cuſtom of Living, by a continual ſorrow for them, and not receiving the Sacrament, till they had made a thorough Reformation, and live altogether otherwiſe than they have done.

* It is a continuation of St. Jerome's Catalogue of Ecclesiastical Writers from 392; where St. Jerome left off to 495, and therefore has been printed with it at Basil, in 1528, 4*to*; at Cologne, in 1580; at Helmstadt, in 1612, 4*to*; and at Antwerp 1639.

Gennadius.

True Repentance is not to be guilty again of that which we he have repented of, and real ſatisfaction conſiſts in eradicating Sin, and never more expoſing our ſelves to Temptations.

D. Cave is of Opinion that 30 Articles of this work, viz. from Art. 22 to Art. 51 are not* Gennadius's, but compoſed by ſome other hand after Gennadius's Death.

In the 25*th*. * Article he affirms, that we ought not to expect any thing Earthly in our Happineſs, and that the Millenary Reign of Chriſt is a mere Chimæra.

The other Articles are nothing but Explications of the precedent, or concern the Diſcipline of the Church. He ſpeaks alſo of Grace and Free-will in Art. 26, where he ſays, that no Man tends to Salvation, unleſs he be called to it, and that none that are called can obtain it but by the help of God; that none obtains this aſſiſtance but he that prays for it; that God wills not that any ſhould periſh; that he only permits it, that he may not injure Man's Freedom. He adds in Art. 27, and thoſe that follow, that God did not create Sin; that Men commit it by their Freedom; that this proves that only God is immutable; that the Angels have voluntarily perſevered in Goodneſs; that Marriage is good, when it is uſed for the procreation of Children, or to avoid Fornication; that Celibacy, when it is preſerved with a deſign to ſerve God, is a very advantageous State, and Virginity is alſo moſt excellent; that it is lawful to eat of all ſorts of Meats, but it is convenient to abſtain from ſome and preſerve Temperance; that it is credible that Mary the Mother of God did always remain a Virgin; that we ought not to believe that at the Day of Judgment, the Elements ſhall be deſtroyed, but only changed; that the Reſurrection ſhall not quite take away the difference of Sexes; that the Souls of the Righteous go to Heaven as ſoon as they depart from their Bodies, and then expect perfect Happineſs; but the Souls of Sinners are kept in Hell where they wait their Puniſhment; that the Fleſh of Man is not naturally Evil; that the Devil doth not know the ſecret Thoughts of Man, but gueſſes at them only by the Motions of the Body; that he is not always the Author of evil Thoughts, though God be always of good ones; that he never enters the Soul, but is united and joyned to it; that the Miracles and Wonders which wicked Men do, doth not make them more Holy or better Men; that there is no Righteous Man that ſins not, but for all that he continues Righteous; that no unbaptized Perſon can be ſaved, and therefore Catechumens obtain not Eternal Life, unleſs they have ſuffered Martyrdom, becauſe all the Myſteries of Baptiſm are accompliſhed by Martyrdom; for he that is baptized profeſſes his Faith in Jeſus Chriſt before his Biſhop; he that ſuffers Martyrdom, doth it before his Perſecutors. After his Confeſſion the Catechumen is either plunged in, or ſprinkled with the Water; the Martyr is either ſprinkled with his own Blood, or caſt into the Fire. The Perſon baptized receives the Holy Spirit by the Impoſition of the Biſhop's Hands, the Martyr is an Inſtrument of the Holy Spirit, which moves, and ſpeaks in him. The Perſon baptized partakes of, and remembers the Death of Chriſt, by receiving the Sacrament; the Martyr dies with Jeſus Chriſt. The baptized Perſon renounces the World, the Martyr abandons Life. All Sins are pardoned by Baptiſm, and blotted out by Martyrdom; this compariſon we have thought fit to recite at large for the excellency of it. Let us now return to the other Articles of Gennadius, not yet ſpoken of. They almoſt all concern Diſcipline or Morality; that Repentance can procure Pardon of Sins, yea even for thoſe who defer it, till they are at the point of Death; that the Sacrament ought not to be adminiſtred with Water only, but with Wine mingled with Water; that it is good to honour the Reliques of Saints, and to go to the Churches which bear their Names, as to places appointed for Prayer to God; that Perſons twice married ought not to be ordained; nor ſuch as have kept a Concubine; nor ſuch as have married a Widow, or a Lewd Woman, nor the Lame, nor Uſurers, nor Stage-players; nor thoſe who have done Publick Penance; nor Fools, nor Dæmoniacks, nor Simoniſts. That the Clergy may keep their Eſtates, if they do it, that they may diſtribute the Yearly Revenues to the Poor, but it is better to give it them all together; That Eaſter may not be kept 'till the Vernal Equinox be paſt, and the full Moon be over.

Gennadius.

Theſe are all the Articles contain'd in * this Treatiſe of Gennadius. There is more Learning than Judgment in this Work; for in it Gennadius delivers many erroneous Doctrines, propounds mere Opinions, as Articles of Faith, and condemns many Orthodox Truths. This Treatiſe of Gennadius, and his Book of Eccleſiaſtical Writers, do evidently prove, that he was not of St. Auſtine's Judgment concerning Grace and Free-will, but of Fauſtus's of Ries, and that he approved of his Opinion, concerning the Nature of the Soul, and of all Creatures. His Style is plain, clear, elegant and clean. I forgot to obſerve, that he hath added to St. Auſtine's Treatiſes of Hereſies, four new Hereſies, viz. the Predeſtinarians, Neſtorians, Eutychians, and Timotheans. This Addition is found under Gennadius's Name, in a Manuſcript of St. Victor's Library, at the End of St. Auſtine's Book, and Hincmarus cites it under the Name of this Author.

* This Book hath been printed by it ſelf with the learned Notes of Elmenhorſtius at Hamburgh, 1614, 4*to*.

NEMESIUS, ÆNEAS GAZÆUS.

Nemeſius, Æneas Gazæus.

IT is probable, that theſe * two Chriſtian Philoſophers lived about the End of the fifth Age. The firſt is Nemeſius, who is commonly reputed Biſhop of Emeſa. He hath made a Treatiſe of the Nature of Man, divided into 45 Chapters, which ſome attribute to St. Gregory Nyſſen. In it he confutes the Manichees, Appollinariſts, and Eunomians; but he confirms the Opinion of Origen concerning the Pre-exiſtence of Souls. This Treatiſe is full of general and metaphyſical Propoſitions and Diviſions, which are of little uſe to diſcover the Nature of Man particularly. He maintains, that Angels are ſpiritual, and that the human Nature is abſolutely free. This Treatiſe was firſt tranſlated by Valla, whoſe Verſion was printed in 1535, and ſince by Elle-bodius: The ſame Verſion was printed with the Greek by Plantin [at Antwerp] in 1565, and inſerted in the Biblioth. Patr. [Printed at Paris] in 1624; and in the following Editions, [more correct, with uſeful Notes at Oxford in 1671, 8*vo*.]

Yet Dr. Cave places them very far aſunder, viz.* Nemeſius in 380, and Æn. Gazæus in 487.

The Work of Æneas Gazæus concerning the Immortality of the Soul, and the Reſurrection, is not ſo abſtract as Nemeſius's. It is a * Dialogue wherein he treats of the Immortality of the Soul of Man, and the Reſurrection of the Body; but he mixes his Diſcourſe, that it may be more pleaſing, with many Enquiries into the Opinions of the Philoſophers, and with an abundance of curious Stories. He believes that God creates Souls to infuſe them into Bodies, and that the Number of them, tho' fixed and certain, yet is known to none but God; that Souls are ſenſible of nothing without Bodies; that Man is very free; that the Bodies ſhall riſe in the ſame Form that they had in this World; that Devils aſſume the Form of Dead Men to trouble the Living; that the Reliques of the Martyrs make the Devil to fly; that there are many Miracles done by the Prayers of Good Men; that Dead Men have been raiſed, &c. This Author wrote about the End of the fifth Age; for about the End of his Treatiſe he ſpeaks of the Perſecution of the Vandals againſt the Orthodox, as a thing that lately happened. His Treatiſe was tranſlated by Ambroſe Camaldulenſis [and printed at Baſil in 1516,] and put into the Biblioth. Patr. [at Paris in 1624,] and printed ſince in Greek and Latin, [by Wolphius at Baſil in 1560.] tranſlated by Caſp. Barthius, and printed at Lipſwich [in 1658, 4*to*.] with Zacharias Biſhop of Mitylene, who was another Chriſtian Philoſopher, but more modern, [for he flouriſhed about 536.]

Nemeſius, Æneas Gazæus.

Intitled* Theophraſtus.

GELA-

GELASIUS CYZICENUS.

Gelasius Cyzicenus.

THE Preface of the History of the Council of Nice, which bears Gelasius's Name, discovers to us, that this Author was of Cyzicum, and that he lived toward the End of the fifth Age; for he says, that his Father was a Priest of that Church, and that the Persecution of the Emperor * Basiliscus against the Orthodox gave him an Occasion of writing this Work. He thought at first that all his Business had been to copy out the ancient Acts of the Council of Nice, which heretofore had belonged to Dalmatius, Bishop of Cyzicum, and which were fallen into his Father's Hands: But not finding them perfect, he was forced to add several things to them related by several Authors, but chiefly by Eusebius Cæsariensis and Rufinus, whom he makes a Roman Priest, and whom he says falsely to have been present at that Council. And indeed this History is nothing almost but a Collection of Treatises, and Pieces taken out of Eusebius, Socrates, Sozomen, and Theodoret. That which is not taken out of these Authors, is either dubious, or manifestly false, as all that is related from Chap. 11. to Chap. 24. of the second Book, about the Disputes of the Philosophers upon the Trinity, and the Divinity of the Holy Spirit. It is manifest, that these Disputes are a mere Fiction; and 'tis certain, that the Question concerning the Divinity of the Holy Spirit was not moved in the Council of Nice. There are many other Faults in his History. There is neither Order in his Relation, nor Exactness in his Observations, nor Elegancy in his Expressions, nor Judgment in the Choice of things, nor good Sense in his Sentences. So that this Historian must be accounted a bad Compiler, who hath collected without any Judgment whatsoever he found concerning the Council of Nice, whether bad or good, not examining whether it were true or false. Which being so, 'tis no wonder that he hath said, that Hosius supplied the Place of the Bishop of Rome in the Council of Nice, and that it was he that called that Council, tho' both are contrary to the Testimonies of the Letters of the Council it self, and of the Authors that lived at that time. This Work is divided into three Books; the two first contain the History of the Council, the third is made up of three Letters of the Emperor Constantine. It hath been published in Greek and Latin by Robert Balforeus, [a Scotish-man, with his own Notes] and printed at Paris by Morellus, with some Works of Theodorus a Priest of Raithu in the Year 1595. [1599. Ca.] and in 1604. by Commelinus: Since it hath been put into the Councils of Rome, in Binius's second Edition, as also in Louvre's, and the last Editions. It would be better to leave it wholly out in the first Edition of the Councils, that shall be hereafter published.

Gelasius Cyzicenus.

* Basiliscus deposed Zeno Ann 476. & reigned not quite two Years. He was an Arian, and therefore persecuted the Orthodox:

The Author of the Books attributed to St. DIONYSIUS the Areopagite.

The Authors of the Books attributed to S. Dionysius the Areopagite.

THIS is a fit time to speak of the Books attributed to St. Dionysius the Areopagite: For * since they first appeared in the Beginning of the sixth Age, it is very probable that they were composed at the End of the fifth. We will not repeat here, what we have said in the first Part of this History, but content our selves to observe whatever is most useful in them.

The Book of the Cœlestial Hierarchy is full of Metaphysical Remarks about the Number and Distinction of Angels. He divides them into three Hierarchies, and nine Orders, to which he appropriates different Names and Offices. But in all that he says upon this Subject, there is nothing either solid, or profitable.

His Book of the Ecclesiastical Hierarchy is more useful, because it teacheth us after what manner the Sacraments were administred in the Church in the time of this Author. Let us begin with Baptism. The Bishop having preached, and instructed the Catechumen, he sends for him into the Congregation of the Faithful, where he recites with all the Church an Hymn taken out of Holy Scripture; and having kissed the Holy Table, he goes to the Catechumen, and demands of him, why he is come thither? He having answered him, Because he loves God, and believes the Truths which he hath heard of him; The Bishop gives him a Description of the Christian Life, and then asks him, if he will live after this manner? After he hath promised it, he lays his Hands on him, and orders the Priests to write down the Name of this Man, and of the Person that hath answered for him. When this is done, he goes on to rehearse some sacred Prayers; when they are finished, he causes him to be stripped by his Deacons, and having caused him to turn, and stretch forth his Hands toward the West, he commands him to breathe three times against Satan, and to make the ordinary Renunciations (viz. of the World, Flesh and Devil) three times. Then he turns him to the East, and causing him to lift up his Hands towards Heaven, he enjoyns him to profess, that he believes all that Jesus Christ hath taught, and whatsoever is contained in the Holy Scriptures. This being done, he causes him to rehearse the Confession of Faith three times: Then he makes some Prayers, blesses him, and lays his Hands on him. Then the Deacons strip him quite, and the Priests bring the Oyl of the Holy Unction, and the Bishop having begun to anoint him, by making the Sign of the Cross thrice upon him, he leaves it to the Priests to anoint his whole Body. From thence he brings him to the sacred Font, and having sanctified the Water by the Invocation of the Holy Spirit, and having consecrated it by putting in Oyl in the form of a Cross three times, while they recite some Prophecies, he commands them to bring him to the place where he is to be baptized. The Priests call him, and his Godfather by their Names: they bring him to the Bishop, who takes him by the Hand, and the Priests having read his Name, he dips him three times in the Water, and invokes the Name of the Holy Trinity every time as he goes into, and comes out of the Water. When this is done, the Priests carry him away, and lead him to his Godfather. After he has put on his Cloaths, they conduct him again to the Bishop, who having anointed him with that Oyl, which renders Men Holy, he commands him to receive the Sacrament, which hath a particular Power to perfect Holiness.

The Authors of the Books attributed to S. Dionysius the Areopagite.

Thus this Author describes the Ceremonies of Baptism; and then makes some Mystical Observations upon them, which we shall pass over, that we may come to what he says about the Eucharist, which he calls the most perfect of all the Sacraments. He says, That we have Reason to give it the Name of Communion * by way of Eminence, because this is the Sacrament which unites more particularly; and that it is for this Reason that it is not permitted to execute any Function in the Hierarchy, unless it be consummated by the Communion. After this Reflection he returns to the manner of the Ceremony, and says, that the Bishop being returned to the Altar, sings some Psalms, and all the Clergy sing with him. Then the Deacons read the Holy Scriptures; and when they have done reading, they put out the Catechumens, † Energumeni, and Penitents, and leave none in the Church, but such as are worthy to behold the Holy Mysteries, and communicate: That some of the Deacons remain at the Doors of the Church, which are fast shut, and others are employed in the Church; that the chief, and most eminent Deacons, carry the Bread and Cup to the Altar with the Priests, after all the Clergy have sang Praises to God: that the Bishop prays with them, and pronounces Peace to all the Faithful, who kiss each other. Then they recite the Hymn called * the Trisagion. After the Priests and Bishops have washed their Hands, the Bishop comes alone to the middle of the Altar, having about him the Priests, and some of the Deacons; and having praised the Works of God, they consummate these most Divine Mysteries, and place before their Eyes the things which they have praised, when they set the Signs upon the Altar. Having then shewn these Holy and Divine Gifts, he communicates, and invites all the rest to participate with him. The Communion is concluded with Hymns of Praise and Thanksgiving.

* Καθ' ἐξοχὴν

† Lunaticks. Persons at certain seasons vexed with unclean Spirits. Those were kept from the Sacrament, though Baptized, ob mentis inconstantiam, for the levity and inconstancy of their Minds.

* The use of this Hymn in the Sacrament, proves the Author to have lived after 445, when it was first appointed by the Synod of Vasio to be universally used. Hosp. ex P. Diacono, &c. Durandus makes Sixtus I. the Institutor of it. Durandi Rationale.

The * Sacrament of Unction comes next the Holy Eucharist; and as they put out the several Ranks of the less-perfect during the Consecration of the Eucharist, so also, when the Bishop consecrates the Oyl, the Temple is perfumed with the Odours, and with the Incense: And after they have rehearsed the Psalms, and read the Scriptures, the Bishop takes the Oyl, and puts it under the Altar; and while they sing the Prophetical Hymns, he finishes the Ceremonies of its Consecration. He afterward makes use of it almost in all the Episcopal Functions.

* Holy Office of Confirmation.

From the Sacraments he comes to the Ordination of the several Degrees of the Clergy. The Bishop is the first, and chief, it belongs to him alone to ordain and consecrate the Oyl. The Prieſts are ſubject to the Biſhop, but partake of the Prieſtly Functions, and have their particular Offices. They ſhew the Effects of their Power in the Holy Signs and Sacraments, which they ſhew to thoſe, that draw near to them, and then make them Partakers of the Holy Myſteries, and Sacred Communion. The Order of Deacons is to prepare, and ſingle out ſuch Perſons as may be allowed to approach the Holy Myſteries.

The Author of the Books attributed to St. Dion. the Areopagite.

The Ceremonies uſed in the Ordination of theſe ſeveral Orders, are theſe. The Biſhop preſents himſelf upon his Knees before the Altar, bearing the Holy Bible upon his Head, and another Biſhop layeth his Hands on him, and conſecrates him by Prayer. When a Prieſt is conſecrated, he alſo kneels upon both his Knees before the Altar, and the Biſhop lays his Right Hand upon him, making Prayers. The Deacons bend but one Knee before the Altar, and in the mean time the Biſhop puts his Hands upon them, and conſecrates them alſo with the ordinary Prayers. He alſo ſigns every one of them with the Croſs, gives them ſome Inſtructions, and concludes by giving them the Kiſs of Peace, which they receive not only of the Biſhop, but of all the Clergy. So that the Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons have this in common in their Ordination, to preſent themſelves before the Altar, kneel and receive the Impoſition of the Biſhops Hands, the Sign of the Croſs, Inſtructions, and a Kiſs. The Biſhops have this peculiar to them, that the Holy Bible is laid upon their Head, and the Deacons bend but one Knee.

As there are ſeveral Orders of the Clergy, ſo there are alſo ſeveral Degrees among the Laity. He diſtinguiſhes them into three ſorts: 1. Catechumens, which are not as yet cleanſed. 2. Penitents, who having loſt their Innocency, have need of Purifying. The Deacons are employed to perfect, and purifie theſe two Ranks of Chriſtians, that they may make them fit to behold, and partake of the Sacraments from which they are excluded. The 3*d* is, Harmleſs and Chaſte People, who are admitted to the Holy Communion.

But the moſt excellent Eſtate among the Laicks is the Holy Monks, which our Anceſtors called Aſcetæ, or Monks, becauſe of their ſolitary and contemplative Life, which unites them to God. Upon this account another ſort of Conſecration is honoured, which is not indeed performed by the Biſhop, but by the Holy Prieſts after this manner. The Prieſt ſtanding before the Altar rehearſes thoſe Prayers, which uſe to be ſaid at the Conſecration of a Monk. The Perſon to be conſecrated is ſtanding behind him, for he neither kneels, nor has the Bible put on his Head, but he is only near the Prieſt, who recites the Prayer. When that is finiſhed, he goes to him that is initiated, and asks him, Whether he forſakes not only a Worldly Life but alſo all Hankerings after the World? He tells him, what a perfect Life he embraces, and aſſures him, that he muſt excel the Life of all ordinary Chriſtians. And when he hath promiſed to do all that he requires of him, the Prieſt having made the Sign of the Croſs upon him, cuts off his Hair, invoking the Holy Trinity, gives him another Habit; and having embraced him, and cauſed all the Pious Perſons there preſent to embrace him, he gives him the Communion.

Laſtly, As to the State of the Dead, they who have lived well, being come to the end of their Race, they know more clearly after their Death, and ſee nearer at hand that eternal Happineſs, which they are ſure one Day to be poſſeſſed of; the very Thoughts of which fill them with inexpreſſible Joy. The Relations of the Dead ſhare in this Joy, praiſing and giving Thanks to God in their Prayers, becauſe he died a Conqueror of this World; they carry his Body to the Biſhop, who receives it, and performs the uſual Ceremonies about it in this manner: Having aſſembled the Clergy, if the Dead Perſon were in Orders, he places his Body before the Altar, and begins to pray to God, and give Thanks unto him: But if he were a Monk, or Lay-Man, they place him at the Door of the Church, and make a ſolemn Prayer about him. Then the Deacons having recited the Promiſes of the Reſurrection delivered to us in Holy Scripture, they ſing thoſe Pſalms, which have relation to it. The chief Deacon then diſmiſſes the Catechumens, and then commemorates thoſe, who have died a Religious Death, among whom he puts the Name of the Perſon lately deceaſed, and exhorts all the Faithful to beg of God an happy End. The Biſhop then drawing near to him, makes ſome very pious Prayers over him; which being done, he embraceth him, and all that are preſent do the ſame: Then he anoints him with Oyl; and having prayed for all preſent, they carry his Body into a ſacred Place, and there interr it among the Bodies of the other Saints. One of the Prayers, which the Biſhop makes to God, is this: That God would forgive the dead Perſon thoſe Sins, which he hath committed through Human Frailty, and enſtate him in the Light of the Living: That he would conduct him into the Boſom of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, the place where there is neither Grief, nor Tears, nor Sorrow. Theſe were Ceremonies of the Church uſed at that time at the Interrment of the Dead. Our Author in his Reflections puts this Objection: If every Man be rewarded according to his Deſerts, what need is there of Prayers for the Dead? Of what uſe are they to the Wicked? And why do we pray for the Juſt? He anſwers, that it is certain, that Prayers are uſeful to thoſe only who die well: But as in this Life, when we have good Deſigns and Intentions, we may be helped, and aſſiſted by the Prayers of the Righteous, and this is an ordinary means of obtaining Grace, without which we often come ſhort of it; even ſo the Biſhop, who is the Interpreter of the Divine Oracles, and the Angel of the Lord of Hoſts, who knows that the Juſtice of God weighs all things in an equal Balance, and pardons thoſe faults, which Men commit through frailty, and ſo much the more, becauſe no Man is free from them, prays to God that it may be ſo; not that he doubts at all of the Goodneſs of God, but he begs this favour with the greater confidence, becauſe he is aſſured, that it ſhall not be denied him. And for this reaſon it is, that he doth not pray for thoſe, who have not been baptized, nor for Sinners, not only becauſe 'tis not lawful to do it, and becauſe he being only an Interpreter of the Divine Will, he cannot without great raſhneſs beg that which God will not grant, but alſo becauſe his Requeſt being unreaſonable, he cannot hope to obtain it. Laſtly, his Prayer is rather an Interpretation of the Divine Will, a Declaration of his Goodneſs, a Promiſe and Aſſurance of what ſhall happen to the deceaſed, rather than a Petition for a thing uncertain. After the ſame manner the Biſhops excommunicating Sinners are Interpreters of the Will of God, and do only ſeparate them from the Communion, whom God hath already condemned: For we ought to believe, that if they do it unjuſtly, or through Paſſion, the Juſtice of God proſecutes their Actions.

The Author of the Books attributed to St. Dion. the Areopagite.

This Treatiſe concludes with a Remark upon Infant-Baptiſm. The Author obſerves, that many Perſons, Strangers to our Religion, derided and ridiculed that Cuſtom of making others to promiſe for them. He anſwers, that the Biſhop to whom this was ſaid, ought to have anſwered pleaſingly, and ſhewn firſt, that there are ſeveral things, for which we know not the reaſon, although there are ſome, and thoſe known to the Angels, but ſome are known to none but God himſelf: That in baptizing Infants we do no more, than what we have learned, and received by Tradition from our Fore-fathers: That Children being well educated, becoming Righteous and Holy Men, the Church hath thought fit to baptize them, committing them to ſome baptized Perſon to educate and inſtruct them, who ought to take care of them, as their Father in Jeſus Chriſt, for whoſe Salvation he muſt anſwer to him. For this Reaſon it is, that the Biſhop demands of this Perſon, If he renounces &c. that by that act he may oblige him to perſuade this Infant, and teach him, when he comes to the uſe of Reaſon, to renounce thoſe things which he hath promiſed to renounce by him. Laſtly, The Biſhop gives the Holy Sacrament to Infants, that they may be brought up Chriſtianly, and may live a Life conformable to the Holineſs of the Sacraments which they have received.

This is all that is moſt uſeful in this Author. I will not ſtay to make an Extract of his Treatiſes of the Divine Names, and Of Myſtick Theology, nor of his Letters; becauſe theſe Works being full of Metaphyſical and Platonick Notions, it would be hard to draw any thing that is pleaſing, or uſeful out of them. [The ſeveral Editions of this Author's Books are ſet down in Vol. I. of this Hiſtory under Dionyſ. Areop.] to which the Reader is referred.

Pope SYMMACHUS.

Pope Symmachus.

After the Death of Pope Anaſtaſius, which happen'd at the End of the Year 498, there was a fierce Contention in the Church of Rome between Laurentius and Symmachus, which of them two was duly promoted to that See. Symmachus, who was Deacon, was choſen and ordain'd by the far greater number, but Feſtus a Roman Senator, who had promiſed the Emperor Anaſtaſius, that his Edict of Agreement with the Biſhop of Rome ſhould be ſigned, procured Laurentius to be choſen and ordained. This Schiſm divided the Church and the City of Rome, and the moſt eminent both of the Clergy and the Senate took part with one of theſe two Biſhops: But at length both Parties agreed to wait upon King Theodoric at Ravenna for his Deciſion in the caſe, which was this, That He ſhould continue Biſhop of Rome who had been firſt choſen, and ſhould be found to have the far greater number of Voices for him. Symmachus had the advantage of Laurentius on both theſe Accounts, and ſo was confirm'd in the poſſeſſion of the Holy See; and he ordain'd Laurentius Biſhop of Nocera, if we may believe Anaſtaſius. At the beginning of the next Year he called a Council, wherein he made a Canon againſt the ways of ſolliciting Mens Voices, which were were then used for obtaining the Papal Dignity: But those who opposed the Ordination of Symmachus, seeing him possessed of the Holy See against their Mind, us'd all their Endeavours to turn him out of it; for which end they charged him with many Crimes, they stirr'd up a part of the People and Senate against him, and caus'd a Petition to be presented to King Theodoric, that he would appoint a Delegate to re-hear the Cause. He nam'd Peter Bishop of Altinas, who depos'd the Pope from the Government of his Diocess, and deprived him of the Possessions of the Church. This Division was the Cause of so great Disorders in Rome, that from Words they came many times to Blows, and every Day produc'd Fighting and Murders: Many Ecclesiasticks were beaten to Death, Virgins were robbed, and driven away from their Habitation, many Lay-men were wounded or kill'd; insomuch that not only the Church, but also the City of Rome suffered very much by this Schism. King Theodoric being desirous to put an End to these Disorders, call'd a Council; wherein the Bishops being possess'd with a good Opinion of Pope Symmachus, would not enter upon the Examination of the particular Articles alledg'd against him, but only declar'd him innocent before his Accusers, of the Crimes that were laid to his Charge: And they prevail'd so far by their Importunity, that the King was satisfy'd with this Sentence, and both the People and the Senate who had been very much irritated against Symmachus, were pacify'd and acknowledg'd him for Pope. Yet some of the discontented Party still remain'd, who drew up a Writing against this Synod, and spread their Calumnies, forg'd against Symmachus, as far as the East: The Emperor Anastasius objected them to him, which obliged Symmachus to write a Letter to him for his own Vindication: But notwithstanding these Efforts of his Enemies, he continued in peaceable possession of the Holy See until the Year 514, wherein he died.

Pope Symmachus.

Pope Symmachus.

The first Letter of this Pope is written to Æonius Bishop of Arles, which is dated Sept. 29. in the Year 500. In this Letter he declares, that his Predecessor had unjustly taken away from the Bishop of Arles the Right of ordaining Bishops to some Churches, and given it to the Bishop of Vienna, contrary to the Custom and Canons of his Predecessors. Upon this Occasion he says, That the Priesthood being one and indivisible, altho' it be administred by many Bishops, the Successors can make no Innovation contrary to the Canons of their Predecessors; and moreover, That it is of great Importance to Religion, that no Difference of Judgment should appear among the Bishops and chiefly among the Bishops of the Church of Rome: From whence he concludes, That Æonius should follow the ancient Custom in ordaining Bishops, and that the new Canon of Anastasius ought not to take place.

The second Letter written to the same Bishop ought to be placed before the former, not only because of the Date, which is written Octob. 30. 499. but also because it is a Citation of the Bishop of Vienna to come and defend his pretended Right, which ought to precede the Judgment given against him which is contain'd in the first Letter. There is also a third Letter on the same Subject written to Avitus Bishop of Vienna, Octob. 13. 501. published in the fifth Tome of the Spicilegium of Luc Dachera, and is there reckon'd the twelfth, wherein he answers that Bishop, and tells him, That the Judgment he had given should be no ways prejudicial to him, if he could prove that the Canon made by his Predecessor was useful, altho' it was not regular; because what is done for a just Cause is not against the Law, and one may depart from the Rigor of the Law for the Good of the Church, since the Law it self would have excepted such a Case if it could have foreseen it; and he adds, That it would be oft-times cruel to adhere to the Letter of the Law, when the strict Observation of it is found prejudicial to the Church, because the Laws were made to serve the Church, and not to do it any Prejudice. After this he exhorts the Bishop of Vienna to produce his Reasons and Defence in a Letter to himself.

At last in the Year 502 he ended this Difference by confirming the Canon made about this Matter by St. Leo, who had subjected Valentia, Tarentasia, Geneva and Grenoble to the Bishop of Vienna, and left the other Churches under the Jurisdiction of the Bishop of Arles. Cæsarius was at Rome when this Canon was made, as appears by the ninth Letter dated Novemb. 13*th.* in the Year 502. But let us return to the former Letters.

The third is a Letter of Compliment to Patricius Liberius upon the Election of a Bishop of Aquileia. It is dated Octob. 15. in the Year 499, but the Date appears to be added: This is the first Letter of the fifth Book of Ennodius, and it may be that he composed it for this Pope.

The fourth is not a Letter of Symmachus to Laurentius of Milan, as the Title supposes; but it is the third part of the Rhetorick of Ennodius of Pavia. Any one may be satisfyed by reading it, that it was never a Letter.

The Letter or Memorial of Cæsarius Bishop of Arles, contains four Requests which he made to Pope Symmachus. In the first he remonstrates to him, that among the Gauls the Possessions of the Church were easily alienated, from whence it came to pass, that the Goods designed for relieving the Necessities of the Poor were daily diminished He prays that this Alienation may be wholly forbidden by the Authority of the Holy See, except what shall be thought convenient to be given to the Monasteries. He requests in the second place, that it may be declared also, that the Judges and Governors of Provinces cannot be appointed until they have been try'd a long time before. 3. He desires that it may be forbidden to marry the Widows who have worn a Religious Habit for a long time, and the Virgins who have been for many Years in Monasteries. 4. He requests that Care may be taken to hinder all canvassing and giving of Bribes for obtaining a Bishoprick.

Pope Symmachus.

The Pope answers these Requests in the following Letter of Novemb. 6th, which is the fifth, and says, That altho' the Ecclesiastical Canons have provided for these things, which he desires, yet it is good to renew them. 1st, Then he forbids the Alienation of the Possessions of the Church by any Contract, and upon any Pretence whatsoever; but yet he allows some part of them to be given to Clergy-men, to Monasteries, and to Strangers who are in necessity, provided always, that they shall only enjoy the Profits of them during their Life. 2. He threatens those with the Rigor of the Canons who endeavour to promote themselves to the Priesthood by promising to give away the Possessions of the Church. 3. He ordains that Lay-men shall observe the Times appointed by the Canons, before they be promoted to the Priesthood. 4. He declares that he abhors those who ravish Widows or Virgins consecrated to God, and that he condemns even those who marry them, altho' they who are married mean well. He ordains that such shall be cast out of the Communion of the Church, and he forbids Widows who have lived a long while unmarried, and Virgins who have been a considerable time in Monasteries, to marry, 5. He forbids all Sollicitations and Promises which are made for Promotion to a Bishoprick.

The sixth Letter of Symmachus is his Apology, wherein he vindicates himself from the Crimes charg'd upon him by the Emperor Anastasius. In it he writes to this Emperor with great Boldness and shews him, that he ought not to take in ill part his Answer to the Reproaches spoken against him; That if he be consider'd in the quality of Roman Emperor, he ought to hear patiently the Messages of the People, and even of the Barbarians; and if he be considered as a Christian Prince, he ought to hear the Voice of the Bishop of the Apostolick See: That for his own part he could not dissemble these Calumnies, altho' he ought to bear with them; and that it was even the Interest of the Emperor to have the Falshood of them discover'd, that the Scandal might be remov'd. He taketh the whole City of Rome to witness, that he was no Manichean, and that he had never warp'd from the Faith he had receiv'd in the Church of Rome since he first left Paganism. He accuses the Emperor in his turn of being an Eutychian, or at least of favouring the Eutychians and communicating with them: He reproves him for despising the Authority of the Holy See, and of the Bishop who was Successor to St. Peter. He maintains that his Dignity is higher than that of the Emperor. Let us compare, says he to him, the Dignity of a Bishop with that of an Emperor. There is as great difference between them, as between the things of this Earth, whereof the latter has the Administration, and the things of Heaven, whereof the former is the Dispenser. O Prince! you receive Baptism from the Bishop, he gives you the Sacraments, you desire of him Prayers, you wait for his Blessing, and you address your self to him, that you may be put under Penance. In a word, you govern the Affairs of Men, and he dispenses the Blessings of Heaven. Wherefore the Office of a Bishop is at least equal, if not superior to yours. After this he proposes, that as the Emperor would undoubtedly make him lose his Dignity, if he could prove the Articles of Accusation alledg'd against him; So he should hazard the Loss of his if he could not prove it. He admonishes him to remember that he is a Man, and that he can no ways avoid the Discussion of this Cause before the Tribunal of God; That 'tis true, due respect ought to be paid to secular Powers, but then they ought not to be obey'd when they desire such things as are contrary to the Laws of God: In fine, that if Obedience is due to superior Powers, it is chiefly due to those that are spiritual. Honour God in us, says he, and we will honour him in you; but if you have no Respect for God, you cannot claim that Privilege from him whose Laws you despise. You say, adds he, that I have excommunicated you with the Consent of the Senate; in this I have done nothing but followed the righteous Example of my Predecessors. You say that the Senate has evil intreated you: If you think that you are abus'd by exhorting you to separate from Hereticks, can it be said that you would have treated us well, when you would have forced us to joyn with Hereticks; you say that what Acacius has done does not at all concern you; if it be so, trouble your self no more about him, joyn no more with his Followers. If you do not this, it is not we that excommunicate you, but your self, by joyning your self to one that is excommunicated. He concludes with a smart Remonstrance, wherein he exhorts the Emperor to return to the Communion of the Holy See, and to separate from the Enemies of the Truth and the Church.

Pope Symmachus.

The ſeventh Letter is the fourteenth Epiſtle of the eleventh Book of Ennodius's Letters. It may be he wrote it in the Pope's Name.

The eighth Letter of Symmachus is addreſs'd to the Orientaliſts, wherein he does earneſtly exhort them to ſuffer all ſorts of Perſecutions, rather than communicate with the Complices and Followers of Eutyches, Dioſcorus, Timothy, Peter of Faulon, and Acacius. This Letter is dated Octob. 8. in the Year 512.

The ninth Letter is a Letter of the Orientaliſts to Pope Symmachus. They pray him to put an end to that Schiſm which had now continued many years upon the Account of Acacius's Diſobedience. They remonſtrate to him that their Faith is Orthodox, that they condemn the Errors of Neſtorius and Eutyches, and thoſe of their Followers, that they approve the Council of Chalcedon; That thoſe who ſeparated from the Communion of others upon the account of Acacius's Affair, did not take ſufficient care of the Flock of Jeſus Chriſt. That on the contrary, thoſe who overlook'd that Formality, had made Churches for the publick Good; that both the one and the other are Orthodox, and that he ought not to refuſe Communion to either of them. To prove that they were Catholicks in their Judgment, they propoſe an Expoſition of their Faith, wherein they do clearly reject the Errors of the Neſtorians and Eutychians.

Pope Symmachus.

We have already ſpoken of the tenth Letter which is the definitive Sentence that paſſed about the Difference between the Churches of Arles and Vienna.

In the eleventh he confirms to the Biſhop of Arles, upon the Requeſt of that Biſhop preſented to him, the Right of Citing the Biſhops of Gaul and Spain to the Synods that were neceſſary to be held for Judging of Eccleſiaſtical Matters. He orders him to give an Account to the Holy See of thoſe Cauſes which ſhould want his Authority to determine them.

The twelfth Letter wherein it is ſuppoſed that Pope Symmachus gave the Pallium to the Biſhop of Laurea in Pannonia, appears to me to be a Forgery: It is no where cited; it is taken from a Place of little Authority; the Style is different from that of the other Letters, and does plainly diſcover that it is very late. In ſhort, it is ſtuff'd with Thoughts ſo mean and impertinent, that it cannot be attributed to any Man of Senſe. You need only read it to be convinc'd of the Truth of what we ſay, and that it is a ſuppoſitious Piece.

The Style of Symmachus's Letters is harſh, but it has Smartneſs and Vehemence.

AVITUS Biſhop of Vienna.

Avitus Biſhop of Vienna.

SExtus Alcimus Ecdicius Avitus Son to the Senator Iſchius, and Brother to Apollinaris Biſhop of Valentia, was promoted in the beginning of the Sixth Century to the Epiſcopal See of the Church of Vienna, which his Father had alſo governed for ſome years. This Biſhop laboured very much in the Converſion of the Arians, held many Conferences with Gondobald King of the Burgundians who was an Arian, converted his Son Sigiſmond, and vigorouſly oppoſed the Hereticks of his Time. Dr. Cave ſays, he converted King Gondobald to the Catholick Faith, and made him publickly profeſs it, when he endeavoured to conceal it from his Subjects. Hiſt. Lit. p. 372. He wrote alſo in defence of Pope Symmachus, he preſided in a Council held at Epaon in 517, he died in 523; he wrote Letters, Sermons and Poems. His Letters are the moſt curious and moſt beautiful of all his Works, and they are in number 87.

The firſt is addreſs'd to Gondobald King of the Burgundians. In it he firſt explains two places of the Goſpel, and takes occaſion from the former to remark that the Word Maſs is uſed in Churches, in Palaces and Courts, to diſmiſs the People. Afterwards he proves that the Holy Spirit is not a Creature, and that the Breath of Life which God breathed into the firſt Man, is not the very Subſtance of the Holy Spirit.

In the ſecond Letter addreſſed to the ſame Prince, he treats of the Incarnation, and oppoſes the Errors of Neſtorius and Eutyches; but he was ſo ill informed of their Hiſtory, that he attributes to the latter the Error of the former, although it be perfectly contrary to his Opinions.

In the following Letter he appears to be no better informed of the Tranſactions in the Eaſt which happened in his own time; for there he accuſes the Biſhop of Conſtantinople of having cut off, in the year preceding, theſe words from the Triſagion, O thou that was crucified for us, have pity upon us; and he defends this Expreſſion as being very ancient. Now 'tis certain that it was Peter of Foulon who had added theſe words to the Triſagion a little while before; and the Biſhop of Conſtantinople was ſo far from cutting them off, that on the contrary he approved this addition, and cauſed the Triſagion to be ſung after this manner; which cauſed a Tumult in the Church of Conſtantinople, mentioned by Avitus who is miſtaken in attributing the Diſorder to the cutting off of theſe words, which had not happened but becauſe they where added.

In the fourth Letter he examines two places in the Writings of Fauſtus Biſhop of Rhegium. One is about a very ſhort Penance which is done at the point of Death; and the other is about the unprofitableneſs of Faith without good Works. Avitus maintains, in ſpeaking of the former, that 'tis falſe and very harſh to affirm that the Penance which is granted at the point of Death, does not at all profit a Man: But he confeſſes, that if thoſe who have received it relapſe afterward into their former Debauchery, it was unprofitable to them, and that hereby they render themſelves unworthy of the Communion. Nevertheleſs he does not think that they can be obliged to renounce altogether the uſe of Marriage. After this he remarks upon the ſecond place of Fauſtus, that it cannot be ſaid that Faith without Works is altogether unprofitable, ſince Infants are juſtified by Faith without Works; and that the Faith of Adult Perſons is commonly accompanied with good Works.

In the ſixth Letter addreſſed to Victorius Biſhop of Grenoble, Avitus maintains, that it is never lawful for Catholicks to uſe the Altars, Oratories, or Churches of Hereticks. He procured this Prohibition to be made in the Council of Epaon, altho' the contrary had been eſtabliſhed in the firſt Council of Orleans.

Avitus Biſhop of Vienna.

The ſeventh Letter is written to the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, wherein he congratulates his Reconciliation to the Biſhop of Rome. This Patriarch was John of Cappadocia, who was reconciled to Pope Hormiſdas in the year 519.

In the eighth Letter he praiſes Euſtorgius Biſhop of Milan for his Charity to the Captive Gauls, whom he had caus'd to be redeem'd.

In the ninth he recommends to Cæſarius Biſhop of Arles, a Foreign Biſhop, call'd Maximianus, who was come into his Country, to find there an able Phyſician, who could cure him of a diſtemper in his eyes wherewith he was afflicted. There are two things remarkable in this Letter; the firſt is, that a Catholick Biſhop, in whatſoever place he is, ought not to paſs for a Stranger: the ſecond is, that a Biſhop is is obliged to take care of his health, that he may be capable of diſcharging his Epiſcopal Function.

The tenth Letter is from Apollinaris Biſhop of Valentia, Brother to Avitus, wherein he acquaints him with a Dream which he had in his ſleep, on the night of the Anniverſary of their Siſter's death. He takes this Dream for an Admonition which his Siſter gave him that he ſhould do her this Service, and informs his Brother of it; who anſwers him in the next Letter, That he had diſcharg'd this Duty at Vienna, and that the Fault be committed in forgetting it was very pardonable.

The fourteenth Letter is from Victorius Biſhop of Grenoble, who had conſulted Avitus his Metropolitan, what he ſhould do as to a Man call'd Vincomalus, who had eſpouſed the Siſter of his Wife deceas'd, and liv'd with her afterwards for many years. He asks Avitus what Penance he ſhould impoſe upon them, and whether or no he ought to part them. Avitus anſwers him, That he ought not to ſuffer this diſorder, but ſhould enjoyn them to part from one another, and alſo excommunicate them if they continued in this way of Living, until they obey'd, and did publick Penance for the Fault. Vincomalus coming after this to wait upon Avitus, endeavour'd to excuſe his Fault by the length of time which he had liv'd with this Woman; but Avitus gave him to underſtand that this Circumſtance did rather aggravate than any ways diminiſh his Fault, and made him promiſe to part with this Woman immediately. And after he had extorted this Promiſe from him, he wrote to Victorius, that he ſhould not diſſolve this unhappy Marriage by an innocent Divorce, that nevertheleſs he ſhould puniſh this Man according to the utmoſt rigour of the Canons; and in the mean time he ſhould not altogether truſt his Word, nor pardon him but upon the ſecurity of thoſe who had interceded for him: That he ſhould adviſe him to do Penance, but not impoſe it upon him againſt his Will.

The ſeventeenth Letter is addreſs'd to the Prieſt Viventiolus, who was afterwards Biſhop of Lyons. He exhorts him to take upon him the Government of the Monaſtery of St. Claude, and wiſhes him a higher Preferment. This Letter is without an end, and the next is without a beginning; it may be there were ſome between them which are wholly loſt. 'Tis not known to whom the laſt is written: Father Sirmondus thinks that it is to Pope Symmachus. He tells him, That altho' there be ſome Reliques of the Holy Croſs, yet he ought to deſire them of the Biſhop of Jeruſalem, who kept this precious Depoſitum in its purity.

The nineteenth is a ſhort Note from King Gondobald to Avitus, wherein he puts a Queſtion to him about two paſſages in Scripture. Avitus anſwers him in the twentieth Letter.

The

Avitus Bishop of Vienna.

The one and twentieth is addressed to Sigismond the Son of Gondobald, wherein he speaks of a Conference which he had with his Father about Religion.

In the three and twentieth Avitus thanks the Bishop of Jerusalem for the Reliques of the Holy Cross which he had sent into his Country. This Letter begins with this fine Compliment. Your Apostolical Eminence exercises the Primacy which God has granted you, and means to show, not only by his Prerogatives, but also by his Merits, that he holds the first place in the Universal Church. Some may think that this Letter is address'd to the Bishop of Rome, but the Title and Body of the Letter do plainly discover that it is to the Bishop of Jerusalem.

The four and twentieth Letter is address'd to Stephen Bishop of Lyons about a Donatist who was in his Country. Avitus advises him to labour after the Conversion of this Man, to hinder this Error from taking root among the Gauls; and acquaints him, that he thought to receive this Donatist by imposition of Hands, since it is certain that he had received the Unction of the Holy Chrysm with Baptism. In the Churches of the Gauls they made use sometimes of Chrysm to receive Hereticks, as appears by many Examples related by Gregory of Tours. But probably it was not us'd, save only to those who had not received it at their Baptism, as this passage of Avitus invincibly proves.

In the five and twentieth Letter he promises his Brother Apollinaris, to be present at the Dedication of a Church, and commends the Charitable Gifts that were designed for the Poor at this Feast.

The six and twentieth Letter is address'd to a Bishop whose Name is not known. Avitus rebukes him for his easiness in discovering our Mysteries to the Enemies of Religion. He proves afterwards that an Heretical Bishop, who is converted, may be promoted to the Dignity of the Priesthood in the Church, provided there be nothing in his Life or Manners which hinders it. For why, says he, may not he govern the Flock of Jesus Christ, who has acknowledg'd that the Sheep which he fed were not the Sheep of Jesus Christ? Why may not he be promoted to the Priesthood among us, who has quitted that which he had for the love of the Truth? Let him become of a Lay-man a true Bishop, who of a false Bishop which he was, was willing to become a Lay-man.

The following Letter was written by Avitus under the Name of King Sigismond to Pope Symmachus. It is an acknowledgment which he made to the Pope for the Reliques he had sent him, praying him at the same time to give him some other Reliques. This Letter is fill'd with high Compliments to the Pope to whom he gives the Title of Bishop of the Universal Church.

In the eight and twentieth Letter address'd to King Gondobald, he proves by express places of Scripture, that Jesus Christ did subsist in his Divinity before he was made Man. Florus the Deacon call'd this Letter a Treatise of Divinity.

The one and thirtieth Letter to Faustus and Symmachus, who were the two chief Senators of Rome, was written by Avitus in the Name of the Bishops of France on the behalf of Pope Symmachus, who had been acquitted in a Synod held at Rome by the order of Theodoric King of Italy. Avitus takes it very ill that a Council had undertaken to judge the Pope. He maintains that the Bishops ought to assist, but not judge him, because there is neither Law nor Reason which allows Inferiors to judge him who is above them: And he adds, that if any call in question the validity of the Ordination of one Pope, it would seem that not the Bishop but Episcopacy it self were in danger; At si Papa Urbis Romæ vocatur in dubium, Episcopatus jam videbitur, non Episcopus, vacillare. 'Tis difficult to understand what Avitus means by this, for what if one Pope fall into Idolatry or Heresie; if he becomes a Symoniack, and commit many enormous Crimes, is the Apostolick See ever the less worthy of Honour upon that account? May not this Pope be reformed without endangering Episcopacy? Avitus did not sufficiently reflect upon what he said, and the Honour which he had for the Holy See, made him propose such Maxims as are not only very difficult to prove, but which are even confuted by the Authentick Examples of Antiquity.

Avitus testifies also his respect for the Pope in the six and thirtieth Letter, to Senarius, a Minister of King Theodoric, where he says, That the Laws of Synods enjoyn the Bishops to have recourse to the Bishop of Rome, as Members to their Head, in those things which concern the state of the Catholick Church; that therefore he had written to Pope Hormisdas to know the success of his Embassy into the East, and did wait for his Answer about it. He prays Senarius also to communicate to him the Particulars of that Affair. In the next Letter he desires of Peter Bishop of Ravenna to know what News there is.

The Letter which he wrote upon this Subject to Pope Hormisdas is among the Letters of this Pope. Father Sirmondus hath placed it in the last place among Avitus's, and subjoyned an Answer to it, whereby it appears that Hormisdas was not satisfied with the Greeks. We shall speak more of this when we come to give an account of the Life and Letters of this Pope.

In the eight and thirtieth Letter Avitus speaks of one of his Writings which he had found again, and dedicates it to Apollinaris the Son of the famous Sidonius.

Avitus Bishop of Vienna.

The nine and thirtieth is writtten to King Gondobald about a Slave who had detain'd a Depositum. Avitus had removed the Cause from the Church of Vienna to that of Lyons, where Process should have been made against him. This Slave confest that he had this Depositum, but he accused Avitus of bidding him detain it. Avitus purged himself of this Accusation with much Modesty and Submission, and testifying to the King, that he was ready to do whatsoever he would. The small Possessions, says he, which belong to my Church, and even those which belong to all our Churches, are at your Service, 'tis you that have given or preserved them to us.

The one and fortieth Letter to King Clouis is very remarkable. Avitus congratulates this King upon his Baptism, and describes the Pomp and Advantages of it. This Letter informs us that he was baptized on Christmas night.

In the nine and fortieth Letter he speaks boldly against a Man who had deflower'd a Maid, and declares that he could not receive him till he had done Penance; that it was in vain for him to threaten that he would cite him to Rome, and accuse him of having Children; for this Threatning should not any ways hinder him in doing his duty. He adds, that if he does not submit to a voluntary Penance, he shall be cast into Prison, and not be suffered any longer to live so licentiously.

There is nothing very remarkable in the other Letters of Avitus: they are for the most part written to invite Bishops to be present at some Festival Solemnity.

Avitus had composed many Homilies whereof he himself made a Collection; but there is none of them remaining, except one entire Homily upon the Rogation-days. In it he relates the Origine and Institution of this Solemnity. The Province of Vienna being afflicted by Earthquakes and continual Tempests, and the Fire taking hold of the great Church on Easter-Eve, St. Mamertus stopt it by his Prayers, and from thence he took occasion to appoint these Rogation-days, for giving thanks to God, and preventing the like Calamities for the future. He chose for this Solemnity three Days between Easter and Ascension, and made solemn Processions on these Days. The other Churches of the Gauls followed the Example of the Church of Vienna, and used Prayers at the same time, and after the same manner. Avitus reckons it to be one of the greatest Advantages of this Institution, that then all the Faithful joyn'd together to bewail their Sins, and to beg pardon of the Lord. He composed also other Homilies upon the Rogation-days, whereof we have not now so much as any Extracts. Father Sirmondus relates the Titles of eight Sermons of Avitus which were preached at the Dedications of Churches, and are taken from an ancient Manuscript of the Bibliothick of Mr. de Thou, where are also some Fragments to be seen. He hath also found in Gregory of Tours and Agobardus some Extracts of the Conference of Avitus with King Gondobald; but the most considerable Fragments of the Works of this Author, are those which he hath taken from the Explication of St. Paul's Epistles written by Florus a Deacon of the Church of Lyons.

The Works from which these Fragments were taken are the Books against the Arians, and against those who say that the Flesh of Christ was nothing but a Phantasm, two Sermons upon Easter, three Sermons upon the three Rogation-days, one Sermon upon the Ascension of Christ, one upon Whitsunday, one upon the Cup of the Lord's Supper, a Discourse upon the Creed, a Sermon upon the Ordination of a Bishop, a Homily upon Jonas, another upon the Ascension of Elias, one upon the Passion of Jesus Christ, a Sermon at the Dedication of the Church of St. Michael, and a Sermon upon King Ezechias.

Avitus composed also many pieces in Verse, but he himself could not find them to make a Collection of them, as he testifies in his Letter to Apollinaris, so that he could only publish the five Poems which he had made upon the History of Moses; viz. upon the Creation of the World, upon the Fall of Man, upon the Sentence which God pronounced against him, upon the Deluge, and upon the Passage through the Red-Sea: To which he added afterwards a Poem in praise of Virginity, address'd to his Sister. There are also found in the Bibliothicks other Poems upon the continuation of the History of the Old Testament, which go under the Name of Avitus, and may well enough be his, although Gregory of Tours, and St. Isidore of Sevil mention only six Poems which we now have. However this be, these Works are neither beautiful nor useful.

The Style of Avitus is harsh, obscure and intricate. He had Wit enough, but little greatness and elevation of Mind; he was moderately learned and never fail'd as to his Integrity and good Intentions.

The Poems of Avitus have been already printed by themselves at Francfort in 1507 at Cologne and Paris in 1508. and 1509, at Lyons 1536. and in the Bibliothicks of the Fathers; but Father Sirmondus is the first who published his other

Avitus Biſhop of Vienna.

Works. He cauſed them to be printed at Paris by Cramoiſy in 1643. with Notes well worth the Reading.

Since this time Luc d' Achery hath publiſhed, in the fifth Tome of his Spicilegium, the Conference which Avitus had with the Arian Biſhops in the preſence of King Gondobald. Here follow the Contents of it: Avitus Biſhop of Vienna, Æonius of Arles, Apollinaris of Marſeilles, the Biſhop of Valentia, and ſome others, being preſent at the Feaſt of St. Juſtus, to which they had been invited by Stephen, went from thence to the Court of King Gondobald, at Sabiniacum. Avitus propos'd to him a Conference with the Arian Biſhops. The King told him with a ſtern Countenance, If your Religion be good, why do not you hinder the King of the Franks, your Sovereign, from making War upon me. Avitus anſwer'd, that he did not know the Reaſons which his Prince had to make War upon him; but if he would ſubmit to the Law of God, he did not doubt to obtain a Peace for him. The King anſwered, That he did acknowledge the Law of God, but he would not acknowledge three Gods. Avitus gave him to underſtand, that the Catholicks do not acknowledge but one God only; and then he fell proſtrate at his Feet. The next day the King told them, that his Biſhops were ready to enter into a Conference with them; but that it muſt not be held before the People, but only in his preſence, and before ſuch Senators as he ſhould chooſe. To morrow is appointed for the Day. The ſame Night the Leſſons were read which mention'd the hardning of Pharaoh's Heart, and of the Jews, which was a bad Omen. When the Time for the Conference was come, the Biſhops of both Parties were preſent at the Place appointed. Avitus explained the Faith of the Church about the Myſtery of the Trinity, and prov'd it by Teſtimonies of the Holy Scripture. Boniface being the Arian Biſhop that was to ſpeak, anſwer'd nothing to Avitus's Diſcourſe, but only propos'd many ſubtil and entangling Queſtions about the Myſtery of the Trinity, and then broke forth into reproachful Language. The King reſpited the Anſwer of Boniface till to morrow. An Officer call'd Aredius, would have perſuaded the Catholicks to retire, telling them, That this ſort of Conferences did nothing but exaſperate Mens minds. Biſhop Stephen anſwer'd him, That on the contrary, it was the only means to clear up the truth, and reconcile Men to one another, and bring them to a good underſtanding, But notwithſtanding this Admonition, the Catholick Biſhops enter'd into the Place. King Gondobald ſeeing them, came to meet them, and ſpoke reproachfully of the King of the Franks, whom he accuſed of ſolliciting his Brother againſt him. The Biſhops anſwer'd him, That the way to make Peace was to agree about the Faith, and that they themſelves would be Mediators for it; and then every one took his place. Avitus being deſirous to wipe off the Calumnies of Boniface, who had accus'd the Catholicks of worſhipping many Gods, prov'd that the Catholicks acknowledged one God only. Boniface inſtead of anſwering, continued ſtill to reproach them. The King ſeeing that this would not put an end to the Difference, roſe up with indignation. Avitus inſiſted, that he ſhould either anſwer his Reaſons, or yield: But to ſhew clearly on whoſe ſide the Truth was, he propos'd, that he ſhould go immediately to the Monument of St. Juſtus, and ask the Saint about the truth of the one and the other's Belief, and then report what he had ſaid. The King approved this Propoſal, but the Arians refus'd it, ſaying, They would not do as Saul did, who had recourſe to Charms and Divination, that the Scripture was ſufficient for them, which was much more powerful than all other means. The King going away, carried with him to his Chamber Stephen and Avitus, and bidding them farewel, he embraced them, and intreated them to pray to God for him: Which diſcover'd to them, ſays the Author of this Relation, what a perplexity he was in. But becauſe the Heavenly Father had not drawn him, he could not come to the Son, that this word of truth might be fulfill'd, 'Tis not he that willeth, nor he that runneth, but God that ſheweth mercy. After this Day many Arians were converted, and baptized ſome days after, and God exalted our Faith by the Interceſſion of St. Juſtus. Theſe are the very words of the Acts of this Conference.

Avitus Biſhop of Vienna.

ENNODIUS Biſhop of PAVIA.

Ennodius Biſhop of Pavia.

Magnus Felix Ennodius, deſcended of an illuſtrious Family among the Gauls (a), was born in Italy (b), in the Year 473 (c). Having loſt at the Age of ſixteen an Aunt, who gave him Maintenance and Education, he was reduc'd to low Circumſtances in the World, but by Marriage to a rich Fortune, he was reſtor'd to a plentiful Eſtate. He enjoy'd for ſome time the Advantages and Pleaſures which Riches afford, but knowing the danger of them, he reſolv'd to lead a more Chriſtian Life. He entred into Orders with the conſent of his Wife, who for her part embrac'd a chaſte and religious Life. 'Twas at this time that he became famous for his Letters and other Writings. He was choſen to make a Panegyrick upon King Theodoric, and undertook the Defence of the Council of Rome which acquitted Pope Symmachus. For his Merits he was promoted to the See of Pavia about the Year 510 (d). After this he was made choice of to endeavour the Re-union of the Eaſtern to the Weſtern Church: Upon which occaſion he made two Journeys into the Eaſt; the firſt in the Year 515, with Fortunatus Biſhop of Catana, and the ſecond in 517, with Peregrinus Biſhop of Miſena. Theſe Journeys had not the ſucceſs which he deſir'd, but they diſcover'd his Prudence and Courage: For the Emperor Anaſtaſius did all he could to ſeduce or corrupt him, but not being able to compaſs his deſign, after many affronts, at laſt he caus'd him to put to Sea in an old rotten Veſſel, and forbad all perſons to ſuffer him to land at any Port of Greece, whereby he was expos'd to manifeſt danger. Nevertheleſs he arriv'd ſafe in Italy, and return'd to Pavia, where he died a little time after, on the firſt day of Auguſt in the Year 521, aged 48 years.

There are many Writings of this Author which have no relation to Eccleſiaſtical Matters. Among his 297 Letters which are divided into nine Books, there are but very few from whence any weighty Obſervation can be made about the Doctrine or Diſcipline of the Church. The fourteenth Letter of the ſecond Book is one of this number. It is written to the Chriſtians of Africk, whom he comforts under the Perſecution which they had ſuffer'd for a long time, and the loſs of their Biſhops. Fear not, ſays he to them, becauſe you ſee your ſelves deſtitute of Biſhops; you have amongſt you him who is both the High-Prieſt and the Sacrifice, who ſeeketh not honours, but hearts. The Confeſſion of the Martyrs is more honourable than the Epiſcopal Dignity. Many times favour promotes Perſons of little Merit to the Epiſcopal Throne, but nothing but Grace can confer the honourable Title of a Confeſſor. He acquaints them afterwards, that he had ſent them the Reliques of the Martyrs St. Nazarius and St. Romanus, which they had deſir'd. This Letter is among thoſe of Symmachus, and 'tis very probable that it was written by Ennodius in this Pope's name.

Ennodius Biſhop of Pavia.

The nineteenth Letter of the ſame Biſhop is alſo remarkable. There he rejects the Opinion of one who had affirm'd that Man has no liberty to chooſe any thing but evil; he calls this a Schiſmatical Propoſition, and one that borders upon Blaſphemy. For what kind of liberty would it be to will nothing but what deſerves puniſhment? and how can it be ſaid that one has a choice, when there is but one ſide to take? If this were ſo, the Laws of God would be unjuſt: for how can he oblige us to do good, after he hath taken from us the deſire and power to do it? What means then this paſſage of St. Paul, which gives teſtimony to Free-will; To will is preſent with me, but how to perform that which is good I find not? Is not this the meaning of it: I can chooſe the good way, but preſently I leave it, unleſs Grace aſſiſt me? No body doubts but the Author of Grace opens to us the way of Righteouſneſs by his Aſſiſtance; no body condemns this Doctrine; for Grace leads good Men, and prevents their good actions. 'Tis Jeſus Chriſt that calls us, and invites us to Salvation by his Exhortations, when he ſays unto us, Come my Children, hearken unto me; but if our Free-will does not obey his Admonitions, if our Induſtry does not follow his Commands, we throw our ſelves headlong into Hell, without being conſtrained to it by any neceſſity. We owe therefore our Vocation to Grace; 'tis Grace that leads us to Life by ſecret ways, unleſs we reſiſt it, but 'tis by our own choice that we follow that which is good where it's ſhew'd unto us. Theſe are the Sentiments of Ennodius about Grace, which come near to thoſe of Fauſtus and the Prieſts of Marſeilles, and which do not agree with thoſe of St. Auguſtine and his Diſciples.

Although there be ſome Chriſtian Thoughts in the other Letters of Ennodius, yet we have found nothing in them remarkable enough to be related here: His Panegyrick of King Theodoric does not at all concern Eccleſiaſtical Matters, but only profane Hiſtory.

(a) Deſcended of an illuſtrious Family among the Gauls.] He ſays in many places of his Works, that his Parents were Gauls. He was a Kinſman to the greateſt Lords in his time; as to Fauſtus, Boëtius, Avienus, Olybrius, Senarius, Florianus, &c.

(b) In Italy.] 'Tis certain that he paſs'd his firſt years in Italy.

(c) In the Year 473.] In the Panegyrick which he made upon Theodoric, he declares that he was ſixteen years old when that King entred into Italy in the Year 489.

(d) About the Year 510.] Father Labbe ſays that he was made Biſhop of Pavia in 490, but this cannot be, ſince he was not then ſeventeen years old. He was not yet Biſhop when his Book was approv'd in the Synod of Rome in 503, for the Title of Biſhop is not given him.

His

Ennodius Bishop of Pavia.

His Apology for the Council which acquitted Pope Symmachus, was written by Ennodius against a Paper made by the Enemies of this Pope, intituled, Against the Synod which pronounced an absurd Sentence of Absolution.

This Paper was written with very much Artifice. He opposed the Authority of this Council; 1. Because the King had not summoned all the Bishops, and all those who came there had not consented to this Absolution: he adds, that those who were the Accusers of Symmachus were excluded, and could not be heard, and that those who were at the Synod, had confess'd that they were old and weak. Secondly, Because the Bishops of this Council had not follow'd the Intention of King Theodoric, and durst contest his Right to call a Council Thirdly, Because this Council had asserted a false Proposition, viz. That there is no remedy for the Disorders of Popes; as if it were one of the Privileges of the Successors of St. Peter to have an unbounded licence to Sin. Fourthly, Because this Proposition of the Council, that the Pope cannot be judged by his Inferiors, is very dangerous; for if this were so, it were needless to call a Council, and the Council being call'd should not cite the Pope, nor bring his Accusers before them; nay, the Pope himself ought not to come there, nor approve the meeting of this Synod as he had done. Fifthly, Because that the Pope, after he had presented himself before the Council to be judged, went away, and would not come there again, although he was cited four times, which was a sign that he had abandoned his Defence. In fine, he says that they could not absolve him, unless he had answer'd the Accusations that were laid to his Charge. Sixthly, Because that this Council had advanced false Doctrine, viz. That the Councils ought to be summoned by the Pope; for, says he, the Provincial Synods which are held every year without consulting the Pope, are a convincing evidence of the falshood of this Doctrine. Seventhly, Because the King having named a Delegate for the Church of Rome, he had acknowledg'd that the Pope's administration might be reformed, and that he had no reason to complain, since he himself had appointed Delegates for other Churches.

Ennodius answers these Objections with much subtilty: First, That it was not necessary to call all the Bishops to this Synod, and that it was false that those who were not present at it, were against Pope Symmachus; that it was ridiculous to make the Bishops of the Councils pass for Fools and Sots, because they had said they were weak in Body; that they would not hear the Accusers of Symmachus, because the Persons produced could not be admitted to give testimony against Bishops according to the Canons. Secondly, That the Bishops had reason to declare to King Theodoric, that the Council ought to be call'd by his Authority, because in effect he had this Prerogative. Thirdly, That the Pope had no need of Reformation, because he that was promoted to this Dignity was holy, and God would not suffer, that he who held a place so eminent, should be corrupted. Fourthly, That although in strictness the Pope could not be judged by a Council, yet he had voluntarily subjected himself to its Judgment. Fifthly, That he had not withdrawn himself from it, but because he could not come to it more freely. Sixthly, That it was true, Provincial Councils might assemble without the consent of the Pope, but not a Council whose business it was to judge the Pope himself. Seventhly, That the King was surprized in naming a Delegate, who neglected the chief Duties of Piety in discharging that Office; that the Pope had a Right to name one for other Churches, but not to name one for his own, because God would have the Causes of other Men determined by the Judgment of Men; but as to the Successors of St. Peter, they are only subject to the Judgment of God. Ennodius concludes his Answers with three Prosopopeias. In the first he brings in St. Peter speaking, who exhorts the Romans to obey Symmachus, and put an end to the Schism. In the second he brings in St. Paul speaking, who thunders against the Schismaticks. And lastly, Rome Christian comes upon the Stage, who gives also her Suffrage in favour of Symmachus, and for the benefit of Peace. I leave it to others to compare together the Objections and Answers contained in this Apology of Ennodius: But I do not think that there are many who will pass this Proposition, that a Man being promoted to the Papacy becomes holy, and that this Dignity either finds or makes him such. 'Tis a Paradox which may be overthrown by many contrary Examples. Yet Ennodius had no other way to exempt the Pope from the Jurisdiction of a Council, and in effect there is no other way to do it; for it is against Order, that there should be no Remedy to hinder the excesses and exorbitancies of the first Bishop of the Church: and therefore if all Men be agreed that this way is indefensible, and that the Popes may be corrupted and disorderly, is it not necessary that a Council should be able to remedy this Inconvenience? and how can this be done unless it has a Right to judge the Pope?

Ennodius Bishop of Pavia.

The Life of St Epiphanius Bishop of Pavia, and that of St. Anthony Monk of Lerina, contain not any thing very remarkable, no more than the Prayer of Ennodius about himself, or his Eucharistic upon his own Life. The instructive Exhortation written in Prose and Verse, is a Book of Morality about the Virtues and Sciences. In another Book he praises the Canon lately made, viz. That all the Bishops should have a Clergy-man dwelling with them, to be a Witness of all their actions, that all occasion of suspicion may be removed. This Canon was indeed new, but the Custom was more ancient. This sort of Clergy-men are called by the Greeks Syncelli, and by Ennodius Cellulani.

Ennodius is also the Author of some Formularies, as of that of the Manumission of Gerontius, Slave to one named Agapetus, and of two Benedictions of Easter Wax-Candles, and of the Prayers before and after Mess

Among Ennodius's Pieces of Rhetorick, there are six upon sacred Subjects: The first upon the Day of the Promotion of Laurentius to the Bishoprick of Milan; the second upon the Dedication of a Church of the Apostles; the third upon the Election of a Coadjutor; the fourth upon the Dedication of a Church; the fifth in behalf of a Bishop who takes possession of his See; the sixth in behalf of the Catholick Councils against the Eastern Hereticks. There is nothing at all remarkable in these Writings. The other Pieces of Rhetorick are upon profane Subjects, as well as all the Epigrams, and the greater part of his Poems: Some Hymns indeed are to be excepted, of which it were needless here to give a Catalogue.

The Style of Ennodius is obscure, yet he has a vigorous and lively Imagination; but his Reasonings are not good. Some of his Works had been printed a-part, but all of them were collected together and publish'd by Schottus and Father Sirmondus, who caus'd them to be printed within a Year one of another, viz. Schottus at Tournay in 1610. and Father Sirmondus at Paris in 1611. His Edition is very correct, to which he has added Notes that explain the Names and Qualities of the Persons mention'd in Ennodius, and contain many Observations very useful for clearing up the History of that time. At Basil almost all his Works were published among the Orthodoxographa, in the Year 1569. Cave Hist. Lit. p. 390.

HORMISDAS.

Hormisdas

POpe Symmachus dying in the Month of July, in the Year 514, some days after Hormisdas was chosen in his Room. His Pontificate, which lasted nine years and some days, was famous for the great Negotiations which he manag'd for the Re-union of the Eastern and Western Churches, which had all the success that could be expected, for the Holy See obtain'd at last of the Greeks the Condemnation of Acacius, which they had refus'd to grant for so many years before. The Abridgment of his Letters will shew us the series and particulars of that History.

The first is address'd to St. Remegius Archbishop of Rheims, who had written to him upon his Promotion to the Popedom. He thanks him, and appoints him his Vicar in the Kingdom of Clouis; he empowers him to take care that the Canons be put in execution, and to call Synods of all the Bishops in the Kingdom, as oft as any business should require them to meet. 'Tis plain that this Letter was written by Hormisdas within a little while after his Promotion. Dr. Cave says, that this Letter is manifestly supposititious, because in it Hormisdas congratulates Clouis, whom he calls Ludovicus, as being lately baptiz'd by Remigius: But Clouis was baptiz'd in the Year 496, and died in the Year 509, at least in 511, before Hormisdas was made Pope. Hist. Lit. p. 392, 393.

Hormisdas

In the same year Vitalianus, General of the Cavalry to the Emperor Anastasius, rose up in Arms against him, and came with his Army towards Constantinople: He made Religion the Pretence of his Revolt, and declared that he had taken Arms for no other Reason but to protect the Catholicks, and restore Macedonius to the See of Constantinople. The Emperor was forc'd to make Peace with him, upon condition that a Council should be call'd to regulate the Affairs of the Church by the Advice of the Bishop of Rome. This oblig'd the Emperor to write to Pope Hormisdas, to pray him that he would be Mediator for pacifying these Commotions, and that he would labour to restore the Unity of the Church. He observes in this Letter, that the harshness of former Popes, his Predecessors, had hindred him from writing to them, but his Reputation for goodness had invited him to have recourse to the See of St. Peter. But the true reason of his doing so, was his own Interest. This Letter was sent Jan. 12. and receiv'd April the 1st, in the Year 515.

In answer to this Letter, the Pope tells him, that he thanks God, who had mov'd the Emperor to write to him, after he had kept silence so long, and that he rejoyc'd in the hope he had to see the Church of Jesus Christ in Peace and Union. He shows how advantageous it will be to the Church, and wishes it may quickly be finish'd. He desires to know for what reaſon he would have a Council call'd. This Letter, which is the ſecond to Anaſtaſius, is dated April 4th, in the year 515. Hormiſdas Dorotheus Biſhop of Theſſalonica, wrote alſo to the Pope, exhorting him to labour for the Peace of the Church, and declares to him that he wiſhes the Hereticks were condemned, and that all due Reſpect and Honour were paid to the Holy See. The Pope in his Anſwer commends his Zeal, and exhorts him to contribute his Endeavours towards the Reunion of the Churches. Dorotheus's Letter is plac'd before the third Letter of Hormiſdas, which is an Anſwer to it.

The Emperor deſign'd preciſely the time and place where he would have the Council held, in a particular Letter which he wrote to the Pope, wherein he tells him, That the Council ſhall be held at Heraclea, about ſome Differences concerning the Faith which were riſen in Scythia. He prays him to come there with ſome Biſhops of the Churches committed to his care. This Pope judg'd it not convenient to go to the Council, nor to ſend thither; but he ſent as Deputies into the Eaſt Ennodius and Fortunatus Biſhops, with Venantius a Prieſt, Vitalis a Deacon, and a Secretary. He gave them a Memorial of Inſtructions as to what they ſhould do, which contains, That when they came to Greece, if the Biſhops came to meet them, they ſhould receive them; That if they invited them to a Feaſt they ſhould not go, but anſwer them, that they muſt firſt communicate at the Holy Table, before they communicated with them at the ordinary Meals. That they ſhould receive nothing from the Biſhops; That when they arriv'd at Conſtantinople, they ſhould retire whither the Emperor ſhould order them. That they ſhould not ſuffer themſelves to be ſeen by any body but thoſe that came in his Name. Nevertheleſs, that after they had Audience of the Emperor, they might receive the Orthodox of their Communion who ſhould come to viſit them; That when they preſented his Letter to the Emperor, they ſhould tell him, that the Pope his Father ſaluted, him that he prayed to God every day for him, and recommended his Empire to the Interceſſions of St. Peter and St. Paul; That they ſhould ſpeak of nothing till the Pope's Letter was read: That after this they ſhould acquaint the Emperor, that they had a Letter to Vitalianus, who had ſent two Deputies to the Pope by the permiſſion of the Emperor; That that they ſhould not deliver it into the hands of the Emperor, but if he ſhould deſire it of them, they ſhould tell him that they had orders to deliver it to none but Vitalianus, and aſſure him that it contain'd nothing but what concerns the Peace of the Church: That if any one ſhould ſpeak to them of a Council, they ſhould ſay, that they muſt hold to the Letter of St. Leo, and the Council of Chalcedon: That in caſe it were anſwer'd, that the Eaſtern Biſhops had acknowledg'd them, they ſhould ſay, Why then do they differ from them? That if they were preſs'd to communicate with the Emperor, ſince he had acknowledg'd the Doctrine eſtabliſh'd in the Council of Chalcedon, they ſhould remonſtrate, that they did not decline the Emperor, but pray'd him to procure the Peace of the Church, by declaring his Sentiments in a Publick Act, and then they ſhould be ready to receive all the Orthodox; That when once this matter was ſo order'd, the Pope himſelf would not refuſe to be preſent at a Council, if it were neceſſary: That if they ſhould be preſs'd to bear company with the Biſhop of Conſtantinople in his time of waiting, they ſhould anſwer that they were come for the Peace of the Church; That this was a private buſineſs, which ſhould be order'd when the Re-union of the Biſhops was finiſhed: That they had heard it ſaid, that there were two Perſons who pretended to be Biſhops of Conſtantinople: That if the Emperor ſhould tell them, muſt I then at the time of waiting be without a Biſhop? they ſhould anſwer, that he might chooſe one who acknowledg'd the Orthodox Faith, and the Conſtitutions of the Holy See, ſo long as this Cauſe was undecided: That if any Libels of Accuſation were given in againſt ſome Biſhops, theſe muſt be reſerv'd to the Judgment of the Holy See: Then if the Emperor ſhould grant a Declaration acknowledging the Council of Chalcedon, that one of the Deputies ſhould carry it to be ſign'd by the Provinces: That they ſhould not ſuffer themſelves to be preſented to the Emperor by Timotheus, who held then the See of Conſtantinople; That if he were preſent at their Audiences they ſhould deſire to be heard alone by themſelves. After this Memorial follows the Form, in which he would have the Declaration of the Emperor and the Biſhops drawn up, the Subſtance whereof is this, That they receive the Council of Chalcedon, and the Letter of St. Leo, and that they anathematize Neſtorius, Eutyches, Dioſcorus and their Followers, as Timotheus Ælurus, Peter Mongus and others, together with Acacius and Peter of Antioch. He gives his Legates alſo charge to bring to Rome the baniſhed Biſhops who were accus'd of Hereſie, and to deſire that thoſe may be reſtor'd who hold Communion with the Holy See, and that the Judging of thoſe who had perſecuted the Catholick Biſhops might be referred to the Holy See.

The Pope, who had written in the fourth Letter to the Emperor, that he would ſend Deputies to him, gave them with this Memorial a Letter for the Emperor, wherein he declares to him, That however it were a new thing that the Biſhop of Rome ſhould be ſummoned to a Council out of his own City, yet he would gladly be preſent at it, provided that before it were held, the Synod of Chalcedon, and the Letter of St. Leo were approv'd, and the Hereticks anathematiz'd, Dated Aug. 11. 515. Hormiſdas

The Emperor receiv'd the Pope's Deputies graciouſly, and inform'd him by Letter, That they were Witneſſes of the Orthodoxy of his Faith, aſſuring him that he received the Council of Chalcedon, and the Letter of St. Leo, and did in every thing agree with him, except what concern'd the Anathema pronounc'd againſt Acacius, which muſt be ſuppreſs'd if he minded to reſtore Peace and Union between the Eaſtern and Weſtern Churches. And he did not only write this Letter to the Pope, but he ſent him alſo two Deputies to aſſure him of the Sincerity of his Faith, and the Deſire he had to procure the Peace of the Church. He wrote alſo by theſe Deputies to the Senate, that they would diſpoſe the Mind of the King and the Pope to this Re-union.

The Pope wrote back to the Emperor, That he was very much inclin'd to Peace, and exhorted him to conclude it, by cauſing the Hereticks and Hereſie to be condemn'd, without ſpeaking to him of Acacius in particular. But the Senate obſerv'd to him, that the Condemnation of this Biſhop was the only Obſtacle to Peace. And ſo it was indeed; for the Orientaliſts would never paſs the Sentence of Condemnation againſt him, and ſo the Deputies of the Pope withdrew, without doing any thing. Nevertheleſs many Biſhops of Thrace, Dardania and Pannonia joyn'd with the Pope, but above all John Biſhop of Nicopolis, Metropolitan of Epirus, and his Suffragans, who wrote to Hormiſdas, and ſent a Deputy to him, who ſhould entirely be at his Devotion. He ſent back to them a Confeſſion of Faith which they approv'd. You have here the Letter of this John to the Pope, the Anſwer of the Pope, which is his fifth Letter, the Synodical Letter of the Council of Epirus, and the Anſwer of the Pope, which is his eighth Letter; another Letter to John of Nicopolis in particular, which is the ninth, with the Confeſſion of Faith, and a Memorial of Inſtructions given to the Deacon who carried it. Avitus Biſhop of Vienna deſir'd of the Pope to know the News of the Succeſs of this Deputation. The Pope acquaints him with it in his tenth Letter. All this was tranſacted in the Year 516.

Altho' the firſt Deputation of Pope Hormiſdas had not the Succeſs that was hop'd for, yet he ſent a ſecond time to the Emperor the ſame Ennodius, with Peregrinus Biſhop of Miſena in Campania. He gave them a Letter wherein he earneſtly preſs'd the Emperor to condemn Acacius, and plainly told him that there was no Peace to be hoped for without this. His chief Reaſon is, becauſe it is not ſufficient to reject the Error, and condemn thoſe that are the Authors of it, but they muſt alſo condemn their Followers and Abettors. This Letter, which is the eleventh, is dated the third Day of April, in the Year 517.

At the ſame time, and by the ſame Deputies, he addreſſed the twelfth Letter to Timotheus, who was poſſeſs'd of the See of Conſtantinople, and the thirteenth to all the Oriental Biſhops that were divided from his Communion, exhorting them to do what he deſir'd. He wrote alſo the fourteenth to the Biſhops of his Communion, and gives them to underſtand, that he had ſent a ſecond Embaſſy to labour for Peace. There is another particular Letter to Poſſeſſor a Biſhop of Africa, who had been forc'd to retire to Conſtantinople, which is the fifteenth, wherein Hormiſdas praiſes the Conſtancy of this Biſhop. And in the ſixteenth Letter, ſent at the ſame time, he exhorts the People, Monks, and the Clergy of Conſtantinople, to ſeparate from the Hereticks. Theſe Letters are all of one and the ſame Date.

After the Departure of Ennodius and Peregrinus, there came a Deacon from the Church of Nicopolis, to acquaint the Pope, that the Biſhop of Theſſalonica was very angry with the Biſhop of Nicopolis, for writing to the Pope, and perſecuted him cruelly, becauſe he had not written to him upon his Ordination; who pray'd the Pope to ſettle this Affair, or elſe he would be forced to write to him. The Pope wrote to his Deputies that they ſhould aſſiſt this Biſhop, and ſent them alſo a Memorial of the Method they ſhould uſe for that end, when they arrived at Theſſalonica. He wrote alſo to the Emperor, recommending to him John of Nicopolis, and exhorted this Biſhop to ſuffer with Conſtancy, and reprov'd ſharply Dorotheus of Theſſalonica for uſing him after this manner. Theſe Letters are the 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22*d*, all dated April 12. in the year 517.

At the ſame time the Emperor wrote a Note to the Pope, wherein he complain'd of his being too inflexible. On the other ſide the Monks of the ſecond Province of Syria complain'd to the Pope that the Emperor ſuffer'd the Eutychians to abuſe them, and begg'd his Aſſiſtance in a Petition ſign'd by them all. The Pope in his Anſwer comforts them, and exhorts them to perſevere in ſuffering for the Faith. This is the three and twentieth Letter which is in Greek and Latin in the Council of Conſtantinople held under Mennas.

The 24*th*. and 25*th*. Letters concern another Affair. John Biſhop of Terragona had come into Italy, and deſir'd of the Pope ſome Orders for the Churches of Spain. The Pope ſent him a Circular Letter, and appointed him his Vicar in Spain, to ſee the Canons put in Execution there, and to give an account to the Holy See of the Eccleſiaſtical Affairs of that Kingdom, but without incroaching upon the Rights of Hormisdas of Metropolitans. The Orders contain'd in the Letter to the Bishops of Spain are, 1. That none of the Laity should be ordain'd Bishops unless they continued the due time among the Clergy. 2. That Ordinations should be neither bought nor sold. 3. That Provincial Councils should be held twice in a Year, or at least once. These two Letters are rather of the Year 517. than the Year 521.

In the 26th. Letter Hormisdas appoints Salustius, Bishop of Sevil, his Vicar in the Province of Bœtica and in Portugal, and gives him Power to call together the Bishops of these Provinces, to determine their Differences, and to see the Canons observ'd, upon condition that he should give notice to the Holy See of every thing that he should order.

The Emperor Justinus, who succeeded Anastasius in the Year 518, immediately acquainted the Pope with the News of his Exaltation, and the Pope return'd him a very civil Answer, signifying to him, That he doubted not but the Peace of the Church would be restor'd under his Reign. And indeed the Emperor set about it presently, and wrote to the Pope, That the Bishop of Constantinople, and the other Eastern Bishops, had held a Synod at Constantinople, and declar'd unto him, that they earnestly desir'd to be re-united to the Western Church, and that he thought it would be convenient for the Pope to send Legates into the East for concluding a Peace.

The Pope commends the Zeal of this Prince for Peace, but withal tells him that it could not be concluded, unless the Name of Acacius were expung'd out of the List of Catholick Bishops.

John Bishop of Constantinople had already sent a Confession of Faith, wherein he acknowledg'd the Decision of the Council of Chalcedon; but the Pope was not satisfy'd with it, and refus'd to receive him into his Communion, until he should raze the Name of Acacius out of the Dyptichs.

In the Year 519, the Pope sent a third time his Legates into the East, but with a strict Charge that they should conclude no Treaty of Peace, unless the Memory of Acacius were condemn'd. There were five Legates, two Bishops, Germanus Bishop of Capua and John, one Priest call'd Blandus, and two Deacons, Felix and Dioscorus. He sent by them many Letters address'd to the Emperor, to Justinian, to John Bishop of Constantinople, to the Clergy, and to the People of that City, to the Empress, and to the principal Officers of the Emperor. These are the Letters from the 30th. to the 41st. These Legates were well receiv'd in the East, and John of Constantinople did all that they desir'd, in condemning Acacius by a Writing. The Bishop of Thessalonica and the Bishops of his Patriarchate follow'd his Example. The Pope understanding this, received them into his Communion, and testify'd his Joy upon this Occasion, and exhorted them to cause the Bishops of Alexandria and Antioch to do as much, and desir'd the Restoration of three Bishops, who had been depos'd and turn'd out of the Churches, because they were the first who return'd to the Communion of the Roman Church. In the mean time the Bishop of Thessalonica altered his Resolution, and would not afterwards sign the Confession of Faith that was brought from the West, nor the Condemnation of Acacius. But on the contrary publish'd his Resentment against John of * Constantinople so far, that he stirred up the People to fall upon him, who wounded him so grievously, that he died of his Wounds. There were also some Commotions at Ephesus, but the Emperor pacify'd them. And in order to the Reunion of the Church of Antioch, he caus'd a Priest, call'd Paul, to be chosen Bishop of that See, who had been ordain'd at Constantinople: But the Monks of Scythia, who would have it affirm'd, That one of the Persons of the Trinity was crucify'd, went to Rome, to maintain their Proposition there, which they could not make the Pope's Legates relish well. Hormisdas detain'd the Monks for some time, but afterwards he drove them out of Rome. Dorotheus Bishop of Thessalonica, who had caus'd John of Nicopolis to be kill'd, was seiz'd; and the Pope's Legates desir'd that he might be sent to Rome to be judg'd there, but he was carried to Heraclea, from whence he was suffer'd to go away.

* Baronius calls him Joan. Catholicus.

He wrote afterwards to the Pope in his own Vindication; but the Pope order'd him to come to Rome that his Cause might be examin'd there. As to the three other Bishops for whom the Pope had written, Justinian answer'd, That as to Elias, he could not be restor'd, as long as he was living who had been ordain'd in his Room; but as to Thomas and Nicostratus, they should be restor'd whenever the Peace was fully concluded. John of Constantinople being dead, one nam'd Epiphanius was chosen in his room in the Year 520, who was ordain'd according to Custom by the neighbouring Bishops. They gave notice to the Pope of it, who approv'd his Ordination, but complain'd that they had neither written, nor sent Deputies to him; as also that they had not restor'd the three Bishops for whom he had interceded. Epiphanius presently satisfy'd the Pope, by writing to him an Account of his Faith, and assuring him that he agreed in all things with the Roman Church. He wrote also another Letter to him, and sent him a Chalice of Gold adorned with precious Stones, a Patten, and another Chalice of Silver and two Veils. There remain'd only two things which hindred a perfect Peace; the first was the Question, Whether it might be said, that one Person of the Trinity was crucify'd; and the second was the Opposition which the Clergy of the East made to the Condemnation of some of their Bishops. The Emperor Justinus wrote about it to the Pope, and sent him the Petition that had been presented to him by the Clergy of Jerusalem and Antioch. He declar'd also to the Pope, that he wish'd he would not condemn this Proposition, One Person of the Trinity was crucified, and that he would be satisfy'd with expunging the Name of Acacius out of the Dyptichs, and not desire to raze out also the Names of the Bishops who had communicated with him. The Pope did not clearly explain his Mind, neither about the one nor the other of these Propositions, being afraid of proceeding too far. In the mean time Paul of Antioch, who was an Enemy to this Proposition, One Person of the Trinity was crucified, having displeased the People of his Church, and being accus'd of many Crimes, was forc'd to abdicate his Bishoprick; and the Emperor and Patriarch of Constantinople inform'd the Pope of it. This is an Abridgment of the Subject Matter of the Letters of Hormisdas, and the other Pieces which are joyned with them. There are reckon'd in all eighty Letters of this Pope. There is something remarkable in the 70th. Letter written to Possessor a Bishop of Africk, which I could not observe before, because it has no relation to the Affairs of the East. It concerns the Writings of Faustus of Riez, about which he had been consulted by the Bishop to whom he he writes. He answers him, That those Writings are not receiv'd no more than the Writings of other Authors who are not rank'd among the Fathers. That the Catholick Doctrines, and the Number of Books authoriz'd, was describ'd by the Holy Fathers, to prevent any one from giving his Opinion according to his Fancy. That it was needless to handle such Questions as were not of the Number of those which the Church had decided, and that our Faith ought to be bounded by the Dogmes contain'd in the Canonical Books, in the Synodical Decisions, and in the Doctrine taught by the Fathers. These are the Principles truly Theological which are well noted by this Pope. After this Remark, there is a kind of an Addition and Exception, Nevertheless, says he, if you would know what the Church of Rome, i. e. the Catholick Church, teaches and believes concerning Grace and Free-will, altho' it may be learn'd from divers Writings of St. Austine, and chiefly from his Letter to Hilary and Prosper: Nevertheless, there are some formal Heads about it in the Archives of our Church, which I will send you if you have them not, and which you should believe as necessary, altho' it is easy to learn what one ought to believe about it, by reflecting upon the Words of the Apostle St. Paul.

Hormisdas had a great deal of Prudence, Boldness and Policy; his Letters are well enough written, altho' they smell of the Barbarisms of his Age. His Epistles are printed Concil. 12. Tom. 4. p. 1291. Cave Hist. Lit. p. 379.

St. FULGENTIUS.

St. Fulgentius. GOrdianus, a Senator of Carthage, being forc'd to fly into Italy for safety, during the Persecution of Gensericus King of the Vandals, had two Children who return'd into Africk: And they being forc'd away from Carthage, settled at Telepta, a City in the Province of Byzacena. One of them call'd Claudius was the Father of St. Fulgentius, who was born about the Year 464; his Mother, called Mariana, by good luck continued a Widow, and put her Son to learn Greek, who became very skilful in that Tongue. As soon as he was capable of an Employ, he was made Procurator, or Receiver of the Revenues of his Province. But this Employment displeas'd him, because of the Rigor he was forc'd to use for levying the Taxes upon the People, and therefore he resolv'd to retire from the World, and lead a Religious Life. This Design he communicated to a holy Bishop call'd Faustus, who had withdrawn from a Monastery near his Bishoprick; and he put it in Execution, notwithstanding the Tears and Dissuasives of his Mother. He put himself under the Discipline of this good Bishop, but the Persecution parting them, he went into another Monastery, where there was an Abbot call'd Felix, who made him his Colleague. The Incursions of the Moors scatter'd the Religious of this Monastery, and they retir'd into the Country of Sicca, thinking to find there a place of Refuge; but an Arian Priest, call'd Felix, caused the Abbot Felix and St. Fulgentius to be imprison'd, and would not allow them their Liberty until their Bodies were torn with Whips. St. Fulgentius took then a Resolution to go into Ægypt, to improve himself by the Example of the Monks of that Country; and having embark'd upon this Design, he arriv'd at Syracuse, where the Bishop Eulalius dissuaded him from making this Voyage, because the Monks of the Eaſt had ſeparated from the Communion of Rome. He conſulted alſo a Biſhop of Africk, who had retired into Sicily who adviſ'd him to return to his own Country, after he had made a Journey to Rome. St. Fulgentius.

King Theodoric was then in the City, when he arrived there, which was in the Year 500. After he had paid his Devoirs to the Sepulchres of the Apoſtles, he return'd into his own Country, where he built a Monaſtery.

Africa was then under the Dominion of Thraſimond King of the Vandals, an Arian and a cruel Enemy to the Catholicks. He had forbidden to ordain Catholick Biſhops in the room of thoſe that died; but the Biſhops of Africa had taken up a Reſolution to ordain them in ſpite of the Prince's Prohibition. St. Fulgentius knowing this, and fearing leſt he ſhould be ordain'd, hid himſelf till ſuch time as he underſtood that the Ordinations were over. But when he appeared the Biſhoprick of Ruſpa was vacant, and he was ordained Biſhop of that See againſt his Will in the Year 504, or 508. Being made Biſhop, he changed neither his Habit nor Manner of living, but us'd the ſame Auſterities or Abſtinence as before; he ſtill loved the Monks, and delighted to retire into a Monaſtery, when the Diſcharge of his Sacerdotal Function allow'd him any time of Reſpite. Afterwards he had the ſame Fate with all the Catholick Biſhops of Africa, whom King Thraſimond baniſh'd into the Iſle of Sardinia. Altho' he was not the moſt ancient among them, yet he was conſider'd as their Head; for they made uſe of his Pen and his Wit for writing and taking Reſolutions. So great was his Reputation, that King Thraſimond had the Curioſity to ſee and hear him; and having ſent for him to Carthage, he propos'd to him a great many Difficulties, which he reſolv'd in ſuch a manner as ſatisfy'd the King: But becauſe he confirm'd the Catholicks, and converted many Arians, their Biſhop at Carthage pray'd the King to ſend him back again to Sardinia. Thraſimond dying in the Year 522, his Son Hildericus recall'd the Catholick Biſhops, whereof St. Fulgentius was one, at whoſe return there was great Joy. He return'd to his Biſhoprick, govern'd his Clergy, admitted many Monks into Orders, and continued to lead an exemplary Life. At this time he gave an excellent Example of Humility, in refuſing to be preferred before a Biſhop who ſaid he was more ancient than Fulgentius, altho' this Preference was approv'd in a Council. He died the laſt Day of the Year 529, according to ſome, or 533, according to others.

The firſt Treatiſe of St. Fulgentius, according to Order of Time, is an Anſwer to ten Objections of the Arians. Probably he wrote it at the time when he was at Carthage, by the Order of King Thraſimond, in Anſwer to the Objections which the Arians propos'd againſt the Eternity and Equality of the Son. The Objections are ſhort, obſcure, and ill-digeſted; on the contrary, the Anſwers are long and methodical.

The three Books to King Thraſimond he compos'd about the ſame time, in Anſwer to a long Diſcourſe which this King had ſent him by one of his Officers, who had Orders to withdraw immediately, and deſire of him an Anſwer. When the King preſs'd him to anſwer it, without returning it back to him, altho' he had ſcarce leiſure to run over ſome Pages of it, yet he refuted in three Books what he could remember of it. In the firſt, he proves, that there are in Jeſus Chriſt two perfect Natures united into one Perſon; and chiefly he endeavours to refute that Error of the Arians, whereby they affirm'd, that Jeſus Chriſt had no Soul, but the Divinity to him ſupplied the place of one. In the ſecond he proves the Immenſity of the Son of God. In the laſt he returns to the Myſtery of the Incarnation, and ſhews the Union and Reality of the two Natures in one Perſon only; and he explains the Difficulties which may be ſtarted about the Terms that he uſes to expreſs this Union.

This Diſcourſe was refuted by an Arian Biſhop named Pinta; but St. Fulgentius preſently wrote an Anſwer againſt him, wherein he ſhew'd, ſays the Author of his Life, That his Adverſaries were overthrown by his firſt Diſcourſe, and that the Objections they made againſt him were vain. We have a Writing which goes under the Name of St. Fulgentius, and under the Title of an Anſwer to Pinta; but the Criticks obſerve that it is none of St. Fulgentius's. For, 1. The Treatiſe which this Author oppoſes is not an Anſwer to three Books of St. Fulgentius, which he addreſs'd to King Thraſimond, but quite another Work. 2. The Name of Pinta is not found in any part of the Book. 3. The Style is different from that of St. Fulgentius. 4. He makes uſe of another Verſion of the Bible. 5. It appears that the Author of this Treatiſe was not well ſkill'd in Greek, ſince he ſays, that ἰμμάνουηλ comes from ἰμὶ, which ſignifies nunc; but St. Fulgentius, who was perfectly Maſter of this Tongue, could not be guilty of ſo groſs a Fault.

St. Fulgentius being ſent back to Sardinia, he compoſed there three Books in Anſwer to the Queſtions of his Friend Monimus: The firſt was concerning the Opinion of St. Auſtine of the Predeſtination of God to Evil, or Damnation. St. Fulgentius explains this in the whole firſt Book, where he makes it appear, that according to the Paſſages of Scripture, and the Opinion of St. Auſtine, God does not predeſtinate bad Men to Evil or Sin, ſince he predeſtinate them only to what they ſhould do, but that he predeſtinates them to the Pain or Puniſhment which they had deſerv'd by their Sins: That he prevents good Men to ſave them, but as to the wicked, he finds them worthy of Damnation from themſelves: That the Beginning of the Vocation, Juſtification, and Glorification of the Elect, are the Effects of Predeſtination; but the ſame cannot be ſaid of the Reprobate which he foreſees, but does not predeſtinate; but after he has foreſeen them, he predeſtinates the Puniſhment that is to follow them. St. Fulgentius.

The ſecond Queſtion of Monimus, is concerning the Sacrifice of the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, viz. Whether it be offer'd to God the Father only, as ſome of the Fathers ſeem'd to affirm. This furniſh'd an Argument to the Arians, who endeavour'd to prove by it, that Jeſus Chriſt is not God. In refuting them, St. Fulgentius proves at the Beginning of the ſecond Book, that the Sacrifices of the Old and New Teſtament were offer'd to the Son and Holy Spirit as well as to the Father, and that altho' the Father only is nam'd, yet all the Trinity ought to be comprehended under his Name. Afterwards he explains a third Queſtion, How the Miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt is deſir'd to conſummate the Sacrifice which is offer'd to the whole Trinity. And firſt he ſhews, that the Miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt is not contrary to his Immenſity; that oft-times under the Name of the Holy Spirit is to be underſtood his Gifts, and the Effects which he produces, and not his Perſon: That when at the Sacrifice of the Meſs the Holy Spirit is deſired to deſcend, then we pray for Charity, Peace and Union, which are the Gifts of the Holy Spirit and the whole Trinity.

The laſt Queſtion of Monimus is about the Explication of what St. Paul ſays, That Virginity is a Matter of Counſel, and not of Command; and about Fulgentius's comparing it to the two Pence of Supererogation. Upon this Subject he relates the different Opinions of St. Ambroſe, St. Auſtine and Optatus, and ſhews that it is a Matter of ſmall Importance, after what manner the two Pence of Supererogation be underſtood.

In the laſt Book he treats of the true Senſe of theſe Words, The Word was with God, and anſwers the impertinent Difficulties which the Arians ſtarted about this Paſſage.

The Books about Remiſſion of Sins, are in Anſwer to another Queſtion propos'd to St. Fulgentius by Euthymius; viz. Who thoſe are to whom God pardons Sins in this Life, and whether he pardons them only in this Life. St. Fulgentius ſhews in the firſt Book, that none can obtain Remiſſion of Sins, nor be ſaved, who is out of the Church, and that none of thoſe who are in the Church can obtain Pardon, unleſs he be truly converted, and ceaſe to commit Sin, and to love the Creature, ſo as to ſet his Heart upon it.

In the ſecond Book he proves by many Reaſons founded upon Paſſages of the Holy Scripture, that there is no Remiſſion of Sins to be obtained but in this Life, and that all thoſe who dye in a bad Eſtate, ſhall be damned without any Mercy: Which gives us to underſtand that he ſpeaks only of mortal Sins which deſerve Damnation.

But Fulgentius's Words are general, That all thoſe who dye in a bad Eſtate ſhall be damn'd; which will not admit of this Diſtinction, but do plainly overthrow the Doctrine of Purgatory: For whatever a Man's Sins be in which he dies unrepented of and unpardon'd, he dies in a bad Eſtate. But Fulgentius could not have ſaid, that every one who dies in this State ſhall be damn'd without Mercy, had he believ'd a Purgatory, into which many are thrown, who die in a bad Eſtate, for their venial Sins unpardon'd. And this general Senſe of the Words is confirm'd by what he ſays, in his Treatiſe of Faith addreſs'd to Peter, That there is no State wherein a Man can deſerve well, but only during this Life; and, That thoſe who dye in a good State ſhall be happy for ever, and others, i. e. (thoſe who die in a bad Eſtate) ſhall be condemn'd to eternal Puniſhment; where he plainly aſſerts two different States only after this Life, without any mention of a third, which is now believ'd to be Purgatory by the Roman Church. And to the ſame purpoſe he tells us in his Anſwer to the Queſtions propos'd by Ferrandus, That it is unprofitable to baptize the Dead, becauſe the Soul cannot obtain Remiſſion of its Sins after it is gone out of the Body, and Fleſh alone is not capable of Sin; which Argument were of no force, if the Soul might obtain after this Life Remiſſion of venial Sins by the Pains of Purgatory; for then it might be profitable to baptize the Dead for obtaining the Pardon of theſe Sins, and delivering Souls out of Purgatory.

The moſt part of the Letters of St. Fulgentius were written in the time of his Exile. The firſt is addreſs'd to Proba, who was deſcended of the illuſtrious Family of the Anicians. There he extols Virginity, and ſhews how neceſſary it is that it ſhould be joyn'd with Humility; and he gives alſo many uſeful Inſtructions to a Chriſtian Virgin.

He addreſs'd alſo another Letter to her concerning Prayer and Compunction of Heart; wherein he recommends particularly this laſt Virtue. He compos'd alſo at the Deſire of this Virgin two Treatiſes concerning Prayer and Faſting, which are now loſt.

In

St. Fulgentius.

In another Letter he comforts a Roman Lady call'd Galla, who was thought to be the Daughter of Symmachus; and understanding that she was resolv'd to live a Widow, he entertains her with a description of the Happiness of that state, and the manner in which she should live.

He wrote to Theodorus a Roman Senator, to confirm him in the design he had taken up of quitting his Secular Employments to dedicate himself to God, and informs him that this Conversion was owing to the Grace of Jesus Christ.

The Letter concerning the Conjugal Duty and the Vow, is upon a particular case. Some had ask'd Fulgentius, Whether a married Person was obliged to keep a Vow of Continence. For resolving this Question, St. Fulgentius makes many Observations concerning the use of Marriage, and the obligation of Vows. He remarks upon the first Head, That the use of Marriage is allowed, when it is intended for the procreation of Children; but when it has no other end but pleasure altho' it is not a Crime like Adultery, yet it is always a small Sin, which is blotted out by Prayer and good Works. As to the Vow, he says, That there is no doubt but by it an Obligation is contracted to do the thing which was vow'd. But he maintains, That the Vow of Continence made by one of the married Persons, cannot oblige the other, nor dispence with that Person who made the Vow for paying the Conjugal Duty to the other, at least unless both Parties had concurred in making the Vow. Having laid down these Principles, he concludes, That if the Persons who wrote to him, had both made a Vow of Continence, then they were obliged to keep it; and that if they found themselves tempted by Carnal Desires they should humbly pray to God to give them Grace to resist them; but if only one of the two had made the Vow of Continence, that Party was obliged to pay the Conjugal Duty to the other, who had not made it. He concludes with some Reflections upon the Duties of married Persons, and chiefly upon the Education of their Children.

In the Letter to the Abbot Eugippius, he treats very largely of the Advantages of Charity, and the Love of our Neighbour. He thanks him for his Present, and acquaints him that he had sent him his Letters to Monimus.

St. Fulgentius wrote, at the desire of Junilius, who was one of his Friends, a Letter about Penance to an unknown Woman, call'd Venantia. There he shews, That Remission of Sins, committed after Baptism, may be obtain'd in this Life, provided one be sincerely penitent. From whence he concludes that these Sinners ought not to despair, but neither ought they to hope without striving and doing of Penance.

The Treatise of Faith address'd to Donatus, contains an exact Explication of the Mysteries of the Trinity and the Incarnation.

We have already spoken of the Question started by the Monks of Scythia upon this Proposition, One of the Trinity did suffer, which they would maintain to be Catholick, and oblige others to acknowledge it for such. Their Faction was very powerful in the East, and they had their Complices in the West. They had sent, as we have already observed, Deputies to Rome, to maintain their Opinions there, and Peter the Deacon was at the Head of them. These Deputies not finding that footing in the Church of Rome which they expected, thought fit to consult the Bishops of Africk, which were banished to the Isle of Sardinia: And therefore in the Year 521 they address'd to them a Writing, wherein they declar'd their Belief concerning the Incarnation and Grace, and founded it upon the Testimonies of the Fathers.

As to the Incarnation, they acknowledged two Natures in Jesus Christ, united into one Person only, without confusion and mixture. They reject the Sentiment of those who professing to believe one Nature incarnate in Jesus Christ, do not receive the Decision of the Council of Chalcedon, or who admitting two Natures, would not say that there is but one Nature of the Word Incarnate. From these Principles they conclude, That the Virgin is truly the Mother of God; That the Union of the two Natures is essential and natural; That the Person of Jesus Christ is compos'd of two Natures without any change happening to him; That the Trinity continues the Trinity still, tho' one of the Persons of this Trinity was Incarnate; that his Flesh is not become a part of the Trinity, but is become the Flesh of one Person of the Trinity. From whence it comes to pass, that one may say, that one of the Trinity suffer'd and was crucified in his Flesh, and not in his Divinity; that it was not Man who was made God, but God who was made Man. They profess to receive the the four first General Councils, and the Letters of St. Leo, and to condemn the Errors of Theodorus of Mopsuesta, Nestorius, Eutyches, and Dioscorus, and of all those whom the Apostolick See had regularly condemned.

As to Grace they follow the Principles of St. Austine, and declare that they believe that the first Man was created without Concupiscence, and with a perfect Liberty to do good and evil, and that by falling into Sin he was changed both in his Body and his Soul; that he lost his own Liberty, and became a Slave to Sin; that since that time all Men are born in Sin; that nothing but the Grace of Jesus Christ can deliver us from Sin; that without this, we can neither think nor desire that which is good; that Grace worketh in us to do, not by any necessitating violence, but by the sweet inspiration of the Holy Spirit; that no Man can say, 'Tis in my Power to believe if I will, since Faith is the gift of God, who worketh in us to believe and to will; that the passage of the Apostle, which says, God would have all Mankind to be saved, ought not to be objected against this Doctrine, to prove that nothing hinders us to be saved if we will: For if this were so, there would be no necessity to have recourse to the unsearchable Judgments of God, for explaining the reason why one is called, and another not; that if God would effectually have sav'd the whole World, he should have wrought in Tyre and Sidon those Miracles which were done in Chorazin and Bethsaida, since he knew that if they had been wrought in these two former Cities, their Inhabitants would have repented; that the beginning of good Thoughts, the consent of the Will to do good, cometh to us from God, who produces them in us by his Holy Spirit. They cite for proof of these Principles, some passages of St. Basil, of the Popes St. Innocent and St. Celestine, and of the Council of Africk. They conclude with Anathematizing Pelagius, Celestius and Julianus, and those who are of their Opinion, together with the Books of Faustus about Predestination. This Confession of Faith is sign'd by Peter a Deacon, John and Leontius Monks, and by another John a Reader. They pray the Bishops of Africk to approve their Exposition of Faith, that so being supported by their Authority, they may be able to stop the mouth of those who disgrace them.

St. Fulgentius.

The Bishops of Africk employ'd St. Fulgentius to write them an Answer; and their Letter bears the names of fifteen Bishops only, who did not only approve in this Letter all the Points of the Confession of Faith, which we have just now explained; but did also enlarge and confirm them, without excepting so much as that Proposition, One Person of the Trinity did suffer. They enlarged very much upon the Proofs of Original Sin, the Necessity of Grace, for the beginning of Faith, upon its Efficacy, upon the Insufficiency of Free-will to do good. They confess that Grace does not destroy our Free-will, but they maintain that our Free-will, which without Grace is not sufficient to do any thing but Sin, is delivered from this Bondage by Grace, which sets us truly at Liberty. They confess also that in some Sense it may be said, that Nature has Power to believe and to do good, because Faith and Charity are proper for Human Nature, and Man was created only to believe and do good; but that since the Fall, he cannot have Faith, nor do good unless God give him the Power, as the Soul gives Life to the Body which is capable of being animated. That when the Apostle says, There are some People who do by Nature what the Law commands, this is to be understood of Faithful People and such as were converted; that neither the Knowledge of God nor Faith will avail us any thing without Charity; that the Law of Nature does not deliver us from Sin without Grace; that it must be referr'd to the incomprehensible Judgments of God, that he does not effectually will all Men to believe; that it is sufficient for us to acknowledge with humility his Mercy wholly gratuitous in those who are sav'd, and not to doubt his Justice as to those who are damned; that those who understand this passage of St. Paul, That God would have all Men to be sav'd, so as to make a Man's Salvation depend upon his own Will, are grosly mistaken; that the example of Infants dying without Baptism, who are condemn'd to eternal Punishment (for this is the term which Fulgentius uses) without committing any voluntary Sin, does confound them: That therefore the words of the Apostle are to be understood in this Sense, that no Man is sav'd but by the Will of God, because he cannot prevent the fulfilling of God's Will, neither can the effect of it be hindred by the malice of Men; and that 'tis certain, that all those whom God would have saved are infallibly sav'd; that it may also be said, that by all Men are to be understood, all Men who are to be sav'd; that oftentimes in Scripture all the World is taken for a part of Mankind. Lastly, that God who created Man, hath provided for him by the Decree, by which he predestin'd him, Faith, Justification, Perseverance, and Glory, and whosoever does not acknowledge the truth of this Predestination shall not be of the number of the Elect, nor have any share in that Salvation; That notwithstanding the Faithful ought constantly to pray, and to have Charity for these Persons, that God would give them his Grace to enlighten them, and to make the Word fruitful in them; for in vain does the Word of God strike our Ears, if God does not open our Understanding by his Grace. Thus ends this Answer of the Bishop of Africk, which is worthy of the Faithful Disciples of St. Austine.

The Books of Faustus against these Principles were published at Constantinople, and because they made a great noise these Monks sent them to St. Fulgentius, who wrote seven Books to refute them. This Work is not printed: Father Vignerus of the Oratory had a Manuscript of it, but since his Death it is not known what is become of it. St. Fulgentius had finish'd it before he was called back into Africk.

St. Fulgentius.

When he was upon his return thither, he wrote upon the ſame ſubject, and according to the ſame Principles, three Books of Predeſtination and Grace, addreſs'd to John the Prieſt, and Venerius a Deacon. He ſhews in the firſt Book, that Predeſtination is purely gratuitous, and that it does not depend upon the proſpect of Men's Merits. The example of Infants is one of his ſtrongeſt Proofs. But whereas ſome ſave themſelves by ſaying, That God permits them to receive, or not to receive Baptiſm, according to the knowledge of the good or evil which he foreſaw they ſhould have done if they had liv'd, he rejects this Solution, and this Middle Science.

In the ſecond Book he confeſſes, that the Good and Evil have a Free-will; but he maintains that it is aided and improv'd in Good Men by Grace, and that it is weakned and puniſh'd in the Bad; that it is God who converts us, and worketh in us to will that which is good; that 'tis he who gives us the deſign and will to pray; that the Will of Man always follows the Grace of God which precedes it. Towards the end he confutes the Opinion of his Adverſaries, who affirmed, that the Veſſels of honour and diſhonour mentioned by the Apoſtles, are not the Predeſtinate and the Reprobate; but the Veſſels of diſhonour are the Poor, the Monks and Eccleſiaſticks; and the Veſſels of honour are the Noble, the Rich and the Potentates of this World. He proves that this Expoſition is falſe; and hereupon he ſays, that in this World, there is no Dignity in the Church above that of a Biſhop, nor in Secular Affairs above that of a Chriſtian Emperor; but all the Biſhops and Emperors are not Veſſels of Mercy but only thoſe who acquit themſelves well in their Office. A Biſhop, ſays he, ſhall not be ſav'd, becauſe he is a Biſhop, but he ſhall be ſaved if he watch over his Flock, if he preach the Word in ſeaſon and out of ſeaſon, if he reproves Sinners, if he uſes to them to Entreaties and Rebukes with all kind of Patience and Meekneſs, if he has not the Spirit of Domineering and Pride; if, according to the Command of the Apoſtle he ſerves for an example to all his Flock: So likewiſe an Emperor is not a Veſſel of Mercy deſtin'd to Glory, becauſe he has the ſovereign Power, but he ſhall be, if he live in the Orthodox Faith; if being poſſeſſed of true Humility, he makes his Royal Dignity ſubſervient to Religion; if he loves rather to ſerve God with fear, than to command his People with pride; if he moderates his ſeverity by a ſpirit of Meekneſs, if his Power is accompanied with Goodneſs, if he would rather be lov'd than fear'd, if he minds nothing but the good of his Subjects, if he loves Juſtice without forgetting Mercy, if he remembers, in all his Actions, that he is a Son of the Church, and that he ought to employ his power for it's quiet and peace: For this Honour for the Church makes the Emperors greater and more glorious, than all their Battels and Victories.

In the third Book he returns to Predeſtination, and having affirm'd that it is gratuitous, that Vocation, Juſtification and Glory are its effects; that it is infallible and certain, that the number of the Predeſtin'd is determin'd, and that it is impoſſible to add to, or take away any from them; he anſwers this great Objection, That if this were ſo, we ought then neither to pray nor watch, but follow our own Wills, ſince if we are of the number of the Predeſtin'd, we ſhall infallibly be ſav'd; and if we are not, we cannot be ſav'd. He ſays, That this Objection is like that of thoſe to whom God ſhould promiſe a long Life, when they infer from this promiſe, that they will no more take thoſe things that are neceſſary to maintain this Life. He adds, That as the love of Life makes him to whom this promiſe is made, ſeek for thoſe things which are neceſſary to maintain it; ſo the Grace which God has prepared for us by his Predeſtination, does infallibly make us watch, pray and labour. Afterwards he enlarges upon this Paſſage, God would have all men to be ſav'd, and is of Opinion that the true Senſe of it is, that God would have ſome Men of all Nations, Ages and Conditions ſav'd, and not that he wills the Salvation of every Man in particular, ſince he would not make himſelf known to ſuch Men as would have believed in him, if he had made himſelf known unto them. From hence he paſſes to conſider the difference between the ſtate of the firſt Man and ours. The firſt Man was perfectly and fully free, he had no inclination to evil, and he had the power to do good by the aſſiſtance of that Grace, which he could uſe or not uſe. But ſince Sin entred, the Liberty of Man's Will is deprav'd, and his Free-will is become a Slave to Sin, and he has need of a powerful, preventing Grace to deliver him from the unhappy neceſſity of ſinning, and to render him victorious over Temptations.

Laſtly, He treats of the Origine of Souls, whether they be created and put into the Body, or produc'd by other Souls. He follows and approves the Modeſty of St. Auſtine, who treating of this Queſtion, left it undecided. He ſhews what Difficulties there are to reconcile the firſt Opinion with the belief of Original Sin; and the ſecond with the manner of propagating Mankind. And ſo without determining any thing upon the Queſtion, he ſays only, That we muſt believe that the Soul is not a Body but a Spirit, that it is not a part of the very Subſtance of God, but a Creature; that it is not put into the Body as a Priſon for Sins that are paſt, but that it is put into the Body by the appointment of God to animate it, and that being united to the Fleſh, it contracts Original Sin, from which it is purified by Baptiſm. He refutes in a few words theſe Errors, and thoſe who aſſerted them. St. Fulgentius

St. Fulgentius.

St. Fulgentius wrote alſo a Letter in the Name of the Biſhops of Africa to John and Venerius to whom he addreſs'd theſe two Books. This Letter contains the ſame Principles and the ſame Doctrine about Grace and Predeſtination. There they obſerve, that God permits ſome Perſons to exalt Free-will above Grace, the better to diſcover the power of this Grace, which is not known when it is not received, and the great ſtruggle that ariſes then, becauſe without it no Truth can be known, neither is there any Light to diſcover it. After this Preface he propoſes and maintains the following Propoſitions; 1. That Predeſtination is purely gratuitous, and that this Decree is not made upon foreſight of Men's Merits. 2. That Infants, who die after they are baptized, are ſav'd by the mere Mercy of Jeſus Chriſt, and that thoſe who die without Baptiſm are condemn'd upon the account of Original Sin. 3. That thoſe who believe this Grace is given to all, are not Catholicks in their Sentiments, ſince not only all Men have not Faith, but there are even whole Nations who never heard of the Goſpel. 4. That it may be ſaid that Man is ſav'd by Grace, and by his good Works, provided it be confeſs'd that the Grace and Mercy of God prevents the Will of Man, and works in him to will. 5. That all thoſe whom God would have ſav'd are predeſtin'd, becauſe the Almighty Will of God does always take effect, his Power can never be defeated. 6. That the Free-will which was ſound and entire in the firſt Man, is become weak by Sin, but is improv'd and ſtrengthened by Grace. 7. That the Queſtion concerning the Origine of Souls muſt not be ventilated, or it muſt be treated of without bitterneſs; but that there is no doubt that Souls do contract Original Sin. They cite at the end of this Letter a paſſage of Pope Hormiſdas in favour of St. Auſtine, and praiſe the Books of Fulgentius about Predeſtination and Grace, and thoſe which he wrote againſt Fauſtus.

We have nothing now remaining, but ſome Fragments of the ten Books of St. Fulgentius againſt a famous Arian call'd Fabianus.

The firſt Book was intitled, Of the moſt High, the Comforter, of the Titles of Ambaſſador, Doctor and Judge. There he prov'd that theſe Titles agreed to the Father and the Son.

In the ſecond Book he ſhew'd that the Functions of Sighing, Deſiring and Praying, which are attributed to the Holy Spirit, are not contrary to his Divinity.

In the third he prov'd that Immenſity agreed to the three Divine Perſons.

In the fourth, that the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit are equally adorable. He diſtinguiſhes the Worſhip of Latria from that of Dulia; the firſt agrees to God only, and the ſecond may be given to Creatures. He ſpeaks alſo of the Properties which belong to each Divine Perſon.

The fifth Book was about the Title of Image which is given to the Son of God, where he proves that he is ſo the Image of God as to be alſo of the ſame Nature.

In the ſixth he proves that the Son is eternal as well as the Father.

The ſeventh eſtabliſhes the Divinity of the Holy Spirit.

The eighth was about the Miſſion of the Holy Spirit.

The ninth is concerning the Invocation of the three Divine Perſons; where he demonſtrates that the Son and the Holy Spirit are to be invocated as well as the Father; that Sacrifices are to be offer'd to the Son and Holy Spirit as to the Father, and that the like Thankſgiving is paid unto him.

The tenth was about a Writing upon the Apoſtles Creed; where he obſerves that it was ſo call'd, either becauſe it is a Compact, or becauſe it is an Abridgment of the Chriſtian Doctrine. After this he proves that what in the Creed is attributed to the Father, agrees to the whole Trinity.

The Treatiſe addreſs'd to Victor is upon the ſame Subject, and written at the ſame time. There he refutes the Diſcourſe of a Prieſt nam'd Faſtidioſus, who having quitted a Religious Profeſſion and the Prieſtly Office to lead a licentious Life, had alſo abandon'd the Faith by turning Arian. St. Fulgentius proves in this Treatiſe the Divinity of the Son, and explains how it may be ſaid, That the Word only is Incarnate.

The time is not certainly known when the Treatiſe of the Faith was written, which is addreſs'd to a Lay-man call'd Peter, who having a deſign to make a Journey to Jeruſalem, deſir'd before his departure, to have an Inſtruction containing the Articles of Faith, that he might know what he ought to believe. St. Fulgentius explain'd to him, firſt, what he ought to believe concerning the Myſteries of the Trinity and the Incarnation: And then he told him that all Beings, both Spiritual and Corporeal, are the Work of God who created them; that Spiritual and Intelligent Beings were to ſubſiſt eternally by the Will of God; that the Angels being created free, and having power by the Grace God to merit their Happineſs, or elſe to fall from it by their Sin, one part of them had periſh'd, and the other part was confirm'd in the Love of God, which they could never loſe any more: That the firſt Man, who had been created ted perfectly free, had fall'n into Sin, and so subjected all Mankind to Death and Sin; That God had deliver'd many of them by his Grace, by the help of which they were enabled to live well, and to obtain eternal Life; that there is no state wherein a Man can deserve well, but only during the time of this Life, but as long as a Man lives upon this Earth, there is always space for Repentance; that this Repentance is unprofitable to those that are out of the Church; that all Men shall rise one day, and those who shall die in a good state shall be happy for ever, and others shall be condemned to eternal punishment; that a Man comes to the Kingdom of Heaven by means of the Sacraments which Jesus Christ has instituted; that none can obtain Salvation without the Sacrament of Baptism, except those who shed their Blood in the Church for Jesus Christ; that he who has receiv'd Baptism out of the Church has receiv'd this Sacrament, and if he returns into the Church he ought not to be re-baptiz'd, but his Baptism will profit him nothing if he continues out of the Church, or if he lives ill after he has been receiv'd into the Church; that those who live well ought continually to do Works of Mercy, to expiate those Sins which even the Just commit every day; that to avoid them, the humble Servants of Jesus Christ, shun Marriage, and abstain from eating Meat and drinking Wine; not that they think 'tis forbidden to use Marriage, to eat Meat and drink Wine; but because they are persuaded that Virginity is to be preferr'd before Marriage, and that Abstinence restrains a Man from Sin; that neither second nor third Marriages are forbidden, and that excess in the use of Marriage is a Venial Sin, but to those who have made a Vow of Continence, Marriage is a great Crime. Afterwards he reduces this Doctrine to forty Heads, which he thinks are to be believ'd. There was a long Article added at the end of this Treatise, which is cut off, by the Authority of some ancient Manuscript, wherein it is not to be found; and there is so much the more reason for it, because it is plain that this Treatise was concluded before the fortieth Article; and this Chapter has no relation to the preceding.

St. Fulgentius.

St. Fulgentius explains also the principal Points of our Faith in the Treatise of the Trinity address'd to Felix, who had also desir'd to be instructed, that he might be able to answer the Hereticks with whom he convers'd. And in the Treatise of the Incarnation to Scarilus; who had pray'd him to clear up a Question which had been propos'd at Table, Whether or no it might be said that the Father, or the Divine Nature was Incarnate. After he has gone over other Mysteries upon occasion of this Question, he handles another which was also propos'd at the same time, viz. Whether God created all Animals: He says, 'Tis certain that God created all things; that at the time of the Creation he formed all the living Creatures which the Earth and the Water produce; and as to those which are engendred out of the Corruption of Flesh and Fruit, he made them not in the first six days Creation, but he created those things out of which they were one day to be form'd.

The Questions which were propos'd to him by Ferrandus a Deacon, are more useful and more rational. A godly Man having an Ethiopian Servant, caus'd him to be well instructed in our Religion, and put him among the number of the Catechumens; after he had continued there his his time, and learned the Creed, he was plac'd among those who were to be baptiz'd at Easter: The ordinary Exorcisms were us'd to him, he renounc'd solemnly the Devil, pronounc'd the Creed, and receiv'd the Exposition of the Lord's Prayer: When he was ready to be baptiz'd, he was seiz'd with a violent Fever, which brought his Life into danger; but Easter-day being near, his Baptism was put off to that day; and then he was carried to the Church in such a Condition, that he had no knowledge, nor speech, nor Motion, nor Sense. Yet he was baptiz'd, tho' he could not answer himself. A little time after this he died, without knowing that he had receiv'd Baptism. This History gives occasion to three Questions: The first is, Whether Baptism administred to an Adult Person, who neither knows any thing, nor can speak and answer himself, does put him in a state of Salvation. The second is, Whether he had been sav'd, tho' he had not receiv'd Baptism. The third is, Why we do not baptize the Dead, whose Faith and Piety were well known while they liv'd.

St. Fulgentius, in answer to these Questions, proves first, That Baptism without Faith availeth nothing to the Adult. 2. That Children receiving the Sacrament receive the Grace of Faith. This being premis'd, he determines, That the Faith of this Slave having preceded his Baptism, there is no doubt but he received the effect of Baptism, because he had both Faith and the Sacrament, but that it would have been in vain to have had Faith without receiving the Sacrament, for then he could not be sav'd; and that it is unprofitable to baptize the Dead, because the Soul cannot obtain remission of its Sin after it is gone out of the Body, and the Flesh alone is not capable of Sin. After these Answers, he says in general, That the Canons have justly ordained to baptize the sick, altho' they cannot themselves give an account of their Faith, provided there be Witnesses who answer for their willingness. Lastly, He enquires whether a Person that has been baptiz'd, and dies without receiving the Eucharist, can be sav'd, Jesus Christ having said, That he who eateth not my Flesh, and drinketh not my Blood, hath no Life in him. To which he answers affirmatively, That by Baptism we become the Members of Jesus Christ, and so by this means we are partakers of his Flesh. He cites a passage out of a Sermon of St. Austine, who explains thus the words of Jesus Christ in John Chap 6. of the necessity of eating his Flesh and drinking his Blood.

St. Fulgentius

There is another Writing of St. Fulgentius in Answer to five Questions from the same Deacon Ferrandus: The first, to know whether the three Persons of the Trinity can be separated. St. Fulgentius answers, That they cannot; and proves that all the Attributes which agree to One, agree to the Others, except the relative Properties of the Persons, which necessarily denote the Union of one with the other.

The second is to know, whether it may be said, that the Divinity of Jesus Christ suffer'd or died, as it is said, that a God suffer'd, a Man died, &c. St. Fulgentius maintains that this Expression cannot be condemned; and endeavours to justifie it, by the Testimonies of St. Leo, Galasius, and St. Ambrose.

The third Question is, Whether the Soul of Jesus Christ did perfectly know the Divinity. St. Fulgentius is very confus'd upon this Question, which he decides by saying, That it knew the Divinity perfectly, but not so as the Divinity knows it self; that it knows as much, but not after the same manner as the Divinity it self; that the Soul of Jesus Christ knows fully the Divinity, but it is not the Divinity.

The fourth Question is, Why it is said in the Prayers of the Church, that the Son reigneth with the Father in the Unity of the Holy Ghost; which Expression may make a Man think, that the Holy Spirit does not reign as the Father and the Son, but only unites them in their Reign. St. Fulgentius answers, that we pray to the Father through the Son, because the Son is the Priest and the Sacrifice, and that the Unity of the Holy Spirit denotes the Unity of Nature with the Father and the Son.

The fifth Question is, How St. Luke is to be understood when he speaks of the last Supper of Jesus Christ, that he took the Cup and gave it to his Disciples; that he took the Bread and said, This is my Body; and that afterwards taking the Cup, he said, This Cup is the New Testament in my Blood: Was it the same Chalice which was given both times, or two different Chalices. St. Fulgentius answers, That according to some it was only one Chalice given but once, and that St. Luke in the first place says, by way of anticipation, that he distributed it to his Disciples. That according to others, it was one and the same Chalice given two several times. He confesses that both these Senses are Catholick, but he approves the last, and finds a great many Mysteries in this double distribution of the Cup. Nevertheless the first Sense is more natural, and the only true Sense according to the Letter.

The last Work of St. Fulgentius is his Treatise to Reginus, who had propos'd two Questions to him. He answers the first, viz. Whether the Flesh of Jesus Christ was corruptible, or incorruptible, as some affirm'd. He answers, I say, that the Flesh of Jesus Christ was not corruptible, if by Corruption be understood Sin; but it was corruptible, if this be understood of Alteration and sensible Corruption.

Death hindred St. Fulgentius from answering the second Question of Reginus. Ferrandus the Deacon took upon him to write this Answer.

The knowledge, zeal, and easie way of speaking which St. Fulgentius was Master of, will not suffer us to doubt but he wrote many Sermons; but there are but very few of those that go under his Name that are worthy of him. In the last Edition of his Works there are but ten which can be his; and also in the Preface the Sermon of St. Vincent is rejected, as being full of Allusions unworthy of St. Fulgentius. Here follow the Titles of the Sermons; 1 Of the Stewards. 2. Of the two Births. 3. Of St. Stephen the first Martyr. 4. Of the Epiphany, or of the Murder of the Innocents, and Adoration of the Wise-men. 5. Of Charity towards God and our Neighbour. 6. Of St. Cyprian the Martyr. 7. Of the good Thief. I doubt very much whether this be St. Fulgentius's as well as the eighth upon Whitsunday. The ninth is that of St. Vincent rejected in the Preface. The tenth is upon the words of the Prophet Micah, I will teach thee, O Man, what is good. This has much of the Air of St. Fulgentius. The second upon the Purification is certainly not his; for this Festival is later than the Age of St. Fulgentius. The other Sermons are not St. Fulgentius's, and therefore are justly thrown back to the end of the Book.

These are all which we have at present of the Works of St. Fulgentius. We have lost his true Treatise against Pinta, his Conference with King Thrasimond, his Book of the Holy Spirit to Abragilas, his Letter to the Catholicks of Carthage, two Treatises of Fasting and Prayer, two Letters written to Stephanias in the Name of the Bishops of Sardinia, a Letter to a Bishop, wherein he asserts, that Christian Meekness obliges us not to deliver up a guilty Person to a Secular Judge, the whole ten Books to Fabianus, and the seven against Faustus. The ancient Author of his Life makes mention of these Works.

The Treatise of Predestination and Grace, whatever Theophilus Raynaudus says of it, is none of St. Fulgentius's, for it has neither his Style, nor manner of Writing about Grace. The Author of this Book did not fully comprehend the subject matter of it, and had no certain Principles; some times he asserts such Doctrines as are agreeable to those of Cassianus; and some times he adheres to the Doctrine of St. Austine. In fine, he is very far from that Clearness and Copiousness which is found in the Writings of St. Fulgentius: yet this is the Work of an Ancient Author.

St. Fulgentius.

St. Fulgentius did not only follow the Doctrine of St. Austine, but he also imitated his Style. His Words indeed are not so pure, but then he is not so much given to play with Words. He had a quick and subtile Spirit which easily comprehended things, set them in a good Light, and explain'd them copiously, which may appear unpleasant to those who read his Works. He repeats often the same things in different Words, and turns the Questions a thousand different ways. He lov'd Thorny and Scholastical Questions, and us'd them sometimes in Mysteries. He knew well the Holy Scriptures, and had read much the Works of the Fathers, and particularly those of St. Austine.

One part of the Works of St. Fulgentius was printed at Basil in 1556, 1566, and 1587; at Antwerp in 1574, at Cologne in 1618.

St. Fulgentius.

F. Theophilus Raynaudus has publish'd them since enlarged with some Treatises. They have also been printed at Lyons with the Works of the other Fathers in 1633, and 1652, and in 1671. F. Sirmondus publish'd some of them in 1622, and in 1643. Camerarius in 1634, and F. Chiffletius 1656, and in 1649. But lately all his Works were gathered together in one Volume in Quarto, printed at Paris by Desprez in 1684. They were reviewed by many Manuscripts, the differences whereof are noted in the Margin, or at the end of the Book. He that published them cannot be accus'd of the common Fault which those that make Editions are guilty of, viz. that they make two long Notes, for he has made none at all throughout the whole Book. It appears also by the Preface, which is done by another Author, that he did not place the Works in that Order, which should have been observ'd in making this Edition. Nevertheless, it is exact and correct enough, and it will be easie, if the Book be printed a second time to enrich it with some Notes, and to put the Works in a better Order.

EUGIPPIUS.

Eugippius.

Eugippius or Egippius, Abbot of Villa Lucullana in the Country of Naples, wrote to Paschasius the Deacon a Book concerning the Life of St. Severinus. He composed also a Rule for the Monastery of this Saint, which he left him at his Death. This is what Isidore of Sevil says of him. Probably this is the same Eugippius of whom Cassiodorus gives the following Testimony in his Book of Divine Learning, Ch. 23. You must read the Works of the Blessed Priest Eugippius which we have seen. This Man was not very learned, but he was fill'd with the knowledge of the Holy Scripture. He dedicated to his Mother Proba, a Collection taken out of the Works of St. Austine, wherein he made Extracts of this Father's Sentiments and Thoughts, whereof he compos'd one Book only, divided into 338 Chapters. 'Tis certain that this Book is very useful, since he has collected with great exactness into one Book, what can hardly be found in a whole Library. Sigebert of Gembloux does also mention this Work; but he says that this Eugippius, who is the Author of it, liv'd in the time of Pelagius the second, and of the Emperor Tiberius Constantine, i. e. about the end of the fifth Age. This made some Authors think, that he is different from the Author of the Life of St. Severinus whom Isidore of Sevil places under the Empire of Anastasius, and under the Consulship of Importunus in 511. But it is easy to perceive that it is an Error of Sigebertus, since the Author of the Collection of the Thoughts of St. Austine was more ancient than Cassiodorus, and his Book was compos'd when Cassiodorus wrote his Book of Divine Learning. 'Tis very probable therefore that it is the same, and that there is no difference between him to whom St. Fulgentius, and him to whom Ferrandus wrote, as Trithemius has observ'd.

Eugippius.

The Life of St. Severinus was publish'd in part by Bollandus, and is published entire among the Works of Velserus, The Collection of Passages out of St. Austine, was printed at Basil in 1542, and at Venice in 1543.

FERRANDUS a Deacon.

Ferrandus a Deacon.

F*Errandus* Deacon of the Church of Carthage, Sirnam'd Fulgentius, the Friend and Contemporary of St. Fulgentius, composed some Books.

The most considerable is a Collection of the Canons of Councils, for restoring Discipline in the Church of Africk. 'Tis something probable that he composed it, when the Catholick Bishops were call'd back by King Hildericus. However this be, it is one of the first and most ancient Collections of Canons among the Latins. It is made up of 232 Canons, which are not related at their full length, but only by way of Extract and Compend. They are taken from the Councils of Africk, or from those of Ancyra, of Laodicea, of Nice, of Antioch, of Gangra and Sardica.

We have already spoken of two Letters of this Deacon written to Fulgentius, wherein he proposes to him the Questions which this Saint resolves. We have also observ'd, that St. Fulgentius dying before he answer'd the second of the two Questions which Count Reginus propos'd to him, Ferrandus was charg'd with writing an Answer to him. Reginus ask'd in the second Question, After what manner a Captain should behave himself to live Christianly. Ferrandus gave him seven Rules about it, which he thought sufficient to make a Soldier a spiritual Man and a good Christian. The first is to acknowledge the Grace of Jesus Christ as necessary to every action. The second is to make his Life serve for an Example to his Soldiers. The third is, not to wish for Command, but that he may do good. The fourth, to love the Commonwealth as himself. The fifth, to prefer things Spiritual and Divine to things Earthly. The sixth, not to exercise Justice with too great rigour and severity. The seventh, to remember that he is a Christian. These seven Rules he explains at great length. This Treatise may be very useful and instructive to Men of Arms. It was written a little while after the death of St. Fulgentius.

The Letters of Ferrandus to Scholasticus Severus, and Anatolius Deacon of the Roman Church, are both written upon the same Subject. There he defends that Proposition which made so great a noise in the East, A, or one Person of the Trinity did suffer. The principal Reason on which he grounds it is, that it is undeniable that Jesus Christ was A, or one Person of the Trinity, and that he suffer'd; and therefore it may be said, that One of the Persons of the Trinity suffer'd; and 'tis good nevertheless to add, that he suffer'd in the Flesh which he took. He thinks also that that it may be said, using this precaution, that the Divinity suffer'd.

He wrote a great Letter to Eugippius about the Trinity, but there is nothing remaining of it except the beginning.

Ferrandus was one of the first who declar'd in Writing against the Condemnation of the three Chapters, and particularly against the Condemnation of the Letter of Ibas. Being consulted upon this Subject by Pelagius, and Anatolius a Deacon of Rome, he answer'd them, that he did not agree to the Condemnation of the Letter of Ibas, which was approv'd in the Council of Chalcedon; that this was to impeach the Authority of this Council; that if what had been there done was thus repeal'd, it was to be fear'd, the like might be done to the Decisions of the Council of Nice; That General Councils, and chiefly those which the Roman Church approv'd, had an Authority next to that of the Canonical Books; Secundæ Autoritatis locum post Canonicos Libros tenent; and that we are no less obliged to obey them than to believe the Holy Scripture. In short we ought not to condemn those Persons who died in the Communion of the Church; and that as we cannot absolve those who died under Excommunication, so neither can we excommunicate those who are Dead: That it may be lawful for particular Persons to say and write their Judgment, but they ought not to oblige others to subscribe to it, nor to embrace it with a blind submission, since this is a Privilege peculiar to the Canonical Books, and the Decisions of General Councils.

Ferrandus a Deacon.

The Life of St. Fulgentius is also attributed to Ferrandus, which was certainly written by an Author contemporary, and a Disciple of this Saint. It is like enough to his Style, and is found in the Manuscript joyn'd with the Works of Ferrandus: Yet it seems to be written by one who had been a longer time, and liv'd more constantly with Fulgentius than the Deacon Ferrandus. There has been printed under the Name of Ferrandus a Letter address'd to St. Anselm; but the distance of time between the one and the other, sufficiently discovers the falshood of it. The three first Books of Vigilius of Tapsa have been also attributed to him, but against all reason.

The Style of this Author is simple enough and clear; his Phrases are not long, but they are full of Quibbles and continued Allusions. Achilles Tatius was the first who publish'd a part of Ferrandus's Works in 1518. Mr. Pithœus has since publish'd the Collections of Canons, and F. Sirmondus the two Letters to Fulgentius. The Life of this Saint is in Bollandus. In fine, F. Chiffletius has collected, reviewed and published all the Tracts of Ferrandus the Deacon which were printed at Dijon in Quarto, in 1649. His Edition was followed in the last Bibliotheque of the Fathers.

JOHN

JOHN MAXENTIUS.

John Maxentius.

THE Monks of Scythia, who maintain'd that it was neceſſary to ſay, That one of the Perſons of the Trinity was crucified, had for their Champion an Abbot call John Maxentius, who defended their Party very vigorouſly. 'Tis not well known from whence he was, whether he was from Scythia, or from ſome other Province of the Eaſt *, or whether he was from the Weſt. The Party whom he defends, would make us believe that he was one of the Monks of Scythia; but his Style diſcovers that he was born, or at leaſt that he had his Education in the Weſt. I can eaſily believe that it was ſo indeed, but then he travelled into the Eaſt, where he ſettled among the Monks of Scythia.

He hath written many Diſcourſes in defence of the Party, and the Opinions of theſe Monks. He drew up a Petition, which they preſented to the Legates of Pope Hormiſdas, wherein they complain'd that they were accus'd of adding ſomething to the Faith, becauſe they maintain'd the Deciſion of the Council of Chalcedon by the Judgment of the Fathers. They confeſs that nothing can be added to the Catholick Faith, becauſe nothing but what is imperfect is liable to addition; But they maintain'd that 'tis not forbidden to explain and clear it up by ſuch Terms as the Fathers uſed. They bring for an Inſtance of this St. Cyril and St. Leo, who added to the Creed the Explications of the Fathers, to diſcover the true Senſe of it. They ſay that they have done the ſame for the maintaining the Council of Chalcedon againſt thoſe who accuſed it of condemning the Faith of the Fathers. They joyn'd with this Remonſtrance a Confeſſion of Faith, wherein they explain their Sentiments about the Myſtery of the Incarnation, and reject the Errors of Neſtorius, Eutyches, and their Followers, and endeavour to ſhew that we ought to ſay, That one Perſon of the Trinity was crucified, and to confirm this Expreſſion by the Teſtimonies of the Fathers: But there is ſcarce any except Proclus who uſed it. They add afterwards a Confeſſion of their Doctrine concerning Grace, the Subſtance whereof is this; That Adam was created a perfect Man; That he was neither mortal nor immortal, but capable of becoming either the one or the other; That he had a perfect liberty of Power and Will to do good or evil, but falling into Sin, he had loſt the Life of the Soul, as well as that of the Body, and that his Sin deſcended upon all his Poſterity: That upon this account Children are baptiz'd, not only to make them the Children of God by Adoption, or to render them worthy of the Kingdom of Heaven (as the Diſciples of Pelagius, Celeſtius and Theodorus of Mopſueſta taught) but, alſo that they may obtain remiſſion of Original Sin which deſerves eternal Death; That none can recover himſelf from this Fall, nor be ſaved, but by the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt: That Free-will, ſince the entrance of Sin, has, of it ſelf, no other power but that of chooſing ſome carnal good and pleaſure, and that it can neither deſire, nor will, nor do any thing for eternal Life, but by the Operation of the Holy Spirit: That they condemn on the one ſide thoſe who ſay that Sin is Natural, or that 'tis a Subſtance; and on the other ſide they deteſt thoſe who affirm, againſt the Doctrine of St. Paul, That it is in us to will, but it is God that finiſhes the Work.

The Monks of Scythia, receiving no ſatisfaction, as we have ſaid, from the Legates of the Pope, came to Rome; but they were not much better received by Pope Hormiſdas. They continued there more than a Year by the Order of this Pope, but finding means to withdraw, they fixed up, before their departure, twelve Anathematiſms, which contain'd in Subſtance the Doctrine compriz'd in their Confeſſion of Faith. And as it is the Cuſtom of thoſe who are perſecuted and accuſed of Hereſy, about ſubtile Queſtions, to make many Declarations and Confeſſions of Faith, we have alſo a Confeſſion of Faith made by John Maxentius, together with an Explication of the manner in which the two Natures are united in the Perſon of Jeſus Chriſt. John Maxentius.

After their Departure Pope Hormiſdas being very angry with them, wrote to Poſſeſſor a Biſhop of Africk, that he had done all that lay in his power to cure theſe Monks of their Error, but could not compaſs his deſign; that he found them turbulent and Enemies to Peace; that they ſought only to diſpute upon new Queſtions, and that they were ſo proud that they would have all the Earth enſlaved to their Imaginations; that they were wont to ſpread unjuſt Reports, to feign Calumnies, to hate the Church, to ſtir up Seditions, and to maintain their Opinions with obſtinacy; that they had a mind alſo to ſtir up the People, and ſow their Tares at Rome. He adds to what we have now ſaid, that which we have already reported concerning the Books of Fauſtus. John Maxentius having undertaken to anſwer this Letter which was publiſhed to the World, took upon him to ſay, that it could not be Hormiſdas's, and that it was not the Work of a Paſtor of the Church, but of its Enemies, being ſtuffed with nothing but falſhoods, errors, contradictions and reproaches. Nevertheleſs he objects to Hormiſdas, that he has not given a poſitive Anſwer to the Monks of Scythia, although the Letter which he treats of begins with this Maxim, That its reaſonable that thoſe who are conſulted ſhould give an Anſwer to thoſe who conſult them. Afterwards he accuſes the Author of this Letter, of being an Heretick, and a Favourer of the Neſtorians. He accuſes of the ſame Hereſie Dioſcorus the Pope's Legate, and the Biſhop Poſſeſſor, to whom this Letter is written, becauſe they were Enemies to thoſe who affirm that one Perſon of the Trinity ſuffered. He defends this Expreſſion ſtoutly, and proves that this Letter cannot be Pope Hormiſdas's, becauſe the Doctrine of the Monks of Scythia is condemned in it as Heretical, although the Pope, after he had entertained them many times, and known that it was their Doctrine, had not excluded them from his Communion for the ſpace of fourteen Months that they continued at Rome. From whence he concludes, that this Letter was ſuppoſititious, or that the Pope was corrupted by Dioſcorus; but whether this Letter was his, or another's, that the Author of it is a Heretick. Afterwards he juſtifies the Doctrine and Behaviour of the Monks of Scythia, and refutes the Objections which are made againſt them in this Letter. He maintains that the Monks did not retire from Rome of their own accord, and that they were not driven away by the People, but that the Pope being ſubject to Human Infirmity, underſtanding that Dioſcorus was returning, had cauſed them to be forced out of Rome by his Wardens *, although he had promiſed to hear them in an Eccleſiaſtical Aſſembly, when Dioſcorus ſhould return. As to what was ſaid in this Letter concerning the Books of Fauſtus, he obſerves that the Author ſhould condemn them as Heretical, and not only ſay that the Church had not received them; but becauſe he approved the Doctrine of St. Auſtine, he compares it with that of Fauſtus, endeavouring to prove that the Doctrine of this Biſhop is Heretical contrary to that of St. Auſtine, and agreeable to that of Pelagius. This he does to confound thoſe who defended the Books of Fauſtus as Catholick, of which number was Poſſeſſor Biſhop of Africk.

The ſame John Maxentius wrote a Diſcourſe againſt the Acephali, who ſaid that there was but one Nature in Jeſus Chriſt after the Union; and a Dialogue againſt the Neſtorians, divided into two Books. In the laſt of them he proves ſtoutly, that it may be ſaid that one Perſon of the Trinity did ſuffer. Theſe Works, and others whereof we have now ſpoken, are to be found in the Bibliothicks of the Fathers. The Style of this Author is pure enough; he wrote with much clearneſs and ſtrength.

* They were a ſort of Officers choſen by the Pope out of the Clergy, to defend and take care of the Patrimony of the Roman Church.

* By the Eaſt here is to be underſtood the Empire of the Eaſt, whereof Scythia was one Province.

TRIFOLIUS.

Trifolius.

ALL that is known of this Author is, that he was a Prieſt, that he liv'd at the Beginning of the ſixth Age, for his Country is altogether unknown. There was a Letter of his addreſs'd to Fauſtus a Roman Senator, againſt John one of the Monks of Scythia, who was come from Conſtantinople to Rome. There he refutes their Opinion, and maintains that this Doctrine, One of the Trinity ſuffer'd, did ſpring from the Error of Arius, and that it agreed with all Hereſies. He adviſes this Senator to ſhun all Expreſſions which are not in the Deciſions of the four Councils, nor in the Writings of the Fathers approv'd by theſe four Councils, ſuch as the Letter of St. Athanaſius to Epictetus, the Letters of St. Cyril to John of Antioch, and thoſe of St. Leo. He handles the Queſtion with much Subtlety; and to prove that this Expreſſion ought not to be us'd, One of the Trinity ſuffer'd, he grounds his Argument upon this, That the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are not three, but one God only in three Perſons: Now when one of the Trinity is nam'd, it ſeems as if it were ſaid, one of three Gods. Perhaps this Equivocation may be remov'd, by ſaying, One of the Perſons of the Trinity did ſuffer; but then they fall into another Inconvenience, becauſe this Expreſſion may make a Man think that the Divinity did ſuffer; and if it be added, In the Fleſh, the two Natures ſeem to be confounded. He cites againſt theſe Expreſſions a place out of the Seſſion of the Council of Chalcedon againſt Caroſus and Dorotheus, a Paſſage out of a Letter of St. Cyril to John, and another out of a Letter of St. Leo to the Emperor Marcianus. He rejects the Teſtimony of Proclus, and maintains that his Letter is falſified. Trifolius.

This Letter being imperfect at the End, was publiſh'd by Labbe, from the Sheets of Sirmondus, Concil. Tom. 4. p. 1590. as Dr. Cave ſays, Hiſt. Lit. p. 396.

ADRIANUS.

Adrianus.

THis Author wrote at the Beginning of the ſixth Age, ſince he is cited by Caſſiodorus, in the Book of Divine Learning. He wrote an Introduction to the Holy Scripture, mention'd by Photius in the ſecond Volume of his Bibliotheque. It was printed in Greek at Ausburg in 1602, and in the eighth Tome of the Engliſh Criticks. Adrianus.

LAURENTIUS.

Laurentius

LAurentius Biſhop of Novaria liv'd at the Beginning of the ſixth Age: He wrote a Diſcourſe which Trithemius calls A Book of two Times, of that which paſs'd from Adam until Jeſus Chriſt, and of that which ſhall continue from Jeſus Chriſt to the End of the World. This Work indeed begins with the Diſtinction of theſe two Times, but Penance is the Subject of it: It has been printed under the Name of a Homily upon Penance, yet it is not a Homily.

The ſame Author wrote ſome Homilies: There is one in the Bibliotheque of the Fathers concerning Alms, and Father Mabillon has publiſh'd one about the Cananean Woman in the ſecond Tome of his Analecta. The Style of this Author is very ſimple. Laurentius

Some think that this Laurentius is the Archbiſhop of Milan, whom Ennodius praiſes, but there is no certain Proof of it, and the Tranſlation from the Biſhoprick of Novaria to the Archbiſhoprick of Milan, which muſt neceſſarily be ſuppoſed, renders the thing very improbable.

MARCELLINUS.

Marcellinus.

COunt Marcellinus wrote a Continuation of the Chronicon of St. Jerome unto the Year 535. for what follows in the Chronicon under his Name is another Author's, as appears by the Preface. He wrote alſo four Books of Geography which are mention'd by Caſſiodorus. He would not deſerve to be rank'd among Eccleſiaſtical Writers, if he had not in his Chronicon wrote ſome things which concern the Hiſtory of the Church. Theſe following Particulars are the principal things in it; The Ordination of St. Gregory Nazianzen; the Councils of Conſtantinople, of Epheſus, of Chalcedon; The Death and Elogy of St. Jerome, the Biſhops of Rome and Conſtantinople; The Baniſhment and Depoſition of St. John Chryſoſtome, the Perſecution of the Chriſtians in Perſia, the Diſcovery of the Head of St. John Baptiſt, the Perſecution of the Chriſtians in Africa, the Diviſion of the Eaſtern and Weſtern Churches, the Tumults in the Church of Conſtantinople for this Form of Faith, One Perſon of the Trinity ſuffer'd, and ſome other particular Remarks. Marcellinus.

It was firſt publiſh'd by Schonhovius, containing only the Chronicon continued to 535; the following part of it was publiſh'd by Pemvinius, as if it had been Marcellinus's without any Note of Diſtinction. Beſides this Edition of Schonhovius, this Chronicon was publiſh'd at Paris 1546, in 8vo. and 1575. at Heidelberg 1588. and at the End of Euſebius's Chronicon at Leyden, 1606. and Amſterdam 1658. At laſt Sirmondus publiſh'd both the Chronicon more correct, and a much larger Appendix of an ancient Writer, from a very old Manuſcript at Paris 1619, in 8vo, from whence it was taken, and inſerted into the Bibliotheque of the Fathers, Tom. 9. p. 517. Marcellinus wrote alſo, as Caſſiodorus teſtifies, Chap. 17, 25. of Divine Learning, two Books of the Qualities of Times, and Poſitions of Places, and as many more of the Cities of Conſtantinople and Jeruſalem: But both theſe Works are loſt. Cave. Hiſt. Lit. p. 406.

ÆGIDIUS, or GILES the Abbot.

Ægidius.

GIles an Abbot of Gallia Narbonenſis flouriſh'd at the Beginning of the ſixth Age. He is the Author of a Letter and a Confeſſion of Faith which is in the firſt Tome of the Gallic Councils publiſh'd by Father Sirmondus. Ægidius.

ORENTIUS.

Orentius.

ORentius or Orientius Biſhop of Elvira in the Province of Tarragona, who aſſiſted at the Council held at Tarragona in 516, hath written in Verſe an Admonition addreſs'd to Chriſtians, mentioned by Sigibert in his Catalogue of Eccleſiaſtical Writers, Chap. 34. It was alſo publiſh'd by Delrio, and printed at Antwerp in the Year 1600 by Torneſius, and with Notes at Salamanca in 1644. It is alſo in the Bibliotheques of the Fathers. It is not written in Heroic Verſe, as Sigibert obſerv'd, but in Elegiac Verſe. The Style of this Piece is cloſe and nervous: Although it favours of the Latin of that Age in which it was written, yet it is neither fading nor barbarous. Orentius.

BOETIUS.

Boetius.

THe illuſtrious Names of Flavius Anicius Manlius Torquatus Severinus Boetius, which this Author bears, are a Teſtimony of the Nobility of his Extraction: He was choſen Conſul in 487, and 510, and had the Joy to ſee his two Children promoted to this Dignity in the Year 522. But a little after he fell from the moſt happy State that can be imagin'd into the Depth of Miſery: For being accus'd of having a Deſign to reſtore the Authority of the Senate and Roman Republick, he was depriv'd of all his Poſſeſſions, loaded with Chains, ſent Priſoner to Pavia, and kill'd in his Priſon by Order of King Theodoric. This deadly Accident happen'd in 524.

Boetius was very learned in the Arts and Sciences, and particularly in the Philoſophy of the Ancients. He tranſlated the Books of Ariſtotle and Cicero, and wrote Commentaries upon them, and compoſed ſome Treatiſes of Arithmetick and Geometry.

Of all his Books of Philoſophy there is but one that has any Relation to Chriſtianity, viz. his excellent Treatiſe of the Conſolation of Philoſophy, which he wrote in Priſon. It is a Conference which he feigns that he had with Philoſophy, which comforts him in his Miſery. It is written partly in Proſe and partly in Verſe, and divided into five Books. The firſt contains the Complaints of Boetius, and the miſerable State to which he was reduc'd. Boetius.

In the ſecond, Philoſophy, for his Conſolation, employs ſuch Motives as are leſs effectual, by ſhewing him that he has no cauſe to complain of Fortune which had been ſo long favourable to him.

In the ſame Book he proves, that ſupreme Happineſs does not conſiſt, in thoſe things of which he was depriv'd, and that God only is the ſovereign Good.

Having prov'd in the fourth Book, that none but good Men are happy, and that the wicked are always miſerable, ſhe diſcourſes of Providence and Deſtiny, and enquires into the Reaſons why God permits the wicked to enjoy a ſeeming Happineſs, and the good to ſuffer Pain.

In the fifth ſhe treats of Chance, of Free-will, and the Manner of reconciling Free-will with the Preſcience of God. Boetius makes her ſay, that Preſcience is not at all deſtroyed by Free-will, becauſe altho' every thing that God foreſees does neceſſarily come to paſs, yet it had not been foreſeen, but that it was to come to paſs by a Choice perfectly free.

Altho' Boetius was not a Clergy-man by Profeſſion, yet he wrote ſome Theological Books.

He

Boetius.

He wrote a Treatise of the two Natures in Jesus Christ, upon occasion of a Question that had been started about a Place in the Council of Chalcedon, wherein this Proposition of Eutyches is condemn'd, That Jesus Christ is of two Natures, but does not subsist in two Natures. Boetius at first could hardly understand the Difference between these two Expressions; but afterwards meditating more upon it, he found that this Proposition was really the Principle of the Errors of Eutyches. This engag'd him to refute the Errors of Nestorius, and to explain after what manner the two Natures are united in one Person only. He makes use of Aristotle's Philosophy to explain the Terms of Substance and Person, and handles this Matter in a very subtle and scholastical manner.

His Treatise of the Trinity to Symmachus, is no less full of philosophical Terms and metaphysical Subtleties, as well as his Letter to John the Deacon of Rome upon this Question, viz. Whether the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit can be affirm'd substantially of the Divinity; i. e. whether it can be said, The Father is the Divinity, &c. Boetius seems to be the first who explain'd our Mysteries by Aristotle's Philosophy, and made use of that Method which the School-men so greedily have embrac'd.

Boetius.

I say nothing of his other Works, because they are about matters purely prophane. They were collected and printed at Basil by Henry the Son of Peter, in the Year 1546. This Author wrote purely enough, and does not much savour of the Barbarism of his Age: But the scholastical Terms which he uses, and the Subtlety of the Questions which he handles, render him obscure and tedious. His Work of the Consolation of Philosophy is free from this Fault; It is a Work worthy of a more refin'd Age, and may pass for a Master-piece in its kind.

EPIPHANIUS SCHOLASTICUS.

Epiphanius.

Cassiodorus made this Man, whom he thought very eloquent, translate the Ecclesiastical Histories of Socrates, Sozomen and Theodoret, That eloquent Greece, says he, may not insult over us, and boast that they have any thing which we have not. This Version is faithful enough, but it savours very much of the Barbarism of the Age in which this Translator wrote.

[He translated also the Commentaries of Didymus upon Solomon's Proverbs, and the seven Canonical Epistles, and the Commentaries of Epiphanius the Cyprian upon Canticles, and perhaps many other Books. But all these Versions are lost. Only the Version which he made at the Desire of Cassiodorus, of the Codex Encyclicus, or a Collection of Synodical Epistles to Leo the Emperor in defence of the Council of Chalcedon, is extant, Conc. Tome 4. p. 891. and has been published more correct by Baluzius, in his new Collection of Councils, Paris 1683. Fol. Cave Hist. Lit. 387.]

Epiphanius.

THEODORUS the Reader.

Theodorus.

Socrates, Sozomen and Theodoret having all three written the Ecclesiastical History of the same Time, from the Empire of Constantine to that of Theodosius the Younger, that happen'd to them, which is scarce avoidable by all those who write the same History, that they often report the same things, and one adds some things which the others had pass'd over in silence: So that a Man must either resolve to read many times the same things by reading all their three Histories, or else he must lose the Knowledge of some things and considerable circumstances by reading one only. To shun these Inconveniencies, it was necessary to compose a Body of the History out of these three Works, and to relate but once those things which are found written by several, and to supply from one Historian what is wanting in the others. This Work was undertaken among the Greeks by Theodorus the Reader of the Great Church of Constantinople, and finish'd by Cassiodorus in the Version made by Epiphanius: For as to Theodorus he went no further in this Work than to the Death of the Emperor Constantinus. This Collection was divided into two Books, whereof there are yet some Manuscripts. [There is one Greek Manuscript of it in the Venetian Library of St. Mark, and Leo Allatius had another, from which Valesius took his various Readings of the Histories of Socrates, Sozomen and Theodoret, Cave p. 393.] But he wrote of his own two Books of the Continuation of the History of these three Authors, drawn to the Reign of Justinus the Elder; of which there remains now no more but an Abridgment of the Chapters, which was preserv'd by Nicephorus, and some Fragments taken out of the fifth and seventh Council; and from St. John Damascene. I think we need not very much regret the Loss of this Work, since the Abridgment which we now have of it is very exact, and all things are related in it with great Care. It is to be found, with the Fragments, at the End of Theodoret's Ecclesiastical History, publish'd by Valesius. Musculus has also plac'd it at the End of his Version of the Ecclesiastical Historians. [It is printed in Greek, with the other Ecclesiastical Greek Historians, by Robert Stephens at Paris, 1544. Gr. Lat. at Geneva, 1612, and with the Version and Notes of Valesius, Paris 1673. Cave p. 393, 394.

Theodorus.

SEVERUS.

Severus.

Severus born at Sozopolis, a City of Pisidia, was Head of the Monks of Palestine, and of the Sect of Acephali: He was made Bishop of Antioch in 513, and forc'd away from it in 519. He wrote some Treatises in the form of Letters, whereof we find some Fragments cited in the third Council of Constantinople, taken from a second Letter to Oecumenius, from a Letter to Paul, from a Synodical Letter to Anthimus, and from a Letter to Theodosius. He maintains that there is but one Nature in Jesus Christ, and condemns the Decision of the Council of Chalcedon, and the Letter of St. Leo.

Severus.

[He wrote several other Letters mention'd by Evagrius, and some Homilies and Commentaries upon Scripture, frequently mentioned in the Greek Catena's, Cave p. 390.]

JOHN of Scythopolis.

John.

I Have read, says Photius, a Treatise of John of Scythopolis, Scholasticus, against the Deserters of the Church, against Eutyches and Dioscorus, and those of their Sect, who would not confess that Jesus Christ subsisted in two Natures. A Patriarch, call'd Julianus, had pray'd him to write this Treatise, which contains twelve Books; the Style of this Author is clear and chaste, and he makes use of proper Terms for an historical Style. He opposes stoutly the Error, and does not misapply the Testimonies of Holy Scripture. He makes use of Logical Arguments when they may be useful to his Cause. The Author, whom he refutes in this Work, had industriously conceal'd his Name, and put no other Title to his Work, but A Treatise against Nestorius, to entice the Simple by this Fraud to the reading of his Book. 'Tis probable that Basil of Cilicia was the Author of this Work, since he wrote afterwards a Book in form of a Dialogue against the Treatise of John of Scythopolis.

John.

BASIL of Cilicia.

Basil.

HEre follows what we learn from Photius of the Life and Works of this Author. This Basil, says he, was, as he himself assured me, a Priest of the Church of Antioch at the time that Flavianus govern'd that See under the Reign of Anastasius. I have read his Ecclesiastical History, which begins at the Death of Simplicius Bishop of Rome, who wrote to Acacius of Constantinople, that he should not communicate with Peter surnam'd Mongus, who then corrupted the Church of Alexandria, to which See he was promoted, and publickly condemn'd the Council of Chalcedon. Acacius at first was against him, but afterwards he was none of his Enemies; which made him be look'd look'd upon as a Heretick by many, and depos'd by the Romans. This Affair was newly begun under the Reign of Zeno. But to return to our Author; he begins his History with this Disturbance, and concludes it with the Death of Anastasius, and the Coronation of Justinus. He observes that he had also written two other Books of History, whereof the first begins at the Reign of Marcianus, and ends at that of Zeno, with which he begins the second, and there is a third, which begins at the Reign of Justinus. The Style of this Historian is not polite, and very unequal. He relates the Letters which the Bishops wrote one to another, for proof of the Matters which he asserts; and this makes his Volume of a prodigious thickness, because one single History of little consequence fills many Pages, and his Narration is cut short, and obscur'd by long Interruptions.

Basil.

Basil.

He wrote also a Treatise against John of Scythopolis, whom he calls a Caviller, and loads with many Reproaches: He accuses him of being a Manichean, of reducing Lent to three Weeks, of permitting one to eat Birds in that time, of observing Pagan Ceremonies, of being too much addicted to his Pleasures, of not waiting for the Communion till the Sacrifice was ended, but taking the Holy Mysteries immediately after the Gospel, that he might go the sooner to his Repast. This Treatise was stuff'd with all kind of Invectives, and divided into sixteen Books. The first thirteen are Dialogues against the first Book of John of Scythopolis. The three last are a continued Discourse against the second and third Book of the same Author.

Photius gives a particular Account of the Subject of each of these Books, whose general Design was to oppose the Union of the two Natures, and the Expressions made use of in that Age to denote them. To this end he employs several Passages of Scripture about which he cavils. Altho' he was of Nestorius's Opinion, yet he never names him, but he commends Diodorus of Tarsus, and Theodorus of Mopsuestia. He does not openly condemn St. Cyril, but he says, that he against whom he wrote, grounds his Doctrine chiefly upon the Chapters of this Patriarch of Alexandria, and particularly upon the twelfth. This Work was dedicated to one named Leontius. It is written in a very mean Style, and is full of Faults; but it contains many Sophisms and Arguments which discover that this Author was well vers'd in this sort of Subtleties.

JOHN the First, Bishop of Rome.

John I. Bishop of Rome.

JOhn, firnamed Cateline, a Tuscan by Nation, and the Son of Constantius, was promoted to the See of Rome in the Month of August of the Year 523, which was the 31*st*. of the Reign of Theodoric in Italy, and the sixth of the Empire of Justinus. This Emperor having a Desire to extirpate Arianism in the East, order'd that the Churches which the Arians possess'd should be taken from them, and given to the Catholick Bishops who consecrated them. The Arians having complain'd to King Theodoric, who was of their Sect, threatned that he would treat the Catholicks of Italy after the same manner, if Justinus did not recal his Order. He thought that the best way to make these Threatnings successful, was to send the Bishop of Rome to desire this Favour of the Emperor, that so the Catholick Churches of Italy might be preserv'd from Ruine. John went thither, tho' much against his Will, with some Senators of Rome; and Anastasius the Library-keeper says, that he was receiv'd at Constantinople very honourably, and obtain'd of the Emperor the Revocation of this Order in favour of the Churches of Italy. Nevertheless there is a Letter attributed to this Pope, which supposes that he was so far from making this Request to the Emperor, that he himself contributed to the Execution of the Order, which this Prince had publish'd, and consecrated some Churches of the Arians for the Catholicks; and Gregory of Tours says, that he was imprison'd for having consecrated some Churches of the Arians. This makes Baronius believe, that John advised the Emperor Justinus not to agree to that which he came to desire of him in the Name of the King of Italy, and that in Imitation of the famous Regulus, he sacrific'd himself, and expos'd his Church to the Danger of Destruction, rather than he would desire any thing which was contrary to the Welfare of the Universal Church. I cannot tell whether such a Zeal is not indiscreet; but this I know, that there is no Proof that John us'd it after this manner: For the Letter just now mention'd is supposititious, as we shall shew; and Gregory of Tours does not say, that John fell into Disgrace with Theodoric, for having consecrated the Churches of the Arians in the East, but for doing it in the West. However this be, John and his Colleagues having return'd, were very ill receiv'd by King Theodoric, who cast them into Prison at Ravenna, where John died the 27*th*. Day of May in the Year 526.

John I. Bishop of Rome.

The two Letters attributed to this Pope are both supposititious: The first, which is said to be address'd to an Archbishop call'd Zacharias, is compos'd of the Words of the Letters of St. Innocent, Zosimus, Symmachus and Theodoric. The Date of the Consuls in it is false; it is the Style and the Work of Mercator.

The second, address'd to the Bishops of Italy, exhorting them to consecrate the Churches of the Arians, as was done in the East, has the same Marks of Falsehood. The Date of the Consuls is false. It begins with some Scraps of the Letters of St. Leo, and the rest is a botch-potch of Passages out of the second Epistle of St. Paul to the Corinthians, according to the Vulgat Version. In fine, this Letter is contrary to History, to Ingenuity and good Sense: To History, because Anastasius assures us, that John perform'd this Embassy; to Ingenuity, because John should not have undertaken this Negotiation, if he had a mind to desire of Justinus that which was contrary to his Trust. In fine, it is contrary to good Sense; for nothing can be more ridiculous than this Inference, I have consecrated the Churches of the Arians in the East under a Christian Emperor who desir'd it; therefore you ought to consecrate them in Italy in spite of an Arian Prince, who will be provok'd by so doing utterly to destroy the Catholick Churches. A delicate Consequence!

FELIX the Fourth, Bishop of Rome.

Felix IV. Bishop of Rome.

AFter the Death of John, the Holy See was vacant for almost two Months, and at last Theodoric caused to be chosen in his room Felix, the fourth of that Name, who continued in the Holy See until the twelfth Day of October in the Year 529. There are three Letters which go under the Name of this Pope, but the two first are manifestly supposititious, being nothing but a Collection of Passages patch'd together out of the Letters of St. Innocent, St. Leo, St. Gregory, and the forged Letters to St. Clement and Damasus. The third, which is address'd to Cæsarius Bishop of Arles, was some time attributed to Felix the Third, because of the Name of the Consul Boetius which is found in it, altho' Cæsarius was not yet Bishop under that Consulship. But F. Sirmondus has found in a Manuscript the Name of Mavortius, instead of that of Boetius; which discovers that this Letter is Felix the Fourth's, and of the Year 528. There he approves the Canon made by the Bishops of the Gauls, wherein it was forbidden to promote a Lay-man to the Priesthood, unless he were first tried.

Felix IV. Bishop of Rome.

BONIFACE the Second, Bishop of Rome.

Boniface II. Bishop of Rome.

BOniface the Second of that Name, the first Pope of the Nation of the Goths, was promoted to the Holy See under the Reign of King Alaricus on the 14*th*. day of October in the year 529. At the same time one part of the Clergy chose Dioscorus, who was formerly one of the Deputies sent into the East by Hormisdas. Boniface was ordain'd in the Church of Julius, and Dioscorus in that of Constantine. But this last died the twelfth day of November. Boniface seeing himself left in sole possession, us'd his utmost Endeavours to bring over those who had been of the other Party; he threatned them with Anathems, and forc'd them to subscribe. He call'd together the Clergy, and condemn'd the Memory of Dioscorus, accusing him of Simony. He proceeded yet further, and, as if it were not enough for him to be secur'd of the Holy See for himself, he would also appoint himself a Successor; and having call'd a Synod, he engaged the Bishops and Clergy by Oath, and under their Hands, that they should choose and ordain in his room the Deacon Vigilius after his Death. This being against the Canons, he himself acknowledg'd publickly his Fault, and burnt the Writing which he extorted from them.

Boniface II. Bishop of Rome.

To this Pope there is attributed a Letter to Eulalius Bishop of Alexandria, wherein he writes to him, that the Bishop of Carthage was re-united to the Church of Rome, supposing that he had been separated from it ever since the time of Acacius. But, as light as is the knowledg of the History of these times, this Piece appears to be supposititious: For every

Boniface II. Bishop of Rome.

every one knows, that Astelius and his Colleagues were always closely united to the Church of Rome, and that their Successors did never separate from it. Besides that there never was any Eulalius Bishop of Alexandria, and that the Impostor who contriv'd this Letter, supposes it written under the Empire of Justin, who was dead before Boniface was promoted to the Holy See. But tho' he had not so plainly fail'd in History, it were easie to discover his Imposture, by observing that this Letter is compos'd of Passages taken out of the Letters of St. Leo, Hormisdas, and even out of the Letter of St. Gregory, who was not promoted to the See of Rome, till many years after Boniface.

This Letter therefore is the Work of an Impostor, as well as that Libel of this Eulalius, wherein he excommunicates all his Predecessors, and all his Successors, and all those who shall infringe the Privileges of the Roman Church: For excepting this impertinent Passage, the rest of this Writing is taken out of St. Gregory and Hormisdas. The Date of the Consuls agrees to a Year wherein Boniface was dead.

The only true Letter of Boniface is that which is addressed to Cæsarius of Arles, who had written to his Predecessor against the Opinion of some of the Bishops of the Gauls, who said that the Beginning of Faith should be attributed to Nature and not to Grace, and at the same time had pray'd, for the removing of all Difficulties, that it might be confirm'd by the Authority of the Holy See, that Faith and the first Motions of the Will to that which is good, were inspir'd by preventing Grace. Boniface answers him, that it is a manifest Truth, that we can neither desire, nor begin any Good, nor have Faith, but by the Grace of Jesus Christ. He commends the Bishops of France who had approved this Doctrine, and hopes that others would submit to it. This Letter is dated the 25*th*. of January, under the Consulship of Lampadius and Orestes, in the year 530. The Date of it shews that Boniface was promoted to the Holy See in the year 529, and that Felix had the Pontificate a year less than is noted in Anastasius. In the year 531, Boniface held a Council about the Petition of Stephen Bishop of Larissa, concerning the Rights of the Popes of Illyricum. We shall speak of it hereafter in the Acts of this Council. [His Epistles are printed Concil. Tom. 4. p. 1684. Cave p. 402.]

JOHN the Second, Bishop of Rome.

John II. Bishop of Rome.

John surnam'd Mercurius, a Roman by Nation, the Son of Projectus, was ordain'd Bishop of Rome on the 22*d*. of January, in the year 532, and govern'd this Church two years and some months. Immediately after his Promotion, the Emperor Justinian wrote him a Letter, which he sent by two Bishops call'd Hypatius, and Demetrius, wherein, after he has testified his Respect for the Holy See, he informs him, that some Persons would not believe that Jesus Christ the only Son of God, who was born of Mary, and who was crucified, is one of the Persons of the Trinity, which gave just cause of Suspicion that they were of Nestorius's Judgment. He adds a Confession of Faith wherein he inserts this Expression, that the Son of God, who was born of Mary, and was crucified, is one of the Persons of the Trinity: and lastly, he prays the Pope to write Letters to himself, and to the Patriarch of Constantinople, declaring that he received them into his Communion, and all those who profess'd this Faith, and that he condemn'd those that did not approve of it.

The Pope answers him, that he commends his Zeal for Religion, and the Respect he testified for the Holy See; that he approv'd his Doctrine and the Confession of Faith which he had sent, and that he look'd upon these as separate from the Church who would not receive it, and chiefly Cyrus who had been sent to Rome, on the behalf of the Monks Acœmetæ. Some have doubted of the Truth of these two Letters; but there is no reason to reject them, and they are both acknowledg'd by those that wrote them, and by those who spake of them, viz. by John in his Letter to the Senators, and the Emperor in his Constitution to Epiphanius of Constantinople. The Emperor's Letter is dated in the Year 533, and the Pope's in the next Year. At the same time the Pope wrote a Letter, or rather a Discourse to the Roman Senators, wherein he declares that he approv'd this Proposition, That Jesus Christ who suffer'd is one of the Persons of the Trinity. He brings some Passages of the Fathers to justifie this Expression, and admonishes them, that they ought not to communicate with the Monks Acœmetæ, who are of another Opinion.

John II. Bishop of Rome.

The same Pope wrote three Letters about the affair of Contumeliosus Bishop of Regium, who was accus'd and convicted of Uncleanness. The first is to the Bishops of the Gauls, to whom he writes, That they ought not to suffer this Bishop to perform any part of the Sacerdotal Function, and that they ought to shut him up in a Monastery, and name a Deputy to his Church, who shall there barely celebrate the Holy Mysteries without Ordaining any Clergy-men, or disposing of the Patrimony of the Church. He allows him to present his Request to the Bishops, that he may be admitted to do Penance by acknowledging his Fault. The second is written to the Clergy of Regium, wherein he acquaints them that he thought it convenient to send them a Deputy, that he left the care and ordering of these things to the Bishop of Arles. The third is to Cæsarius of Arles, wherein he testifies his sorrow that a Bishop was found guilty of such Crimes as Contumeliosus was convicted of; but he thinks it convenient, that as to him the rigour of the Canons should be observ'd, by deposing him and sending him to a Monastery. At the same time he recommends to him that he should send a Deputy to his Church, until a Bishop could be ordain'd for it. He sent with this Letter a Memorial containing the Canons against the Bishops condemn'd by the Synod of the Province, viz. the 7*th*. Canon of the Epistle of Syricius to Himerius, the 25*th*. and 29*th*. of the Apostolick Canons, and the 4*th*. and 15*th*. of the Council of Antioch, and the 9*th* of Nice.

I have not said any thing of the first Letter attributed to this Pope, and address'd to Valerius, because it is the Work of Mercator. There are found in it some Scraps of the Writings of Huchins and St. Leo; the Style is different from that of the true Letters of this Pope, and the date of the Consuls is false. [All the six Epistles are printed Conc. Tom. 4. p. 1741. whereof the first to Valerius is rejected by Labbe as spurious, Cave. p. 404.]

AGAPETUS Bishop of Rome.

Agapetus Bishop of Rome.

Agapetus born at Rome, and the Son of Gordianus, succeeded to John the second, about the end of the Year 534, but he was not a whole Year in that See, and stay'd but a little while at Rome. Immediately after his Ordination he abolish'd the Anathema, which Boniface had extorted from the Bishops and Priests against the Memory of Dioscorus, and caused it to be burnt. Justinian, who manag'd extremely the Holy See, wrote to him upon his Promotion, and sent his Letter by the Priest Heraclius. After he had us'd the ordinary Compliments in his Letter, he declares to him that he thought it very convenient for bringing back the Arians into the Church, to maintain them in the Dignities they had in the Church, where they were among their own Sect, and not to exclude them from rising to a higher station. He writes to him also about the Cause of Stephen Bishop of Larissa, who had implor'd the Aid of the Holy See under the Pontificate of Boniface, against the Sentence past against him by Epiphanius of Constantinople, and desires him to make the Bishop of Justiniana his Vicar in Illyricum. The Pope answers the Emperor's Compliments very civilly, and praises his Zeal for the Re-union of the Arians; but he does not approve, that the New Converts should be continued in their Dignities, nor that they should be permitted to rise to higher.

As to the Affair of Stephen, he says, that he takes no other part, but that which is for the Defence of Innocence and Justice; that what the Holy See did about this Affair, proceeded from a Zeal it has always had to maintain its Rights, and to reserve to it self the Cognizance of the Affairs that concern the whole Church. That because the Emperor consented that this Cause should be instructed by the Legates of the Holy See, he would send them a Power; that he was willing at his desire to receive Achilles into his Communion, who had been ordain'd in the room of Stephen, but that he could not allow him to exercise the Sacerdotal Function, until he had seen the Informations which the Legates should make: That altho' the Emperor would excuse Epiphanius for Ordaining him, because he did it by his Order, yet he should acknowledge that he was blame-worthy, since he ought to press him earnestly with the Duty, which on this occasion belong'd to the Dignity of the Holy See, and so much the more, because he had to do with a Prince who espoused its Interests. In fine, he tells him, That he would inform him by his Legates of the Resolution he had taken about the City of Justiniana, and the Title of Vicar of the Holy See, which he would bestow upon the Bishop of that City. This Letter is dated Octob. 15. in the Year 534.

Agapetus Bishop of Rome.

At this time Belisarius, General of the Army to the Emperor Justinian, made great progress against Theodatus King of Italy. He was already become Master of Dalmatia and Sicily, and was ready to pass the next Campaign in Italy. Theodatus thought that the most effectual way to put a stop to his violent Motions, was to interest the Pope, the Senate and the People of Rome in his Quarrel. He threatned them therefore, that they should be all put to the point of the Agapetus Biſhop of Rome.

Sword, unleſs they obtain'd of Juſtinian a Ceſſation of Arms. The Pope Agapetus was inſtructed with this Embaſſy. When he arrived at Conſtantinople, the Emperor ſent ſome Perſons to compliment him in his Name, and to carry him a Letter in which he had inſerted the Letter and Confeſſion of Faith which he had ſent to John. The Pope's Anſwer was, that he commended his Piety, that he approved his Doctrine, and condemn'd thoſe that were not of his Judgment, but then withall he ſignified to him that it did not belong to Lay-men to make Confeſſions of Faith. Afterwards he had Audience of the Emperor, and declar'd his Commiſſion; but he could not prevail with him to ſtop the Courſe of his Victories. But if the Embaſſy of Agapetus had not the ſucceſs which might be expected for the Affairs of Italy, yet it did great ſervice to the Church. For there was then in the See of Conſtantinople one name Anthimus, formerly Biſhop of Trebizonde, whom the Empreſs Theodora had promoted to that Dignity: This Man in his Judgment was an Eutychian and a Diſciple of Severus, who was then the Chief of them. Agapetus having diſcover'd that he was of this Judgment, would not communicate with him, although he was preſs'd to do it by the Emperor and Empreſs. He declared alſo that a Stranger as he was, being Biſhop of another Church, could not continue in the See of Conſtantinople, and that all which he could do out of reſpect to the Empreſs was to ſuffer him to return to his former Church, if he ſhould give aſſurance in writing that he was Orthodox in his Judgment. Agapetus held firm to this, and neither the Threatnings nor the Promiſes of the Empreſs could move him. Anthimus on his part being unwilling to do what the Pope required, he declared him an Heretick and unworthy of the Prieſt-hood, and ordained Menas in his room. This was done with the conſent of the Emperor, who acknowledg'd that Anthimus was not Orthodox, and therefore abandon'd him; and he himſelf choſe Menas, as appears by the Letter, wherein Agapetus gives notice of this Alteration to Peter of Jeruſalem, and the other Biſhops of the Eaſt, related in the Acts of the Council under Menas.

When this was done, Agapetus prepar'd to depart, reſolving to leave the Deacon Pelagius as Surrogate for Conſtantinople; but God otherwiſe diſpos'd of him by death, for he died before his departure at the end of the Year 535.

There are alſo four Letters of Agapetus which have no relation to the Affairs of the Eaſt, but to thoſe of the Churches of Africk, and the Gauls.

The firſt is an Anſwer to the Synodical Letter, which Reparatus Biſhop of Carthage, and the other Biſhops of Africk, in number 227, had written to John the ſecond, the Predeceſſor of Agapetus. They acquaint him in this Letter (which is found among the Letters of this Pope) that deſiring to reſtore the ancient Cuſtom, which the violence of Perſecution had interrupted for almoſt a hundred Years, they had aſſembled a General Council of Africk in the Church of Fauſtus at Carthage, from whence Hunnericus had formerly driven them; that in this Council they had firſt read the Canons of the Nicene Council, and then conſider'd of the manner wherein they ſhould receive the Arian Biſhops that ſhould be converted, Whether they ſhould continue them in their Office, or only receive them to Lay-Communion: That all thought it reaſonable in the firſt place to conſult him about this Queſtion, being fully perſuaded that the Holy See would give them ſuch an Anſwer about it, as they would approve with an unanimous Conſent: That ſo far as they could judge by what the Biſhops had already declar'd, their Opinion was, not to continue them in their Dignities at their Readmiſſion; but yet they thought not fit to publiſh their Judgment, till they had known what was the Cuſtom and Advice of the Holy See in ſuch a Caſe: That they had ſent the Deacon Liberatus to him, to be inform'd of the late Tranſactions, and at the ſame time, to diſcharge the Duty they owed unto him. They conſult him alſo about this other Queſtion, Whether thoſe ſhould be admitted into Holy Orders, who had receiv'd Baptiſm when they were Infants from the Hands of the Arians: And laſtly, they pray that the Biſhops, Prieſts or Clergy-men of Africk, who ſhould paſs beyond Sea, without a Letter of Credence ſhould be treated as Hereticks.

Agapetus Biſhop of Rome.

This Letter being deliver'd to Agapetus, the Succeſſor of St. John, he declar'd to them in his Anſwer, that the Holy See had ſympathiz'd with them in their Affliction, and commends them for remembring their Duty to it, and addreſſing to him for Counſel. After this he anſwers their Enquiries, that they ought not to ſuffer thoſe who return from Hereſie, to continue in Eccleſiaſtical Dignities, or promote them to any; but he thought it convenient, that they ſhould partake of the Revenues of the Church, that were ſettled for the ſubſiſtence of the Clergy. He determines alſo that their deſire, as to the Clergy who went out of Africk, ſhould be obſerv'd, as a neceſſary Precaution to oblige them to ſtay in their Churches, and to hinder them from being Vagabonds.

Before the Letter of the African Biſhops was ſent, Reparatus having receiv'd the News of the Death of John, and the Ordination of Agapetus, wrote a Letter to him in his own Name, to congratulate his Promotion to the Pontificate, and to recommend his Concerns to him. Agapetus anſwer'd this Letter in particular, and acknowledged the Preheminence of the Biſhops of Carthage above all the other Biſhops of Africk. Both theſe Letters of Agapetus are dated the ninth of September: In the laſt the Conſulſhip is mark'd thus, Poſt Conſulatum Paulini viri clariſſimi, After the Conſulſhip of Paulinus a moſt famous Man. This was in the Year 535, but it is more probable that this Letter was written at the beginning of the Pontificate of Agapetus, before his Journey to Conſtantinople, and ſo it muſt be read, Paulino V. C. Coſ. which was in the Year 534.

The third of the Letters that we now ſpeak of, is addreſs'd to Cæſarius of Arles, who had pray'd him to give ſome of the Revenues of his Church for Relief of the Poor. Agapetus anſwers him, that he was very well inclin'd to grant his Petition for the Relief of the Poor; but that the expreſs Conſtitutions of the Fathers did ſo ſtrictly forbid Biſhops to alienate the Revenues of their Churches, under any pretence whatſoever, that it was impoſſible for him to tranſgreſs them; that he thought, he would not take it ill, that he had not violated the ancient Canons, and that he pray'd him to believe he did not refuſe through Covetouſneſs, or for his own Profit, but only becauſe he was oblig'd, out of reſpect to the Judgment of God, to obſerve inviolably what was ordain'd by the Authority of a Council, and to convince him, he ſent to him the Canon by which was this ordain'd.

The ſecond Letter addreſs'd to the ſame Cæſarius, concerns the Affair of Contumeliоſus. This Biſhop being condemn'd, had appeal'd to Rome. The Pope had appointed Judges upon the Places, yet the Biſhops of the Gauls caus'd their own Judgment to be put in Execution. The Pope wrote to Cæſarius, that it is would be better to ſuſpend the Execution, 'till his Cauſe were decided a-new, or at leaſt to permit him to withdraw, and not to ſhut him up in a Religious Houſe. He ordains that his Goods ſhould be reſtor'd to him, but that he ſhould not diſpoſe of the Revenues of the Church, nor be permitted to celebrate Maſs; that the Archdeacon of his Church ſhould be nam'd as Deputy in his room, who ſhould have the Adminiſtration of Affairs until he was ſentenc'd; on condition that the firſt Judgment given againſt him ſhould be no wiſe prejudicial to him, and that no conſideration ſhould be had of it in the ſecond. Theſe Letters are dated the 18*th* day of Auguſt in the Year 535. There may be a fault in the Date of the Conſulſhip.

I ſay nothing of a Letter of Agapetus to Anthimus, becauſe it is a Piece taken out of the 97*th* Epiſtle of St. Leo, according to the Cuſtom of Iſidore. [All the ſeven Epiſtles are publiſh'd Concil. Tom. 4. p. 1789. There is alſo another Letter to Peter, the Patriarch of Jeruſalem, concerning the Depoſition of Anthimus, Gr. Lat. in the Act. 1. of the Council of Conſtantinople under Menas, Conc. Tom. 5. p. 47. Conc p. 407.]

St. EPHREM Patriarch of Antioch.

St. Ephrem Patriarch of Antioch

ST. Ephrem, altho' a Syrian by Nation, underſtood perfectly the Greek Tongue. After he had paſs'd thro' Secular Offices, he arriv'd at the Dignity of a Count in the Eaſt, and was promoted to the See of the Church of Antioch, about the Year 526. He ſignaliz'd himſelf chiefly by the great Alms he gave. He compos'd many Treatiſes, of which three Volumes fell into the hands of Photius, who aſſures us, that all the Works of this Author were written in Defence of the Doctrine of the Church, and of the Holy Council of Chalcedon. The ſame Author makes long Extracts out of thoſe which he had ſeen.

The firſt is a Collection of divers Pieces, whereof the firſt is a Letter addreſs'd to Zenobius Scholaſticus of Emeſa, who was infected with the Error of the Acephali. St. Ephrem there defends the Letter of St. Leo, and the uſe of the Triſagion. He obſerves in the firſt place, that the Orientaliſts attribute to Jeſus Chriſt, this Epithet in praiſe of him, Holy, holy, holy, and then they add, who was crucified for us; whereas thoſe of Conſtantinople and the Weſt refer this Epithet to the Trinity, and therefore cannot add, who were crucified, becauſe the three Divine Perſons cannot be ſubject to Sufferings. That in many Churches of Europe, inſtead of theſe words, Who were crucified for us, are put theſe other words, Holy Trinity have pity on us. He adds, that according to theſe two different Senſes, this Expreſſion may be us'd or not us'd, but that the Hereticks Acephali having abus'd it, he thought fit not to uſe it at all. After this Remark he undertakes the Defence of St. Leo's Letter; and obſerves, that we muſt not compare what St. Leo ſays, when he ſpeaks of the Incarnation, with what the Fathers ſay when they ſpeak of the Divinity, but with thoſe places where they ſpeak of the Incarnation. He proves afterwards, that that St. Leo in this Letter acknowledg'd the two Natures in the Union of one Person only, and plainly condemn'd the Error of Nestorius. In the second Chapter he proves, that the Expressions which this Pope us'd to denote the difference of the Natures and Operations, were agreeable to those of the Greek Fathers, and even to the Doctrine of St. Cyril. In the third he proves, that the Articles which are added to note the distinction of the two Natures, do not signifie that there are two Persons in Jesus Christ, but only two Natures united with an inseparable Union. In the fourth and fifth he defends some particular Expressions of St. Leo, by comparing them with the modes of speaking, us'd by the other Fathers, which are altogether like them.

St. Ephrem Patriarch of Antioch

St. Ephrem Patriarch of Antioch.

This Letter to Zenobius was follow'd with many others: There is one to the Emperor Justinian, wherein he commended this Prince for being Religious; another concerning the Monks who liv'd in the Desart, wherein he gives good signs of his Piety. In the third he maintains that the Acts of the Synodical Decision of Antioch contain nothing contrary to Faith. The fourth was written to Anthimus himself, after Sentence was past against him: He does not dissemble his Approbation of Condemning him; but he declares that he would have him receiv'd, tho' with very much Precaution. There is a fifth Letter to Domitianus, about the manner in which the two Natures are united in Jesus Christ; and a sixth to Syncleticus of Tarsus, wherein he explains the Judgment of the Fathers about the Union of the two Natures. The seventh was address'd to Anthimus Bishop of Trebizonde against the Error of Eutyches; wherein he praises Justinian as a most Catholick Prince. The eighth was to one Persanus, called Barses, wherein he explains the Mystery of the Trinity and the Incarnation by the Scripture. The ninth was address'd to the Monks who desir'd to be undeceiv'd of the Errors which they held, by showing them from Testimonies of the Fathers, that the Actions of the two Natures are found in one Person only. This Letter was follow'd with the Synodical Letter of a Council held by St. Ephrem, against Syncleticus Bishop of Tarsus, and against the Monk Stephen his Chaplain, who was accus'd of the Eutychian Errors: In it is explain'd this famous Maxim of St. Cyril, That there is but one Nature of the Word Incarnate, by saying, that he us'd the Word Nature, for that of Person: There it is noted that Syncleticus did make Confession of the true Faith before the end of the Council. There was after this a Letter to Magnus Bishop of Berræa, wherein St. Ephrem justifies the Doctrine of the fourth General Council, that Jesus Christ was composed of two Natures, and proves that this Expression, That there is but one Nature of the Word Incarnate, was us'd against those who separated the two Natures, but not against those who distinguish'd them, tho' they were united in one and the same Person. There was another Letter to the Monk Eunoius, about Corruption and Immortality, wherein he proves that Immortality was a Perfection of our Nature before its Fall, and that Corruption was an Imperfection. After these Letters follow seven Sermons: The first upon the Festival of the Prophets; the second upon the Feast Christmas; the third upon the Fasts of the Year; the fourth about the Instruction of Catechumens; the fifth about the Feast of St. Michael, which was preach'd at Daphne, the Suburbs of Antioch; the sixth about Lent; the seventh about a Sunday of Lent; the eighth to the Novices in the four first days of their Baptism. This is what is contain'd in the first Volume of St. Ephrem's Works, which fell into the hands of Photius.

The second contains four Treatises. In the first he explains the Sense of St. Cyril in his Letter to Successus, wherein he opposes the Heresie of the Severians: In the second he answers Anatolius Scholasticus, about those things wherein he desir'd to be instructed. The third was an Apology for the Council of Chalcedon, address'd to two Monks of Cilicia, call'd Domnus and John; and the fourth, an Admonition to the Monks of the East, who were entangled in the Errors of the Severians. Photius makes long Extracts out of these four Treatises. The Extract out of the first is about the Union and Distinction of the two Natures in Jesus Christ, which he confirms by the Testimonies of St. Cyril and other Fathers. The Extracts out of the second inform us, that Anatolius had propos'd five Heads of Questions to St. Ephrem: The first, Whether Jesus Christ is yet in Flesh. 2. How he being descended from the Children of Adam could be Immortal. 3. What proof there is that the Apostle St. John is yet alive. 4. How Adam, being created Immortal, could be ignorant of what was useful for him. 5. What is meant by these words of God, Behold, Adam is become like one of us. As to the first Question, he proves by many Passages of Scripture, that Jesus Christ has still his Flesh. As to the second, he says, that whether it be affirm'd that Adam was created Mortal or Immortal, 'tis certain that the death of the Body and Soul was the effect of the Sin which he committed by his Free-will; and that tho' Adam by his Nature was not Immortal, yet he had not died unless he had sinned. To the third he answers, that he knew by Tradition that St. John was not dead, no more than Elias and Enoch, and that this Consequence might be inferted from the words of Jesus Christ concerning him in his Gospel, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to you? That it cannot be concluded from thence that he was Immortal, but that he was reserv'd for the Day of Judgment: that if Eusebius has noted the number of the years that he liv'd, this is to be understood of the years that he was upon Earth: that the Acts of the Life of this holy Apostle make it credible, that he disappear'd all on a suddain: nevertheless, he says that this Question does not concern the Faith; but that it is always profitable in this kind of Questions to take the better side. Upon the fourth Question, he says, that we must not wonder, that Adam, tho' immortal, did not know what was useful for him, since the same thing happen'd to the bad Angels. As to the last Question, he says, that these words, Behold, Adam is become as one of us, are an Irony which God uses to upbraid the Man for his Sottishness, or that God speaks according to the false imagination of Adam, to cover him with shame.

St. Ephrem Patriarch of Antioch.

The Extracts out of the third Book are Citations out of many Works of the Fathers, to shew that the Decision of the Council of Chalcedon, which recognizes two Natures in Jesus Christ is not new, but the ancient Doctrine of the Church. He cites, besides the Authors that are known, as St. Peter of Alexandria, St. Athanasius and St. Basil, St. Cyril of Jerusalem, the St. Gregories of Neocæsarea, Nazianzum and Nyssa, Amphilochius, St. Ambrose and St. Chrysostome, St. Epiphanius, Proclus and Paul of Emesa, Atticus of Constantinople, St. Cyril of Alexandria; he cites, I say, besides these Authors, the Books of St. Dionysius the Areopagite, a Book of Hilary about Faith and Unity, one Cyriacus Bishop of Paphos, who, as he says, was one of the Fathers of the Council of Nice, the Suppositious Letters of Pope Julius, and one nam'd Erecthius. Of these Authors there are but five who made use of this Expression, There is but one Nature of the Word Incarnate, who are Gregory of Neocæsarea, St. Athanasius, Julius, St. Cyril, and Erecthius. He shews that the Sense wherein this manner of speaking ought to be taken, does not exclude the two Natures, since they themselves acknowledg'd them.

He goes on in the Extracts of the fourth Book to quote passages of the Fathers, to prove that the Divinity and Humanity of Jesus Christ are two different Natures. Among these last he cites St. Ephrem of Syria, a Letter of Simeon, and of Baradanus to Basil of Antioch, and another Letter of the same to the Emperor Leo, and a Letter of James to Basil the Bishop.

Photius neither says any thing, nor makes any Extracts out of the third Volume of St. Ephrem, so that we have no knowledge of it. What Photius says and relates out of the two former, gives us a great Idea of this Author and informs us, that he had read many of the Works of the Fathers, and that he reason'd very well about the Mysteries of our Religion. He died in the Year 544.

PROCOPIUS of Gaza.

Procopius of Gaza.

Procopius the Sophist of Gaza liv'd in the sixth Age: He applied himself earnestly to the study of the Commentators upon the Holy Scripture, and made a Collection of all that they had written upon the Octateuque, copying out their very words. But this work being of a prodigious thickness, he abridg'd it, and put it in order, suppressing what he found said by many, and so made a continued Commentary, made up of the Expositions of the ancient Commentators, yet without naming them. His Commentary upon Genesis and the Pentateuque is very large, and chiefly upon Genesis: What he wrote upon the Books of Kings and Chronicles is very short; and indeed they are, properly speaking, nothing but Scholia, wherein he reports the different Translations of the Text, and explains the Sense of the Words. Perhaps these Scholia are only an Extract out of his Work: for Photius assures us, that the Commentaries of this Author were very copious, and written after one and the same manner. However this be, the Commentary upon Isaiah is very long; wherein he relates the Text entire, notes the difference of Versions, and explains every word in particular.

Procopius of Gaza.

This Commentator confines himself sufficiently to the literal Sense; he remarks carefully the differences of the Greek Versions, and even those of the Hebrew Text. He enlarges also upon the History, and sometimes upon the Morality: He touches but little upon Allegory; but sometimes he insists upon little things, and upon the Exposition of those words which are clear of themselves, and do not need any Interpretation. Photius thinks his Style polite, but too rhetorical for a Commentator.

The Version of his Commentary upon the Octateuque was made by Clauserus from a Manuscript of the Library of Ausburg, and printed at Basil in 1555. in Fol. with his Notes upon the Books of Kings and Chronicles. In 1620, Procopius of Gaza.

Meurſius caus'd to be printed at Amſterdam in Quarto his Scholia upon the Books of Kings and Chronicles in Greek and Latin. In fine, in 1580, Carterius publiſh'd the Commentary of Procopius upon Iſaiah, from a Manuſcript of the Cardinal of Rochefoucault. This Work is printed at Paris in Greek, and Latin over againſt it, and is very carefully done.

Procopius of Gaza.

The Anonymous Author of an Expoſition of the Octateuque.

The Anonymous Author of an Expoſition of the Octateuque.

THis Author, who is mention'd by Photius in the 36*th*. Volume of his Bibliotheque, liv'd under the Empire of Juſtinus. He had compos'd a Book, intitled, The Book of Chriſtians, or an Expoſition of the Octateuque, dedicated to one nam'd Pamphilus. The Style of this Work was mean, and the Syntax of it not extraordinary. He has propoſed many Parodoxes altogether indefenſible, which are more like Tales and Fables than any thing that is ſerious. Here follow ſome of them: That the Heaven and the Earth are not of a round figure, but the Heaven is in the form of a Vault or an Arch: That the Earth is longer one way, and that its Extremities touch the Heaven; That all the Stars are in Motion, and that the Angels move them; with ſeveral other things of this Nature. He ſpeaks alſo of Geneſis and Exodus, but as it were by the bye. He dwells a long time upon the Deſcription of the Tabernacle; he runs thro' the Writings of the Prophets and Apoſtles; he ſays that the Sun is as big as the two Climates, that the Angels are not in Heaven, but above the Firmament, and amongſt us; that Jeſus Chriſt aſcending into the Heavens, ſtay'd between the Heavens and the Firmament, that this is the place which is call'd the Kingdom of Heaven. Theſe are ſome part of the Abſurdities which this Author aſſerts: His Work was divided into twelve Books. We have none of them now remaining, and what we have now ſaid, ſhews ſufficiently, how little reaſon we have to regret the loſs of them.

The Anonymous Author of an Expoſition of the Octateuque.

The Monk JOBIUS.

The Monk Jobius.

THis is alſo an Author of the ſixth Age, out of whom Photius has preſerv'd long and excellent Extracts. The Monk Jobius wrote a Treatiſe of the Word Incarnate, divided into nine Books and 45 Chapters, upon thoſe matters which were diſputed in this Age concerning the Myſtery of the Incarnation. Photius remarks, that he treated the Queſtions largely enough, but he gave not very good Solutions of them, contenting himſelf with what might probably ſatisfie, without ſearching deeply into the Truth; that his Doctrine was very Orthodox, both in this Work, and in what he wrote againſt Severus; that he was well-skill'd and vers'd in the Holy Scripture, and that he undertook to write this Treatiſe at the deſire of an honourable Perſon. This is what Photius obſerves in general upon this Work, of which he afterwards gives an Abridgment.

The firſt and ſecond Book were for the Explication of this Queſtion, Why is the Son made Man, and not the Father or the Holy Spirit. The Reaſon that he gives for it is, that the Son bears the Name of the Image of the Father, and of his Reaſon, and that from theſe Titles it was reaſonable that he ſhould come to reform the Image of Man, and reſtore to him that Reaſon which he had loſt. He thinks that the Birth of Jeſus Chriſt in a Stable among Oxen and Aſſes, the Parable of the Nets caſt into the Sea which took all ſorts of Fiſh, the Piece of Silver which was found by St. Peter in a Fiſh, the Entrance of Jeſus Chriſt into Jeruſalem upon an Aſs, and the Gift of Tongues, are Figures of this Truth. After this Preface, which appears not very grave, nor worthy of the matter he handles, in the third Book, which begins at the ninth Chapter, he gives another Reaſon why the Son of God was made Man: And that is, becauſe it was reaſonable, that he who created and form'd Man, ſhould create him anew, and reform him: Now tho' the Father and the Holy Spirit created Man as well as the Son, yet the Creation is attributed to the Son, and 'tis ſaid, that by him the Father made all things. He demands afterwards, Why Redemption was not made by an Angel or a Man? And upon this Queſtion he ſays, that Men have try'd many times to bring Salvation to Men, but with all they could do, they were not capable of ſaving one ſingle Nation, how much more then was it impoſſible for them to redeem all Mankind, and to chain up the Devil who was become their Maſter. That no meer Man could do it, becauſe none of them is free from Sin: That neither did this agree to an Angel, to whom it did not belong to lead Spiritual Powers in triumph: That one being of the ſame Nature with the reſt, could not bring them into ſubjection; and that if St. Michael, diſputing with the Devil about the Body of Moſes, durſt not bring a railing Accuſation againſt him, how much leſs could an Angel make us Children by Adoption. From this Queſtion he paſſes to another, Why God did not redeem Men by his Divinity without making himſelf Man? He anſwers; that God having not done it, we ſhould believe that he ought not to have done it. This is the beſt Anſwer, or rather the only reaſonable one; and this being propos'd all the other become needleſs. In this place he ſhews, that tho' God be Almighty, yet there are ſome things which he cannot do, becauſe it would be a defect or imperfection to do them. He ſays moreover, that the Redemption of Mankind was a more excellent thing than his Creation, and that it is a more particular ſign of the Love of God to us. He adds, that it was fit the Wrod ſhould be made Man, for our Salvation, ſince all other means had been ineffectual. But, one may ſay, Why did he permit that Man ſhould become wicked? Why did he not create him neceſſarily good? If this had been ſo, he would have had no Free-will, and conſequently he could have deſerv'd nothing. Why did not he make him, may one ſay, like the Angels? This could not have been an advantage to Man, anſwers our Author becauſe God did not ſave the Angels who ſinned. But we eaſily fall into Sin. Yes, ſays he, and we riſe again eaſily, God having left to Man a thouſand ways whereby he may do Penance and ſave himſelf. He propoſes to himſelf another very important Queſtion, Why God made Man of two Parts of a different Nature? But he anſwers not this Queſtion very well; for he only relates ſome paſſages of the Fathers, and ſays, that the Terreſtrial Subſtance muſt have been adorn'd with the Union of a Spiritual Subſtance. He enquires, why the Word was made Man; and he gives three Reaſons for it. The firſt is, that he might give us an Example of Virtue. The ſecond is, to deliver us from the Bondage of Sin. The third, to blot out Original Sin, and reſtore us to the ſtate in which we were before Sin. He remarks that in the Trinity, the Father is conſider'd as the firſt Cauſe, the Son as the acting Cauſe, and the Holy Spirit as that which perfects: That for this reaſon the Catechumens are ſeven days in a white Habit; that they are firſt baptiz'd, and then anointed with Oyl, and laſtly made partakers of the precious Blood before the Bread be given them; and upon this Subject he makes very myſtical Reflections. Afterwards he gives three Reaſons why Moſes does not ſpeak of the Creation of Angels. The firſt is, becauſe he wrote only for Men. The ſecond, becauſe he would make God known by the viſible Creatures. The third is, leſt it ſhould be thought that the Angels created the World. He maintains that the Angels were not known till after the Promiſes which God made to Abraham. The fourth and fifth Book contain only two Chapters, wherein he endeavours to prove, that it was more convenient that the Son ſhould be made Man than the Father. The ſixth, which begins at the 22*th*. Chapter, contains the Queſtion, Why the Titles of Creator, Redeemer and Judge are attributed to the Son? He ſays, that they agree well enough to all the three Perſons, but by way of excellence they are appropriated to the Son. He diſcourſes of the Order of the Perſons of the Trinity, and of the Title Holy, which is given to each Perſon. He cites upon this Subject St. Gregory Nazianzen, and the Books attributed to St. Denys the Areopagite.

The Monk Jobius.

In the ſeventh Book he obſerves three Changes of the World: The firſt from Idolatry to the Knowledge of one God by the Law; the ſecond from the Law to the Goſpel, which reveals the Son and the Holy Spirit; and the third, which gives a perfect Knowledge of the Trinity in another Life. Upon this occaſion he handles many Queſtions concerning the Names of the Father and the Son: He gives many Reaſons why the Son was not Incarnate from the beginning of the World. He ſpeaks of the knowledge of the Trinity which the Bleſſed ſhall have in another Life, of the Obſcurity of the Old Teſtament, and the Myſteries which it covers under the Letter of the Law.

In the eighth he handles two Scholaſtical Queſtions: The firſt is, If it be a good proof, that there is in God one Perſon of the Word, becauſe God cannot be without Reaſon, why will it not follow from hence, that there is in this Word another Word, and ſo in infinitum. Photius remarks, that he endeavours to anſwer this Objection thirteen manner of ways, but that they are weak, and tho' they may ſatisfie ſuch Perſons as are pious and religious, yet they afford matter of raillery to thoſe who are of a contrary Diſpoſition. In effect, theſe kind of Queſtions and Arguments can never produce any good Effects, but expoſe Religion to the Contempt of great Wits, and the Scoffs of the Impious. The other Queſtion is no more uſeful, altho' it be at preſent more common: 'Tis demanded, Why the Son and the Holy Spirit, proceeding both from the Father, the one is call'd the Son, and the other the Holy Spirit; and why they have not both the Title of the Son? He could find no other Anſwer to this Queſtion,

The Monk Jobius.

Question, but that this is the Custom, and that Men express, as they can, the differences of the Divine Persons, altho' they comprehend them not. This Answer is ingenuous, very wise and reasonable.

In the ninth Book he treats of the Dignity and Graces of the Angels and Men compar'd together; and applies to them the Parable of the Prodigal Child. After this he enquires, How it can be that Jesus Christ should die for all, since there was an infinite number of Men dead before his Coming? He answers to this Question, that Jesus Christ preach'd the Gospel to the Dead, and that all those who have lived well, and believed in him, are saved. He enlarges here very much upon the Explication of another passage of Jesus Christ, I came not to call the Righteous, but Sinners to Repentance. After this he treats also of the state wherein Angels and Men were created, of the Fall of the one and the other; of the Reasons for which God redeemed Man, and not the Angels, &c. This is enough to discover to us that the Work of this Author was not very useful; that he delighted to start difficult and intricate Questions; that he gives extraordinary Senses to passages of Scripture; that he maintains Propositions which are indefensible: In a word, that we ought not much to regret the loss of his Work, whereof the Extracts related by Photius, are but too long, and very tedious.

The Monk Jobius.

JUSTINIAN.

Justinian.

THE Emperor Justinian may be justly rank'd among Ecclesiastical Writers, for never Prince did meddle so much with what concerns the Affairs of the Church, nor make so many Constitutions and Laws upon this Subject. He was persuaded that it was the Duty of an Emperor, and for the good of the State, to have a particular care of the Church, to defend it's Faith, to regulate External Discipline, and to employ the Civil Laws and the Temporal Power to preserve in it Order and Peace. Upon this account he did not only make a Collection of the Laws made by the Princes, his Predecessors, about Ecclesiastical Discipline, but he added many to them.

Here follows the Catalogue and the Substance of them.

The third Novel regulates the number of the Clergy of the great Church of Constantinople, and fixes it to 60 Priests, 100 Deacons, 40 Deaconesses, 90 Sub-deacons, 110 Readers, 25 Chaunters, and 100 Porters. It contains also, that it shall not be lawful for Clergy-men to remove from a lesser Church to a greater, and that the Possessions of the Church shall be employed for the maintenance of the Poor, and other pious Works.

The fifth Novel contains Regulations concerning the Monks and the Monasteries; that a Monastery shall not be built until the Bishop comes to the place, to consecrate the Ground where it is to be built, by Prayer and fixing a Cross in it: That the Habit of a Monk must not be given to those who present themselves immediately after they are entred into the Monastery; but that they ought to continue Probationers for three Years in their Secular Habit; that during this time it shall be lawful for those who redeem them as Slaves to take them back again, and not after this time is past; that the Monks ought to abide and lye in one and the same place, except the Anchorets and Hesycastes, who have attained a great perfection. That a Monk who quits his Monastery shall lose all his Riches that he had at his entrance into it, which shall belong henceforth to the Monastery. That a Man or a Woman who enter into a Monastery, may dispose of their Possessions before they enter into it; but if they enter into it without disposing of them, their Possessions belong to the Monastery, except the fourth part, which belongs to Children, or the Portion of a Daughter if she be married, and except that which they might have given. That if any Person abandon his Monastery to go into the Militia, he cannot enter into any but that of the Judges of the Provinces. That if a Monk goes from one Monastery to another, his Possessions shall remain with the first Monastery. That the Abbots ought not to receive the Monks of another Monastery. That if a Monk enter into Orders he is forbidden to marry. That the Bishop must choose an Abbot without respect to his Age, but only to his Merit.

The sixth Novel is about the Qualifications which those Persons ought to have who are ordained. It contains, that he who would be ordained Bishop, should be of a good Life and good Reputation; That he should be one that was never engaged in the Military Service of the Governors or the Palace: That an Ignorant Lay-man ought not to be promoted all on a sudden to this Dignity: That he must be one who was never married but once, and also one who was not espoused to a Widow; that he must have been for some time a Monk or a Clergy-man; that he must be one who did not purchase his Ordination: That if any oppose his Ordination, and make any Objection against him, the Accusation shall be examined before he be ordained: That a Bishop cannot be longer than one Year out of his Diocess, upon any pretence for any business whatsoever: That none can come to Court unless he be permitted by his Metropolitan; or if he be a Metropolitan by the Patriarch; and that he cannot desire Audience of the Emperor, unless he give an account to the Patriarch of Constantinople, or to the Surrogates of the Diocess whereof he is, of the occasion of his Journey.

That the same Precautions shall be observed proportionably in the Ordination of inferior Clergy-men: That such shall be chosen as are able Men, of a good Life, who have not been married but once, who have no Concubine, and are not espoused to a Widow-woman.

Justinian.

That the Diaconesses shall be ordained only of Virgins, or of Widows who were never married but once, and who have passed the fiftieth year of their Age. That if it happen that any younger are ordained, they shall enter into a Monastery: That as to others, they shall dwell alone, or only with their Father, their Son, or their Brethren.

That 'tis forbidden, not only for Priests and Deacons, but also to Sub-deacons and Readers, to quit their Station, under pain of serving in the Militia.

That there shall not be too great a number of Clergymen.

The seventh Novel contains many Regulations for preventing the Alienations or Prejudicial Exchanges of the Possessions of the Church.

The eighth grants to the Bishop of Justinianea, being the place of Justinian's Birth, the title of Metropolitan, and also of Archbishop or Exarch of the two Dacia's, of the second Mæsia, of Dardania, of the Province of Prevala, of the second Macedonia, of the second Pannonia.

The vast number of useless Clergy-men was so great a charge to the Churches and People, and it was so difficult to prevent it, that Justinian was forced to make another Novel wherein he forbids to ordain Clergy-men for the great Church in the room of those who die, willing them to take of those who are supernumerary in the other Churches. This Novel is the sixteenth.

The 22*d.* is of Marriages. There Justinian treats first of the Causes of the Dissolution of Marriages. He distinguishes them into two sorts. The first are those which he calls ex bona gratia, because it is to be presumed that both Parties are willing. 1. When one of the two who are joyned together makes a Vow of Chastity. 2. When the Husband is impotent for the space of three Years. 3. When he is a Captive, or absent for the space of five Years, without hearing any tidings of him, but not when he is a Slave, or condemned to the Mines, or exiled and banished for ever. 4. That nevertheless, if a Woman be espoused who is found to be a Slave, the Marriage shall be null for the future, unless he was her Master who married her as a Free-woman, in which case she shall continue free. 5. Constantine had permitted a Woman whose Husband had been four Years in the Wars without writing to her, or giving her any marks of his Affection, to marry another.

Justinian repeals this Law, and ordains that a Woman cannot marry again till the end of ten Years, and also till she has sollicited her Husband to return, and presented her Petition to his Captain or his Colonel, whereby it may be evident that he has no mind to return to his Wife.

These are the Causes of the Dissolution of Marriages which Justinian calls ex bona gratia.

The other Causes are those which are rigorous: As, if a Man or a Woman are convicted of Adultery, or Murder, or Poisoning, or Theft, or Treason, or Robbery, or any other Crime; and if it happen that the Woman is found guilty of these Crimes, she shall continue five years without being capable of marrying again; and also if it be she who convicts her Husband of them, she shall at least continue one year before her second Marriage. Justinian adds also three Causes for which Women may be divorc'd; if they make themselves miscarry; if they bathe with other Men; if they speak of Marriage to others while their Husband is alive. The other Titles of this Novel concern Civil Effects.

The 40*th.* Novel permits the Church of the Resurrection at Jerusalem to sell the Houses which it had in the City.

The 42*d.* is the Edict against Anthimus, Severus, Peter and Zoaras, related in the fifth Council.

The 43*d.* grants to the great Church 1100 Shops free from Taxes, and deprives all others of the same Privilege.

The 46*th.* is of the Alienation of the Possessions of the Church, and of the Payment of Debts.

The 55*th.* confirms the preceding, and permits the Exchanges of Possessions, and the long Leases of Lands among the Churches.

The 56*th.* forbids to exact any thing for the Registring of Letters of Ordination, but it allows to receive what had been the Custom to pay for it in the great Church.

Juſtinian. In the 57*th*. its ordain'd, that when Clergy-men quit the Church which they ſerve, others ſhall be put in their places, who ſhall enjoy the Revenues. In it 'tis forbidden that Founders ſhould place Clergy-men in the Churches by their own Authority; only they are allowed the Right of preſenting them to the Biſhop.

The 58*th*. forbids the Celebration of the Holy Myſteries in private Houſes.

The 59*th*. regulates Eccleſiaſtical Fees, chiefly for Funerals.

The 65*th*. contains a particular Order about the Revenues of the Churches of Myſia.

The 67*th*. forbids to make Chappels without the Biſhop's Leave. It orders thoſe who ſhall build them to furniſh them with things neceſſary: It forbids Biſhops to forſake their Churches, and regulates the manner of making Alienations of the Poſſeſſions of the Church.

The 76*th*. is an Interpretation of the Law which forbids Monks to diſpoſe of their Poſſeſſions, in favour of thoſe who were entred into a Religious Houſe before this Law was publiſh'd.

The 77*th*. allows to Biſhops the Knowledge and Deciſion of the Cauſes which concern Religious Men and Women.

The 81*ſt*. exempts him from paternal Power who is made a Biſhop.

The 83*d*. ordains, that if any one has any Civil Affair with a Clergy-man, he ſhall firſt apply himſelf to his Biſhop: That if the Biſhop cannot be Judge of it, either becauſe of the Nature of the Buſineſs, or for ſome other Difficulty, then he may apply himſelf to the Judges: That if it be a Criminal Cauſe, then the Civil Judges ſhall take Cognizance of it; and if they judge the Party accus'd to be guilty, then he ſhall be degraded by his Biſhop before he be condemned by the Secular Judge: That if it be an Eccleſiaſtical Fault, which deſerves only an Eccleſiaſtical Penalty, the Cognizance of it ſhall belong to the Biſhop only.

The 86*th*. empowers the Biſhops to oblige the Judges to do Juſtice to Parties, and alſo to judge them when the Judges are ſuſpected.

The 111*th*. grants the Preſcription of forty Years to Churches.

The 117*th*. contains the Reaſons for which a Divorce may be granted. A Man may divorce his Wife, if ſhe has conſpir'd againſt the State, if ſhe is convicted of Adultery, if ſhe has attempted her Husband's Life, if ſhe has dwelt or waſh'd with Strangers againſt her Husband's Will, if ſhe be preſent at publick Sports in ſpite of him. The Woman may alſo be parted from her Husband, if he be a Criminal to the State, if he has attempted her Life, if he would have proſtituted her, if he cohabits with other Women after his Wife has admoniſh'd him to forſake their Company. He forbids the Diſſolution of Marriages which are made with the Conſent of both Parties, unleſs it be for a reaſonable Cauſe, as to preſerve Chaſtity. Juſtinian repeals here what he had ordain'd concerning Perſons who were in the Army, and ordains, that it ſhall never be lawful for a Woman to marry again, unleſs ſhe has ſufficient Proof or Witneſſes, whereby it may appear that her Husband is dead.

The 120*th*. contains many Orders concerning the Revenues of the Church.

The 123*d*. is one of thoſe which contains moſt Regulations of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline. The firſt concerns the Ordination of Biſhops. Juſtinian ordains, that the Clergy and great Men ſhould chooſe three Perſons, after they have taken an Oath upon the Holy Goſpels, that they ſhall not make this Election with reſpect to any Promiſe or Gift, or to favour their Friend: That theſe three Perſons muſt be capable, and have the neceſſary Qualifications; that they muſt at leaſt be 35 years old: That they may chooſe of thoſe who are in Publick Offices, Curialis aut Officialis, provided they have been 15 Years in a Monaſtery, and even one of the Laity, on condition that he ſhall not be ordain'd Biſhop till he he has been three Years in Inferior Orders. He allows, that if three Perſons cannot be found who have the neceſſary Qualifications, that they chooſe one or two of them. He adds, that if theſe to whom the Election belongs, do not chooſe in ſix Months time, he that has a Right to ordain the Biſhop may do it, by choofing one Perſon, who has the neceſſary Qualifications: When any of the Perſons choſen is accus'd, his Cauſe ought to be heard, and 'tis forbidden to ordain him, until he has purged himſelf from the Accuſation. 'Tis forbidden to offer, or give any thing for the Election or Ordination; but a Biſhop is allow'd to give his Eſtate, or part of it, to his Church. 'Tis alſo allow'd to Patriarchs or Metropolitans to take a certain Sum of thoſe who are ordain'd, provided it exceed not that which it is the Cuſtom to give, and that is here expreſly ſet down. The following Titles contain divers Privileges of Biſhops, as Deliverance from Bondage, Exemption from Tutelage and Publick Offices, diſcharging them from the Obligation to appear before Judges to make Oath, and exempting them from the Juriſdiction of Secular Judges: After which Biſhops are forbidden to abandon their Churches. 'Tis ordain'd, that Archbiſhops and Patriarchs ſhall hold Synods once or twice in a Year.

Juſtinian. As to what concerns the Clergy, the Novel forbids to ordain them unleſs they have ſtudied, and underſtand their Religion, and be of a good Life. They muſt have no Concubine, nor natural Children, but they muſt be Virgins, or ſuch as are married only once to one Woman. Thoſe who are ordain'd Prieſts ought to be 30 years old, the Deacons and Sub-deacons 23, the Clerks 18, and the Deaconeſſes 40 Years old. If any Perſon be accus'd who is deſign'd for the Clergy, before he is ordain'd, he muſt be clear'd from this Accuſation. If he who is to be ordain'd, has not a Wife, then, before he is ordain'd, he muſt engage to live in Celibacy; but he who ordains a Deacon, or Sub-deacon, may permit him to marry after his Ordination. That if a Prieſt, or Deacon, or Sub-deacon happen to eſpouſe a Woman after his Ordination, he is to be turn'd out from the Clergy. That a Reader may marry, but if he contract a ſecond Marriage, or eſpouſe a Widow, he cannot aſcend to a higher Dignity among the Clergy. 'Tis forbidden to ordain thoſe as Clerks, who are engag'd in Offices for the Publick, Curialis aut Officialis, at leaſt, unleſs they have been 15 years Monks. That if any marry after they have been among the Clergy, they ſhall return to their firſt Condition. 'Tis forbidden alſo to give any thing for Ordinations or Benefices. If a Slave be ordain'd with the Conſent of his Maſter, he becomes free; if it be without his Maſter's Knowledge, he may redeem him in a year; but however this be, if he be of the Clergy, he ſhall be reſtor'd to his Maſter. When any Perſon founds a Chappel, and endows it with Revenues neceſſary for the Maintenance of the Clergy, it is allow'd to him and his Heirs to name the Clergy that ſhall ſerve in it, and thoſe whom he names ought to be ordain'd, if they be worthy and capable, if not, the Biſhop may place there ſuch as he ſhall judge more worthy. Liberty is given to all Clergy-men to diſpoſe of their Eſtates: Penalties are appointed againſt all thoſe who bear falſe witneſs. 'Tis order'd that thoſe who have any Buſineſs againſt a Clergy-man, a Monk, a a Deaconeſs, a Religious Man or Woman, do firſt apply themſelves to the Biſhop who ſhall judge them; if the Parties acquieſce in his Judgment, it ſhall be put in execution; if not, the Matter ſhall be examin'd before a Secular Judge. If he confirms the Biſhop's Sentence, there ſhall lye no further Appeal, but if his Sentence be different, there ſhall be room for an Appeal. If it be a Criminal Cauſe, and the Biſhop has been inform'd of it, he ſhall degrade the guilty Perſon, and after that the Secular Judge ſhall condemn him. If a Civil Judge has been inform'd of it, he ſhall communicate the Informations to the Biſhop. If the Informations be found juſt, and the Party accus'd be convicted, he ſhall degrade him.

As to the Biſhops, and the Differences which they may have with their Brethren, or their Clergy, theſe ought to be brought before the Metropolitan or the Patriarch.

The following Chapters order, when, after what manner, and before whom the Biſhops and Surrogates which are at Conſtantinople, may be appointed. 'Tis forbidden to proſecute the Biſhops or Clergy-men who are ſent about the Affairs of their Churches. Juſtinian orders the Monks or Religious Perſons not to go out of their Monaſtery for any Civil Affairs; but they muſt have a Proctor. He does abſolutely forbid Clergy-men to keep ſtrange Women, or Deaconeſſes to dwell with Men: He forbids any, under the ſevereſt Penalties, to diſturb Divine Service in the Church, or in the Proceſſions, which he orders not to be made without the Biſhop and his Clergy.

The reſt of the Novel concerns Monks. The Abbot ought to be choſen by all the Monks: The Habit ought not to be given to any who is preſented to become a Religious Perſon, 'till after three years: The Monks ſhould dwell all in one and the ſame Place, except the old or infirm, who may have ſeparate Cells. The ſame thing ſhall be obſerv'd in the Convents of the Nuns: The Monaſteries of Men and Women ſhall be parted. The Nuns have Liberty to chooſe a Prieſt or a Deacon, to carry to them the Reſponſes, or to adminiſter to them the Communion; the Biſhop ſhall approve him if he be found of a good Life; nay, if they ſhou'd chooſe one who is neither Prieſt nor Deacon, who is found worthy of this Miniſtry, the Biſhop ſhall ordain him; but theſe Clergy-men are forbidden to continue in the Monaſtery. Juſtinian ordains alſo in favour of the Religious Men and Women, that ſuch things as ſhall be given them, or left them as Legacies, on condition that they marry, or in caſe they have Children, ſhall be entirely their own. He declares that the Poſſeſſions of any one that enters into a Monaſtery do of right belong to the Monaſtery, except in the Caſe of legitimate Children, if they have any. He regulates the Manner in which the Goods of a Man and his Wife ſhall be diſtributed, when one of the two, who are joyned together by Marriage, or both of them, enter into a Monaſtery. He takes from Fathers and Mothers the Power of diſinheriting their Children who enter into Monaſteries: He orders that the Monks who go out of their Monaſteries ſhall be puniſhed by the Biſhop. He enacts moſt ſevere Penalties againſt thoſe who carry away Religious Perſons. In fine, he forbids Lay-men and Stage-players to take the Habit of a Religious Man or Woman.

The

Juſtinian.

The hundred and thirty firſt Novel contains the following Chapters.

In the 1*ſt.* 'tis ordain'd that the four firſt Councils ſhall be receiv'd.

In the 2*d.* the firſt place is given to the Pope of Rome, and the ſecond to the Patriarch of Conſtantinople.

The 3*d.* third grants to the Archbiſhop of Juſtinianæa, Juriſdiction over the Churches of Dacia, Myſia, Dardania, and Pannonia.

The 4*th.* renews the ancient Rights and Privileges of the Church of Carthage.

The 5*th.* exempts the Poſſeſſions of the Church from extraordinary Taxes.

The 6*th.* grants the Preſciption of 40 years to the Churches.

The 7*th.* contains, that he who has begun to build a Church or Chappel, ſhall be oblig'd to finiſh it.

The 8*th.* forbids the Celebration of the Holy Myſteries in private Places.

The 9*th.* ordains, that a Legacy, given to God, ſhall belong to the Church of the Houſe of the Teſtator: If it be to a Chappel without naming it, that the Legacy ſhall be given to the Pooreſt of the ſame Place.

The 10*th.* obliges Heirs to perform his Will, who by his Teſtament founded a Chappel or Hoſpital.

The 11*th.* empowers the Biſhop to ſee pious Legacies pay'd.

The 12*th.* repeals the Falcidian Law, as to what concerns pious Legacies, and orders, that the Goods of the Deceas'd ſhall be employ'd for paying theſe Legacies.

The 13*th.* forbids the Biſhops to diſpoſe by Will of the Goods they have got ſince they were made Biſhops.

The 14*th.* forbids Hereticks to buy the Poſſeſſions of the Church, or to build Churches; and particularly, to ſell to Hereticks thoſe Poſſeſſions where there is a Church or Chappel built.

The 15*th.* places thoſe in the Rank of Tutors, who are Overſeers to the Hoſpitals of Children.

The 133*d.* Novel repeats the Regulations which are made in the foregoing, wherein Monks are forbidden to dwell apart, to have any thing peculiar to themſelves, and to go out of their Monaſtery. It adds to theſe, that the Abbot ſhall place at the Gate of the Monaſtery ancient Monks of known Probity, who ſhall hinder the Monks from going out without Leave, and Secular Perſons from entring in: That he ſhall not ſuffer his Monks to go out to walk, and that he ſhall carry them all with him to Divine Service, and after they ſhall return to the Monaſtery, they ſhall employ themſelves in praiſing God, and reading the Holy Scripture: That he ſhall not ſuffer Women to enter into the Monaſteries of Men, nor Men into thoſe of Women, upon any Pretence whatſoever, no not tho' they be Brethren or Siſters: There is no Caſe excepted but that of burying in the Monaſteries of Women; for then it is allow'd that Men ſhall enter into them to make the Graves, but the Religious ſhall not appear before them, only the Abbeſs and the Woman-Porter ſhall be preſent to receive them, and ſhall make them go out aſſoon as they have finiſh'd their Work. Thoſe who are to take Care of Monaſteries are enjoyn'd to ſee that Order and Diſcipline be maintain'd in them. 'Tis order'd that thoſe who manage the Affairs of Women, and carry the Communion to them, ſhould be aged, and of an exemplary Life. The Religious Women are forbidden to ſpeak to them; but they muſt addreſs themſelves to the Abbeſs, who has leave to come and ſpeak to them at the Gate. The reſt of the Novel concerns the Chaſtiſement of the Religious who do not their Duty; if their Fault be ſlight, they ſhall be admoniſh'd, and a ſhort Penance ſhall be impos'd upon them; if it be greater, a long Penance ſhall be enjoyn'd them; if they be incorrigible they ſhall be turn'd out. If a Monk ſhall be found at a publick Houſe, he ſhall be deliver'd into the Hands of the Wardens, who ſhall chaſtiſe him, and deliver him into the Hands of his Abbot.

Juſtinian.

The 137*th.* Novel is concerning Ordinations. After a Preface, wherein Juſtinian declares the Obligation that lay upon him to ſee the Canons obſerv'd, and of what Importance it was, that thoſe who are ordain'd, ſhould be worthy of this Dignity, he orders that the Ordination ſhall be made after this following manner: When a Biſhop muſt be ordain'd, the Clergy and chief Men of the City ſhall meet together, and chooſe three Perſons who have the neceſſary Qualifications: That a Confeſſion of Faith ſhall be given to them in Writing; that the Forms of the Obligation of Baptiſm, and the other Prayers, ſhall be repeated unto them; that if any alledge any Crime againſt thoſe who are choſen, the Accuſations ſhall be examin'd; that if the Accuſer do not convict him of it, or do not appear at the Tryal, he ſhall be depos'd, if a Clergy-man; and ſeverely puniſh'd if a Lay-man. After this Juſtinian renews the Order which enjoyns Provincial Councils to be held, but he reduces them to one only in a year, in the Month of June or September. He ordains, that all Cauſes ſhall be heard in this Council, which concern the Faith, or Diſcipline, or the Perſons of Biſhops, of Prieſts, of Deacons, of other Clergy-men, of Abbots and Monks. He enjoyns alſo, that, without ſtaying for the time of the Councils when any of thoſe Perſons are accus'd, the Patriarch ſhall take Cognizance of the Accuſation alledg'd againſt the Metropolitan, the Metropolitan ſhall judge of that which concerns the Biſhop, and the Biſhop of that which concerns the Clergy and Abbots. He ordains alſo, that the Biſhops and Prieſts ſhall repeat to the People with a loud Voice, and after an intelligible Manner, the Words of the Oblation, and the Prayers of Baptiſm. In fine, he commands the Governors of Provinces to take in hand the Execution of theſe Orders, and to conſtrain the Biſhops to hold Synods.

The 140*th.* Novel reſtores the ancient Cuſtom, whereby married Perſons were allow'd to ſeparate, with the Conſent of one another without any other Formality.

The 146*th.* Novel allows the Jews to read the Bible in the Hebrew, and in Latin according to the Hebrew, but forbids them to uſe any other Greek Verſion but that of the Septuagint. It ordains alſo that thoſe of the Sect of the Sadducees, who teach that there is no Judgment nor Reſurrection, ſhall not be permitted to hold any Aſſembly.

Beſides theſe Novels of Juſtinian, which regulate almoſt all the Diſcipline of the Church in his time, we have alſo of his a Letter and Confeſſion of Faith in Latin, which he ſent to Pope John, and preſented afterwards to Agapetus, of which we have already ſpoken; another Letter to the fifth Council, and two Letters concerning an Enquiry, to know whether the Name of Theodorus of Mopſueſta was in the Dyptichs, regiſtred in the Acts of the fifth Council. [His Novels were printed by themſelves in Greek by Haloander, at Paris in 1553, octavo, by Schringerus ibid. 1558. Gr. Lat. at Antwerp 1575. Cave p. 399.

We have in Greek and Latin his Treatiſe and Letter againſt the Errors of Origen, the Confeſſion of Faith in oppoſition to the three Chapters, and a particular Letter againſt Theodorus of Mopſueſta, without including his Edict againſt Anthimus, that are printed in the Council under Mennas, which make the 41*ſt* Novel. We ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak of theſe Monuments, when we give the Hiſtory of the fifth Council.

We muſt not imagine that Juſtinian compos'd theſe Acts and Treatiſes himſelf, who, if we may believe Suidas, had little or no Learning. But it muſt be confeſs'd, that the Perſons whom he employ'd were very learned, and underſtood very well the Diſcipline of the Church and the Canons; that they wrote in ſuch a manner, as was very worthy of the Majeſty of a Prince; for there is nothing better dictated than the Laws, the Edicts, and Letters which go under the name of Juſtinian: In them you may ſee the marks of Gravity, Wiſdom, and Majeſty, which are not to be found in the Laws of other Princes. This Emperor begun his Reign in 527. and died in 565.

DIONYSIUS EXIGUUS.

Dionyſius Exiguus.

Dionyſius Exiguus.

Dionyſius Exiguus.

Dionyſius, Sirnam'd Exiguus, was born in Scythia, a Monk by Profeſſion, flouriſhed after the beginning of the ſixth Age, till the Year 540: He underſtood very well Greek and Latin, and had alſo ſtudied the Holy Scripture. Caſſiodorus, who convers'd with him, wrote his Panegyrick in the 23*d.* Chapter of his Book of Divine Learning. At the deſire of Stephen Biſhop of Salonæ, he made a Collection of Canons that were lately tranſlated, which contains, beſides theſe which were in the Code of the Univerſal Church, the 50 firſt Canons of the Apoſtles, thoſe of the Council of Sardica, and 138 Canons of the Council of Africa. This Code of Canons was approv'd and received by the Church of Rome, according to the Teſtimony of Caſſiodorus, and by the Church of France and other Latin Churches, according to that of Hincmarus. It was printed by the care of Mr. Juſtel in 1628, with a Verſion of the Letter of St. Cyril, and of the Council of Alexandria againſt Neſtorius, which is alſo the Tranſlation of Dionyſius Exiguus. This Work being finiſhed, he thought fit to joyn with them the Decretals of the Popes, and therefore made a Collection of them which begins with thoſe of Syricius, which are the firſt, and ends with thoſe of Anaſtaſius: There have been ſince added to them thoſe of Hilary, Simplicius, Felix and other Popes down to St. Gregory. This ſecond Collection was inſerted by Juſtellus into his Bibliotheca of Canon Law. At the beginning of this Collection there are the Epiſtles of Popes, a Letter of the Author addreſs'd to Julianus a Prieſt by the Title of St. Anaſtaſia, wherein he praiſes Pope Gelaſius.

This Dionyſius Exiguus was the firſt who introduced the way of counting the Years from the Birth of Jeſus Chriſt, and who fix'd it according to the Epocha of the vulgar Æra, which is not therefore the true one. He wrote alſo two Letters upon Eaſter in 525, and 526, which were publiſhed Dionyſius Exiguus. by Father Petavius, and by Bucherius, and made a Cycle of 95 Years. F. Mabillon publiſh'd a Letter of his written to Engippius, about the Tranſlation which he made of a Book of Gregory Nyſſen, concerning the Creation of Man, p. 2. Analect. p. 1.

Caſſiodorus aſſures us that he underſtood the Greek ſo perfectly, that caſting his Eyes upon a Greek Book, he could read it in Latin, and a Latin Book in Greek. This Talent of his makes it very probable that he tranſlated Greek Books well. Yet we have nothing under his Name but the Verſions of the Canons, the Verſion of the Letter of St. Cyril, the Verſion of a Letter of Proterius about Eaſter, the Verſion of the Life of St. Pachomius, the Verſion of a Diſcourſe and two Letters of Proclus, and the Verſion of the Treatiſes of St. Gregory Nyſſen about the Creation of Man. There is alſo attributed to him the Tranſlation of the Hiſtory of the Invention of St. John Baptiſt's Head, written by the Abbot Marcellus. He gives the Senſe faithfully and intelligibly, but his Words are not always well choſen. Dionyſius Exiguus.

CASSIODORUS.

Caſſiodorus MArcus Aurelius Caſſiodorus, a Senator, deſcended of an illuſtrious Family, born at Squillaca a City of Calabria, about the Year 470, was promoted to the chief Offices at Court, by Odoacer King of the Heruli. This King being vanquiſhed by Theodorick King of the Goths, Caſſiodorus had no leſs reputation in the Court of this laſt Prince, than of the former. He was made Governor of Calabria, and afterwards preferr'd many times to the Dignity of Queſtor, Maſter of the Palace, Prefect Prætorio, and was made Conſul in 514. He was moſt powerful at the Court of the Kings Theodoricus, Athalaricus and Vitiges. Altho' he was in the Court of thoſe Arian Princes, yet he never departed from the Catholick Faith, but united the Title of a Good Chriſtian with that of an Honourable Perſon, and a great Magiſtrate. At the Age of 69 or 70, deſiring to think more ſeriouſly of his Salvation, he retired from Court, and founded the Monaſtery of Vivarium in his own Country. Father Garretus, who publiſhed his Works, has taken great pains, and made a formal Diſſertation on purpoſe to prove that he follow'd the Rule of St. Benedict; but it is a Queſtion about which few People will trouble themſelves. However this be, Caſſiodorus govern'd this Monaſtery for the ſpace of 20 years; and there he died in peace, being aged 90 Years.

The Works of this Author are conſiderable, but there are many of them which are not about Eccleſiaſtical Matters. They are all collected together in the laſt Edition made at Roan in 1679.

The firſt Tome contains all the Letters and publick Acts which he dictated when he was in Offices. This Work is intituled, Divers Letters, collected together by Caſſiodorus himſelf, and divided into twelve Books. The five firſt contain the Letters which he wrote in the Name of King Theodorick, and under his Reign; the ſixth, and ſeventh contain divers Forms; the eighth, ninth and tenth contain the Letters written in the Names of the Kings Athalaricus, Theodoricus, and Vitiges; the two laſt contain the Letters which he wrote when he was Prefect Prætorio. There are ſome of them written to all ſorts of Perſons, and about all kinds of Affairs, ſo that they contain a wonderful variety of rare and curious things. They are all well written, full of good Senſe and very good Morality.

The Tripartite Hiſtory is not properly the Work of Caſſiodorus. Epiphanius Scholaſticus tranſlated into Latin the three Greek Hiſtorians, Socrates, Sozomen, and Theodoret; but as theſe Authors wrote the Hiſtory of the ſame time, ſo in reading them there is often found a Repetition of the ſame things: And Caſſiodorus made out of theſe three one Body of Hiſtory, by extracting out of every one what he ſays in particular, and avoiding the Repetition of what is ſaid by more than one.

The Chronicon of Caſſiodorus is very ſuccinct, and contains only the Names of the Conſuls, and the principal Tranſactions: It is not very exact for Chronology.

He wrote the Hiſtory of the Goths, but there remains nothing now but a little Abridgment of this Work made by Jornandes Theſe are the Works contain'd in the firſt Tome of Caſſiodorus.

The firſt Work of the ſecond is his Commentary upon the Pſalms, which he wrote in his Monaſtery. He ſays himſelf in the Preface, that having renounc'd Secular Buneſs and the Cares of the World, and begun to taſte the ſweetneſs of the Pſalms, he was wholly addicted to the reading of this Book; and finding in them ſome dark places, he had recourſe to the Commentary of St. Auſtine, wherein he found an infinite abundance of matter, and that he himſelf had added ſome later diſcoveries. After this Commendation of the Pſalms, and obſerving that they are ſung to the Office of the Night and the Morning, at the firſt, third, ſixth, ninth Hour, and at Veſpers, he propoſes ſome general Remarks upon the Pſalms. 1. He enquires what is Prophecy, and defines it, A way of ſpeaking of Divine Things with Majeſty and Truth by the Inſpiration of the Holy Spirit. 2. He ſays, that the Names of Perſons that are at the beginning of the Pſalms, are not the Names of the Authors, but thoſe who were to ſing them, and to play upon Inſtruments. 3. That the Title in finem, to the end, ſignifies that the Pſalm has relation to Jeſus Chriſt. 4. That the Pſalter is properly an Inſtrument of Muſick in the form of a D. That it may be applied to all Songs that are play'd upon this Inſtrument, and that it agrees in a particular manner to David's Work. 5. That a ſweet and harmonious ſound is properly call'd a Pſalm, but a Song is a ſinging with the Voice, and when the Voice accompanies the Inſtrument, then it is call'd a Pſalm-Song. 6. That a Pauſe is rather a mark of diſtinction and change of the Perſon, according to the Opinion of St. Auſtine, than a Continuation according to that of St. Jerome. 7. That the Pſalms are but one Book divided into five Parts. 8. That Jeſus Chriſt is there repreſented both as God and as Man, and as God-man. 9. That in his Commentary he will firſt explain the Title of the Pſalm, and then divide it into parts, and after that diſcover the literal and ſpiritual Senſe of it; and then he will declare the deſign of it, and laſtly give the Sum of the whole Pſalm, or diſpute againſt ſome Error. 10. He ſpeaks of the Eloquence and Uſefulneſs of the Pſalms. He praiſes the Church. In fine, he divides the Pſalter into twelve parts, which he applies to the twelve ſtates of Jeſus Chriſt. Theſe are the Prolegomena of Caſſiodorus to his Commentary upon the Pſalms. His Commentary is very large, he has taken many things not only out of St. Auſtine, but alſo out of the other Fathers: It contains much Morality. Caſſiodorus

The Commentary upon the Canticles is none of Caſſiodorus's, altho' it goes under his Name in ſome Manuſcripts, ſince the Author of this Commentary quotes the words of St. Gregory the Great, beſides that this Commentary has not the Style of Caſſiodorus.

He wrote Commentaries upon the Epiſtles of St. Paul, the Acts of the Apoſtles, and the Revelation, but they are now loſt.

It cannot be expreſs'd, how many uſeful things are contain'd in his Treatiſe of the Inſtitution to Divine Learning, or an Inſtruction for learning Theology. He obſerves, in the Preface, that being troubled that there ſhould be Maſters of Human Learning, and Schools founded for teaching it, but none for Divine Learning, he had endeavour'd, with the help of Agapetus, to found Schools of Theology at Rome, as there had been formerly at Alexandria, and in his time at Niſibis: But the War hindering him of Succeſs in his Deſign, he thought it his duty to write theſe Books, as an Introduction to the Study of Theology. He would have the Holy Scripture ſtudied in the firſt place, beginning at the Pſalms, and then the Reading of the Fathers to follow. After he has ſpoken of the Commentaries of the Fathers, upon the Books of the Bible, and of their Writings, he mentions the four General Councils. Afterwards he gives an account of the different diviſions of the Books of Scripture; he ſpeaks of the Hebrew Text and the Verſions; from thence he paſſes to the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtorians and Latin Fathers. He adds Remarks about the Order wherein the Holy Scripture is to be read, about the Obſervations which may be made uſe of, about the neceſſity of underſtanding Coſmography, about the ſtudy of human Learning, about Orthography and the Sciences. Caſſiodorus

The Treatiſes of Caſſiodorus about the Sciences and Liberal Arts concern not Eccleſiaſtical Matters: but that of the Soul has a nearer relation to the Dogmes of the Church. There he maintains, that the Soul is ſpiritual, that God created it, that it is immortal, and that it has no quantity nor extenſion. Having ſpoken of the Powers of the Soul, he ſays that it contracts Original Guilt, from which it is not deliver'd but by Baptiſm, and that during this Life it is capable of Virtues and Vices. Laſtly, he ſays, that the Soul being ſeparated from the Body by Death, is no more capable of doing Good or Evil, nor ſubject to the Infirmities of this Life; but that it expects either with Joy or Sorrow the Time of the General Judgment, at which it receives the reward of its good Actions, or the puniſhment due to its Crimes *. And then having deſcribed the Happineſs of Paradiſe, he concludes with an excellent Prayer.

* In theſe words Caſſiodorus plainly aſſerts, that there are only two different ſtates after this Life, the one of a joyful, and the other of a ſorrowful expectation of a future Judgment, and that theſe two ſtates are immutable, ſince good Souls are reſerv'd with Joy, and wicked Souls with Sorrow to the Sentence of the laſt Day: And ſo they plainly exclude the Romiſh Purgatory, which is a ſtate of Sorrow after this Life, from which ſome Souls are deliver'd at laſt to a ſtate of endleſs Joy.

The

Caſſiodorus The Style of Caſſiodorus is of a middle ſize; he writes cleanly enough for his time: He is full of Sentences and very uſeful Moral Thoughts.

The Works of Caſſiodorus which had been printed ſeparately, were all collected together by the care of Father Garretus, of the Congregation of St. Maurus, and printed at Roan in 1679. Caſſiodorus

St. BENEDICT.

St. Benedict. ALtho' St. Benedict is more conſiderable among the Monks, than among Eccleſiaſtical Writers, yet he is rank'd among theſe alſo. He was born in the Province of Nurſia, about the year 480. He was carried very young to Rome, from whence he retir'd to Sublacum, which is forty miles from Rome, where he ſhut himſelf up in a frightful Cave. There he continued for three years, without acquainting any body but St. Romanus, who let him down Bread by the help of a Rope: Being afterwards known, the Monks of a neighbouring Monaſtery choſe him for their Abbot. But he not agreeing with their way of Living, retir'd to his Deſart, where many Perſons came to him, and deſir'd to put themſelves under his Conduct; inſomuch that in a ſhort time, he built twelve Monaſteries in this place. From thence he paſs'd in the Year 529, to the Mount Caſſinus, where he laid down ſolid Foundations of an Order, which in a little time ſpread it ſelf over all Europe. There is a difference about the time of his Death, and his Diſciples look upon this as a very important Queſtion. As to us, it does not ſo nearly concern us to inſiſt upon it, and therefore we will ſuppoſe with Father Mabillon, that he died in 543, or with the Author of the Treatiſe concerning the Hemina, in 547. St. Gregory in his Dialogues wrote the Life of this Saint, which is full of Miracles very extraordinary. I ſhall not ſtay here to relate them, nor to enquire into the truth of them, this being no part of my Province.

The Rule of St. Benedict is the only Work that is truly his. St. Gregory thinks it better written and more prudent than all the reſt, Sermone luculentam, Diſcretione præcipuam? 'Tis divided into 77 Chapters. St. Benedict there diſtinguiſhes four ſorts of Monks; the Cœnobites, who live in a Monaſtery, under the Government of an Abbot; the Anchorets, who having learn'd the Exerciſes of a Monaſtick Life in a Monaſtery, retire alone into the Deſarts; the Sarabaites, who dwell two or three in the ſame Cell; and the Gyrovagi, who go from Monaſtery to Monaſtery, without ſtaying in any place: He condemns theſe two kinds of Monks, and chiefly the laſt; and without inſiſting upon what concerns the Anchorets, he compoſes his Rule only for the Cœnobites. There he ſpeaks firſt of the Qualifications which an Abbot ought to have, after what manner he ſhould ſerve for an Example to his Monks, and treat them all alike well, without ſhowing more affection to one than another; how he ſhould reprove, and even puniſh thoſe who commit Faults. He propoſes to them afterwards many Chriſtian and Spiritual Maxims; he recommends to them Obedience, Silence and Humility; he notes the Hours for Divine Service by Day and Night, and the order and manner of repeating it. After this he ſpeaks of the Puniſhments which ſhould be inflicted on thoſe who offend: The firſt is Excommunication, or a Separation from the Fellowſhip of the Brethren, whether at Table, or at Prayers; the ſecond is the Chaſtiſement of thoſe with Rods, whom the Excommunication cannot reform; and the laſt is the Expulſion out of the Monaſtery. Nevertheleſs he permits a Brother to be received three times who is turn'd out for his Faults, provided he promiſe to amend. He orders, that the Monks have all things in common, and that every thing be at the diſpoſal of the Abbot, and under the care of the Steward; that in the diſtribution of things neceſſary for Maintenance, no reſpect is to be had to the Quality, but to the Weakneſs of the Brethren: He enjoyns the Brethren to ſerve in the Kitchin and Refectory by turns. He requires, that ſpecial care be taken of the Infirm, of Children, and Old Men; he appoints the Hours and quantity of Meat and Drink; and Penances for leſſer faults: He recommends to them Labour, and notes the Hours for it; he provides for the Entertainment of Strangers; he forbids the Monks to receive Preſents or Letters from their Kinsfolk: He leaves the Abbots at liberty to give Habits to their Religious proportion'd to the temper of the place where they are; yet he thinks that 'tis ſufficient in temperate Places to give them a Cowle, a Tunique, and a Scapulary. He would not have the Monks complain of the colour or coarſneſs of theſe Habits; but that they ſhould take ſuch as are given them, and ſuch as are to be had in the Province where they are. The following manner wherein he would have one receiv'd who preſents himſelf for admiſſion into the Monaſtery, is very rude. He muſt patiently ſuffer for four or five days the Repulſes and Rebuffs of a Porter; after this he muſt be put for ſome days into the Chamber of the Gueſts, where an ancient Man will come to ſpeak to him, and to repreſent to him that which is the rudeſt thing in all the Rule: If he be obſtinate the whole ſhall be read to him, but if he promiſe to obſerve it, he ſhall be admitted into the Chamber of the Novices, where he ſhall be try'd: At the end of ſix Months the Rule muſt be read over to him again, and if he be obſtinate after this, it ſhall yet be read over to him at the end of four Months: But then if he promiſe to obſerve it, he ſhall be admitted, after he is given to underſtand that he can no more go out of the Monaſtery. 'Tis neceſſary alſo that he promiſe in the Oratory, before God and his Saints, and in the preſence of all the World to change his Life, and continue ſtedfaſt in that Change; but firſt he muſt be requir'd to make this Promiſe, and to ſubſcribe this Demand with his Hand, or if he cannot write, another muſt write for him, and he muſt ſet his Mark to it. That if he has any Means, he muſt give them all away before he makes Profeſſion, either to the Poor, or to the Monaſtery, without reſerving any thing to himſelf. If they be Parents who preſent a young Child, they muſt make the ſame Promiſe for him, and engage to give him nothing as his own proper Goods. As to the Prieſts which are preſented, St. Benedict would not have them eaſily receiv'd; yet if they be importunate, they may be receiv'd upon condition that they will obſerve the Rule. Yet to them ſhall be granted the firſt places after the Abbot, the Power of giving Benedictions, and of overſeeing Divine Service. As to the Monks that are Strangers, they ſhall be receiv'd as Gueſts if they deſire to tarry, and provided they be found to have liv'd well while they were among the Gueſts, they ſhall be admitted, and the Abbot may alſo beſtow upon them an honourable place: But if it be obſerved that they did not behave themſelves well, they ſhall not only be deny'd Admiſſion, but alſo be deſired to withdraw. If the Abbot pleaſes, he may chooſe any one of his Monks to be ordain'd Prieſt or Deacon, but this ſhall not exempt them from the Rule, nor from attending upon the Service of the Altar: He ſhall continue in the ſame Station, unleſs the Abbot will beſtow upon him a higher. The Degree among the Religious is reckon'd from the day that they enter into the Monaſtery. St. Benedict ſpeaks here alſo of the Qualifications which the Abbot ought to have, and of thoſe of the Prior, and of the Duty of the Porter. He forbids the Religious to go forth without the leave of the Abbot: Thoſe that go out, ſhould at their going forth recommend themſelves to his Prayers, and at their Return, they ſhould lye proſtrate on the Ground during the time of Divine Service: He recommends to the Monks to be reſpectful and meek to one another. Laſtly, he declares, that his Rule contains only the firſt Elements of a Religious and Spiritual Life, and that the Books of the Fathers contain it in perfection. St. Benedict.

There are ſeveral Diſputes about the underſtanding of ſome places in this Rule, which I leave to the Diſciples of of St. Benedict, who take them for a matter of great moment: The Publick, which is much leſs concern'd about them, will eaſily diſpenſe with me for not relating them; for I do not think that the World will much trouble themſelves to know, whether the Hemina mention'd by St. Benedict, be the half-quart of Paris or St. Denis; whether the word Communion be always taken in the Rule of St. Benedict for the ſigns of Charity and Union, or if it be taken in ſome places for the Euchariſt; whether the word Maſs do ſignifie there in ſome places what we underſtand by it at preſent, or whether it be always taken for the End or Duration of Divine Service, &c. There are not many beſides the Diſciples of St. Benedict, to whom theſe Queſtions can appear important. The common People are not concern'd in them, and the Learned who are not of the Order, will imploy their Curioſity and Learning upon other Subjects.

There are alſo attributed to St. Benedict a Letter to St. Remigius, a Sermon upon the Death of St. Placidia, a Diſcourſe upon the Departure of St. Maurus, a Letter to the ſame Saint, an Order of the Monaſtick Life; but none of theſe Pieces is St. Benedict's.

Pope SILVERIUS.

Pope Silverius.

THe News of the Death of Agapetus, which happened, as we have ſaid, at Conſtantinople, being carried to Rome, Silverius the Son of Pope Hormiſdas, was choſen in his room. Anaſtaſius affirms that this Election was not free, and that King Theodatus forc'd the Clergy to chooſe Silverius. He alledges alſo that he gave Money to the Prince to get himſelf choſen: But Liberatus, an Author more ancient and more credible than Anaſtaſius, ſuppoſes that this Election was Canonical; and 'tis very probable that this Calumny againſt Silverius was invented to juſtifie the Intruſion of Vigilius. However this be, 'tis certain that Silverius was acknowledg'd by the Clergy and People as lawful Biſhop of Rome.

Belliſarius was then at Rome with a powerful Army, and having taken the City of Naples, he advanced towards Rome. The Goths depoſed King Theodatus, and plac'd in his room a brave Captain call'd Vitiges. He not finding himſelf ſtrong enough to oppoſe Belliſarius, went out of Rome, and retir'd to Ravenna. The Romans informed Belliſarius of this, and receiv'd him into Rome, according to the Pope's Advice. He entred into it victoriouſly in the Month of December, in the Year 536. But Vitiges returned quickly with an Army of 150000 Men, and laid Siege to Rome, which laſted a year and ſome days. The Pope Silverius having been choſen under a King of the Goths, and perhaps by his Intereſt, was ſuſpected at the Court of the Greek Emperor: beſides this, he had declared againſt Anthimus and the Acephali, whom the Empreſs Theodora maintained. The Deacon Vigilius remained at Conſtantinople after the Death of Agapetus, who had for a long time aſpired to the Biſhoprick, and made uſe of this Occaſion to get himſelf promoted to it. He promiſed the Empreſs, that if ſhe would make him Pope he would receive Theodoſius, Anthimus, and Severus into his Communion, and that he would approve their Doctrine. The Empreſs not only promiſed to make him Pope, but alſo offer'd him Money if he would do what ſhe deſired. Vigilius having given the Empreſs all the Aſſurances that ſhe could wiſh, departed with a ſecret Order addreſſed to Belliſarius to make him ſucceſsful in his Deſign. Vigilius being come into Italy, found all things well prepared for him; the Siege of Rome was raiſed when he arrived there; but during the Siege Silverius was ſuſpected to hold Correſpondence with the Goths, and ſo he was rendred odious for refuſing expreſly to accept the Empreſs's Propoſals of receiving Anthimus. Thus Vigilius having deliver'd to Belliſarius the Order which he brought, and having promiſed him two hundred pieces of Gold over and above the ſeven hundred which he was to give him, found no great difficulty to perſuade him to drive away Silverius. For accompliſhing this he made uſe of two Pretences, which we have already hinted, he cauſed him to come before him, and accuſed him of writing to the Goths, and preſt him to approve Anthimus. There wanted not Forgers who counterfeited a Letter written in the Name of Silverius to the King of the Goths, to deliver up the City of Rome to him, nor falſe Witneſſes who depoſed that he had this Deſign. Belliſarius cauſed to bring Silverius before him, and ſollicited him to ſatisfie the Empreſs, by approving the Doctrine of Anthimus, and then ſent him back again. Silverius refuſing to hearken to this Propoſal, he cauſed him to be brought a ſecond time into his Palace, and diſcover'd to him what he was accuſed of: but having ſworn to him that he ſhould have liberty to go away, he was not ſeized. He was ſent for the third time, and after his entrance the Wife of Belliſarius upbraided him with his perfidiouſneſs, and immediately he was ſtript of his Sacerdotal Habit, and his Clergy were told that he was depoſed; and an Order was ſent to them to chooſe Vigilius in his room. Silverius was preſently baniſh'd to Patava, a City of the Province of Lyria. When he was arrived in this City, the Biſhop animated with Zeal for Juſtice, went to wait upon the Emperor, and remonſtrated to him, that it was a thing which cried to Heaven for vengeance, that the Biſhop of a See ſo conſiderable as that of Rome, ſhould be unjuſtly turned out. Juſtinian, who had no hand in this Negotiation, order'd that Silverius ſhould be ſent back into Italy, and that the Letter ſhould be explained which he was charged to have written; that if it was found to be none of his, he ſhould be reſtored to his See; but if it was found to be his, he ſhould have the Title of a ſimple Biſhop of ſome City. The Empreſs ſent immediately Pelagius into Italy to hinder the return of Silverius. But the Order of the Emperor was executed ſo much the more eaſily, becauſe Vigilius had fail'd in his Promiſe, both to the Empreſs, in not doing what ſhe deſir'd, and to Belliſarius, in not giving the Money which he had promiſed. So Silverius was carried back to Italy, but it was only to increaſe his miſery; for Vigilius fearing to be forced away from the Throne which he had invaded, performed the Promiſes which he had made, on condition that Silverius ſhould be deliver'd into his hands. This was put in execution, he was deliver'd to the Guards of Vigilius, and he was baniſh'd into the Iſles of Pontienna and Pandataria, which were over againſt the Mount Cirrellus, where he died of a Famine in great miſery, if we may believe Liberatus. Procopius in his Secret Hiſtory ſeems to inſinuate, that he was kill'd by one named Eugenius, a Man devoted to Antonina the Wife of Belliſarius: but what Procopius ſays may be underſtood, not of the Death of Silverius, but rather of his Accuſation or Apprehenſion.

Pope Silverius.

The Letters attributed to Silverius are feigned upon his Hiſtory.

The firſt wherein 'tis ſuppoſed that he upbraids Vigilius with his Crime, and that he condemns him, is dated under Prince Baſil. Now there was not one of this Name in the time of the Pontificate of Silverius; and beſides this it is Mercator's Style, full of Barbariſms and Phraſes of other Popes. In ſhort, it cannot agree with the Hiſtory, becauſe 'tis ſuppoſed in it, that Silverius after his Depoſition aſſembled a Council, wherein he anathematized Vigilius, which has not the leaſt probability.

The Letter of Amator Biſhop of Autun to Silverius, ſent with the Preſents which this Biſhop is ſuppoſed to make unto him, is alſo a Forgery, as well as the Anſwer of Silverius to this Letter: Both the one and the other are Mercator's Style, and have the ſame Marks of Forgery with the other Letters forged by this Impoſtor.

The Pope VIGILIUS.

The Pope Vigilius.

ALtho' Vigilius was promoted to the See of Rome by a way altogether unjuſt, yet he continued in the poſſeſſion of it after the Death of Silverius, and was acknowledged for a lawful Pope, without proceeding to a new Election, or even confirming that which had been made. The Conduct which he had obſerved during his Pontificate, anſwer'd well enough to its unhappy beginning. He had at firſt approv'd the Doctrine of Anthimus, and that of the Acephali, to ſatisfie the Empreſs: but the Fear of being turned out by the People of Rome, whom he hated, made him quickly recal this Approbation; yet he did not by this gain the Hearts of the Romans. They could not endure an Uſurper, who having been the Cauſe of the Death of their lawful Biſhop, would abuſe them alſo; They accus'd him alſo of having kill'd his Secretary with a Blow of his Fiſt, and of having whipped his Siſter's Son 'till he died. The Empreſs who was not ſatisfi'd with him, becauſe he had gone back from his Word, ſent Anthimus to Rome with an Order to bring him into Greece; and at his Departure the People gave him all ſorts of Imprecations. He was ſometime in the Iſle of Sicily, and arrived not at Conſtantinople until the 20*th*. of January of the Year 547. The Affair of the three Chapters was then warmly diſputed in the Eaſt: and Vigilius having learned in Sicily that they were condemned without his Concurrence, at firſt was very much troubled at it: He teſtified his Diſcontent after his Arrival at Conſtantinople, but he quickly yielded to the Menaces and Intreaties of the Empreſs. Yet he would not grant all that was deſired of him, and propos'd a General Council, thinking by that to gain Time, without diſcontenting any body. Notwithſtanding this, Juſtinian publiſh'd an Edict: Vigilius oppos'd it briskly, and thundred a Sentence of Excommunication againſt Theodorus of Cæſarea, the Author of this Edict, and of Suſpenſion againſt Mennas. He withſtood the Condemnation of the three Chapters which was reſolv'd upon in the fifth Council; he ſuffer'd himſelf to be baniſh'd rather than ſubſcribe to it: Nevertheleſs, not being guided by Zeal for the Truth, but by his own Caprice, or Intereſt, he quickly condemned them after an authentical manner, that he might return into Italy. During his Abſence Rome was taken and ſack'd in 547, by Totila, and retaken in 553 by Narſes General of Juſtinian's Army. The Romans being ſet at Liberty, demanded their Biſhop again, who had been abſent now for many years. Juſtinian offer'd them to ſend him back again to them, or if they had rather, to permit them to ordain the Archdeacon Pelagius. They pray'd him to ſend them Vigilius, promiſing to him that they would chooſe Pelagius after his Death. Juſtinian granted him to them. Vigilius died in Sicily in 555; Pelagius his Succeſſor was ſuſpected to have contributed to his Death, but he purged himſelf by Oath upon the Holy Goſpels and the Croſs.

The Pope Vigilius.

We

The Pope Vigilius.

We have already obſerv'd, that Vigilius to get Silverius into his hands, had conſented to all that the Empreſs deſir'd, by receiving into his Communion the Biſhops of the Faction of the Acephali, and approving their Doctrine. Liberatus relates the Letter which he wrote to them, and aſſures us, that it was accompanied with a Confeſſion of Faith, wherein he condemns thoſe who diſtinguiſh'd the two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt, and made profeſſion of believing one Chriſt only, compos'd of two Natures; pronouncing an Anathema againſt thoſe who admit two Forms in Jeſus Chriſt, who did not acknowledge, that the Miracles and Sufferings belong'd to one and the ſame Chriſt, and did not own that the Word ſuffer'd, and particularly againſt Paulus of Samoſata, Dioſcorus, Theodorus and Theodoret. Baronius and Binius endeavour to make it credible, that this was not Vigilius's; but Liberatus is more to be believ'd than they, and Vigilius was certainly capable of doing it.

The ſecond Letter of Vigilius addreſs'd to Eutherius, is that of the firſt day of March in the year 538. He anſwers this Biſhop about certain Articles, concerning which he had conſulted him. 1. He condemns thoſe who under pretence of Abſtinence ſuperſtitiouſly refrain from eating any Meat, thinking it forbidden, and evil in it ſelf. 2. He orders the Canons of the Holy See to be obſerv'd, concerning the ſolemn Adminiſtration of Baptiſm; and reproves thoſe who cut off the Particle, And, in the Gloria Patri, between the Son and the Holy Spirit, ſinging, Gloria Patri & Filio Spiritui Sancto, inſtead of, & Spiritui Sancto. 3. He ſays, that he had ſent to him who writes the Eccleſiaſtical Canons taken out of the Archives of the Church of Rome, made with reſpect to thoſe, who having been baptized in the Church, were re-baptized by the Arians when they return'd to the Church. He adds, that nevertheleſs, their Penance may be diminiſh'd, in proportion to their Fervor; but that they muſt not be receiv'd by that Impoſition of Hands, which is us'd to cauſe the Holy Spirit to deſcend, but by that which is us'd to reconcile Penitents. 4. He thinks that a Church muſt not be conſecrated anew, which is rebuilt upon the ſame Foundations, but that it is ſufficient to celebrate Meſs in it. This Conſecration was made by throwing Holy Water upon it; for to ſhow that it was not neceſſary to conſecrate it anew, he uſes this Expreſſion, Nihil judicamus officere, ſi per eam minimè aqua benedicta jactetur. 5. He fixes the Day of the Feaſt of Eaſter approaching; he ſays that Divine Service is perform'd after the ſame manner in all the Feaſts, that ſome Chapters only are added, which agree either to the Myſteries, or to the Saint whoſe Feaſt it is: He ſends Reliques to him to whom he writes. Here this Letter ſhould end, for he declares that he had anſwered all the Demands of this Biſhop, and makes him a Compliment wherewith it was uſual to conclude a Letter: Yet there are in it two other Articles, which have no relation to the preceding, nor any Connexion with the Remainder of the Letter. The firſt condemns the Prieſts who name not the three Perſons in adminiſtring Baptiſm; the ſecond is about the Primacy of the Church of Rome. It affirms, that there is no doubt but the Roman Church is the Foundation, Form and Principle of all the Churches, becauſe tho' all the Apoſtles were choſen after the ſame manner, yet St. Peter had the Pre-eminence above the other; which made him be called Cephas, becauſe he is the Head and Prince of the other Apoſtles; that therefore the Church of Rome has the Primacy among all the Churches, and that 'tis neceſſary, that the Cauſes which concern the Perſons of Biſhops, or the important Affairs of the Church, ſhould be communicated to him, and that the Appeals of theſe Cauſes ſhould be reſerv'd to him. 'Tis very probable that theſe two Articles are added.

The Pope Vigilius.

In the third Letter Vigilius makes Anſwer to Cæſarius Biſhop of Arles, about King Theodebert's conſulting him concerning the Penance which ſhould be impoſed upon one who had married his Brother's Wife. Vigilius had already written to the King, that this Crime could not be expiated but by a great Penance: But becauſe 'tis convenient that the Penance ſhould be regulated by the Biſhops upon the place, ſince none but they can know the Condition of the Penitent, he commits this Care to Cæſarius, with whom he leaves full power to regulate the Time and Order of this Penance: But he admoniſhes him to require, that he commit no more ſuch things for the future, and to hinder him and her, who were thus married, from dwelling together.

The fourth Letter is addreſs'd to Juſtinian; there he praiſes the Piety and Faith of this Emperor, who had written to him, that he would inviolably adhere to the Faith eſtabliſh'd in the four General Councils, and in the Letters of St. Cœleſtine and St. Leo. He teſtifies to him that he is of the ſame Judgment, and that he approves what his Predeceſſors Hormiſdas, John and Agapetus had done againſt the Hereticks, and that he condemns the Perſons whom they had condemned. He recommends it to this Prince, that he would maintain the Privileges of the See of Rome, which could not be attack'd without violating, as one may ſay, the Faith.

In the following Letter he congratulates Mennas for being of the ſame Judgment: This is dated Sept. 17*th.* 540.

The 6*th.* 7*th.* and 8*th.* Letters are addreſs'd to Auxanius Biſhop of Arles. In the firſt he grants him the Pallium: In the ſecond he makes him his Vicar in the Kingdom of Childebert, and annexes two Prerogatives to this Title. The firſt is to examine and judge the Cauſes of the Biſhops of this Kingdom, provided notwithſtanding, that if any Cauſes of Faith or of difficult Matters happen, they ſhall be reſerv'd to the Deciſion of the Holy See. The ſecond is that no Biſhop ſhall go out of his Country, without taking Literæ Formatæ from him. He exhorts him afterwards to pray for Juſtinian, and to preſerve the Peace and good Underſtanding between King Childebert and the Emperor.

In the third Letter to Auxanius, Vigilius commiſſions him to judge the Affair of Pretextatus. The firſt of theſe Letters is dated Octob. 18*th.* 543, and the other two May 22*d.* 545. The ſame Day he wrote a fourth to the Biſhops of the Kingdom of Childebert, and to thoſe who were accuſtomed to receive their Conſecration from the Biſhop of Arles, wherein he gives them to underſtand that he had made Auxanius his Vicar, and ſets forth the Rights which he had granted him.

After the Death of Auxanius, he gave the ſame Title and the ſame Privileges to his Succeſſor Aurelianus, as appears by the Letters 10. and 11, written in 546.

The other Letters and Treatiſes of Vigilius having a relation to the Hiſtory of the fifth Council, of which they make a part, we ſhall reſerve them to be ſpoken of upon that Head.

CÆSARIUS Biſhop of Arles.

Cæſarius.

Cæſarius born at Chalons upon the River Sone, a Monk and Abbot of Lerina, and afterwards Biſhop of Arles, was one of the moſt famous Biſhops of France in his time. He was honour'd with divers Letters from the Popes, who made him their Vicar. He aſſiſted at many Councils of France, in which he cauſed very excellent and uſeful Canons to be made. He govern'd the See of Arles from the year 501, to the year 543. He is mentioned in Gennadius's Book of Eccleſiaſtical Writers; but 'tis certain that this place was added: For beſides that, it is not found in ſome Editions, and many Manuſcripts of Gennadius, 'tis evident that Cæſarius was not yet Biſhop of Arles, when Gennadius wrote this Book: Yet this Chapter being written by an ancient Author, we may give credit to what he ſays in it, that Cæſarius compos'd ſome Books very uſeful for Monks. Sigibert of Gemblours calls them Homilies proper for the Monaſtical Life. We have many Homilies which go under his Name, which are publiſhed in the Bibliotheque of the Fathers, in the Collection of M. Baluzius, and among the Sermons of St. Auſtine. Some of them perhaps are none of his, and 'tis certain that ſeveral places are added in them: But theſe Homilies are not Diſcourſes to Monks, but Sermons to the People. He compos'd a very great number of them, not only to ſerve for preaching in his own Church, which he did very often Morning and Evening; but alſo to ſend them to his Brethren of France, Italy and Spain, that they might uſe them for the Inſtruction of their People: From hence it is, that a great number of them are reſtor'd to him in the laſt Edition of St. Auſtine's Sermons. He oftentimes tranſcribed the Sermons of others, and chiefly thoſe of St. Auſtine.

Cæſarius.

He founded a Monaſtery of Nuns at Arles, whereof his Siſter Cæſaria was Abbeſs: He drew up a Rule for them which is in the Collection of Benedict of Aniane, where is found alſo a Diſcourſe exhorting them to Chaſtity; a Letter which he wrote to the Abbeſs, about the manner of governing her Nuns, and the Teſtament of this Biſhop. His Life was written by his Diſciple Cyprianus, by the Prieſt Meſſianus, and by the Deacon Stephen. Theſe Lives are extant in the firſt Benedictine Age; but I queſtion whether they be altogether genuine, and ſuch as they were made by their firſt Authors. The Author who plac'd his Name in Gennadius, attributes to him a Collection of Paſſages out of the Holy Scripture and the Fathers about Grace, which is approv'd by Pope Felix; which is to be underſtood of the Canons of the ſecond Council of Orange, at which Cæſarius aſſiſted.

PONTIANUS.

Pontianus. THis Biſhop wrote a Letter to Juſtinian, wherein he praiſes his Zeal and Piety, and remonſtrates to him, that he thought he could not condemn Theodorus, the Writings of Theodoret and the Letter of Ibas, becauſe he had not ſeen their Writings, and tho' he ſhould ſee them, and find in them things worthy of Condemnation, yet he could not condemn the Authors that died in the Communion of the Church: That he was afraid leſt under the pretence of condemning theſe Authors, they ſhould revive the Hereſie of Eutyches. Laſtly, he informs him that he could not make War with the dead, who are judged by a Judge, from whoſe Judgment there lies no Appeal; and and prays him not to perſecute and put to death thoſe who are alive, to force them to condemn ſome that are dead. This Letter is in the Councils Tome 5. p. 324. Pontianus.

LEO Archbiſhop of Sens.

Leo. THe Biſhops have always been jealous of their Juriſdiction, and vigorouſly oppos'd the Diſmembrings which the Princes would make of the Parts of their Dioceſs: This Archbiſhop of Sens may ſerve for an Example of this. King Childebert would eſtabliſh a Biſhop in the City of Melodunum which was in his Kingdom, tho' it belong'd to the Dioceſs of Sens. Leo wrote to him a civil Letter in defence of his Rights, and to hinder the Erection of this Biſhoprick: He repreſents to him, that this could not be done without the Conſent of King Theodebert, that it was contrary to the Eccleſiaſtical Canons; that he ought not to ſuffer the Peace which was among the Biſhops to be diſturbed by his Order, and that ſome of the People ſhould be withdrawn from under the Juriſdiction of their Biſhop; that he could not alledge as a Pretence for erecting this new Biſhoprick of Melodunum, that the Biſhop of Sens could not make his Viſitation there, becauſe the Ways were ſtopped up; ſince there was nothing to hinder the Biſhop of Sens to go thither, or ſend his Deputy. Laſtly, he declares, that whoſoever ſhall ordain a Biſhop at Melodunum without his Conſent, unleſs it were order'd by the Pope, or in a Synod, ſhall be excluded from his Communion, as well as he who ſhall be ordain'd. This Letter is written under the Reign of Theodebert, which begun in 535, and ended in 548. Leo.

TROJANUS Biſhop of Santones.

Trojanus. THis Biſhop wrote a Letter to Evemerus, or Enmerius Biſhop of Nantes, who had conſulted him, whether he ought to baptize a Perſon who did not remember that he was baptiz'd: He anſwers him, that he ought to baptize all thoſe who did not remember that they were baptized, or had no Proof that they had been baptized. Trojanus.

NICETIUS Biſhop of Treves.

Nicetius. FAther Luc Dachery has given us in the third Tome of his Spicilegium two ſmall Tracts of Piety written by this Biſhop: The one is concerning the Watchings of the Servants of God, and the other concerning the Uſefulneſs of ſinging Pſalms. There are alſo two Letters of this Biſhop; one to Juſtinian, wherein he exhorts him to renounce Hereſie; and another to Chloſdoinda Queen of the Lombards, exhorting her to labour after the Converſion of her Husband. Tome fifth of the Councils, p. 381. Nicetius.

AURELIANUS.

Aurelianus. AUrelianus Biſhop of Arles, and Succeſſor to Cæſarius, whom Vigilius made his Vicar in Gaul, made two Rules; one for the Monks, and another for the Nuns. They are both related in the Code of the Rules of Benedict Abbot of Ancona. This Biſhop aſſiſted at the Council of Lyons held in the year 549. Aurelianus.

TERRADIUS.

Terradius. T*Erradius* or Terridius, a Kinſman of Cæſarius Biſhop of Arles, paſſes for the Author of a Rule made for Monks and Nuns. Terradius.

ARATOR.

Arator. A Rator born in Liguria, was Intendant of the Finances to King Athalaricus, and afterwards Sub-deacon of the Church of Rome, he turn'd into Verſe the Hiſtory of the Acts of the Apoſtles, under the Pontificate of Pope Vigilius. Altho' this Work was much eſteem'd in his own time, yet it has not the like Approbation at preſent, having nothing in it that's ſublime or agreeable. The ſame Author wrote a Letter in Elegiac Verſe to Count Parthenius, which was publiſh'd by Father Sirmondus at the end of Ennodius. Arator.

JUSTINIANUS and JUSTUS Biſhops of Spain.

Juſtinianus, &c. I*Sidore* of Sevil obſerves it as a thing extraordinary, that there were in Spain, under the Reign of Theodius, i. e. toward the year 535, four Brethren born of the ſame Mother, all four Biſhops, and all four Writers.

The firſt is Juſtinian Biſhop of Valentia, who wrote a Treatiſe containing divers Anſwers to the Queſtions of Ruſticus; the firſt concerning the Holy Spirit; the ſecond againſt the Followers of Bonoſus, who believed that Jeſus Chriſt was an adoptive Son, and not the natural Son of God; the third about the Baptiſm of Jeſus Chriſt, to ſhew that it is not lawful to reiterate it; the fourth about the Diſtinction between John's Baptiſm, and that of Jeſus Chriſt; the fifth to prove that the Son is inviſible as the Father. Juſtinianus, &c.

The ſecond was Juſtus Biſhop of Urgellum, who publiſhed a little Commentary upon the Canticles, wherein he explains in a few Words, and very clearly, the allegorical Senſe of this Book of Holy Scripture.

The two other Brethren were called Hebrides and Elpides; but it is not known where they were Biſhops, and what is the Subject of their Writings. We have not now the Work of Juſtinian, but only that of Juſtus upon the Canticles. St. Iſidore has given a ſound Judgment of it: In

it

Justinianus, &c.

In it he expounds very succinctly and clearly the Canticles, by applying it to Jesus Christ and his Church. There are two Letters of the same Bishop in the fifth Tome of the Spicilegium of Luc Dachery, the first whereof is suppositious.

Justinianus, &c.

APRIGIUS.

Aprigius.

Aprigius Bishop of Beia in Portugal, an Eloquent and learned Man, says Isidore of Sevil, has explain'd the Revelation of St. John: He has given a Spiritual Sense of it, and in a noble Style; he seems also to have succeeded better in it, than the greatest part of of the Ancients. He did also write some other Books which are not come to our Knowledge. He flourish'd in the time of King Theodius, i. e. about the Year 540. At present there remains nothing of this Author.

Aprigius.

ARETAS.

Aretas.

THis Aretas, who wrote a Commentary upon the Revelations, taken out of that of Andrew of Cæsarea, is plac'd in the sixth Age of the Church, and he is also thought to be Bishop of Cæsarea; but there is no proof, neither of the one nor the other. This Commentary may be seen in the Bibliotheques of the Fathers.

Aretas.

ZACHARIAS Bishop of Mitylena.

Zacharias.

Zacharias Scholasticus was made Bishop of Mitylena, in the time of Mennas Patriarch of Constantinople, and was present at the fifth Council. He wrote two Treatises about Matters rather Philosophical than Theological: The first is a little Tract against the Opinion of the Manichees concerning the two Principles. The second is a Dialogue of the Creation of the World, wherein he refutes the Philosophers who believ'd it Eternal. These two Treatises are in the Bibliotheques of the Fathers.

Zacharias.

CYRILLUS of Scythopolis.

Cyrillus.

Cyrillus Monk of Scythopolis wrote the Life of the Abbot Enthimus: 'Tis in Latin in Surius at the 20*th* of January, and in Greek and Latin in the second Tome of the Monuments of the Greek Church, publish'd by Mr. Cotelerius; but it is not the same as it was written by Cyril, but as it was amended, or rather corrupted by Metaphrastes. This Life is well enough written, and contains many Historical Circumstances very remarkable.

Cyrillus.

FACUNDUS.

Facundus.

Facundus Bishop of Hermiana, a City of the Province of Byzacena in Africa, being at Constantinople at the time when Justinian would extort from the Bishops the Condemnation of the three Chapters, wrote a Book in defence of them before Vigilius arriv'd at Constantinople. When this Pope was come, Facundus assisted at the Conference which was held upon this Subject; and being afterwards obliged to give his Opinion in Writing, he made Extracts out of his own Book in great haste, the Emperor not allowing him but seven days to give his Opinion, tho' there happen'd two of them to be Festivals. This Facundus himself informs us, in the Preface of his twelve Books written in Defence of the three Chapters.

In the first he handles many Questions concerning the Mystery of the Incarnation. In the first place he commends the Confession of Faith which Justinian had publish'd in the Year 533, and approves also of this Expression, One of the Trinity was crucified; after this he remarks, that the three Chapters were invented by the Eutychians to weaken the Authority of the Council of Chalcedon; that the Origenians, to revenge themselves on those who had condemn'd them, were joyn'd with the Eutychians, and not daring openly to attack the Council of Chalcedon, they had consulted to procure the Condemnation of the Letter of Ibas, which was approv'd in this Council, that they might indirectly condemn the Bishops that were present at it; That, in short, it it was not necessary, for rejecting the Error of the Nestorians, to condemn the three Chapters, but it was sufficient to say, that One of the Trinity suffer'd, and that the Virgin was the Mother of God: That there are some Catholicks, who would not have it said, that one of the Trinity, but, one of the Persons of the Trinity suffer'd: That notwithstanding both the one and the other of these Propositions is capable of a good Sense, but the last does not formally enough exclude the Error of the Nestorians. Here he remarks, en passant, that when it is said in Scripture, that Baptism was administred by the Apostles in the Name of Jesus Christ, this ought to be understood only by way of Opposition to the Baptism of the Jews, and not so as to exclude the Invocation of the other Persons. Afterward he shews, that we ought to say, that the Virgin is truly and properly the Mother of God, and that it may also be said, that God is the Father of a crucified Man, without inferring from thence, that the Divinity was born of a Virgin, or that it was crucified. He proves also against the Eutychians, that there are two Natures in Jesus Christ, and not only one Nature compounded as they affirm. He explains the Passages of Julius and St. Cyril, which they make use of to give Authority to their Sentiment, by proving that these two Bishops acknowledged two Natures in Jesus Christ. He pushes these things yet further, by maintaining that those who admit but one compounded Nature, favour'd the Sentiment of Nestorius, because they cannot say, that this Nature was of the same Substance with that of the Eternal Father, which is most simple, from whence it follows, that the Person of Jesus Christ is not of the same Substance, with the Father. In fine, he observes, that the difference between the Union of the Soul and Body, and that of the Divine and Human Nature in Jesus Christ, consists in this, that the Soul and Body are united into one and the same Nature, whereas the Divine and Human Nature are united into one Person only.

Facundus.

Facundus having discover'd the Purity of his Faith in the first Book, undertakes in the second the Defence of the three Chapters. That he may do this the more freely, he supposes that the Writing against the three Chapters, which goes under the Name of Justinian, is none of his, but that it was composed by the Enemies of the Council of Chalcedon. He cries out, that it were needless to discuss the Writings of Theodorus of Mopsuesta, who died a long while ago in the Communion of the Church; that his Memory is struck at for no other reason, but because he was commended in the Letter of Ibas, approv'd in the Council of Chalcedon; but then he was also commended and approv'd, while he was alive by the Fathers of the Church, as by John Chrysostome, by St. Gregory Nazianzen, by John of Antioch, by Domnus, and even by a Synod of Oriental Bishops held at Antioch; that the Writings of Theodoret, and the Letter of Ibas would not be condemn'd, but only to lessen the Authority of the Council of Chalcedon; and that the chief reason why the Letter of Ibas is attack'd, is, because it clearly distinguishes the two Natures in the Person of Jesus Christ: That the reason which they make use of for condemning it, because St. Cyril is abus'd in it, is a vain pretence, since they say nothing of Gennadius of Constantinople, and Isidore, who have spoken much worse of this Father: That in short, they cannot condemn this Letter of Ibas, because the Council of Chalcedon, having examined it, did not think it convenient to condemn it; and so much the rather, since St. Leo, and the Synodical Assemblies of the Eastern Churches, had declar'd that nothing must be added to the Decisions of this Council: That it was needless to wait for the Judgment of Vigilius, since he could not depart from the Sentiments of his Predecessor, having receiv'd his Sovereign Power for Edification, and not for Destruction, and he had no power against the Truth, but only for the Truth.

Facundus.

Facundus. In the third Book he defends particularly Theodorus of Mopsuesta: In the first place he remarks, that he cannot be condemned without accusing the Council of Chalcedon, or St. Leo, of Error or Negligence. After this he maintains, that the Doctrine of this Bishop was very Orthodox, and that he condemned the Errors of Paulus of Samosata and Nestorius; and he proves from his Writings that he rejected these Errors. He asserts that the Creed which is attributed to him, and was condemned in the Council of Ephesus, is none of his. He gives a good Sense to the Passages which are alledged to prove that he was in an Error; he defends him also against that Accusation, that he had subverted the Prophecies of Jesus Christ.

In the fourth Book he maintains, that we ought not to follow the Judgment of St. Cyril about the Condemnation of Theodorus, since what he says against St. Chrysostome and Diodorus of Tarsus is not approved. He shews that the Eastern Patriarchs acknowledged at first sight, that the Condemnation of the three Chapters was invented only to lessen the Council of Chalcedon. He complains, that notwithstanding they had sign'd it, and cowardly surrendred themselves to the Will of the Prince, he remarks, that Vigilius would not consent to it, and that the greater part of the Western Churches oppos'd it.

The fifth Book is about the Letter of Ibas: He pretends to prove, that the Council of Chalcedon approv'd it, that Ibas never deny'd his writing of it: He affirms as to Theodoret, that he had a Seat in the Council, before the Condemnation of Dioscorus and Eutyches: He shews that St. Leo approved all that was done in the Council, except what concern'd the Pretension of the Patriarch of Constantinople: From whence he concludes that after so solemn an Approbation by the Council and the Pope, 'tis not lawful to condemn this Letter.

He goes further in the sixth and seventh Books, wherein he undertakes to justifie the Judgment of the Council, by shewing that the Letter of Ibas contains no Heresy, and that he acknowledged two Natures and one Person in Jesus Christ. He confesses, that in it he condemn'd St. Cyril and excus'd Nestorius: but he maintains, that this was by a mistake of the matter of Fact, that the Council did not think it their Duty to condemn him for this as an Heretick: That it cannot be charg'd upon him as a Crime, that he prais'd Theodorus of Mopsuesta, since St. Chrysostome, and St. Gregory Nazianzen had also prais'd him.

In the eighth Book he defends Theodorus, first, by shewing that the Holy Fathers and the Eastern Bishops used Expressions like to those of Theodorus; that 'tis false that Proclus proscribed him; that the Eastern Bishops wrote to Theodosius and St. Cyril, that he must not be condemn'd; that Theodosius approv'd their Judgment; that Domnus Bishop of Antioch prais'd him, and declar'd that we must not blacken the memory of those Persons who died in the Communion of the Church; that the Fathers and Bishops of his Time praised and esteem'd him; that St. Cyril is the only Father who condemn'd him, but his Judgment ought not to be prefer'd before all the others.

In the ninth Book he undertakes to justifie Theodorus by his Writings, and to prove that he believ'd that Jesus Christ was God, and that he acknowledg'd in him two Natures united in one Person only: He explains some Expressions of this Author, which may appear harsh: He lays it down for a Rule, that we must interpret obscure and ambiguous Places by those that are clear and evident.

In the tenth Book he shews, that tho' some places were to be blam'd in the Writings of Theodorus, yet the Council had done well not to condemn him, either because these places had not come to their knowledge, or because they were capable of a good Sense, or lastly, because it may be believ'd that they were added by his Enemies: That tho' it were evident that he was in an Error, yet he ought not to be condemn'd as an Heretick, since he was not obstinate in it, and had shewn himself to be of a tractable spirit, by retracting what he had affirm'd: That tho' he had been more culpable, yet Ibas might praise him for what he had written well: That tho' he had been accus'd Judicially in the Council, yet he could not be condemn'd since he died in the Peace and Communion of the Church: That Athanasius was not condemn'd for defending Dionysius of Alexandria; that it is yet more easie to defend Theodorus of Mopsuesta; That the Council had as much right to excuse Theodorus, as St. Basil had to explain the passages of Gregory Thaumaturgus, or St. Hilary to interpret the Expressions of the Councils of Antioch and Sirmium. Lastly, he reprehends four things in the Anathema pronounced against Theodorus of Mopsuesta, against his Doctrine and those of his Opinion. 1. That a Person is anathematiz'd who died in the Communion of the Church. 2. That in anathematizing him, all those who approv'd him are anathematiz'd. 3. That all his Dogmes in general are condemned. 4. That they do not only condemn those who are of his Opinion, but those who have been of it.

In the eleventh Book he shews, that the ancient Fathers us'd many Expressions altogether like those of Theodorus of Mopsuesta: He produces their passages, and argues very much upon them. He observes, that the Expressions of the Fathers ought to be taken in a good Sense, and what being less exact escap'd them ought to be pardon'd. He shews that many of these Expressions are in St. Cyril, which are blam'd in Theodorus. Facundus.

In the last Book he shews at first, that there is a great deal of difference between those Hereticks that are separated from the Church, and even those that lye conceal'd and are obstinate, and those Catholicks who are in an Error thro' Ignorance, or want of understanding things perfectly well, and who continue in an entire submission to the Church. From whence he concludes, that though Theodorus had been in an Error, yet he could not be condemn'd as a Heretick, since he was not only never separated from the Church, but also had signified very much his teachable temper and submission to it. He remonstrates, that it belongs to Princes to submit in Matters of Faith, and they ought not to ascribe to themselves what pertains to the Bishops: He proves this by the Examples of the Emperors Marcianus and Leo, to whom he opposes the Example of the Emperor Zeno. He concludes with an Exhortation to the Emperor to renounce the Error wherein he was engag'd, and proposes to him the Example of the Great Theodosius.

There is a famous passage in the ninth Book about the Eucharist, which seems not to favour the Real Presence: For to excuse Theodorus, who had call'd Jesus Christ an Adopted Son, he maintains, that this Name may be given him, because he had receiv'd the Sacrament or Sign of Adoption, which may be call'd the Adoption it self; as 'tis said, That the Faithful in receiving the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, receive his Body and his Blood; not that the Bread is properly his Body, and the Cup his Blood, but because they contain in them the Mystery of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ *. * This is a notable place against Transubstantiation which Du Pin found too hot for his handling, or else he had never sent us to another for satisfaction, after he had so clearly propos'd the Argument of Facundus in full force.

I shall not stay to answer this, nor to examine the true Sense of this passage, nor to shew that it may agree very well with the Real Presence, because this has been already done by able Writers of Controversie, and particularly by the Author of the Perpetuity, who has forgot nothing that could be said upon this Subject. Every one may consult him.

Facundus having so stoutly defended the three Chapters, did not change his Judgment like Vigilius, on the contrary, he was one of those who continued stedfast unto the end, and chose rather to suffer Banishment, than sign the Condemnation of Theodorus of Mopsuesta, the Writings of Theodoret, and the Letter of Ibas. But that which was most to be blam'd in their Conduct, was, that they did not only disallow this Subscription, but they also separated from the Communion of those who had subscribed.

When the Passages of St. Austine were objected to them, who had very often repeated, that we must suffer the Wicked to be in the Church, and not separate from it upon their account; Facundus undertakes to answer this in a Writing address'd to Mocianus or Mucianus, who was one of those that had a great Value for these Passages, and who compared to the Donatists, those Christians, who separated from the Communion of the Church for the Affair of the three Chapters. Facundus asserts in this Writing, that there is a great deal of Difference between them and the Donatists: That there was no Controversie in the time of the Donatists but concerning Separation and Schism, but now the Question is concerning Faith; that the Example of the Condemnation of Acacius clearly justified their Separation from Communion with those who favour'd Hereticks; that those who sign the Condemnation of the three Chapters, joyn with Hereticks, condemn the Council of Chalcedon, anathematize the Holy Fathers of the Church, and so separate themselves from its Communion: That it is not the Church of Africa which makes this Separation, but it only refuses to communicate with such Persons as were themselves separate from the Communion of the Church. Afterwards he relates what pass'd upon the Condemnation of the three Chapters: He blames the Constitution which Vigilius had made in favour of the three Chapters: And lastly, he maintains that the Bishops of Africa in separating from those who had signed the three Chapters, imitated the Conduct which Hilary and St. Jerome observ'd towards the Arians.

He handles also the same Question in a Letter published by F. D' Achery in the third Tome of his Spicilegium: He affirms that those who condemn the three Chapters, are either Hereticks, or the Successors of Hereticks; Hereticks, if they have unjustly condemn'd them; the Successors of Hereticks, if they did it justly, since their Fathers and Predecessors did not condemn them; and that by condemning the Letter of Ibas, they approve the Doctrine of the Acephali, and reject that of the two Natures in Jesus Christ: From these Principles he concludes that they are Hereticks. He adds, that they usurp a Judgment over the Dead which pertains to God only: He accuses them of changing their

Sentiment

Facundus. Sentiment every Moment, by ſuffering themſelves to be corrupted by Preſents, or the Hopes of Preferment. Afterwards he preſſes thoſe who ſign the Condemnation of the three Chapters, to ſhew the Acts of the Council where Theodoritus was condemn'd, as theſe are ſhewn by which it appears that he was approv'd. He demands of them, whether the Council of Chalcedon is Orthodox or no: If they ſay that it is, he affirms that they are Hereticks, becauſe they condemn that which it approves: If they ſay that it is not, by this they preſently declare themſelves to be Hereticks. He maintains, that thoſe who are joyn'd to theſe who condemn the three Chapters are as faulty as they, and that they ſeparate from the Church by communicating with Hereticks; that if they do not approve them in Words, yet they approve them in Deeds; that 'tis true, nothing is to be preferr'd before Peace, but then, the Authors of the Condemnation of the three Chapters, are they who have broken the Peace, and that nothing hinders the Re-eſtabliſhment of it but their adhering to this Condemnation. Facundus.

This is what remains of the Works of Facundus. He writes with great Eagerneſs, he turns things with much Art and Eloquence: He does often make judicious Remarks, and uſe ſolid Arguments; but his Zeal and Eagerneſs tranſports him ſome times too far, and carries him to make falſe Reflections, and bad Inferences. He had read very well the Treatiſes of the Fathers about the Incarnation, and knew very well the Hiſtory of the Diſputes which the Explication of this Myſtery had rais'd in the Church. Baronius had ſeen the Books of this Author, in a Manuſcript of the Vatican Library, and took many things out of them. Since that F. Sirmondus publiſh'd them in the year 1629, according to a Copy taken from that Manuſcript. They have been printed alſo ſince, together with Optatus in 1676.

VICTOR of Capua.

Victor. Victor Biſhop of Capua liv'd about the middle of the ſixth Age. He compos'd a Paſchal Cycle, wherein he aſſerts that Victorius was miſtaken, in ſetting down the Feaſt of Eaſter for the year 455, to be on the 17*th*. day of April, which ſhould have been the 25*th*. day of the ſame Month in that year. Having light upon a Harmony of the Evangeliſts which he believed to be Tatianus's, he publiſhed it, and took the pains to add to it ſome Marks for diſcovering how many of the Evangeliſts relate the ſame thing. This is obſerv'd in a Preface which he prefix'd to this Work. Victor.

RUSTICUS Deacon of the Church of ROME.

Ruſticus. THis Ruſticus is famous in the Hiſtory of the three Chapters, which he boldly defends againſt the Judgment of Pope Vigilius, by whom he was depos'd. He has left us a Treatiſe in the Form of a Dialogue, written againſt the Acephali, wherein he proves that there are two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt, and that this Doctrine is far enough from the Error of Neſtorius. He ſays, en paſſant, that the Son does not proceed from the Holy Spirit, but 'tis not certainly known, Whether the Holy Spirit proceeds from the Son as from the Father. This Treatiſe is written with much Exactneſs and Clearneſs: In it he mentions a Diſcourſe which he had written againſt the Acephali and the Neſtorians, and promiſes a Treatiſe in Defence of the three Chapters; but theſe Works are now loſt. That of which we have now ſpoken, was printed in divers Collections of Works againſt the Hereticks, and in the Bibliotheques of the Fathers. Some have thought that this is only a Tranſlation, but there is no Probability of that, for Ruſticus himſelf was a Latin, and the Work it ſelf diſcovers ſufficiently that it is an Original, and not a Tranſlation. Ruſticus.

PRIMASIUS.

Primaſius. Rimaſius Biſhop of Adrumettum, a City in the Province of Byzacena, was at Conſtantinople, at the time when the fifth Council was held. Caſſiodorus aſſures us, that he wrote a Commentary upon the Revelations, divided into five Books. This Work was printed at Baſil in 1544, and at Lyons in 1543, together with a Commentary upon all the Epiſtles of St. Paul. Theſe Works are Collections of Extracts out of the Fathers, and Commentators. In the Commentary upon St. Paul, he copies oftentimes that which goes under the Name of St. Jerome.

St. Iſidore of Sevil ſays nothing of theſe Commentaries; but he informs us that Primaſius wrote three Books of Hereſies addreſſed to Fortunatus, wherein he explains what St. Auſtine had left imperfect in his Book of Hereſies, ſhewing in the firſt Book what it is that makes a Heretick. In the ſecond and third, by what Hereticks may be known. Some learned Men think that the Book which F. Sirmondus has publiſhed under the Name of Predeſtinatus, becauſe it had no Title in his Manuſcript, is the Work of Primaſius. This Opinion is not only founded upon a bare Conjecture, but upon the Authority of a Manuſcript of this Treatiſe, found in Germany by F. Mabillon, which bears the Name of Primaſius. This ſeems to be a concluding Argument; but yet if it be well conſider'd what Iſidorus ſays of the Book of Primaſius, and withal we attend to the Doctrine of the Author, intitled Predeſtinatus, it will appear that this cannot be: For the Book written by Primaſius, was not, according to Iſidore, a Catalogue of Hereſies, but it was a Treatiſe, wherein he undertook to reſolve the Queſtion which St. Auſtine propoſed to himſelf, and which he deſign'd to handle in the ſecond Part of his Book of Hereſies, viz. Wherein conſiſts Hereſie, and how it may be known when a Perſon is a Heretick. Now there is not a Word ſaid of this Queſtion in the Treatiſe publiſh'd by Father Sirmondus under the Name of Predeſtinatus. 'Tis divided into three Parts, but the firſt is a Catalogue of Hereſies; the ſecond is a Treatiſe compos'd under the Name of St. Auſtine by a pretended Predeſtinarian; the third is a Confutation of this Treatiſe: This is wholly different from the Subject of that whereof Iſidorus ſpeaks. Primaſius.

Moreover, Primaſius was a faithful Diſciple of the Doctrine of St. Auſtine, as appears by his Commentaries; but this Author on the contrary is one of his greateſt Enemies; and in ſome places he aſſerts Doctrines which are altogether Pelagian. 'Tis very probable therefore, that ſome half learned Man, knowing that Primaſius had written a Treatiſe of Hereſies, divided into three Parts, and finding an anonymous Author upon the ſame Subject, which was alſo divided into three Parts, made no ſcruple to put the Name of this Biſhop to it.

JUNILIUS.

Junilius. Junilius a Biſhop of Africa, addreſs'd to him of whom we ſpoke laſt, a Treatiſe of the Parts of the Divine Law, which is a kind of Introduction to the Study of the Holy Scripture. Caſſiodorus mentions it. The Author ſays that he had this Work from one Perſanus, named Paul, who had ſtudied at Niſibis, where there was a publick School for teaching the Holy Scripture. The Reflections of this Author are very judicious and methodical. Here follows an Abridgment of it: The Knowledge of the Scripture conſiſts of two Parts; The firſt concerns the Surface or the Diction of the Scripture; the ſecond concerns the things themſelves which the Scripture teaches us. The firſt Part contains five things; the Nature of the Book, its Authority, its Author, the Manner wherein it is written, and the Order wherein it ought to be placed. There are in it five kinds of Books; Hiſtory, which is the Relation of things paſt; of which kind the Author reckons but ſeventeen Canonical Books in the old and new Teſtament, and rejects as Apocryphal, not only the Books of Maccabees and that of Judith, but alſo the two Books of Chronicles, the Book of Job, the two Books of Eſdras, and the Book of Eſther. Prophecy is the ſecond kind of Books in the Holy Scripture; which he defines, a Declaration of things paſt, preſent, or future. Of this kind he finds ſeventeen Books in both the Teſtaments, and obſerves that the Orientaliſts reject the Apocalypſe. The third manner of writing is the proverbial Manner, which he defines, a figurative way of Speaking, which intends ſomething elſe to be underſtood Junilius.

Junilius. than what it ſignifies, and contains Advices for the preſent time. The Proverbs of Solomon, Eccleſiaſtes and the Wiſdom of Syrach, i. e Eccleſiaſticus, are of this kind; to theſe may be added the Book of Wiſdom and the Canticles: Allegory pertains to this kind, which is taken either from a Metaphor, or a Compariſon, or a Parable, or from a proverbial way of Speaking. Laſtly, the laſt Manner is that of mere Inſtruction; the Epiſtles of St. Paul are of this kind.

As to the Authority of Scripture, he obſerves, that there are Books of a perfect Authority, and others of a leſs perfect, and others laſtly which are of none at all.

The Authors of theſe Books are known, either by their Titles, or by the beginning of their Works. Moſes is the Author of the Pentateuque, Joſhua of the Book which goes under his Name, Samuel of the firſt Book of the Kings. There are Books in it whoſe Authors are altogether unknown, as the Book of Judges, of Ruth, and the laſt Book of Kings.

Among theſe Books, there are ſome written in Verſe, as the Pſalms, the Book of Job, and ſome places of the Prophets; and others in Proſe.

The Order of the Books of Scripture is not different from ours.

This is what concerns the external Surface of the Scripture: As to the Subſtance of the things which it teaches, the Author obſerves that there are in it ſome Names that agree to the Eſſence, and others to the Perſons of the Trinity; and among theſe there are ſome which preciſely denote them, and others only conſequentially, becauſe they ſignifie the Operations which are attributed to them: He gives Examples of them, and ſhews what is common to the three Perſons, and what is particular to each. Laſtly, he ſpeaks of the Attributes which agree to God. Junilius.

In the ſecond Book he makes a particular Enumeration of what the Scripture teaches concerning the Creatures, and explains after what manner God governs them: From thence he paſſes to what concerns the World to come. He treats of the Figures of the Law, and the fulfilling of Prophecies concerning Jeſus Chriſt. Laſtly, he enquires, how it may be prov'd, that the Books of our Religion are Divinely inſpired: And he anſwers, that it may be known by the Truth of them it ſelf, by the Order of Things, by the admirable Agreement of Precepts, by the Simplicity and Purity wherewith they are written: That to theſe Characters we muſt add the Qualities of thoſe that wrote them, and who preached the Doctrine which they contain, becauſe it was not poſſible, without the Inſpiration of the Holy Spirit, that Men ſhould write of Divine things, that ſimple Men ſhould write of things ſo Sublime, that Men ſo ignorant and plain ſhould diſcover the Truths ſo great and ſubtile, that the ſucceſs of their Preaching was alſo a proof of the Truth of their Doctrine: For how was it poſſible, that Perſons ſo deſpicable ſhould convert the whole World, reform the Doctrines of the Philoſophers, and confound their Adverſaries, without the Aſſiſtance of a viſible Protection from God. Laſtly, that the Accompliſhment of Prophecies, and the Miracles which produc'd a Belief of our Religion, were convincing Proofs of its Truth; and that if at preſent no Miracles are wrought, it is becauſe there is no need of them, becauſe the Eſtabliſhment of this Religion is a Miracle more than ſufficient to prove it.

This is what is moſt uſeful in this Treatiſe, which is to be found in the Bibliotheques of the Fathers.

LIBERATUS.

Liberatus. LIberatus a Deacon of the Church of Carthage, and a Defender of the three Chapters, is the Author of an Hiſtorical Memorial of the Conteſt that aroſe about the Hereſies of Neſtorius, and Eutyches. He begins with the Ordination of Neſtorius, and ends at the fifth Council, i. e. in 453. This Memorial therefore was not written by Liberatus, till after the Year 560. It contains ſome very uſeful particulars of this Hiſtory, which are no where elſe to be found, and Extracts of the Authentick Acts to juſtifie what he affirms. This Work was publiſh'd by F. Garner in 1675. It is alſo in the fifth Tome of the laſt Collection of the Councils. Liberatus.

VICTOR of Tunona.

Victor. VIctor Biſhop of Tunona in Africa was alſo one of the zealous Defenders of the three Chapters; for which reaſon he was baniſh'd into Egypt, and afwards ſhut up in a Monaſtery, at Conſtantinople. Iſidore of Sevil informs us, that he made a Chronicon from the beginning of the World to the firſt Year of the Empire of Juſtin the younger, wherein he plac'd in Order the Conſuls, the moſt memorable Events of War, and the Holy Fathers of the Church. We have nothing now remaining but one part of this Chronicon, which begins where that of St. Proſper ends, i. e. in the Year 444, and ends at the Year 565. In it he particularly deſcribes what concerns the Hiſtory of Eutyches, and the Affair of the three Chapters. Caniſius was the firſt that cauſed it to be printed at Ingolſtadt in the Year 1600, and ſince that Scaliger has inſerted it into his Treaſure of Time. Victor.

PAULUS SILENTIARIUS.

Paulus Silentiarius. PAulus Cyrus Florus, chief of the Silentiarii of the Palace, flouriſhed towards the middle of the ſixth Age. He made a long Poem containing a Deſcription of the Temple of Sancta Sophia which is Printed at the end of the Hiſtory of Cinnamus. [He wrote alſo many other excellent Poems, ſays Dr. Cave out of Agathias De Rebus Juſtiniani, Hiſt. Lit. p. 416.] Paulus Silentiarius.

PELAGIUS the Firſt.

Pelagius I. PElagius, after he had been a long time at Conſtantinople, returned into Italy with Pope Vigilius, and was ordain'd, after the death of this Pope, by two Biſhops, in the preſence of a Prieſt of the Church of Oſtia. This extraordinary Ordination, and the ſuſpicion that went about of him, that he had been the cauſe of the death of his Predeceſſor, induc'd many to ſeparate from his Communion, and brought upon him the hatred of the People. To purge himſelf, he mounted into a Chair, after a ſolemn Proceſſion from the Church of St. Pancratius to that of St. Peter, and ſwore upon the Holy Evangeliſts and the Croſs, that he was no wiſe guilty of that whereof he was accus'd; the People were ſatisfy'd with this Oath, and with the Prohibition he made againſt giving Money for Ordinations.

Altho' there was nothing remarkable that happen'd in the Church during the Pontificate of this Pope, which laſted almoſt five years, yet he has written many Letters.

The firſt, addreſs'd to Vigilius, is a Suppoſititious Piece, made up of Paſſages patched together, which are taken out of St. Leo Itachius, the date whereof is falſe.

The ſecond is addreſs'd to Count Narſes; He prays him to aſſiſt Peter the Prieſt, and the Deacon Projectus, whom he had ſent to perſecute two Biſhops of Italy, who diſturb'd the Order of the Churches, and would appropriate to themſelves all the Eccleſiaſtical Revenues. Pelagius I.

In the third he exhorts the ſame Count to employ the Authority which his Office gave him, for correcting and puniſhing the Biſhops of Iſtria, Liguria, and the Country of Venice, who had ſeparated from the other Churches, for the Affair of the three Chapters. He remarks that if they had any Complaints to make againſt the Deciſion of the Council of Conſtantinople, they ſhould ſend Deputies to the Holy See, and not rend in pieces the Body of Chriſt by their Separation.

In the fourth Letter he inveighs vehemently againſt the ſame Biſhops for their boldneſs in excommunicating Narſes. He exhorts him to employ his Authority for puniſhing Euphraſius, who was guilty of Murder, and an Inceſtuous Adultery. He counſels him to drive the Obſtinate out of the Province, and to ſend the Authors of this Schiſm to the Emperor, and chiefly him who was in the See of Aquileia who being, ſays he, a Schiſmatick, ought to have neither the Name nor Dignity of a Biſhop.

He recommends it alſo to Narſes, by another Letter to ſend the Biſhops of Aquileia and Milan to the Emperor with a ſtrong Guard, becauſe the firſt was incapable of being a Biſhop ſhop by his irregular Ordination, and the ſecond ought to be puniſh'd for Ordaining after ſuch a manner.

Pelagius I.

The ſixth Letter of Pelagius is addreſs'd to the Biſhops of Tuſcany who would alſo ſeparate from the other Churches for the Affair of the three Chapters: He remonſtrates to them what a Crime it is to break the peace of the Church, and make a Schiſm. He declares to them that he profeſſes the Faith of the four firſt Councils, and the Doctrine contain'd in the Letter of St. Leo; and he admoniſhes them, if they have yet any ſcruple, to come to him that they may have it reſolv'd. This Letter is dated Febr. 16. 556.

The ſeventh Letter is this Pope's Confeſſion of Faith addreſs'd to the whole Church, wherein he declares, that he has a Veneration for the four firſt Councils, and that he will never undertake to leſſen the Authority of their Deciſions about the Faith, that he follows and approves the Canons which were received by the Church of Rome: That he is ready to vindicate the Letters which his Predeceſſors, beginning at Cæleſtine, and ending at Agapetus, had written in Defence of the Faith and the Authority of the four firſt Councils; that he condemns thoſe whom they have condemn'd, and receives thoſe whom they have receiv'd, even Theodoret and Ibas whom he believes to be Orthodox.

The nine following Letters are written to Subaudus Biſhop of Arles, or to Childebert King of France: In the Letters he ſends to Childebert his Confeſſion of Faith: He grants the Pallium and the Office of Vicar to Subaudus; he prays Childebert to maintain this Biſhop in his Rights, and complains that he would have him judg'd by another Biſhop. He prays that the Revenues of the Church of Rome that are in France, may be employ'd for buying Garments to the Poor, and that they may be ſent to him. There are alſo the Fragments of ſome other Letters of Pelagius written to ſeveral Perſons: The firſt are about the Ordination of Paulinus Biſhop of Aquileia, made by the Biſhop of Milan: He confeſſes that the Biſhops of theſe two Sees have mutually ordain'd one another; but he affirms that this Ordination was made in that City whoſe See was vacant. He rejects the Ordination of Paulinus, becauſe it was at Milan, againſt the Will of the Holy See, and the Order of the Emperor. He remarks, that even during the Wars between the Goths and Franks, the Ordination of the Biſhop of Milan had been ſtopped, until he receiv'd Orders from the Emperor. In the third he declares, that 'twas a year before he ordain'd him who was choſen Biſhop of Syracuſe, becauſe he was married and had Children; but becauſe thoſe of Syracuſe would not chooſe another, he thought fit to paſs it by, after he had promiſed to him, that he would neither directly nor indirectly take any part of the Poſſeſſions of the Church, nor leave any thing to his Children or Heirs. The other Letters concern particular Affairs, as the Foundations of Churches. He remarks, that for building a Church they ſhould chooſe a Place where no body has been buried.

Pelagius I.

AGNELLUS.

Agnellus.

'Tis thought that this Agnellus, who was a rich Man, and deſcended of a good Family, was Biſhop of Ravenna from the Year 558 to the Year 566, and that he was the Author of a Letter to Armenius concerning the Faith, which is found in the Bibliotheque of the Fathers. Trithemius being the only Perſon who ſpeaks of this Author and this Work, there is no full aſſurance whether it be ſo or no. However it be this Letter is in conſiderable: The Author affirms in it, that the Holy Spirit proceeds from the Father and the Son.

Agnellus.

LEONTIUS.

Leontius.

Leontius, a Native of Conſtantinople, was an Advocate, and afterwards a Monk in the Lavra of St. Sobas; he liv'd till about the end of the ſixth Century, for he reckons Eulogius among the Biſhops of Alexandria, who held this See from the Year 581, to the Year 604. He is different from Leontius Byzacenus who is mention'd in the Life of St. Sabas, and St. Quiriacus; for this Leontius was an Origenian, and defended the Doctrines of Theodorus of Mopſueſta: But he on the contrary declar'd openly againſt Origen and Theodorus.

This Author's firſt Work is his Treatiſe of the Sects of Hereticks which contains ten Actions, being the Diſcourſes or Conferences of the Abbot Theodorus.

The firſt contains an Abridgment of the Hiſtory of our Faith, ſhort Remarks upon the Doctrine of Arius, Sabellius, Neſtorius, and Eutyches, an Expoſition of the Faith of the Church about the Trinity and Incarnation, and the Diſtinction of Nature and Perſonality.

The ſecond contains a Catalogue of the Canonical Books of the Old Teſtament, agreeable to that of the Jews, and of thoſe of the New, agreeable to ours, and general Proofs of the coming of the Meſſias.

The third contains a Liſt of the Fathers, who liv'd from the Birth of Jeſus Chriſt until Conſtantine, and alſo of ſome of thoſe who flouriſh'd ſince. He ſpeaks alſo there of the Principal Hereſies which aroſe in that ſpace of time.

In the fourth Action he enquires into the Origine of the Hereſies of Macedonius, Apollinaris, Neſtorius, Eutyches, and continues this Hiſtory down to the Condemnation of Dioſcorus.

The fifth Action relates the Controverſies that aroſe in the Church, upon occaſion of the Council of Chalcedon, which were ſettled by the Authority of the Emperor, and renew'd again by the Queſtion of the Corruptibility and Incorruptibility of Jeſus Chriſt, to which the Agnoetæ and Tritheites ſucceeded.

The four following Actions contain Anſwers to the Objections which were made againſt the Council of Chalcedon: The firſt anſwers the Hiſtorical Difficulties, the ſecond the Reaſoning Part, and the third the Authorities of the Fathers. The laſt explains the paſſages of the Council, which were alledged to prove that the Council favour'd the Doctrines of Neſtorius.

The tenth Action is againſt the Gaianites, the Agnoetes, and Origeniſts.

The ſame Author has written alſo three Books againſt the Errors of Neſtorius and Eutyches. The firſt is intituled, A Confutation of the contrary Figments of Neſtorius and Eutyches, concerning the Divinity and Humanity of Jeſus Chriſt. He proves againſt Eutyches, that there are two Natures, and againſt Neſtorius, that there is but one Hypoſtaſis, or Perſon in Jeſus Chriſt: He explains in what Senſe St. Cyril could ſay that there is but one Nature of the Word Incarnate; and proves what he affirms by Reaſons and the Authorities of the Fathers.

Leontius.

The ſecond Book is againſt the Error of thoſe who maintain'd that the Body of Jeſus Chriſt was incorruptible before his Reſurrection: 'Tis compos'd of two Parts; the firſt is a Dialogue of one that is Orthodox with one engag'd in that Error; and the ſecond is a Collection of the Authorities of the Fathers, to which he prefixes the Books aſcribed to St. Dionyſius the Areopagite.

In the third Book he diſcovers the Artifices which the Neſtorians of his time made uſe of for diſguiſing their Sentiments. He ſays, that at firſt they feign themſelves to be no wiſe concern'd for the Memory of Diodorus of Tarſus, and Theodorus of Mopſueſta, that they make a ſhow of approving the Council of Chalcedon, that they cauſe the Books of their Authors to be read, that they entice Men with fair Promiſes, that they make a faint condemning of Neſtorius, that they make no ſcruple to communicate with Catholicks, and even to take the Communion with them, for, ſay they, the Bread which is offer'd to repreſent Jeſus Chriſt, has always a greater Bleſſing than common Bread, or that which the Philomarianites offer in the Name of * Mary. After this he is tranſported to Invectives againſt the Memory of Theodorus. He accuſes him of being one whom St. John Chryſoſtome exhorts to do Penance for his want of Moderation, of having corrupted the Scripture by his Commentaries, of endeavouring to uſurp the See of the Church of Tarſus, if he had not been hindred by Theophilus; of having condemned the Name of the Mother of God; of ſcoffing at the Writings of the Fathers; of giving a mean and low Senſe to the Scripture, altogether unworthy of the Holy Spirit; of ſpeaking ill of Job, and rejecting the Canonical Epiſtles; of having interpreted the Pſalms after a Jewiſh manner, by applying them all to the Hiſtory of the Time, and referring but three of them to Jeſus Chriſt; of interpreting the Canticles of Carnal Amours; of rejecting the Books of Eſdras and the Chronicles; of making another Creed than that of Nice; of making a new Maſs; of not believing the laſt Judgment; of denying Original Sin; of ſaying with the Manichees, that Darkneſs was a Subſtance; of affirming that Antichriſt ſhould be annihilated; of affirming that many Events came by chance; and laſtly to load to him with Impiety, of affirming that Jeſus Chriſt was a mere Man, and yet that he ought to be ador'd. After this Leontius quotes ſome paſſages taken from the Writings of Theodorus, to prove that he maintained the ſame Doctrines which were taught by Neſtorius.

Leontius.

* This paſſage plainly contradicts Tranſubſtantiation by ſaying that it is Bread which is offer'd, after conſecration, to repreſent Jeſus Chriſt, and comparing it with common Bread; and tho' it be ſpoken by a Heretick, yet it is not cenſur'd neither by Leontius here who writes ſeverely againſt all his Particular Errors, nor by any other Catholick Writers, which ſhews that it was a Doctrine then commonly receiv'd, or at leaſt it was not thought a dangerous Error, and much leſs a Hereſy.

Leontius. The ſame Author wrote a Treatiſe to prove, that the Letters alledged by the Eutychians under the Names of Gregory Thaumaturgus, Julius, and St. Anathaſius, were ſuppolititious. This he endeavours to prove by ſhewing the Agreement between ſome Expreſſions of this Heretick and his Diſciples, and thoſe that are in theſe Letters. This Argument is not very convincing, for the Fathers may poſſibly uſe the ſame Expreſſions with Apollinaris and his Diſciples, tho' in another Senſe.

There is alſo a Treatiſe of his by way of Dialogue, which contains the Objections of the Acephali, and the Anſwers which may be given them; a Collection of Propoſitions againſt thoſe who deny that there are two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt after the Union, and a Sermon on the Feſtival which is celebrated between Eaſter and Whitſunday. There are alſo in the Manuſcripts ſome other Treatiſes of this Author, as a Treatiſe of the two Natures againſt the Monophyſites, and a Diſputation againſt an Arian Philoſopher. The Treatiſe of Sects was printed in Greek at Baſil 1570, in Octavo, and in Latin tranſlated by Leuvenclavius, with the Embaſſy of Alexis Comnenus; and it has been ſince inſerted in the firſt Addition to the Bibliotheque of the Fathers. The other Treatiſes have been publiſhed in Latin by Caniſius and put into the laſt Bibliotheque of the Fathers, printed at Lyons, the greateſt and largeſt Collection of the Fathers that ever was made. The Sermon upon the Feſtival between Eaſter and Whitſunday was publiſh'd in Greek by Father Combefis, in the firſt Addition to the Bibliotheque of the Fathers, with another Sermon upon the ſame Subject, written by another Leontius Biſhop of Cyprus, which is quoted in the ſeventh Council, Act 4. He of whom we have now ſpoken had a very ſubtile Wit, but not very ſublime; he was moderately learned and much prejudic'd; his Style is mean, and not at all pleaſant. Leontius.

FORTUNATUS.

Fortunatus. VEnantius Honorius Fortunatus was born in Italy, and after he had ſtudied at Ravenna, he ſettled in France. He was ordain'd Prieſt of the Church of Poictiers towards the Year 565, and ſome time after Biſhop of the ſame Church. He liv'd till the beginning of the next Age, and was an intimate Friend to Gregory of Tours. The principal Works of this Author are written in Verſe. He wrote four Books of the Life of St. Martinus, addreſs'd to Gregory of Tours his intimate Friend, in acknowledgment for the Cure he had receiv'd of a Diſtemper in his Eyes, by rubbing them with the Oyl of a Lamp lighted before the Sepulchre of this Saint, and eleven Books of different Poems.

The firſt contains the Deſcription of many Churches, and the Praiſes of Leontius Biſhop of Bourdeaux.

The ſecond the Hymns upon the Croſs, and among them the Pange lingua, and the Vexilla regis, which are his, the Verſes in the praiſe of the Clergy of Paris, with a Deſcription of the Church of that City, and Verſes to the Honour of many Saints.

The third contains Letters to Euphronius Biſhop of Tours, and to Felix Biſhop of Nantes, a Deſcription of the Church of Nantes, and Verſes addreſs'd to many Biſhops.

The fourth Book is a Collection of Epitaphs; to which are joyn'd a Letter to Avitus Biſhop of Clermont, and a Poem upon the Converſion of the Jews, a Letter to Siagrius Biſhop of Autun, which accompanies a Piece of Poetry upon the Life of Jeſus Chriſt, wherein he is tied up to a certain number of Words and Letters. Laſtly, this Book contains many Papers of Verſes.

The fifth and ſixth are for the moſt part written upon profane Subjects.

In the ſeventh among other Pieces, there is an excellent Deſcription of the Aſſembly of the Saints in Heaven: There he notes the Country where each of the Apoſtles was in his time believ'd to dye. Fortunatus.

That which is moſt remarkable in the eighth is the Pieces addreſs'd to Chilperic, and the Epigrams upon the Actions of St. Martin.

The tenth is made up of many Papers to the Princeſs Radegondes.

The eleventh is not yet printed.

Beſides theſe Poetical Works, Fortunatus wrote alſo in Proſe the Lives of many Saints, as the Monk Himonius affirms. There are many of them among thoſe which have been collected by Surius and Bollandus, and among others, the Lives of St. Hilary of Poictiers, St. Albinus of Angers, St. Germanus of Paris, St. Medardus of Noyon, St. Radegondes, St. Maurilius of Angers, St. Remigius of Rheimes, St. Marcellus of Paris, St. Amandus of Rhodes.

Fortunatus paſs'd in his own time for an excellent Orator and a good Poet, and not without Reaſon; for he did not only excel all the other Poets of his Age, but he came near to thoſe of a better, not only for the Truth, but the Purity of his Expreſſions, not for the Beauty of his Verſe, but for the poetical Turn he gave it, and the wonderful Eaſineſs wherewith he wrote in Verſe.

His poetical Works were printed at Mayence in 1603, and in 1616, and inſerted into the Bibliotheques of the Fathers: But theſe Editions were very imperfect. F. Labbe has promiſed a more large and correct Edition of them, which is ſaid to be all ready for the Preſs.

BANDONINIA.

Bandonia. THis Maid was one brought up by St. Radegondes; ſhe has added a ſecond Book of the Life of this Saint, to that of Fortunatus: 'Tis printed by Surius, Tome 4. at the 13*th*. Day of Auguſt. Bandonia.

St. GERMANUS Biſhop of Paris.

St. Germanus. WE have an excellent Letter of this Holy Biſhop written to Queen Brunechildes, wherein he exhorts her very ſmartly, and withal very reſpectfully, to hinder King Sigibert from making War upon King Chilperic: In the Title he aſſumes the Name of a Preacher. It is publiſhed in the fifth Tome of the Councils, p. 923. St. Germanus.

MARTINUS of Bracara.

Martinus. MArtinus, who was born in Italy, came into Gallæcia, where he was Abbot of Dumes, and afterward Biſhop of Bracara: He flouriſh'd in the time of Miro, or Theodomirus, King of the Suevi, and Athanildes King of the Goths in Spain. He converted many of the Suevi, held Councils at Bracara in 572, and died in 580. Martinus.

The principal Eccleſiaſtical Work of this Biſhop, is a Collection of the Canons of the Greek Church, which he took the pains to tranſlate himſelf into Latin, finding that the former Tranſlations were not faithful. It contains 84 Canons or Chapters, whereof 68 concern Eccleſiaſtical Men.

The manner of living virtuouſly, or a Treatiſe of the four Cardinal Virtues, attributed to Seneca under the Name of a Book of Manners, is this Biſhop's. The Verſion of ſome Sentences of the Greek Monks, collected by an unknown Author, is alſo attributed to him.

PASCHASIUS.

Paſchaſius PAſchaſius a Deacon, who liv'd in the time of Martin of Bracara, tranſlated at his Requeſt, the Queſtions and Anſwers of ſome Greek Monks. He dedicates to him his Tranſlation, which makes the ſeventh Book of the Lives of the Fathers in Roſweidus. Paſchaſius JOANNES SCHOLASTICUS Patriarch of Constantinople.

J. Schol.

John sirnamed Scholasticus, becauſe he had followed for ſome time the Bar, was ordain'd Prieſt of the Church of Antioch, and had the Commiſſion of a Surrogate to the Church of Conſtantinople. He was put in the place of Eutychius Patriarch of Conſtantinople, who had been turn'd out by Juſtinian, and govern'd this Church till the Year 578. After his death Eutychius was reſtor'd.

This Author made a Collection of the Canons, which were diſpoſed according to the Order of the Matters, and another Collection of Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Laws, and Chapters. His Works are printed in the Bibliotheca Juris publiſhed by Juſtellus.

J. Schol.

GREGORY of Tours.

Gregory.

Georgius Florentius Gregorius Biſhop of Tours, was deſcended of an illuſtrious Family of Arvernia, and the Son of Florentius Brother of Gallus Biſhop of Clermont. He ſucceeded Euphronius Biſhop of Tours in the Year 574.

The principal Work of Gregory is his Hiſtory of France, divided into ten Books. In the firſt, having made a Confeſſion of his Faith, and given a Scheme or Abridgment of Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory from the Beginning of the World, he relates the Origine of Chriſtianity among the Gauls, by Photinus Biſhop of Lyons, and the famous Miſſion of ſeven Biſhops ſent in the time of the Emperor Decius, viz. St. Saturninus to Tholouſe, St. Gratianus to Tours, St. Trophimus to Arles, St. Paul to Narbonna, St. Denis to Paris, St. Stremonius to Clermont, and St. Martial to Lemovicum. He concludes this Book with the Death of St. Martin, and in thoſe that follow he continues the Eccleſiaſtical and Prophane Hiſtory of the Gauls and Franks until his own time, i. e. until the Year 596. Fredegarius has ſince added to it an eleventh Book, wherein he has continued the Hiſtory to the Reign of Charlemagne.

He wrote alſo eight other Books, concerning the Miracles or the Lives of the Saints. In the firſt he relates the Miracles of Jeſus Chriſt, the Apoſtles and Martyrs: In the ſecond, he recounts many Miracles of St. Juſtin, who was martyr'd in Arvernia. The four following Books contain many Miracles of St. Martin of Tours; the ſeventh contains the Lives of ſome Holy Monks, intitled, The Lives of the Fathers, at the end whereof is a Letter concerning the Hiſtory of the ſeven Sleepers: And the laſt is concerning the Glory or the Miracles of ſome holy Confeſſors. He himſelf mentions his Works, which were printed at Paris in 1640.

Gregory.

Beſides this, he wrote a Commentary upon the Pſalms, and compoſed a Treatiſe De Curſibus Eccleſiaſticis, or The Divine Offices: The Lives of ſome Saints are alſo attributed to him. He ſpeaks of a Preface which he had prefixed to a Treatiſe of Meſſes written by Sidonius. Sigibert ſays, that he compos'd his Hiſtory of France in the way of an Epitome, and made a Chronicon.

This Author had reaſon to confeſs himſelf that his Style was rude and ruſtical; which ought not to be taken for a Figure, but a ſincere Confeſſion of the thing as it is: His Style is low and mean, his Words are harſh. He was credulous and ſimple as to the Matter of Miracles, and vented boldly ſuch Hiſtories as are uncertain or fabulous. But notwithſtanding this, his Hiſtory is very uſeful, and contains many things of great Conſequence. He died in the Year 596.

GILDAS.

Gildas.

Gildas, to whom is given the Name of Wiſe, was born in England in the year 520, which was fatal to the Saxons, for the Battle fought by Arthur King of the Britons, near the Mountain of Badon; which made this Author be ſirnamed Badonicus, to diſtinguiſh him from another Gildas elder than he, ſirnam'd the Albanian. He was the Diſciple of Iſtutus the Abbot of Morgan, and was made Abbot of Bangor, and founded a Monaſtery at Venetia in Britain.

In the year 564 he wrote a Lamentation for the Miſeries of England, with a ſevere Reprimand to the Members of that Kingdom. In this Work he deſcribes rather by weeping then declaiming, as he himſelf ſays, the former and later Miſeries of poor England. He ſpeaks freely againſt its Diſſolution of Manners, without ſparing Kings, againſt the Crimes from which it was delivered after a terrible Manner. He uſes the Words of the Prophets to terrifie them, and afterwards addreſſes his Diſcourſe particularly to the Clergy, and makes a moſt hideous Repreſentation of their Manners. England, ſays he, has Biſhops enough, but they are either Fools, or Miniſters to the Paſſions of great or unchaſte Men: It has Clergy enough, but for the moſt part they are all wicked and Whoremongers: They have only the Name of Paſtors, and are at the Bottom Wolves prepar'd to kill the Souls of their Sheep: They never think of doing good to the People, but only how to fill their Bellies; they ſeek for Churches, but it is only out of a greedy Deſire of filthy Gain; they teach the People, but at the ſame time, they give them bad Examples; they very ſeldom offer Sacrifice, and never go to the Altar with a clean Heart; they flatter the People in their Crimes, and ſeek only to ſatisfie their Paſſions; they very ſeldom ſpeak the Truth; they deſpiſe the Poor, and make Court to Riches; they canvaſs for, and purchaſe Eccleſiaſtical Offices. After he has given this frightful Pourtraiture of the Clergy of England, he propoſes to them the Examples of St. Ignatius and St. Polycarp: He uſes the Words of the Prophets and Apoſtles for reproving them, and upbraiding them with their Vices. He concludes with a Prayer to God to preſerve the ſmall number of good Paſtors that was left.

Gildas.

This is the only true Work of Gildas, for the ridiculous Predictions that are attributed to him are a pure Forgery; and there is no Probability that he compos'd the Comedy call'd Aulularia, altho' it goes under his Name in ſome Manuſcripts. There are found in the Manuſcripts of England, ſome Manuſcripts that go under the Name of Gildas, which may be rather his than the former. His Style is pure enough for his Age. He ſpoke with extraordinary Earneſtneſs, and unparallell'd Freedom. He died in 570.

EVANTIUS.

Evantius.

Evantius or Evantus, Biſhop of Vienna, whoſe Name is among the Subſcriptions of the firſt Council of Maſcon in 582, of the third of Lyons in 583, of the third of Valentia in 584, and of the ſecond of Maſcon in 585, paſſes for the Author of a Letter, written againſt thoſe who believ'd that the Blood of Animals is impure, altho' their Fleſh be not ſo. There he maintains that we may eat of the Blood of Beaſts, and that it is a Jewiſh Superſtition to abſtain from it. Nevertheleſs, 'tis certain that the whole Church continued a long time in this Abſtinence, and the Greek Church even to this day. The Letter of Evantius was publiſhed by Caniſius, Tom. 5. Lect. Antiq. and plac'd at the end of the ſixth Tome of the Bibliotheque of the Fathers at Cologne, and in the laſt Bibliotheque at Lyons.

Evantius.

FERREOLUS.

Ferreolus.

Gregory of Tours aſſures us, that this Ferreolus Biſhop of Ucecia, was a Perſon of great Holineſs and Wit, and that he wrote ſome Letters in Imitation of Sidonius. They are now loſt, but in Compenſation for them, we have now in the Code of Benedict of Aniana a Rule which he compoſed for the Monks of a Monaſtery, whereof he was the Founder, and to which he gave his own Name. He ſubmitted it to the Judgment of Lucretius Biſhop of Dia.

Ferreolus.

SEDATUS and CHRYSIPPUS.

Sedatus, &c.

Caniſius has given us a Homily of Epiphanius, under the Name of Sedatus: 'Tis thought that there was a Biſhop of Biterræ of this Name, who aſſiſted at the Councils of Toledo and Narbonna, in 589. This Homily is of no great Value, no more than that under the Name of Chryſippus, who is alſo believed to be cotemporary, concerning the Praiſes of the Virgin Mary: but this is ſo ridiculous, and full of Emptineſs, that it deſerves not to be mentioned,

Sedatus, &c.

PELAGIUS the II.

Pelagius II.

I Do not reckon in the number of Eccleſiaſtical Writers, the Popes John the third, nor Benedict the firſt, altho' to each of them there is attributed a Letter; one concerning the Suffragans, and the other concerning the Trinity, becauſe all the Criticks are agreed that theſe two Pieces are the Works of Iſidorus. I proceed therefore to Pelagius the ſecond, who was promoted to the See of the Church of Rome in 577, and fill'd it till the Beginning of the Year 590: For altho' the firſt, ſecond, eighth and ninth Letters aſcribed to the ſame Pope, are alſo the Work of the ſame Impoſtor, yet the ſame cannot be ſaid of the others.

The third is taken out of the Life of St. Gregory, written by John the Deacon; It is addreſs'd to St. Gregory, who was then alſo Deacon, and was at Conſtantinople, to put him in mind to ſollicit the Emperor to ſend Succours into Italy againſt the Lombards. This Letter is dated October the 4*th*. 584.

In the fourth to Aunacarius Biſhop of Auxerra, he praiſes the Piety of the Kings of France: He declares to him, that he hopes they were ſo far from joyning with the Lombards, that they would ſend Relief to Italy and the Romans: He prays Aunacarius to exhort them to do it, and ſends him ſome Reliques. He had written a former Letter to this Biſhop, wherein he congratulates him upon the State of the Church of France: This Letter is the laſt, altho' it precede that which we have now ſpoken of; for it is dated in the fifth year of the Empire of Tiberius, which is 582, and the other is dated October the 5*th*. in the ſeventh Year of Tiberius, which is 584.

The fifth Letter is addreſs'd to Elias Biſhop of Aquileia, and to the Biſhops of Iſtria, who had ſeparated from the Church of Rome about the Affair of the three Chapters. 1. In it he recommends to them the Authority of the Holy See. 2. He declares that he holds the Faith and Doctrine decreed by the four General Councils, and contain'd in the Letter of St. Leo. 3. He reproves Elias and his Adherents for ſeparating from the Church. 4. He proves to them by Paſſages of Scripture the Neceſſity of being united to the Church, and of living in peace with their Brethren. 5. He exhorts them earneſtly to re-unite themſelves to the other Churches.

The ſixth Letter of Pelagius, addreſs'd to the ſame Perſons, is written upon the ſame Subject. He preſſes them yet more earneſtly to reconcile themſelves to the Church; But becauſe they chiefly grounded themſelves upon what the Council of Chalcedon, which was approv'd by St. Leo, had done, therefore he proves to them, that this Pope did not approve what the Council had decreed about the Faith, and that he was perſuaded, that what concern'd the Perſons ought to be re-examined. He alledges to them Paſſages out of St. Auſtine and St. Cyprian, to convince them, that their Separation from the Church put them out of the Way of Salvation. In fine, he exhorts them to ſend Deputies to Rome, to explain themſelves, and treat of a Re-union, or to aſſemble at Ravenna, to enter upon a Conference there.

Theſe Letters not prevailing with the Biſhop of Aquileia, and his Brethren to return to the Church, Pelagius ſent to them a third Letter larger than the former: It was written by St. Gregory, who was yet but a Deacon. There he repreſents to theſe Biſhops the Evils which cauſe the Schiſm and Diviſions; and afterwards refutes the Reaſons which induc'd them to believe that Juſtinian had violated the Authority of the Council of Chalcedon, by cauſing the three Chapters to be condemned. He maintains that St. Leo did only approve the Articles of Faith defin'd by this Council, and that perhaps he was deceiv'd as to Matter of Fact. He anſwers to the Oppoſition that was made by Vigilius of the Occidentaliſts, that it was no wonder that if the Latins, who did not perfectly underſtand Greek, found it difficult to know the Errors of thoſe Authors who were thought worthy of Condemnation. But diſtruſting this Anſwer, he brings the Example of St. Peter to excuſe the conduct of Vigilius; and ſays that if this Holy Apoſtle chang'd his Opinion and Behaviour about the Obſervation of the Jewiſh Ceremonies, it was not ſo much to be blam'd in Vigilius, that he had chang'd his Judgment and Conduct in the affair of the three Chapters. This Compariſon is of little force, but that which follows has yet leſs, ---- Do we not read, ſays he, that God himſelf changes his Deſigns? He uſes afterwards the Teſtimony of St. Auſtine, to ſhew that the Dead may be anathematiz'd. After this, he proceeds to the Examination of the three Chapters: He relates the paſſages of Theodorus of Mopſueſta, which appear moſt agreeable to the Error of Neſtorius, and the Teſtimonies of the Holy Fathers who condemn it. He ſhews, That the Letter of Ibas, reproaches St. Cyril and the Council of Epheſus, and that it favours the Error of Neſtorius. He adds, that the Biſhops of the Council of Chalcedon did not approve it; and that tho' they had done it, yet the Matters of Faith ending in the ſixth Action of this Council, what was done afterwards had not the ſame Authority. Laſtly, he ſays, about the third Chapter, that all the Writings of Theodoret, are not condemn'd, but only thoſe which are compos'd againſt St. Cyril. In fine, in anſwer to the favourable Teſtimonies which John of Antioch may have given to Theodorus, he obſerves, that the Fathers oftentimes praiſe Hereticks, and quotes particularly thoſe who commend Origen. He concludes with exhorting the Biſhops of Iſtria, to reconcile themſelves to the other Orthodox Biſhops, and prays God to inſpire them with the deſire and love of Peace, to which he exhorts them.

Pelagius II.

Theſe are the true Letters of Pelagius; In the three laſt the Style of Gregory, who ſucceeded him, may be diſcern'd.

There are in Ivo of Chartres, and in Gratian ſome Decrees attributed to Pelagius, which are printed in the fifth Tome of the Councils, p. 954, 955, and 956. They appear to me to be ancient and genuine.

In the firſt he wiſhes that Monks may not be choſen for Wardens to the Church, becauſe the diſcharge of that Office is very different from the Monkiſh Life. A Monk ſhould live in quiet, and employ himſelf in Prayer and Working with his Hands; all which are very remote from his Employment, who is entruſted with the affairs of the Church: And therefore it is more convenient to promote an old Monk to the Prieſthood, than to make him one of the Wardens.

In the ſecond he allows, that a Man may be ordain'd Deacon, who having left his Wife, had Children by a Maid-ſervant without eſpouſing her, altho' it be againſt the Laws and the Canons, meerly upon the account of the want of ſuch as were diſpos'd to be Clergy-men. He ordains alſo, that this Maid-ſervant, ſhall be put into a Monaſtery to make there Profeſſion of Continence.

The third is about the Election of a Biſhop.

The fourth forbids the Biſhops of Sicily to exact more than two ſhillings of the Pariſhes of Sicily.

The fifth and ſixth require that Eccleſiaſticks ſhould ſtill be judged by Eccleſiaſtical Judges, according to the Civil Laws.

EULOGIUS.

Eulogius.

Eulogius, who ſate in the See of the Church of Alexandria from the Year 581, to the Year 608, was well vers'd in Eccleſiaſtical Matters, and wrote many Books. The Bibliotheque of Photius has preſerved to us the Memory and Arguments of them. In Vol. 182. and 208, he ſpeaks of ſix Books of this Author againſt Novatus, or rather againſt Novatian; but the Greeks always confound theſe two Perſons, and were very little inform'd in their Hiſtory. This appears by what this Author relates. He ſays that Novatus was Arch-deacon of the Church of Rome under Pope Cornelius; that he was to ſucceed him according to the cuſtom of that Church; that Cornelius having obſerv'd that Novatus was too proud, and diſcover'd that he had a deſign upon his Life, had ordain'd him Prieſt, on purpoſe to take from him all hopes of arriving at the Biſhoprick of Rome: That he, in revenge, had taken occaſion to ſeparate from him, becauſe Cornelius admitted to the Communion of the Holy Myſteries thoſe who had fallen into Crimes, after they had been puniſh'd with a Penance proportionable to the greatneſs of their Sin; that he accus'd him of receiving Sinners, and that he, became the Head of a Party, who were called Cathari or Puritans.

Eulogius.

Eulogius oppoſes this Allegation of Novatus in the four firſt Books of his Work. In the fifth he defends the Veneration Eulogius. ration due to the Reliques of the Saints, which the greater part of the Novatians of Alexandria could not approve. In the last he opposes the Writings of the Novatians, and particularly that which was intituled, The Dispute of Bishop Novatus, a Work very contemptible for its manner of Writing, and the Matters contain'd in it: For it relates, that under the Empire of Decius, the Officer Perennius had forc'd many Christians, by the Violence of Torments, to worship Idols: That Macedonius Bishop of Rome had sacrific'd, and was follow'd in so doing by nine Priests of the Church of Rome; that Novatus was the only Person who refus'd, and upon this occasion he recites what he had answer'd to the Judge. 'Tis pretended that many Bishops joyn'd with Novatus, and separated from those who had fallen into Idolatry; and lastly, that the Bishops of Alexandria did not acknowledge him for Bishop. Eulogius refutes these Fables in his third Book. Photius assures us, that the Style of this Author is indifferently exact as to Words, but altogether barbarous as to construction, but that his Work is useful; that he explains very well the passages of Scripture which fully confute the Error of his Adversaries; and lastly, that it is pleasant and persuasive.

Eulogius. He speaks also of some other Works of Eulogius in Vol. 225, and 226. The first is a Treatise divided into two Books, which contain an Apology for the Letter of St. Leo, and the Accusation of Timothy and Severus who had accused him. He shews that these Hereticks calumniate this holy Pope, and charge him with such Doctrines as he never held, by taking out some Words out of the places where they were, and cutting off that which might serve to justifie them. This is prov'd at large in the Extract related by Photius, Vol. 225.

He did undertake the Defence of St. Leo in another Work, against Theodosius and Severus, wherein he also explains the Sense of this Expression of St. Cyril, that there is but one Nature of the Word Incarnate.

Lastly, Photius speaks also of an Invective which this Author wrote against one of the Disciples of Theodosius and the Gaianites, wherein he shews that the Agreement they had made amongst themselves, was false and indefensible, because it tended only to oppose the Truth. There was also in this Tome a Letter which Eulogius wrote when he was yet a Priest, to Eutychius Archbishop of Constantinople, which contains an Exposition of the Orthodox Faith.

JOHN the Faster.

John the Faster. JOhn of Cappadocia, Sirnam'd the Faster, upon the account of his great Abstinence, was ordain'd Bishop of Constantinople, in the Year 585, and govern'd that Church until the Year 596. St. Isidore of Sevil assures us, that he wrote a Letter about Baptism to his Predecessor Leander, wherein he said nothing that was new, but only collected and repeated the Opinions of his Ancestors, about the three Dippings. He compos'd also some Homilies, which perhaps are among those of St. Chrysostome; that about Penance is the most famous. Father Morinus has publish'd two Penitential Books of this Bishop. He was not a Man of a very sublime Wit, but he was one of great Piety and Charity; and lov'd Order and Discipline. He was sharply reprov'd by St. Gregory for taking upon him the Name of Oecumenical Patriarch, because this Pope look'd upon this Title as a sign of Ambition, altho' in the Sense of the Greeks it was innocent, and signified nothing less than St. Gregory thought. John the Faster.

The Greeks perhaps reprov'd this Bishop more justly, for contributing to the Relaxation of Discipline by moderating the Rigour of the Canons: This is objected to him by the Bishops of a Council held in the time of Alexis Comnenus; yet it does not appear that he fell into any Excess of Relaxation; for he only permitted the time of Penance to be shortned, in favour of those who were more fervent, and appear'd more contrite.

JOHN of Biclarum.

John of Biclarum. JOhn Abbot of Biclarum, originally of the Race of the Goths of the Province of Portugal, after he had studied at Constantinople, came to Spain, where he was persecuted by King Leuvigildus, who being an Arian, would force him to embrace his Religion. He was banished to Barcelona, where he suffer'd very much for the space of ten Years. When this was ended he settled a Monastery, call'd Biclarum, situated in the Valleys of the Pyrenees; and afterwards he was chosen Bishop of Gironda. He wrote a Chronicon which begins at the Year 566, and ends at 590, and which serves as a continuation to that of Victor of Tunona. He made also a Rule for his Monks, which is very useful for all the World, if we may believe Isidore. John of Biclarum.

ANASTASIUS SINAITA.

Anastasius Sinaita. Anastasius a Monk of Mount Sinai, ascended the Throne of the Church of Antioch, in the Year 561. He was forced from it, and banish'd in the Year 572, by the Emperor Justinus, the Younger; but at last he was restored under the Emperor Mauritius in the Year 595. He died about the Year 599. He had another for his Successor, who went under the same Name, which gave occasion to confound them. 'Twas the first of these two who was the Author of some Treatises. The first and most assured Work of his, is a Treatise, intituled, ὁδηγὸς or a Guide to the True Way, written against the Acephali. Anastasius begins this Book, which was compos'd for an Instruction about Faith, with laying down some Maxims and Rules, which the Faithful ought to follow for their good Conduct, and to prevent falling into Error. These Rules are useful and rational. Here follows the Translation of them. Anastasius Sinaita.

'Tis necessary for a Man, above all things, to lead a pure and innocent Life, and to have the Holy Spirit in him; After this, he must know the Definitions that are most necessary, and have an exact Knowledge of the Doctrines of his Adversaries, and read their Writings, that he may be able to oppose them and confound them from themselves: He must not amuse himself with disputing about the Faith every moment against the first Comer, but read the whole Scripture with a Spirit of Submission and Fear, with simplicity of Heart, and without crafty Designs; he must not desire to conceive what surpasses our Understanding, he must distinguish that which is to be understood literally from that which is a Metaphor: He must be persuaded that the Church has Traditions about these things which are not in the Holy Scripture: As for instance, that one ought to be fasting when he receives the Holy Eucharist; that he should turn towards the East in the time of Prayer; that the Mother of Christ continued a Virgin, after she had brought forth a Child; and that she brought forth Christ in a Cave. Besides this, he must accustom himself to two ways of Disputing against the Hereticks; one by proposing the passages of Holy Scripture, and another by making use of the Proofs drawn from the thing it self. This last way of Disputing is solid, (if we may believe him) and more effectual; for 'tis easie to corrupt the Sense of the Words of Scripture, and to oppose another passage of it, as the Hereticks and Jews do every Day: 'Tis better therefore to make use of Internal Proofs. 'Tis necessary to be skill'd in Chronology, to know at what time the Father liv'd, and when such and such an Heresie arose. He must take good heed, lest when his Adversary is nonplus's'd, and cannot answer, he make a transition to another Question. 'Tis convenient before the Dispute to require of his Adversary an Oath, that he will say nothing against his Conscience; and also to purge your self from all the Suspicions he may have of you, by condemning the Errors that may be charg'd upon you. He must tell the Monophysites, that he will not insist upon the Council of Chalcedon, but engage to dispute from the more ancient Fathers, whom they themselves acknowledged for Catholicks. He must observe that the Monophysites may be reprehended from the Oblation of the Chalice, because they offer only Wine without any mixture of Water. Anastasius Sinaita.

Anastasius the Sinaita, having laid down these Maxims, practises according to them in his Work: For having said that the Catholicks acknowledged two Wills and two sorts of Operations in Jesus Christ, in the second Chapter he gives many Definitions of Terms which he uses for explaining the Mysteries of the Trinity and the Incarnation. In the third Chapter he describes the Dogmes which a Catholick should reject. In the fourth he explains the Oeconomy of the Incarnation. In the fifth he approves the five first General Councils. In the sixth he discovers the Original of the Error of Severus. In the seventh he refutes it by the Testimony of the Fathers; and in those that follow he opposes it with many Arguments, and relates what was said in the Conferences which were held with the Theodosians. He objects to himself the Testimonies upon which they founded their Doctrine, and the Arguments they made uſe of, which he relates in their own Words. He anſwers them firſt by Reaſon, and then alledges the Paſſages of the Fathers, which may ſerve for an Anſwer to them. In refuting the Gaianites, he makes them ſay, that the Euchariſt is the Body, and not only a Figure of the Body of Jeſus Chriſt. The Orthodox confeſſes and confirms this Propoſition, and from thence concludes that the Body of Jeſus Chriſt was corruptible before his Paſſion, ſince the Euchariſt, which is the Body of Jeſus Chriſt, is ſubject to Corruption. This Work is very confus'd, 'tis a kind of Rhapſody of divers Conferences, but there is very much Scholaſtick Subtelty in it. 'Tis apparent that Scholia have been added to it, which are inſerted into the Text, and 'tis no leſs probable, that the Work has been interpolated in ſome places.

Anaſtaſius Sinaita.

The eleven Books of Anagogical Conſiderations about the Creation of the World, are more co-herent and better written; but they are fill'd with Thoughts ſo myſtical and remote from the Literal Senſe, that it cannot but be tedious to read them. [Mr. Alix publiſh'd the twelfth Book of theſe Anagogical Contemplations, which had been hitherto ſuppreſs'd, in Greek and Latin at London, 1682. Cave. p. 420.]

There are five Dogmatical Diſcourſes of the ſame Author: The firſt is about the Trinity; the ſecond about the Immenſity of the Divine Nature, which can have no bounds; the third about the Incarnation; the fourth about the Corruptibility and Incorruptibility of Jeſus Chriſt; and the laſt about his Reſurrection. Theſe Diſcourſes contain many Scholaſtical Arguments.

F. Combefis has given us ſix Sermons, in the firſt Tome of the Addition to the Bibliotheque of the Fathers. The firſt and ſecond is about the Annunciation of the Virgin; the third about the Transfiguration of Jeſus Chriſt; the fourth about the Holy Communion, where he ſpeaks of the Diſpoſitions that are neceſſary for a worthy Communicant, and for aſſiſting him at the Holy Sacrifice, and alſo of the Ceremonies and Prayers of the Oblation; the fifth and ſixth are upon the ſixth Pſalm of David. [The Compendious Inſtitution of the Faith is alſo reckon'd to be his, which was publiſh'd by Beza of Vezeliacum, Gr. Lat. with five Dialogues about the Trinity, under the Name of St. Athanaſius, 1570, and is to be found under the Name of St. Cyril in ſome Editions of the Bibliotheca Patrum, Cave p. 420.]

There remain only 154 Queſtions upon the Holy Scripture: there is no doubt, but theſe, ſuch as they are at preſent, cannot be Anaſtaſius's of Sinai, ſince the Author there quotes the Canons of the Council, held in the Palace of the Emperor after the ſixth Council, the Works of St. Maximus, St. John Climacus, of John Moſchus, of Olympiodorus, and of Nicephorus; beſides that he reckons 700 Years from Conſtantine's time to his own. The Jeſuit Gretſerus anſwers, that theſe places have been added, but 'tis much more probable that this is the Work of another Author. Gentianus Hervetus, who publiſh'd them firſt, publiſh'd them under the Name of Anaſtaſius of Nice. There were two of this Name in Antiquity, the one was preſent at the Council of Chalcedon, and the other at the fifth Council. The Remark that that we have made, proves that they can neither be the one's nor the other's. 'Tis manifeſt that it is a Work of ſome Modern Greek, to which the Name of Anaſtaſius Sinaita is prefix'd by miſtake; for in the Greek Manuſcripts 'tis intituled ὁδηγὸς, or A Guide to the True Way. Now 'tis evident, that the Work of Anaſtaſius Sinaita which goes under this Title, has nothing like theſe Queſtions.

Anaſtaſius Sinaita.

The Guide to the True Way of Anaſtaſius Sinaita, was publiſh'd in Greek and Latin by Gretſerus. The five Dogmatical Diſcourſes, are found in Greek in the Manuſcripts of Germany; but they have been printed only in Latin, tranſlated by Tilmannus. The Author of the Verſion of the Anagogical Queſtions is not yet known: They are cited by Glycas. [The Book of his De Oeconomia Chriſti, is extant in the Arundelian Library in a Greek Manuſcript at Greſham-College, Cave p. 420.] The Queſtions upon the Scripture were publiſhed in Greek and Latin by Gretſerus. There are alſo ſome other Manuſcript Works, as a Sermon upon his Enthrozination in the See of Antioch, cited by Nicephorus, another upon his Reſtoration quoted by the ſame Author. [Theſe two, together with the Treatiſe againſt Philoponus, are reckon'd by Dr. Cave among his Works that are loſt, Cave p. 421.] The Anſwers to the Monks of Scythia, a Treatiſe of the Rule of a good Life, two Books of the Structure of Man, a Myſtical Contemplation upon the Paſſion of Jeſus Chriſt. Nicephorus quotes alſo a Treatiſe of the ſame Perſon againſt the Book of one Severianus, call'd John Philoponus which was intituled, The Arbitrator or Judge concerning the Union of the Natures in Jeſus Chriſt. Turrianus has taken from thence a Fragment which is publiſh'd by Gretſerus in the Preface. [Beſides all theſe, there are ſeveral other Tracts of his not yet publiſhed, which are ſaid by Labbe to be extant in the Royal Library at Paris, Nov. Biblioth. MSS. par. 2. p. 82. and two Sermons of his which are ſaid by Poſſevinus to be extant in the Vatican Library, Cave p. 420, 421.] The Style of this Author is very indifferent; It is Scholaſtical, dry, barren and tedious.

EVAGRIUS.

Evagrius.

Evagrius was born at Epiphania, a City of the ſecond Province of Syria, under the Empire of Juſtinian, about the year 536: After he had ſtudied, he followed the Bar, and was a profeſs'd Advocate at Antioch. This was the Occaſion of giving him the Name of Scholaſticus, for then they were call'd ſo who pleaded at the Bar. He was made Treaſurer and Secretary for the Province by the Emperor Tiberius. He compoſed ſix Books of Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, which begin where Theodoret, Socrates and Sozomen end. i. e. at the year 439, and end at the twelfth year of Mauritius, which is 594, according to the Vulgar Æra.

This Hiſtory is very large and exact enough. He relates Matter of Fact from the Authority of the Acts and Hiſtorians of the time. The Style is not unpleaſant: It has an Elegance and Politeneſs in the Judgment of Photius, altho' there be ſometimes ſuperfluous Words in his Diſcourſe. He does often alſo make Digreſſions and Relations which are not agreeable to his Deſign; and he ſeems to be more verſ'd in Prophane than Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory: But he has one Advantage above the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtorians that went before him, that there is no occaſion to upbraid him with being ingaged in ſome Sect, or with falling into ſome Error about the Faith or Diſcipline of the Church.

Evagrius.

Robert Stephens publiſhed the Original Greek of this Hiſtorian from one Manuſcript only of the King's Library. Valeſius reviſ'd it ſince by two Manuſcripts, and has made a new Verſion of it, after thoſe of Muſculus and Chriſtophorſon. [Beſides this Hiſtory, he wrote two other Pieces which are loſt, viz. two Books of Epiſtles, Orations, &c. and a Panegyrical Oration to Mauritius the Emperor upon the Birth of Theodoſius; both which are mention'd by himſelf towards the latter end of his Hiſtory, Cave p. 433, 434.]

St. JOHN CLIMACUS.

St. John Climacus.

ST. John ſirnamed Climacus, becauſe of his Work, intituled Κλίμαξ, i.e. a Scale, was born about the year 525. The ancient Author of his Life tells us, that he could not certainly affirm in what place it pleaſed God he ſhould be born, nor in what Country he was educated. The Title of Scholaſticus, which ſome Authors give him, would make us believe that he had ſometime frequented the Bar, but having retir'd from the World at the Age of ſixteen years, there is no probability that he follow'd the Profeſſion of an Advocate. The Place of his Retreat upon Mount Sinai, is famous for the great number of Monks which dwell there: He himſelf entred not into a Monaſtery, but put himſelf under the Conduct of an ancient Hermit, call'd Martyrius: He continued nineteen years with this holy old Man in an humble and faithful Obedience to him. After his Death St. John retir'd into the Solitude of Thola, about five Miles from the Church which was upon Mount Sinai, whither he came on Sundays and Saturdays to aſſiſt at Divine Service, and to receive the Communion. There was a Solitary who put himſelf under his Conduct. Towards the end of the ſixth Age he was choſen Abbot of the Monks of Mount Sinai, and govern'd this Monaſtery for ſome years; but finding himſelf near his End, he quitted the Government of this Monaſtery, and retired into the Solitude, leaving his Brother Georgius in his room. He died of a great Age at the beginning of the next Century.

St. John Climacus.

While he was Abbot, he compos'd his Scale of the Cloyſter, at the Deſire of John Abbot of Raithu. This Book was very famous among the Greeks, but the Latines had no Knowledge of it, for the ſpace of 600 years.

This Scale contains 30 Degrees, which are ſo many Chriſtian and Religious Virtues, which the Author explains by holy Maxims, and teaches the Practice of them by wiſe Counſels.

The firſt is of renouncing the World; the ſecond of abſtracting from the Things of the World; the third of Pilgrimage, or a Retreat out of the World. To theſe three Degrees he ſubjoyns ſome Reflections, to ſhew that we muſt not not give Credit to Dreams, affirming that the Devil makes uſe of them to deceive the Solitary.

St. John Climacus.

The fourth Degree is of Obedience. He thinks that it is one of the Effects of this Virtue, that a Monk ſhould confeſs his Sins to his Superior, who is the true and proper Judge, and to him only: He would alſo have a Monk ready to confeſs them to all the World, if his Superior does order him. Upon this Occaſion he relates the publick Penance of a Robber, who publickly confeſs'd moſt enormous Sins, by the Order of an Abbot of a Monaſtery near the City of Alexandria, whither he had retir'd. From hence he takes occaſion to deſcribe the admirable Virtues of the Monks of this Monaſtery, and the Penance of one named Iſidore, whom this Abbot had oblig'd to kneel down before all thoſe who ſhould enter into the Monaſtery, and to continue this Practice for the ſpace of ſeven whole years. He relates alſo many other Examples of the Patience, Humility, and Obedience practis'd by the Monks of this Monaſtery, whom this Abbot humbled either by ſharp Rebukes, or rude Treatment, altho' they had not deſerved them. But nothing is more horrible than the Examples of Penance which our Saint relates in this Degree, and the next which is of Penance, and the Repreſentation he makes of the Monaſtery of Penitents, which was but one mile diſtant from that of which we have now ſpoken, and govern'd by the ſame Abbot; it was call'd The Priſon, and it did really reſemble a Priſon for its Darkneſs, its Stench and Filthineſs. In it were ſhut up many Monks, who having fallen into ſome Crimes, deſired to be ſhut up there, that they might expiate their Crimes by voluntary Torments, which exceeded all that can be imagined. Some paſs'd Nights and Days ſtanding expos'd to the Injuries of the Weather, others were bound and manacled, others had their Feet in Fetters, others were lying upon Aſhes; Some were beating their Breaſt with their Fiſt, others were tearing their Face: They had all a Sadneſs viſible in their Countenance; ſome made dreadful Lamentations, others ſhed Abundance of Tears, the Greatneſs of Grief hindred others from ſpeaking, and they eat almoſt nothing at all. Laſtly, having practis'd all theſe kinds of Auſterities during their Life, they deſir'd that after their Death the Honour of Burial ſhould be denyed them.

The ſixth Degree is of the Meditation of Death. After he has made ſome Reflections upon the Uſefulneſs of this Practice, he propoſes ſome Examples of the wonderful Effects it has had upon the Minds of ſome Hermits.

The ſeventh is of the Grief of Penance, and the Neceſſity of Tears. There he relates as a great Wonder, the Hiſtory of a Solitary, who on the Eve of his Death, had a Rapture, wherein he imagined, that he ſaw Men who demanded an Account of his Life, to whom he anſwer'd with a loud Voice, telling them what he had done, and what he had not done.

The eighth Degree is of Meekneſs which ſhould overcome Anger. There he deſcribes the deadly Effects of this Poiſon, and preſcribes Means for ſubduing it.

The ninth teaches the Solitaries to forget Reproaches.

The tenth condemns evil ſpeaking and rash judging.

The eleventh recommends Silence.

The twelfth is againſt Lying.

The thirteenth blames Envy and Sloth, and chiefly that which a Man is guilty of in the time of Prayer.

The fourteenth diſſuades from Intemperance.

The fifteenth contains the Praiſes of Chaſtity. There he ſhews the Conſequence of this Virtue, and the Enormity of the Crime which is oppoſite to it. He obſerves that it is more puniſhed in the Church than Hereſie it ſelf; he condemns it even to the Motions of Luſt which happen in the time of Sleep. He preſcribes for a Remedy, that they ſhould clothe themſelves with Sackcloth, and cover themſelves with Aſhes, that they ſhould paſs the Night ſtanding, that they ſhould ſuffer Hunger and Thirſt, that they ſhould lodge in the Tombs, and be humble and charitable.

The ſixteenth Degree oppoſes Covetouſneſs, which is there call'd a Monſter with many Heads, the Tyrant of our Souls, the Daughter of Infidelity, &c. Voluntary Poverty is taught in the ſecond Part of this Degree.

The ſeventeenth Degree is the Inſenſibility of Holy and Religious Things, into which Religious Perſons often fall.

The eighteenth Degree exhorts Chriſtians to take heed of Sleep, which creeps upon them chiefly in the time of Prayer. There he ſpeaks of the Uſefulneſs of Common Prayers.

The nineteenth is of corporal and ſpiritual Vigilance.

The 20*th.* is againſt deceitful Vanities.

The 21*ſt.* diſcovers the Diſorders which Vain-glory produces.

The 22*d.* makes a particular Enumeration of the deadly Effects of Pride.

St. John Climacus.

The 23*d.* teaches to oppoſe blaſphemous and impious Thoughts which the Devil ſuggeſts, in the time of Holy Actions, to the Monks.

The 24*th.* teaches Mildneſs and Simplicity.

The 25*th.* unfolds the Advantages of Humility.

The 26*th.* gives Inſtructions for diſcerning between Good and Evil, Virtue and Vice, between good and evil Thoughts, and gives Rules for a good Conduct in the ſpiritual Life.

The 27*th.* is of the ſacred Repoſe of Body and Soul which the Solitary enjoy. This Degree contains many myſtical Thoughts. St. John Climacus obſerves at the Beginning, that the Solitary and Hermetical Life, altho' it be more perfect, yet it is not ſuitable to all the World. He defines the Repoſe of the Body, a State of Tranquillity and Peace, wherein all Motions, and all the corporeal Senſes are ſubject to Reaſon; and the Repoſe of the Soul a Serenity of Mind, and calm Meditation, which is exempted from all Diſtraction, and inviolable by ſpiritual Thieves who are the Devils. He that is arriv'd at this State, rejects all evil Thoughts which are preſented to his Mind; he has no need to be inſtructed by Diſcourſe, ſince he is taught by his own Actions; he is not only free from Diſturbance by the Commotion of his Paſſions, but he does not ſo much as know it. He knows the true Depth of our Myſteries, without diving into them by human Reaſoning. He never ceaſes to pray and ſing Praiſes to God: He has no Care nor Anxiety about his temporal Subſiſtence; he feels no Emotion by any ſenſible Object. Laſtly, he is poſſeſs'd with the Love of the moſt Holy God, which entirely employs him.

The reſt of this Degree contains the Praiſe of an Hermetical Life, which St. John Climacus believ'd to be more excellent than any other, and Precepts for living well in Solitude.

The 28*th.* is of the Neceſſity of Prayer, and the Diſpoſitions we ought to bring to it.

The 29*th.* is of the perfect Tranquillity of a Soul emancipated from Paſſions, and adorn'd with all ſorts of Virtues.

The 30*th.* is of Faith Hope and Charity, which are the Foundation and Bond of all Chriſtian Virtues.

St. John Climacus joyns to this Book which is for all Monks, a particular Letter to the Abbot of Raithu, about the Qualifications and Diſpoſitions of a Paſtor, or rather of a Superior and Abbot, and about the Manner wherein he ſhould behave himſelf towards his Monks.

The Thoughts of St. John Climacus are more ſublime, more ſolid, and more juſt than thoſe of the greater part of Aſcetical Authors; His Style is cloſe and elegant: He writes with much Brevity, and includes many Thoughts in a few Words: He ſpeaks by Sentences and Aphoriſms. He propoſes his Thoughts in a figurative Way, and inſerts many Alluſions, many Paſſages of Scripture, divers Allegories of the Hiſtory of the Old Teſtament, ſome rare Examples, ſome Parables and Hiſtories, into his Diſcourſe. This kind of writing renders it obſcure, inſomuch that his Work ſtands in need of an Explication. John Abbot of Raithu was the firſt who compos'd and publiſh'd Expoſitions upon this Author, which are collected together in the Bibliotheque of the Fathers. Afterwards Elias Metropolitan of Crete, wrote Commentaries upon St. John Climacus, as he had done upon St. Gregory Nazianzen: The Manuſcripts are found in many Libraries. Dionyſius of Chartres did alſo make Commentaries upon the Scale; in which there is an old Verſion of the Scale of St. John Climacus before that of Ambroſius of Camaldulum. This was printed at Venice in 1531, and 1569. A Doctor of Flanders caus'd it to be re-printed at Cologne in 1583, together with new Explications at the end of every Degree. Laſtly, Matthew Raderus the Jeſuit made a new Verſion of the Works of St. John Climacus, which was printed with the Greek at Paris in 1633. There are beſides this many Manuſcripts of this Author in Libraries, which may be uſeful for making a more correct Edition. It has been often tranſlated into the Vulgar Tongue: There is a Tranſlation of it into Italian, printed at Venice in 1585, another in the Vulgar Greek by Margunius, printed at Venice in 1590. In our time Mr. Arnaud d' Andilly has made a French Tranſlation of it, which he has reform'd and rectified by many Manuſcripts in a ſecond Edition. There are added to it conſiderable Explications, into which he has inſerted a good part of the Commentaries of Elias of Crete, and the Life of St. John Climacus, taken out of two ancient Authors who had written it in Greek, whereof the one was a Monk of his time, and the other an Abbot of the Monaſtery of Raithu, called Daniel.

JOHN of Raithu.

John.

John Abbot of the Monaſtery of Raithu, a Co-temporary to St. John Climacus, wrote a Letter to this Father, a Commendation of, and Commentary upon his Scale. Theſe Works are found in the Bibliotheques of the Fathers.

John.

St. GREGORY.

S. Gregory.

ST. Gregory was of an illuſtrious Family of Rome: His Father was Grandchild to Pope Fœlix the Second, the Son of Gordianus and Sylvia: He ſtudied at Rome with very good Succeſs; his Quality and Merit procur'd him to be quickly preferr'd to the Office of Governor of the City of Rome. After the Death of his Father, he conſecrated himſelf to the Service of God, and gave all his Poſſeſſions for building and maintaining Monaſteries. He cauſed ſix to be built in Sicily, and one at Rome, whither he himſelf retir'd. Pelagius the ſecond ordain'd him Deacon in 582, and drew him forth from his Retreat to ſend him to Conſtantinople, in the quality of a Surrogate, to the Court of the Emperor Tiberius. He had not much Buſineſs, neither did he ſtay long there: There is only a Conference mentioned which he had with the Patriarch Eutychius, wherein he maintains againſt him, that the Bodies of the Bleſſed after the Reſurrection, ſhall not be of the Nature of Air or Wind, but ſhall be palpable and ſolid by their Nature, altho' miraculouſly ſubtile.

He return'd to Rome after the Death of Tiberius in 586, where he was employed as Secretary to Pope Pelagius. This Pope dying, the Clergy and People choſe St. Gregory to fill his Place. The Emperors were greatly concern'd, that none ſhould be promoted to the Holy See who was contrary to them, and therefore they permitted not him who was choſen to be ordain'd, till they had approv'd the Election. St. Gregory who ſhun'd this Dignity as much as others ſeek it, wrote a Letter to the Emperor Mauritius, wherein he earneſtly prays him not to conſent to his Election, and to order that they quickly proceed to make another. The Governor of Rome detain'd this Letter, and ſecur'd the Perſon of St. Gregory, for fear leſt he ſhould fly away, and ſend to the Emperor the Act, wherein he had been choſen Biſhop of Rome. Mauritius who knew St. Gregory particularly well, was very glad at this Election, and order'd that he ſhould be quickly conſecrated.

Rome was then afflicted with a contagious Diſeaſe, whereof Pelagius died, and which kill'd ſo great a number of of People, that the City was almoſt turn'd into a Deſart. During the Vacancy of the See, St. Gregory exhorted the People to make Litanies, i. e. publick Proceſſions of all the Inhabitants divided into ſeven Choirs. Sometime after St. Gregory got out of Rome by concealing himſelf in a Basket, to deceive the Guards that were ſet at the Gates for hindering his Eſcape, and went and hid himſelf in a Cave in the middle of a Wood; but being diſcover'd he was conſecrated and promoted to the See of Rome, on the 3*d*. of September 590.

Immediately after his Promotion, he made a publick Profeſſion of his Faith, and wrote ſynodical Letters to the Eaſtern Patriarchs: In them he aſſumes the Title of the Servant of the Servants of God, in oppoſition to the proud Titles which the other Patriarchs aſſumed. He regulated the ſinging and the Service of the Church of Rome, reform'd his Clergy, and put the City in very good Order.

Altho' he was of a very weak Conſtitution, and ſubject to many Diſeaſes, yet he endur'd with Courage the Fatigues and Labours of the Biſhoprick, and diſcharg'd all the Duties of his Function; He took care of the temporal and ſpiritual Welfare of his Sheep. He concern'd himſelf in the Defence of the City of Rome againſt the Lombards, and reliev'd the People with his great Alms, for which he employ'd all the Revenue of St. Peter's Patrimony.

But he took particular care of the Clergy and Biſhops of Italy and Sicily, who depended more immediately upon the Biſhop of Rome than others. Aſſoon as he underſtood that any Church was vacant, he ſent a Deputy to it, and caus'd a Biſhop to be immediately choſen, and himſelf ordain'd, or caus'd him who was choſen to be ordain'd. He quickly applied a Remedy to the Diſorders which happen'd in the Churches, and ſuffer'd not any Diſorder in them. Beſides the particular care which St. Gregory had of his own Church, and of thoſe that more nearly concern'd him, he applied himſelf alſo to the Affairs of the Univerſal Church. On the one ſide he us'd all his Endeavours for quenching that Flame which was kindled about the Affair of the three Chapters in the Church: On the other ſide he laboured to deliver Africa from the Schiſm of the Donatiſts, and to reeſtabliſh there the Regulations of the Canons. * He did often vigorouſly oppoſe the Title of Univerſal Patriarch, which the Patriarchs of Conſtantinople aſſum'd to themſelves: His Care extended to the moſt diſtant Places, and even to the moſt barbarous Nations. He ſent the Monk Auſtine and his Companions to the Engliſh to convert that People. He ſuffered not even the Jews to live in quiet, but ſollicited the ſuperior Powers againſt them: But he had a particular Conſideration of the Biſhops his Colleagues; he comforted them in their Afflictions, congratulated them and exhorted them upon occaſion, and rebuk'd them alſo freely and briskly for their Faults. He honour'd their Merit with the Ornament of the Pallium, which he ſent to them Gratis and freely, and delighted to relieve and protect them in all kind of Rencounters. He watch'd continually for the maintenance of Diſcipline every where; he perſecuted Vices and Diſorders whereſoever they happen'd, and would not ſuffer any Simony in the Church of Jeſus Chriſt. In a word, he us'd his utmoſt endeavours to have the Canons inviolably obſerv'd in all the Churches of the World, being perſuaded, that in this conſiſted all the Power and Authority which the Primacy of his See gave him.

S. Gregory.

[* He calls this Title, proud, heretical, blaſphemous, antichriſtian, and diabolical, *Cave p.*430. which ſhews how far the Pope of Rome was then from aſſuming an Univerſal Supremacy over the Church.]

All theſe different Employments did not hinder him from writing many Books. When he was at Conſtantinople he begun the Morals upon Job, at the deſire of Leander, Biſhop of Sevil, who was then there, and with whom he contracted an intimate Friendſhip. The Paſtoral was the firſt Book which he wrote after his Ordination, in Anſwer to the Calumny John Biſhop of Ravenna had rais'd againſt him, becauſe he refus'd the Biſhoprick with ſo much ſtiffneſs. His Paſtoral Office oblig'd him to make many Homilies; we have thoſe which he compos'd upon Ezekiel, and forty upon the Goſpels. The Dialogues were the Product of the Retirements which he made from time to time.

But before we enter upon a particular Enumeration of theſe Works, we muſt give an Abridgment of his Letters, which contain an infinite number of important Points concerning the Diſcipline of the Church. Theſe are commonly rank'd according to the order of their Dates, and diſtributed into the Method of fourteen Indictions, which anſwer to the Years of St. Gregory's Pontificate, beginning at the Month of September in the Year 590, which is the ninth Indiction, and ending at the Month of March of the ſeventh Indiction of the Cycle, according to the Indictions, of the Year 604, of the Vulgar Æra, which is the time of St. Gregory's Death. Theſe Letters have been ſince divided into twelve Books, each of which contain an Indiction, except the ſecond and ſeventh, which comprehend two of them. The number of theſe Letters amounts to 840, or thereabouts. Since there are many of theſe Letters which concern the ſame Points of Diſcipline, we ſhall not follow the order of Time, but give an account of them under certain Principal Heads.

Concerning Baptiſm.

ST. Gregory proves, that Baptiſm does truly and perfectly pardon Sins; that it does not only in appearance expiate them, as ſome think, but it really remits them, altho' it leaves the Man ſubject to Paſſions, Book 9. Epiſtle. 39. He approves the Opinion of Leander Biſhop of Sevil, who remark'd, that it was indifferent to uſe three Dippings in Baptiſm, or one only. He adds that we muſt follow the Cuſtom of the Church where we are, Lib. 1. Ep. 41.

He would have no Body forc'd to receive Baptiſm. Ibid. Ep. 45.

He permits Baptiſm to be given to the Jews, on Sunday or a Feſtival, if they cannot conveniently wait till Eaſter, after they have been made to obſerve a Faſt of forty Days: But if they be willing to wait till Eaſter, his Opinion is that they ſhould not be Baptized before, Lib. 7. Epiſt. 24.

As to the Validity of the Baptiſm of Hereticks and the manner of receiving them into the Church, he ſays, as it follows here, when he was conſulted by Quirinus and the Catholicks of Iberia, that according to the Tradition of the Church, thoſe who have been baptized by Hereticks in the Name of the Trinity, are received into the Church, either by Unction with Chryſm, or by Impoſition of Hands, or by a bare Profeſſion of the Faith: That in the Weſt the Arians are received into the Church by laying Hands upon them; that in the Eaſt this is done by Unction with Chryſm; that the Monophyſites and other Hereticks are received there by making only a ſincere Profeſſion of the Catholick Faith: That the Bonoſians, who did not believe in Jeſus Chriſt, and the Cataphrygians who did not believe as they ſhould in the Holy Ghoſt, but thought Montanus to be him, and the Hereticks like them, are baptiz'd when they re-enter into the Church, the Baptiſm, which they have receiv'd not being true, ſince it was not given in the Name of the Trinity, Book 9. Ep. 61.

The Monks muſt not be Sponſors, B. 3. Ep. 40.

When it is uncertain whether a Perſon has been baptized or confirm'd, we muſt baptize or confirm him, rather than ſuffer him to periſh in this doubt, B. 12. Ep. 32.

Of

Of The Unction, that is used at Baptism, or Confirmation.

S. Gregory. HE writes to the Bishop of Calaris, that Priests are are forbidden to use the Unction of Chrysm on the Front of the baptiz'd, but they may use it upon the Breast, leaving it to the Bishops afterwards to use it upon the Front, Book 3. Ep. 9. Afterwards speaking of this Prohibition, he says, that it was made because such is the Custom of his Church; but if this be troublesome to those that have another Custom, he does not find fault with the Priests that shall use this Unction in the absence of the Bishop. We have already related another place concerning the Unction which is us'd in the East for receiving Hereticks, B. 9. Ep. 61. S. Gregory.

Of the Consecration of the Eucharist.

Januarius Bishop of Calaris, being very aged and infirm, was subject to be indispos'd by saying Mass; and after he returned he knew not the Place of the Canon where he had left off: And many Persons doubted, whether they should receive the Communion of the Host thus Consecrated. St. Gregory declares, that they may receive it with assurance, because the infirmity of him that consecrates, does not change nor divert the Benediction; but he says, that this Bishop should be admonished not to do the Office, when he finds himself in this Condition, B. 11. Ep. 59.

About Penance.

ST. Gregory has written a Letter expresly against those who believ'd that after a Penance of three Years, one might take his ease, and commit the same Crimes with impunity. There he lays down this excellent Maxim, That true Penance does not only consist in bewailing Sins past, but in abstaining from them for the future. Pœnitentia est commissa flere, & iterum plangenda declinare.

The Clergy who had commited any Crimes, were put under Penance, and shut up in Monasteries, to receive there Corporal Punishment, B. 1. Ep. 18. B. 2. Ind. 11. Ep. 28. B. 3. Ep. 9.

A Clergy-man, who being depos'd, did perform the Duties of his Function, was to be put under Penance all the rest of his Life: yet it was lawful for the Bishop to receive him to Lay-Communion after a long Penance, B. 4. Ep. 5.

A Clergy-man falling into Sin, and being put under Penance, can never hope to enter again into the Clergy, B. 1. Ep. 18, & 43. B. 3. Ep 26.

There is not the same reason of an Abbot who is a Priest, who after his Penance, may be restor'd to his Dignity of Abbot, but not to that of Priest, B. 4. Ep. 4. One who is only an Abbot, and not a Priest, shall continue depos'd for ever, Ib. Ep. 16. A Priest deposed may be made an Abbot, and have the Care of Monasteries, Ib. Ep. 17.

About the Indissolvableness of Marriage.

ST. Gregory proves in the 39*th. Epistle* of the 9*th. Book*, that Marriages are not dissolv'd by the entrance of the married Persons into a Religious House, altho' Humane Laws permit the Man to part from his Wife, or the Woman from her Husband, for that end that they may go into a Monastery. He adds in the 44*th.* Letter of the same Book, where he handles also the same Question, that the Law of God does not allow a Man to forsake his Wife for any Cause but that of Adultery. Nevertheless he permits married persons to part from one another, that they may enter into a Religious House, when this is done with the consent of both Parties, B. 5. Ep. 49. B. 9. Ep. 39.

In the 32 Letter of Book 8. he determines a particular Case about this Subject. A married Woman had parted from her Husband, and was become a Nun, because she suspected him of Adultery; but she could not convict him of it, and the married Man purg'd himself by Oath, affirming that he was not guilty. Hereupon the Woman returned to him, which moved her Bishop to excommunicate her and all her Family. St. Gregory wrote to this Bishop, that he must immediately restore her Family to Communion; and as to the Woman, he must not suffer her to continue a long time Excommunicate, if it were notorious, that she had no Proofs that her Husband had committed Adultery, and if the suspicion she had of him was remov'd by his Oath.

Of the Vacancy of an Episcopal See.

WHen a See is vacant, it must be fill'd quickly with a worthy Person, Book 1. Ep. 18, 76, & 79. B. 6. Ep. 1. 'Tis forbidden to leave it vacant more than three Months, B. 6. Ep. 39. During the Vacancy, the Custom of the Church of Rome, as to the Suffragan Bishops of her Metropolis, was to name a Deputy; And St. Gregory gives us many Forms of Commissioning these Deputies, B. 1. E. 15, 51, 75, 76. B. 2. Ep. B. 19, & 20, 26, 27. 5. Ep. 21. B. 3. Ep. 39. B. 11. Ep. 16, 17, 18. 19. These Deputies made an Inventory of the Goods of the Church, chiefly of the Moveables, B. 3. Ep. 11. B. 2. Ind. 11. Ep. 22. They cannot appropriate to themselves any of the Possessions and Revenues of the Vacant Church, but they should keep them, B. 2. Ep. 27, & 38. Yet a Recompence may be given to any for their trouble, B. 3. Ep. 11. The Deputy should be present at the Election, B. 12. Ep. 19. Prayers were made for the Future Election of a Bishop, B. 1. Ep. 56. A Church is not to be looked upon as vacant, when the Bishop is seiz'd with a Disease which hinders him from performing his Office: In such a case he must not be depos'd, but have one given him for his Assistance, Dispensatorem: He must continue in his station, and enjoy his Revenue, B. 2. Ep. 5. If he desires to retire, yet they ought not to proceed to the Election of another Bishop, until he has given his Demission in Writing, Ibid.

Concerning the Elections and Ordinations of Bishops.

ST. Gregory does not meddle with choosing the Bishops of the Churches depending upon his Metropolis, but leaves the Clergy and People the Liberty of Election; and when they have chosen one, if he be found worthy, he ordains him: But if he be found incapable, he orders them to choose another, B. 8. Ep. 18. B. 3. Ep. 2. B. 6. Ep. 38. B. 1. Ep. 56, 57. B. 2. Ind. 10. Ep. 18. B. 8. Ep. 18, 34. B. 12. Ep. 6.

He does not assume to himself the Ordinations of the Bishops which were not his Suffragans, but he would have them ordain'd by those to whom it belongs, B. 2. Ind. 11. Ep. 29, 30, 31. B. 11. Ep. 57. When there are no fit Persons found upon the place, he allows the Clergy and People to send Deputies to Rome, to choose one of the Clergy of Italy, B. 2. Ind. 11. Ep. 15. B. 11. Ep. 14. When Persons cannot be found that are every way fit, he allows of such as are indifferently good, B. 4. Ep. 19. When there is a Contest between the Clergy and the People, as happen'd at the Election of a Bishop of Syracuse, when the People chose one Person, and the Clergy chose another, he orders, that they should both come to Rome, and that he shall be preferr'd, who best deserves this Dignity, B. 4. Ep. 47. He would have the Opinion of those who are absent ask'd, if they be of the Nobility, B. 2. Ep. 29, 30, 31. Tho' he does not meddle with Elections, yet he sometimes excludes those who are chosen, as he did Maximus out of the Bishoprick of Salonæ, B. 3. Ep. 15. and sometimes he proposes Persons whom he thinks qualified, B. 3. Ep. 15. He describes to the Electors the Qualifications he ought to have whom they choose, B. 2. Ind. 11. Ep. 29. & B. 4. Ep. 47. He approves of the Elections made by way of Compromise, B. 2. Ind. 11. Ep. 35.

These following are the excellent Rules which St. Gregory prescribes about the Choice of Bishops. The Electors should examine his Life whom they are about to choose, as far as by Law they can: They should not be partial, either for Favour, Sollicitation, or Money, B. 7. Ind. 2. Ep. 26. B. 11. Ep. 19. They should not consider their own particular Profit, but only the Glory of God and the Good of his Church, B. 2. Ind. 11. Ep. 29. B. 4 Ep. 47. They must deny the Bishoprick to those who seek after it, and give it to those that shun it, B. 6. Ep. 4. They must prefer those that are of the Clergy of the Church before others, B. 1. Ep. 56. B. 2. Ind. 10. Ep. 19. B. 7. Ind. 2. Ep. 25.

They must not choose a Lay-man, B. 2. Ind. 10. Ep. 19. ibid. Ind. 2. Ep. 111, 114, 115. B. 3. Ep. 39. B. 7. Ind. 2. Ep. 112, 115. B. 11. Ep. 16. They must reject those who sollicit for a Bishoprick, B. 11. Ep. 19. They must not choose a Person too old, B. 12. Ep. 6. nor one of the younger sort, B. 2. Ind. 11. Ep. 47, & 48.

S. Gregory. They muſt not chooſe, nor ordain Bigamiſts, nor thoſe who have eſpouſed Widows, nor thoſe who are ignorant of Learning, nor thoſe who have any Notable defect in their Body, nor thoſe who have done publick Penance, nor thoſe who have any Perſonal Obligation to another Office, nor Strangers that are unknown, B. 2. Ep. 25.

He that is ordain'd Prieſt ſhould know the Pſalter, Book 4. Epiſtle 45. S. Gregory.

St. Gregory declares, That Re-ordination is forbidden as much as Re-baptization, B. 2. Ep. 32. They muſt not ordain an Arch-deacon or Deacon of another Church, without the leave of his Biſhop, B. 4. Ep. 19. B. 12. Ep. 16.

Of the Authority and Uſefulneſs of Councils.

ST. Gregory had a very particular Veneration for the Decrees and Canons of General Councils, that are received in the Church, and ſeems to be perſuaded that he could not meddle with them. He was no ſooner promoted to the Pontificate, but he ſolemnly declar'd in his Letter to the Patriarchs, that he revered the four firſt General Councils, as he did the four Goſpels; and that he had alſo a great reſpect for the fifth General Council, B. Ep. 24. He repeats the ſame thing in Book 2. Ind. 11. Ep. 10.

He acknowledges the Neceſſity of Provincial Councils for maintaining Diſcipline and judging of Biſhops, B. 1. Ep. 1. 33 16. 72, 82. B. 2. Ind. 11. Ep. 47. B. 3. Ep. 9. Ep. 8 B. 7. Ind. 11. Ep. 70, 111, 112. B. 12. Ep. 32. The Metropolitan ought to aſſemble them, B. 2. Ind. 11. Ep. 47, & 48. The Roman Church does not receive the Canons of the Council of Conſtantinople, B. 6. Ep. 31. He wrote to the Biſhops of France to call a Council for Regulating their Diſcipline, B. 7. Ind. 112. Ep. 111.

Of the Primacy and Rights of the Biſhop of Rome.

THe Holy See, according to St. Gregory, does not uſe its Authority, but only to puniſh Vice: Thus all the Biſhops are ſubject to it, from the very moment that they commit any Fault; but Humility makes all the Biſhops equal, when there is no Fault which obliges the Holy See to exerciſe its Authority, B. 7. Ind. 11. Ep. 65.

The Primacy of the Pope gives him no Right to reverſe the ancient Canons, nor the Privileges and Rights of other Biſhops, B. 2. Ep. 37. Theſe following are his own words, Abſit ut Statuta Majorum, à Conſacerdotibus meis in qualibet Eccleſia infringam, quia mihi injuriam facio, ſi fratrum meorum jura perturbo. De Eccleſiaſticis vero Privilegiis, hoc veſtra fraternitas, poſthabitâ dubitatione, teneat, quia ſicut noſtra defendimus, ita ſingulis quibuſque Eccleſiis, ſua jura ſervamus. i. e. God forbid that I ſhould infringe the Decrees of our Anceſtors made by our Fellow-Biſhops in any Church, for I do my ſelf an Injury if I diſturb the Rights of my Brethren: and as to Eccleſiaſtical Privileges you may firmly believe, Brother, without the leaſt doubt, that as we defend our own ſo we reſerve to every Church their own Rights.

The Biſhops of Rome refus'd to take upon them the Title of Univerſal Patriarch of the Church, which was given them by the Council of Chalcedon, leſt they ſhould ſeem to incroach upon the Rights of other Biſhops, B. 4. Ep. 32. B. 7. Ind. 1. Ep. 30.

St. Gregory wrote to Eulogius the Patriarch of Alexandria, who had acquainted him with what he had commanded him; that he ſhould not any more uſe this term of Commanding, for he knew (ſays Gregory to him) what it meant and what was meant by his Brethren, that they were his Brethren by their Dignity, and his Fathers by their Merit, B. 7. Ind. 1. Ep. 30.

Of the Apoſtolick Sees.

Eulogius Patriarch of Alexandria, had written many things to St. Gregory in favour of the See of St. Peter; St. Gregory obſerves to him in his Anſwer, that they were the more grateful to him, becauſe they were written by one, who ſits alſo in the Chair of St. Peter himſelf, and alſo that he had done an Honour to himſelf, by endeavouring to do one to the See of Rome: That he ſhould know, that the Church was ſolidly founded upon the firmneſs of the Prince of the Apoſtles, from whence he had his Name of Peter, and that to him, the Truth it ſelf ſaid, I will give thee the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven; to whom he alſo ſaid, when you are converted, ſtrengthen your Brethren: without forgetting theſe other words, Simon, Son of Jona, loveſt thou me? feed my ſheep: That upon this account, though there were many Apoſtles, yet there was but one See of the Prince of the Apoſtles, which was raiſed in Authority above the reſt, becauſe of the Primacy which he founded: That this See is in three places, at Rome, the place where he finiſh'd his Courſe; at Alexandria, whither he ſent his Evangeliſt St. Mark to ſupply the place, and at Antioch, where he continued ſeven Years; but that theſe three Sees are but one See which belongs to St. Peter, on which three Biſhops now ſit, which are in effect but one, in him who pray'd, That they may be one, as I am in the Father, and the Father in me, B. 6. Ep. 37.

The Form of Eccleſiaſtical Deciſions.

HEre follow the principal Rules obſerv'd by St. Gregory in Eccleſiaſtical Deciſions.

He judg'd in the firſt place the Biſhops of Italy, Sicily, and the neighbouring Iſles, which immediately depended upon Rome as their Metropolis; as for Example he cites Januarius Biſhop of Calaris, to Rome, to come and purge himſelf of the Accuſation charged upon him, B. 2. Ind. 11. Ep. 36.

He cauſes the Biſhop of Syracuſa to come to Rome, B. 2. Ind. 11. Ep. 12.

He cites Maximus Biſhop of Salonæ, B. 5. Ep. 3, & 25.

Having depos'd the Biſhop of Naples, he writes to the Clergy and People of that City to chooſe another Biſhop in his room, B. 2. Ind. 11. Ep. 3.

He requires his * Wardens in Sicily to ſend to Rome the Biſhop of Meſſina, and his Accuſers, B. 11. Ep. 32. & 33.

* The Defenſores of St. Peter's Patrimony were certain Officers appointed by Popes in the Provinces, for maintaining and taking care of the Patrimony of the Roman Church which Officers were afterwards appointed for Parochial Churches, and are now call'd Church-wardens, Spelm. Gloſſ.

The Biſhops of the Vicariate of Rome were oblig'd to come every Year to his Synod: As to thoſe of Sicily, they came thither once in three Years, and St. Gregory aſſures them, that he will be ſatisfied if they come but once in five Years, B. 6. Ep. 19.

Yet to facilitate the diſpatch of Affairs, he makes Maximian Biſhop of Syracuſe, his Legate into Sicily, to whom he gives Power to judge of ſmaller affairs, on condition that he ſhould reſerve to him ſuch as were of greater Conſequence. He commiſſions the Biſhop of Syracuſe, and four other Biſhops, to judge the Cauſe of Melitus Biſhop of the Iſle of Malta, B. 7. Ind. 2. Ep. 63. As to the other Biſhops of the Weſt, who did not depend upon his Metropolis, he would have them judged by a Synod of the Province, without an Appeal to the Holy See. He affirms, that a Biſhop of Africa, ſhould be judg'd by a Synod held in Africa, B. 1. Ep. 82. He remits Paulinus of Tegeſta, to the Judgment of Columbus, B. 10. Ep. 32.

He affirms, that a Biſhop ought never to be depos'd till his Cauſe has been firſt heard in a Synod B. 2. Ind. 11. Ep. 8 & 9. In caſe of an Appeal, or where recourſe is had to the Holy See, he commonly commiſſions Judges upon the place: whereof here follow ſome Inſtances.

Florentius Biſhop of Epidaurus, which is now Ragouſa, had been condemn'd by his Metropolitan without being judg'd or convicted in any Synod; but St. Gregory declares that his Depoſition ought not to take place, but the Cauſe ought to be re-heard and decided in a Council. He commiſſions Antoninus to be preſent at this Deciſion, B. 1. Ind. 4. Ep. 8 & 9.

He remits to Columbus Biſhop of Numidia, the Judgment of two Biſhops of Africa, B. 5. Ep. 36. B. 10. Ep. 32.

He commiſſions one of his Wardens at Rome, to draw up a Proceſs and judge the Biſhop of Malaga, B. 11. Ep. 52. & 53.

The Judgment of this Deacon is related in the Letter 55, wherein he declares by Vertue of his Commiſſion, that Januarius Biſhop of Malaga was unjuſtly forc'd away: He nulls all that had been done againſt him, altho' it was null in it ſelf. He ordains, that the other Biſhops who were guilty of this bold Invaſion of another's Right, ſhall be ſhut up in a Monaſtery, to do Penance there; that he who was ordain'd in the room of Januarius, ſhall remain depriv'd of the Prieſthood, and all Eccleſiaſtical Orders, and that Januarius ſhall re-enter upon the Poſſeſſion of his Biſhoprick. This Deacon pronounced the Sentence, in the preſence of the four Goſpels, and according to the Memorial of the Imperial Laws, about the Deciſions of Biſhops.

St. Gregory remits to the Biſhop of Vienna the Judgment of an Abbot of Geſena, who was forſaken by his Biſhop, B. 12. Ep. 1.

He commiſſions Sigibert Biſhop of Autun, to determine the Differences between the Biſhops of Turin and Tarentaſia about the Pariſhes of their Dioceſes, B. 7. Ind. 2. Ep. 120 & 121.

He

S. Gregory.

He pretends also to have a Right of Reviewing the Causes which were decided in the East, even after an Appeal. The Affair of Hadrian Bishop of Thebes in Thessaly is too remarkable to be pass'd over here in silence. This Bishop had been condemned by the Bishop of Larissa, upon a Civil Affair, and he had brought his Appeal; but having recourse to the Emperors, he was sent back to be judged before the Bishop of Corinth; yet he was afterward forced to acquiesce in the Judgment of the Bishop of Larissa. Some time after, two Deacons who had been deposed, one for his Uncleanness, and, the other for embezelling the Revenues of the Church, accus'd Hadrian of suffering a Deacon of an ill Life, altho' he knew of his Disorders, and of suffering Infants to die without Baptism. The Bishop of Larissa condemn'd him now for a Criminal Affair as he had done before for a Civil Matter; he appeal'd from this Sentence; the Emperors caused the Informations to be communicated to Honoratus a Deacon, who found none of these things true which they charged upon Hadrian. Yet his Cause was remitted to the Metropolitan of the first Justinianea, Primate of Illyria, and Vicar of the Holy See. This Bishop, without examining the Cause judicially, confirm'd the Sentence of the Bishop of Larissa upon the Deposition of some Witnesses, who declar'd that they had heard from the Deacon Demetrius the things which were charg'd upon Hadrian, altho' this Deacon deny'd it so stiffly that he could not be made to confess it by putting him to the Torture. Hadrian had recourse to St. Gregory, who null'd the Proceedings at Larissa, and those of the Bishop of the first Justinianea, as contrary to the Laws and the Canons, and as null in themselves, even tho' there had not been any Appeal. He cuts off the Bishop of Justinianea from Communion for thirty Days, threatens to excommunicate him of Larissa, takes from him all his Jurisdiction over the Bishop of Thebes, orders him to restore the Effects of the Church of Thebes, and remits the Cause in his own Right only to his Residents at Constantinople, B. 2 Ind. 11 Ep. 6 & 7.

He believed also that the Holy See could call Causes of great Consequence to Rome, and judge them. Thus he judged and acquitted at Rome, John a Priest of Chalcedon who was accus'd of Heresie, and condemned by the Bishop of Constantinople, B. 5. Ep. 15 & 16. And he alledges this Example to prove to the Bishop of Ravenna that he could examine and judge at Rome the Cause of Claudus the Abbot, who had a Difference with the Church of Ravenna, B. 5. Ep. 24. He acquits also a Priest of Isauria, who was accused of Heresie, B. 5. Ep. 64. But he rarely made use of this Jurisdiction. And the Metropolitans contested it with him. Paul a Bishop of Africa came to Rome to purge himself: Witnesses are sent thither who are found insufficient. Paul desires to be sent back to Constantinople, the Pope allows him to go thither with two Bishops, B. 6. Ep. 2.

S. Gregory.

As to the ordinary Causes between the inferior Clergy of the Bishopricks depending upon the Metropolis of Rome, he left them to the Decision of the Bishops, and would not have his Wardens to meddle in them, nor to diminish the Jurisdiction of the Ordinary. For, says he, if we do not preserve the Jurisdiction of each Bishop, we overturn the Order of the Church which we should maintain. Nam si unicuique Episcopo sua jurisdictio non servatur, quid aliud agitur, nisi ut per nos, per quos Ecclesiasticus ordo custodiri debuit, confundatur, B. 9. Ep. 32. Yet he punish'd a Priest of a Parish in the Dioceis of another Bishop, B. 2. Ep. 16.

As to the Informations about the Disorders committed in the Person of a Bishop, he observes that they should be made by a Clergy-man together with the Judge, B. 2. Ind. 11. Ep. 1. He would not have a Bishop detained a long time in Prison. He says that he must be deposed if he be guilty, or set at liberty if he be innocent, B. 1. Ep. 32. The Custom for a Man to purge himself by Oath when there was no Conviction of him, was in use in the time of St. Gregory, which he approves and makes use of, B. 2. Ep. 23. B. 9. Ep. 13.

Against the Title of Universal Patriarch.

ST. Gregory does not only oppose this Title in the Patriarch of Constantinople, but he maintains also, that it cannot agree to any other Bishop, and that the Bishop of Rome neither ought, nor can assume it. John the younger Patriarch of Constantinople, had taken upon him this Title in a Council held in 586, in the time of Pope Pelagius, which obliged this Pope to null the Acts of this Council. St. Gregory wrote of it also to this Patriarch; but this made no Impression on him, and John would not abandon this fine Title, B. 4 Ep. 36. St. Gregory address'd himself to the Emperor Mauritius, and exhorted him earnestly to employ his Authority for redressing this Abuse, and to force him who assumed this Title to quit it. He remonstrates to him in his Letter, that although Jesus Christ had committed to St. Peter the Care of all his Church, yet he was not called Universal Apostle; That the Title of Universal Bishop is against the Rules of the Gospel, and the Appointment of the Canons; that there cannot be an Universal Bishop, but the Authority of all the other will be destroy'd or diminish'd: That if the Bishop of Constantinople were Universal Bishop, and it should happen that he should fall into Heresie, it might be said, that the Universal Church was fallen into Destruction: That the Council of Chalcedon had offer'd this Title to St. Leo, but neither he nor his Successors would accept it, lest by giving something peculiar to one Bishop only, they should take away the Rights which belong to all the Bishops: That it belongs to the Emperor to reduce by his Authority him who despises the Canons, and does Injury to the Universal Church by assuming this singular Name, B. 4 Ep. 32. These Remonstrances had no Effect; for the Emperor would not meddle in this Affair, and had even authorized John the Younger, and therefore the Pope complain'd of it to the Empress, Ep. 34 of the same Book. He wrote also to other Patriarchs, who were, it seems, concern'd to oppose this new Title. But they did not take the Matter so heinously as St. Gregory, and suffer'd the Patriarch of Constantinople to enjoy this Title, which did them no Prejudice. Nay, Anastasius the Patriarch of Antioch, had the Boldness to remonstrate to St. Gregory, that he must not be angry for a Matter of so little Consequence: But St. Gregory gave him to understand, that he did not take the Matter to be so. Cyriacus succeeding to John in the See of Constantinople, continued to assume the same Title, yet he wrote to St. Gregory immediately after his Promotion. This Pope would not refuse his Letter; but he gave him notice that he should quit that ambitious Title of Universal Patriarch, if he would prevent a Rupture between them, and wrote to the Emperor, that his Legate should not communicate with Cyriacus till he had parted with this vain Title, B. 6 Ep. 4, 5, 23, 24, 25, 28, 30 & 31. He exhorts the Bishop of Thessalonica not to approve this Title, B. 7 Ind. 2 Ep. 70. Yet Cyriacus would not quit it, and St. Gregory was also obliged to write to him, about the end of his Pontificate, B. 11 Ep. 43.

Of the Rights and Authority of the Metropolitans.

ST. Gregory desires, that in Africa a Primate should be chosen, rather with respect to his Merit than the Dignity of the See, and that he should reside in a City, B. 1 Ep. 72. Yet he permits the Bishops of Numidia to observe their ancient Customs, even as to the appointing of Primates, provided notwithstanding, that they suffer none who have been Donatists to ascend to that Dignity, B. 11 Ep. 75.

St. Gregory in naming his Deputies, preserves the Rights of Metropolitans: Singulis quibusque Metropolitis, secundum priscam consuetudinem, proprio honore servato, B. 4 Ep. 50. i. e. Saving to each Metropolitan, his peculiar honour, according to ancient Custom.

About the Pallium.

ST. Gregory sent the Pallium to many Bishops.
To Anastasius of Antioch, B. 1 Ep. 27.
To him of Ravenna, B. 7 Ind. 2 Ep. 77. B. 4 Ep. 54.
To him of Salonæ, B. 7 Ind. 2 Ep. 130. He threatens to deprive him of it, B. 2 Ep. 14.
To Leander Bishop of Sevil, B. 7 Ind. 2 Ep. 126.
To Siagrius of Autun, B. 7 Ind. 1 Ep. 5 Ind. 2 Ep. 113.
To the Bishop of Milan, B. 3 Ep. 1.
To the Bishop of Messina, B. 5 Ep. 8.
To the Bishop of Arles, B. 4 Ep. 50.
To the Bishop of Corinth, B. 4 Ep. 55.
The Form of sending the Pallium, B. 5 Ep. 8.
He had a Difference with the Bishop of Ravenna, about the time wherein he should wear it: This Bishop pretended that he ought to put it on in the Vestry, in the presence of all the Clergy, and wear it in Procession; but the Pope would not have him to put it on till after the Clergy were gone forth, and that he should not wear it in other Places besides in the Church and at the Altar, B. 2 Ind. 11 Ep. 53 & 55. Yet he permits him to wear it in some Processions, B. 4 Ep. 11 & 15. But he being not satisfied with this, had a mind to wear it whenever he pleas'd at the Ceremonies; and therefore St. Gregory informs him by his Notary Carlonus, after what manner it should be us'd, B. 5 Ep. 33.

He gives it to the Bishop of Arles, on condition that he should wear it only at the Altar, B. 3.

S. Gregory. He would not give it to Deſiderius, becauſe he could not prove, as he had affirm'd, that his Church had formerly enjoyed Apoſtolical Privileges, B. 7 Ind. 2 Ep. 117.

He would not give it to the Biſhop of Autun, until it had been deſir'd for him in the Queen's Name, and the Biſhops and the Emperor had conſented to it, B. 7 Ind. 1 Ep. 5. There he obſerves, that the Cuſtom is to give it only to Biſhops of noted Merit, who deſire it importunately. S. Gregory.

About the Title of Cardinal.

THe Title and Name of Cardinal with St. Gregory, ſignifies nothing but what is titular. As for inſtance, He permits the People of Naples to make Biſhop Paul, who was their Deputy, Cardinal of their Church, if they thought fit, B. 2 Ep. 6 & 7 Ib. Ep. 9. He ſpeaks of a Presbyter Cardinal in an Oratory. He recommends the Church of Calaria, to the Biſhop of Urbinum, during the Abſence and Sickneſs of its Biſhop, and prays him to take care of it, as he was the Proper and Cardinal Biſhop, Cardinalem & Proprium, B. 2 Ind. 11 Ep. 24 & 25. He makes the Biſhops of ruin'd Churches, Cardinal Biſhops of other Churches, B. 1 Ep. 77 B. 2 Ind. 10 Ep. 25 & 26 B. 2 Ind. 11 Ep. 13 & 14. A Deacon who had not been made Cardinal, ought to come after thoſe who had been ordained Cardinals, altho' they were younger than he, B. 1 Ep. 79 i. e. A Deacon ordain'd without a Title, has not the Place, until the Day whereon he is made titular. A Presbyter Cardinal of a Church of Populania in Tuſcany is a titular Prieſt of that Church, B. 1 Ep. 15.

Of the Pope's Deputies.

ST. Gregory grants to Vigilius Biſhop of Arles, by making him his Vicar in Gaul, the Right of giving Letters to Biſhops who have a Journey to make out of their own Country, to judge of difficult Cauſes with twelve Biſhops, to call together the Biſhops of the Country wherein he is Vicar, B. 4 Ep. 50 & 52.

The Pope's Legates.

THe Holy See ſent only two Deacons to the Emperor, B. 11 Ep. 45. St. Gregory made choice of ſuch as might be moſt acceptable to him, B. 1 Ep. 2 B. 9 Ep. 64. He recommends them by his Letters, B. 5 Ep. 5 & 6 B. 11 Ep. 43. He would have them frequently converſe with pious Perſons, to aboliſh the Impreſſions which Secular Affairs might make upon them.

Of the Functions of Arch-deacons, Deacons, Sub-deacons, and other Clergy-men.

THe Officers of Biſhops ought to be Clergy-men, B. 4. Ep. 4. An Arch-deacon is anſwerable for the Moveables of the Church, B. 1 Ep. 10. The Title of Arch-deacon was ſo conſiderable, that a Biſhop having a Deſign to be revenged upon an Arch-deacon, would ordain a Prieſt againſt his Mind, on purpoſe to turn him out of his place. St. Gregory concern'd himſelf againſt this Biſhop, and threatned to deprive him of the Pallium, and depoſe him, if he did not reſtore the Arch-deacon, B. 1 Ep. 19 B. 2 Ep. 14, 15, 17, 37.

St. Gregory grants to an Arch-deacon of Gap, the Uſe of the * Dalmatica, B. 7 Ind. 2 Ep. 112.

St. Gregory in a Synod forbids to put the Deacons upon ſinging in the Church: They ſhould be employ'd in the Service of the Altar, and the Diſtribution of Alms. The Sub-deacons ſhould ſing the Pſalms and read the Leſſons, and the inferior Orders ſhould not be employ'd in theſe Functions but in caſe of neceſſity, B. 4 Ep. 44.

The Vidame was an Officer who took care of the Revenues of the Biſhop of Rome, B. 1 Ep. 11. There is frequent mention in the Epiſtles of St. Gregory, of the Defenſores, i. e. Wardens, who were the Clerks that took care of the Patrimony of the Roman Church.

* Dalmatica is a long, white Garment, without Sleeves ſet off with Purple Knaps. Spelm. Gloſſ.

Of the Uſe of Eccleſiaſtical Revenues.

THe Revenues of Churches ought to be divided into four Parts, whereof one is for the Clergy, and another for the Poor; and the two other Parts ought to be ſubdivided into three, whereof one ſhall be for the Maintenance of the Church, the other for the Biſhop, and the laſt for the Wants of particular Perſons, B. 4. Ep. 42.

That Part which is for the Poor ought to be taken out of the new Purchaſes, as well as out of the old Poſſeſſions, B. 3 Ep. 11 B. 7 Ind. 1 Ep. 8 B. 11 Ep. 49. That Part which is for the Clergy ought to be diſtributed indifferently among them, B. 7. Ind. 10 Ep. 8.

The Letter 51 of B. 8. contains many Articles of an Agreement made between the Clergy of Panormum and their Biſhop, which the Pope confirms, and in conſequence thereof, order'd the Biſhop, firſt, To diſtribute a full fourth part of the Revenues of his Church among all the Clergy, proportionable to their Merit, Office, and the Labour of each. Secondly, To give them the fourth part of the Offerings of the Faithful, whether they be in Money or other Preſents. Thirdly, To detain only the Remainder of the Moveables for himſelf, and to unite all the immoveable Purchaſes to the Poſſeſſions of the Church. Fourthly, To commiſſion a Receiver of the Revenues with the Conſent of the Elders and the Clergy, Seniorum & Cleri, who ſhall give an Accompt every year, that all Occaſion of Suſpicion may be cut off. Fifthly, To permit the Clergy to take up their Proviſion of Wine at a reaſonable Price upon the Credit of the Church. Sixthly, To take care to remove ill-gotten Goods, and to uſe only honeſt ways of getting. Laſtly, He exhorts him not to believe lightly what ſhall be told him againſt his Clergy, nor to proceed againſt them with Paſſion, but only by Canonical Ways.

The Biſhop cannot by Teſtament diſpoſe of the Poſſeſſions of the Church, nor of the Purchaſes made while he was Biſhop, B. 5 Ep. 1.

The Revenues of the Church ought to be employ'd for the Aſſiſtance of the Poor, without reſerving any thing for the future by a dangerous Precaution, B. 8 Ep. 20.

In the extream Neceſſity of the Poor, the ſacred Veſſels, and that which ſerves for miniſtring in holy Things, ought to be ſold, but all the ready Money muſt be firſt diſburs'd, B. 6 Ep. 13, 35, 66.

The Rights of the Church muſt be maintain'd, the Poſſeſſions which belong to it muſt be defended and recover'd; but this muſt not be done with all the Rigor that's poſſible: 'Twere even better to loſe ſomething, and abandon a part of the Revenues of the Church, than to be the Cauſe of Ruin to the Poor, B. 7 Ind. 2 Ep. 23. when there is room for doubting, whether the Goods belong to the Church, or no, 'tis beſt to yield.

The Governors of Hoſpitals give an Accompt of their Revenues to the Biſhop, B. 3. Ep. 24.

It belongs to the Biſhop to take care of theſe Revenues, B. 3 Ep. 24 B. 8 Ep. 20. When he cannot do it by himſelf he muſt appoint a Steward for it, B. 11 Ep. 57.

Of the Patrimony of St. Peter.

IN the time of St. Gregory the Church of Rome had many Poſſeſſions in Lands, not only in Italy and Sicily, but alſo in France, in Dalmatia, in Illyricum, &c. Theſe Poſſeſſions were call'd the Patrimony of St. Peter: They were managed and adminiſtred by the Perſons called Defenſores, i. e. Wardens, who gave an account of them. St. Gregory employ'd the Revenues of theſe Patrimonies in Works of Piety: He deſir'd that his Rights might not be exacted with Rigor, nor any new Taxes impoſed. His Wardens had their Prerogatives and Juriſdictions. In Gaul they inſpected the Chappels and Abbies. Theſe things may be proved by many Letters. See B. 1 Ep. 1, 2, 23, 37, 38, 39, 42, 44, 58 B. 2 Ep. 1 Ind. 10, 17 Ind. 11 Ep. 17, 33 B. 5 Ep. 5, 6, 10 B. 9 Ep. 65. In this laſt, he ſpeaks of the Right of inſpecting Chappels and Abbies.

Of

Of the Celibacy of Clergy-men.

S. Gregory.

ST. Gregory took it ill that the Sub-deacons of Sicily were obliged to abſtain from their Wives, according to the Cuſtom of the Church of Rome. This Law appear'd to him harſh and unreaſonable, becauſe they found not Continence eſtabliſhed by any Law for them, and they were not obliged to keep it before they were ordained, he fear'd leſt ſomething worſe ſhould happen if this yoke were impos'd upon them. He orders that none ſhall be ordain'd for the future, who do not promiſe to live in Continence. He declares that thoſe, who have obſerved the Prohibitions made three Years ago, deſerve to be commended; but he would not have thoſe depoſed who had broken them, altho' he forbids to promote them to Holy Orders.

He declares in Letter 34 of Book 3. That he will put in Execution the Order of the Pope his Predeceſſor, about the Continence of the Sub-deacons, and that thoſe who are married ſhall be obliged to abſtain from it, or elſe to forſake the Service of the Altar. He would not have the Wives puniſh'd of thoſe who deſir'd rather to quit the Service than renounce them, nor the Women hindred from marrying again after their Death. He orders for the future that no Sub-deacon ſhall be made who is not obliged beforehand to obſerve Celibacy. S. Gregory.

He enjoyns the Biſhop of Tarentum who had a Concubine, voluntarily to reſign the Biſhoprick, and to do a reaſonable Penance, if he had kept company with her ſince he was a Biſhop, B. 2 Ind. 11 Ep. 4.

He forbad Clergy-men very ſeverely to keep ſtrange Women in their Houſes, and alſo exhorted them not to keep thoſe which are excepted by the Canons, B. 1 Ep. 50 B. 7 Ind. 2 Ep. 39 B. 3 Ep. 26 B. 11 Ep. 42 & 43.

He implores the Authority of the Prince againſt diſorderly Clergy-men who kept Women in their Houſes, B. 9. Ep. 64.

He forbids to ordain a Deacon Biſhop who had a very young Daughter, by whoſe Age it manifeſtly appear'd that he had not long obſerved Continence, B. 8 Ep. 11.

Againſt Simony.

ST. Gregory forbids to take any thing for Ordinations, for Marriages, and for admiſſion into a Religious Houſe, or for any Eccleſiaſtical Office, B. 3 Ep. 24 B. 4 Ep. 44, 55, 56 B. 7 Ind. 2 Ep. 110. Or even for Burial B. 7 Ind. 1 Ep. 4. except what the Kinſmen or Heirs offer voluntarily for the Light, B. 7 Ind. 2 Ep. 56.

He forbids the Biſhops of Sicily to take any thing above the uſual Rate for the Confirmation of Infants, pro confirmandis Infantibus, B. 11 Ep. 22. nor for the Funeral, B. 7 Ind. 1 Ep. 4.

He was ſo afraid leſt it ſhould be thought that he exacted any thing from the Suffragan Biſhops, that he would not ſuffer the Churches to ſend him the Annual Preſents according to Cuſtom, B. 1 Ep. 64.

Simony was very common in his time in the Eaſt and in Greece, B. 5 Ep. 11 B. 4 Ep. 55. B. 9 Ep. 40 B. 11 Ep. 48. In Sicily, B. 7 Ind. 1 Ep. 4, 56. In Africa, B. 10. Ep. 32. But chiefly in the Gauls, B. 7 Ind. 2 Ep. 111, & 114, 115 B. 9 Ep. 49, 50, 51. and the following Letters. He wrote earneſtly to Biſhops and Kings, that they would put a ſtop to this Diſorder by forbidding it, Ibid.

Of the Submiſſion due to Princes.

ST. Gregory gives proof of his Submiſſion to the Orders of the Emperor, in Ep. 62 of Ind. 11 B. 2. Mauritius had directed to him a Law which contain'd three Articles. By the firſt it was forbidden to receive thoſe into the Clergy who were engaged in any Publick Adminiſtration. St. Gregory found no fault with this Article. But as to the ſecond, wherein they were forbidden to enter into a Monaſtery, he finds it unreaſonable, becauſe the Monaſtery may diſcharge the Debts of theſe Perſons and make up their Accompts; beſides that it's to be preſum'd that one who deſires ſincerely to be converted, will take order with his Affairs. Neither does he approve the third Head which forbids thoſe which had been deſign'd for the Militia, to enter into a Monaſtery. He makes his Remonſtrance with a great deal of reſpect, and declares to the Emperor that he did not ſuffer this Law to be publiſhed, and that herein he had done his duty as a Subject and as a Biſhop; as a Subject in obeying his Prince, as a Biſhop in making his moſt humble Remonſtrance: Utrobique quod debui exſolvi, & Imperatori obedientiam præbui, & pro Deo quod ſenſi minime tacui.

When Phocas invaded the Empire, St. Gregory did not oppoſe his Exaltation; but on the contrary he acknowledged and even commended him. B. 11 Ep. 45. See alſo the Memorial which is at the beginning of the ſame Book. *

In Ep. 127. of Ind. 2. B. 7. He commends the King Recaredus for bringing back his Arian Subjects to the Church, and repreſents to him the Reward he was to expect for preſenting ſo many Souls to God. He declares to him that he looks upon him in this reſpect as much above himſelf: he praiſes him alſo for not recalling the Order he had made againſt the Jews. After he has given him theſe Commendations, he exhorts him to be circumſpect in his behaviour, and recommends to him Humility, Purity, and Moderation.

Notwithſtanding this, he did not forbear to write to Princes with boldneſs, and to make Chriſtian Remonſtrances unto them. He exhorts Phocas to relieve the People, B. 11 Ep. 38. He admoniſhes Kings to remember that they are but Men like others, B. 2 Ind. 11 Ep. 62. He repreſents to them that it was not enough to be a King, but the Chief buſineſs was to be Pious, B. 5 Ep. 5 & 6. He declares to them that they were oblig'd to protect the Church and the Faith, B. 2 Ind. 2 Ep. 126 B. 3 Ep. 7, 23 B. 4 Ep. 54 B. 5 Ep. 63 B. 9 Ep. 57, 64. He terrified them by repreſenting to them that the Day of Judgment was near at hand, B. 9 Ep. 60 B. 2 Ind. 11 Ep. 61. and by threatning them with the Plagues of God, B. 2 Ind. 11 Ep. 65.

* This was his ſubmiſſion to Princes that he baſely fawn'd upon Phocas a Parracide and Uſurper, and bitterly reproach'd the Memory of his Liege Lord Mauritius, Cave, p. 431.

Of Eccleſiaſtical Moderation.

ST. Gregory declares in Letter 1. of Book 7. That he always abhorr'd the ways of Cruelty that were us'd for planting Religion; that if he had pleas'd, he could have deſtroy'd the whole Nation of the Lombards, but that it was not the Spirit of the Church.

He deſires that Juſtice and Equity may be obſerv'd towards the Jews, as well as among Chriſtians, and that no injury may be done unto them. Here follow the Examples of his Moderation. He wrote to Vigilius of Arles, and Theodorus Biſhop of Marſeilles, that the Jews ought not to be compell'd to be baptiz'd, leſt the ſacred Fonts of Regeneration to a Divine Life by Baptiſm, ſhould be to them the occaſion of a ſecond Death more deadly than the firſt, B. 1 Ep. 45. He would have them allur'd by Moderation, B. 1 Ep. 11. He does not approve the Zeal of a Jew newly baptized, who on the next Day after his Baptiſm, thought fit to carry the Image of the Virgin, a Croſs, and a white Garment in the Synagogue, to endeavour the Converſion of the Jews, and to take from them the place of their Aſſembly. He deſires that theſe things may be removed out of the Synagogue, and that it may be reſtored to the Jews, B. 7 Ind. 2 Ep. 5.

He blames the Biſhop of Terracina, who had hindred the Jews from celebrating their Feſtivals in the City, and had driven them out of it, appointing them another place for holding their Aſſemblies B. 1 Ep. 34. He orders that the Price of their Synagogues which they had invaded, ſhould be reſtored unto them, B. 7 Ind. 2 Ep. 59.

He complains of John the Younger, that he had ſuffer'd the Prieſts of Conſtantinople to be abus'd, without concerning himſelf in their Defence: and he adds, that 'tis a thing unheard of, to force People by beating them with a ſtick to receive the Faith: Inaudita eſt prædicatio, quæ verberibus exigit fidem.

He would have Hereticks eaſily received, B. 1 Ep. 14. And the better to entice ſuch Idolaters as were lately converted, he permits that the Feſtival Days which were wont to be kept near the Churches, ſhould be obſerv'd in that Place where they had been accuſtomed to make their Feaſts of Meats offer'd unto Idols. B. 9 Ep. 71.

Of the Duties to which Biſhops are obliged.

BIſhops are called Paſtors upon no other account, but becauſe they ought to labour for the good of their Flocks, B. 3 Ep. 35 B. 4 Ep. 8, 35. A Biſhop ought to inſtruct his People by his Diſcourſe and by his Example, B. 4 Ep. 52, 55 B. 7 Ind. 1. Ep. 12, 113 B. 12 Ep. 32 B. 10 Ep. 17 B. 11 Ep. 10. He ought to ſhun the Pomps and Vanities of this World, and not to place his Honour in External Magnificence, but in the Excellency of his Office.

S. Gregory.

He ought to be candid, modeſt, meek, ſincere, patient, &c. B. 4 Ep. 15. He ought to make himſelf belov'd and fear'd B. 3 Ep. 1. He muſt not only be Pious and Spiritual, but he muſt be alſo Active and Charitable, B. 5 Ep. 29. He muſt not apply himſelf to the gaining Riches, but of Souls, B. 5 Ep. 29 B. 7 Ind. 2 Ep. 2.

Biſhops are oblig'd to make Viſitations in their Dioceſes, to confirm the Children that are baptiz'd, B. 8 Ep. 46. They ought to entertain their Brethren, when they are driven away or baniſh'd, B. 1 Ep. 43.

The Biſhops Officers ought all to be Clergy-men, B. 4 Ep. 44. The Laws of the Emperors about the Immunities of the Clergy, B. 11 Ep. 56.

St. Gregory would not have Biſhops teach Humane Learning, becauſe then they muſt praiſe Jupiter with the ſame Mouth wherewith they ſing the Praiſes of Jeſus Chriſt. He ſays alſo, that this is not ſuitable for a pious Lay-man, B. 9 Ep. 48.

S. Gregory.

The Biſhops who go to Court ought to have Letters of Leave from the Metropolitan, B. 7 Ind. 2 Ep. 62.

Biſhops ought to be ſober. St. Gregory refutes the Biſhop Honoratus, who excus'd the good Cheer that he made by the Examples of the Feaſts of the Patriarchs, and the Love-Feaſts of the firſt Chriſtians, B. 2 Ep. 14 & 37.

The Biſhops are oblig'd to Reſidence, B. 1 Ep. 64 B. 5 Ep. 23 B. 8 Ep. 11. They ought not to go out of their Dioceſe, for any Buſineſs without the leave of the Metropolitans, B. 7 Ep. 8, 62. They ought to dwell within the bounds of their Dioceſe, and not to invade the Pariſhes of another Dioceſe, upon any pretence whatſoever, B. 12 Ep. 2 & 3. They ought not to abandon their Church in the time of Peſtilence, B. 8 Ep. 4 B. 4 Ep. 2.

Of the Penance of Clergymen.

ST. Gregory was of the mind, that a Clergy-man being Depoſed, who had perform'd the Duties of his Function, ought to be depriv'd of the Communion, and put under Penance all the reſt of his Life. Yet he leaves the Biſhops at Liberty to grant him Lay-Communion if he finds him worthy of it after he has finiſh'd his Penance, B. 4 Ep. 5. Examples of Clergy-men Depos'd and put under Penance in Monaſteries, are to be ſeen, B. 1 Ep. 18, 43 B. 3 Ep. 9 B. 2 Ind. 11 Ep. 28, 40. He threatens a Biſhop with it, B. 5 Ep. 23. Clergy-men that are fallen into Carnal Sin, can never be reſtored, B. 1 Ep. 43 B. 3 Ep. 26.

A Deacon for his Calumnies was condemn'd to be depos'd, whipped, and baniſh'd, B. 9 Ep. 66. Another that had deflowred a Maid, was ſhut up in a Monaſtery, and was ſentenced to Corporal Puniſhment, B. 2 Ind. 2 Ep. 40.

Of Excommunication.

AGainſt thoſe who ſay that we ought not to fear Excommunications, nor have any regard to them, B. 9. Ep. 39.

St. Gregory declares that Excommunication null, which was pronounced by Laurentius Biſhop of Milan againſt Magnus the Prieſt, and aſſures him that he may receive the Communion if he be not guilty of ſome ſecret Fault, B. 2 Ind. 11 Ep. 26.

A Biſhop who had pronounced a haſty Sentence of Excommunication againſt an Abbot, is reprov'd by St. Gregory B. 12 Ep. 26, 30. We muſt not excommunicate any for ſlight Cauſes, or in Paſſion, B. 2 Ind. 10 Ep. 34 B. 12 Ep. 26.

There ought to be three Admonitions before Excommunication, B. 2 Ind. 11 Ep. 54.

He who is excommunicated by his Superior, ought not to be admitted to the Communion, until he is abſolved, B. 7 Ind. 2 Ep. 36.

Rules concerning the Monks.

ST. Gregory having been a Monk himſelf, 'tis no wonder that he took a particular care of the Monks during his Pontificate.

He would have no Perſon received into the Monaſteries before the Age of Eighteen, B. 1 Ep. 41.

Before any one becomes a profeſs'd Monk, by taking upon him the Monaſtical Habit, he muſt firſt be try'd in a Lay-habit, and ſerve as a Probationer for two Years, B. 4 Ep. 44 B. 8 Ep. 23.

A Monk who abandons his Habit and Profeſſion, ſhould be ſhut up. St. Gregory would grant no Diſpenſation in this Caſe, B. 12 Ep. 20 B. 1 Ep. 33, 40.

Vagabond Monks ought not to be ſuffer'd, B. 1 Ep. 4 B. 6 Ep. 32 B. 7 Ind. 2 Ep. 36.

Lay-men ought not to be admitted to ſtay in Monaſteries, B. 4 Ep. 1.

The Clergy who have taken upon them the Monaſtical Habit, cannot have a place among the Clergy if they quit the Monaſtical Life, at leaſt unleſs they be ordain'd Prieſts by their Biſhops, B. 1 Ep. 40.

St. Gregory would not have thoſe choſen for Abbots who are Prieſts, Deacons, or Clerks of Churches. Neither would he have thoſe who are of the Clergy made Monks, becauſe the Eccleſiaſtical Order is perfectly different from the Monaſtical Life, B. 3 Ep. 11 B. 4 Ep. 8.

But notwithſtanding this, ſome Abbots and Monks were Prieſts; for St. Gregory writes to many Abbots that were Prieſts, but they were ordained in their Convent. As for example, St. Gregory enjoyns the Biſhop of Panormum to ordain him Prieſt whom the Monks ſhould chooſe to ſay Maſs in their Houſe, B. 5 Ep. 14. Sometimes alſo in a caſe of Neceſſity, the Biſhop could take the Monks in the Monaſtery of his Dioceſs, and advance them to the Prieſthood, that he might employ them in his own Church, B. 5 Ep. 27. But the deſign of the Church was, that thoſe who were of the Clergy, and deſtin'd for the Service of the Church, ſhould not be Monks, and that the Monks ſhould not be of the Clergy, becauſe the Monks are obliged to Retirement, which is diſturbed by the Service which the Clergy are bound to do to the Church. For this reaſon St. Gregory would not have the Biſhops come to celebrate Publick Maſſes in the Monaſteries, B. 5 Ep. 46. But thinks it ſufficient that they ſend thither a Prieſt, if they would have Maſſes ſaid there, Ibid. & B. 3 Ep. 18.

The Monks had not power to make a Will. St. Gregory allows it to one whom he had made an Abbot againſt his will. This Conceſſion is in B. 9 Ep. 22. The date of the Years of Jeſus Chriſt, which might make the Truth of it queſtionable, is not found in the ancient Manuſcripts.

A Monk who cannot labour, ought to be maintained at the expence of his Family, B. 7 Ind. 1 Ep. 1.

A Monk ought not to go forth alone, becauſe it is to be preſum'd that he who walketh without a Witneſs lives not well: Qui ſine teſte ambulat non rectè vivit, B. 10 Ep. 22.

A Monk ought to have nothing which may be call'd his own Property, B. 1 Ep. 40 B. 5. Ep. 12 B. 10. Ep. 22.

Of an Abbot.

HE could not be choſen for an Abbot who had offended againſt Chaſtity, or had been put under Penance: wherefore St. Gregory makes void the Election of an Abbot who confeſs'd that he had committed a Sin of Uncleanneſs, B. 2 Ind. 11 Ep. 23.

The Abbot, as well as the other Monks, is forbidden to go out of the Monaſtery: he ought to have a Proctor for Civil Affairs, and to give himſelf wholly to Prayer, and Reading, B. 2 Ind. 11 Ep. 3 B. 1 Ep. 47. He who being barely a Monk goes forth without a Companion, is not worthy to be choſen Abbot, B. 10 Ep. 22.

The Abbot muſt chooſe for a Superior him who is immediately next to himſelf if he be worthy of it, if not, he ought to take one of the Brethren who were laſt admitted, that ſo all of them may be encouraged to do well when they ſhall ſee that there is not ſo great regard had to Age as to Merit, B. 6 Ep. 10.

The Diſorders of a Monaſtery do often proceed from the bad Conduct of a Superior, who is either too mild or too paſſionate, B. 9 Ep. 42.

An Abbot ought to have the Qualifications which are ſuitable to his Dignity, B. 6 Ep. 18. He ought to reform his Monks, B. 6 Ep. 29.

Biſhops ought not to ſupport the Monks who are diſobedient to their Abbots, B. 6 Ep 32.

A Stranger ought not to be choſen for Abbot, if there be any in the Monaſtery fit for the Office, B. 8 Ind. 1 Ep. 18.

The Abbot ought always to have the firſt place in the Monaſtery, B. 7 Ind. 1 Ep. 18.

The Monks of one Monaſtery ought not to be ſent to reform thoſe of another, nor ought they to be ordain'd Clergy-men without the Conſent of the Abbot; yet if he will not ſend ſome to reform neighbouring Monaſteries, the Biſhops may oblige him to do it, B. 7 Ind. 1 Ep. 18. It belongs to the Abbot to make an Inventory of the Goods of Monaſteries, Ibid.

Of

Of the Exemption of Monasteries.

S. Gregory.

ALthough St. Gregory always subjected the Monks to the ordinary Jurisdiction of the Bishop, yet he granted them some Privileges, which neither tended to subvert the Order of the Church, nor to exempt them from Episcopal Jurisdiction, but only to procure them more Repose.

He exempted the Monastery of Ariminum from the Visitation of the Bishop after the Death of the Abbot, and from the Celebration of publick Masses; but he left to the Bishop the Right of ordaining him Abbot, whom the Monks should choose, B. 4 Ep. 41 & 43. in Ep. 12. of B. 6. He grants the Abbess of the Monastery of Nuns at Marseilles, which is said to be consecrated in Honour of St. Cassianus, the following Privileges, that after the Death of the Abbess, no Abbess that is a Stranger shall be set over them, but she whom the Nuns shall choose. 2. That the Abbess shall have the Administration of the Revenue of the Abby, and neither the Bishop nor any other Person shall meddle with it. 3. That the Bishop shall celebrate Divine Service there on the Day of its Dedication, and that his Chair shall not continue there the rest of the time; but on other days Divine Service shall be performed there by the Priest whom the Bishop shall send thither. 4. That the Bishop in Person shall take Cognizance of the Faults of the Abbess, or the other Nuns.

S. Gregory.

In B. 7 Ind. 2 Ep. 116. which is address'd to the Bishop of Arles, he confirms the Privileges granted by the Holy See to a Monastery of Monks at Arles without specifying them.

He says in Ep. 12 of B. 1. That the Bishop ought not to hinder the saying of Masses, and burying the Dead in Monasteries.

He forbids Bishops to be burthensome to Monks, or to exact any thing of them, B. 5 Ep. 28 B. 7 Ind. 1 Ep. 18, 33.

He forbids Priests and Secular Clergy-men to trouble them, B. 5 Ep. 28 B. 6 Ep. 40 B. 7 Ind. 1 Ep. 18.

None but the Bishop has any Jurisdiction over the Monks, B. 7 Ind. 2 Ep. 15.

Of the Uniting of Monasteries.

ST. Gregory did often unite a Monastery which was abandon'd, to another Monastery, or a Church which was relinquish'd to a Monastery; but always on condition that the Service should be said in the Church, or in the Monastery united, at the Expence of the Monks. See B. 8 Ep. 39 B. 11 Ep. 4 B. 9 Ep. 67, 68.

Rules for the Monasteries of Nuns.

ST. Gregory had a very particular Care of the Nuns, B. 3 Ep. 9. He would not permit any Monasteries of Nuns to be founded unless a sufficient Revenue were secured for them, B. 8 Ep. 63 B. 7. Ind. 1 Ep. 6. He forbids them to be built near the Monasteries of Men, B. 9. Ep 20. Women ought not to lodge in the Monasteries of Men, B. 8 Ep. 21, 22. The Nuns ought not to go forth, even for their Affairs, B. 3. Ep. 9. He forbids most strictly to choose young Abbesses, B. 3 Ep. 11. An Abbess ought to be chosen out of the Nuns of the Monastery, B. 6 Ep. 12. The Bishop ought to confirm the Election of the Abbess, and install her, B. 6 Ep. 12 The Abbess has a right to administer the Goods of the Monastery, B 6. Ep. 12. In the Monasteries of the Nuns there ought to be an Oratory; they ought to be subject to the Jurisdiction of the Bishop, they ought not to go forth. He that takes care of their Affairs ought to be ancient, and of a good Life, B. 2 Ind. 11 Ep. 59 B. 3 Ep. 9 B. 6 Ep. 12. He forbids the Seculars to enter into the Monasteries of Nuns, B. 4 Ep. 4.

St. Gregory reproves the Custom of an Abby, wherein the Abbess did not relinquish her Secular Habit, B. 7. Ep. 2 Ind. 7.

The Consecration of Churches.

WHen St. Gregory commission'd Bishops to consecrate Oratories and Churches, the chief thing which he recommended to them was, to take good heed that no dead Body were buried in the place. This is to be found in very many places of his Letters. See among others B. 1 Ep. 52 B. 5 Ep. 22 B. 7 Ind. 10, 6 B. 12 Ep 10, &c. If a Bishop consecrated an Oratory in another Diocess, he declares that what he had done was null and void, B. 11 Ep. 2. The Pagan Temples must be consecrated with Holy Water, after the Idols are destroy'd B. 9 Ep. 71. He would not have a new Church consecrated unless it were endowed with a sufficient Revenue, for maintaining Divine Service and the Clergy, B. 2 Ind. 10. Ep. 9 B. 7 Ind. 1 Ep. 6 B. 8 Ep. 63 B. 11 Ep. 18. B. 21 Ep. 10.

The Uniting of Bishopricks.

BIshopricks were united either because of the small number of the Inhabitants, or because the City of one of the two Bishopricks was ruin'd, B. 1 Ep. 8 B. 2. Ind. 10 Ep. 31 & 35. B. 5. Ep. 9 B. 2 Ind. 11 Ep. 20.

The Translation of Bishops.

WE have no other Examples of them in St. Gregory, but only of such Bishops whose Churches were ruin'd or possessed by Enemies: And those he permits to be Suffragans, and even Titular Bishops of other Churches, but on condition, that if their Churches were restor'd, or rebuilt, they should return unto them. See under the Title of Cardinal, and chiefly B. 1 Ep. 77, 79 B. 2 Ind. 10 Ep. 22 & 25 Ind. 11 Ep. 13 & 14. A Translation from the See of a Bishop, B. 2 Ind. 1 Ep. 7. He gives the Care of a Church to another Bishop, B. 2 Ind. 10 Ep. 13 & 38 Ind. 11 Ep. 13.

He invites the Bishops who had no Bishopricks, to fill those Sees which were vacant, B. 4 Ep. 35.

Rules concerning Christian Slaves.

JEws must not be suffered to keep Christian Slaves, altho' Christians are obliged to pay them the Rents of the Lands which they hire from them, B. 3 Ep. 21. The Law which grants Freedom to Jewish Slaves who become Christians, ought to be extended to Pagan Slaves also who are bought by Jews when they become Christians. The Jews have three Months allow'd them, after they are bought, to sell them to a Christian, but after this time, if they continue still with them, they shall be set at Liberty, because 'tis to be presum'd, since they do not sell them in three Months time, that they have a Design to keep them for their own Service, B. 5 Ep. 31. This time is also restrain'd to the term of forty days after they shall arrive, B. 7 Ind. 2 Ep. 35. St. Gregory prays the Queen Brunehauld to cause forbid the Jews in her Kingdom to keep Christian Slaves, B. 7 Ind. 2 Ep. 115. A Form of enfranchising them, B. 5 Ep. 12. The Slaves of Jews who take Sanctuary in the Churches, ought not to be restor'd unto them, B. 3 Ep. 9.

Of the Veneration due to Reliques.

ST. Gregory had a great Veneration for Reliques, particularly for those of St. Peter and St. Paul. He refus'd to send some of them to the Empress Constantina, assuring her, that they were not to be approached without Terror; that his Predecessor desiring to have some of the Plates touch'd that were near them, was troubled with Visions, and endeavouring to change something at the Sepulchre of St. Laurence, the Monks and Churchwarden who search'd for discovering it, died in ten days time; that the Reliques of the Holy Apostles are never given, but only a Piece of Stuff or Linen, which has come near their Bodies, is put into a Box, which is sufficient, and has the same Effect. Upon this Occasion he relates many Stories: He promises her some of the Filings of the Chain of St. Peter, if the Priest who is appointed for filing them could have any, for this File will not take hold, when those who desire them do not deserve to receive them, B. 3 Ep. 30. S. Gregory.

He sent every where some of these Filings enchas'd in Keys. See B. 1 Ep. 25, 29, & 30 B. 2 Ind. 11 Ep. 33, 47 B. 5 Ep. 6 B. 6 Ep. 20, 23, 25 B. 7 Ind. 1 Ep. 34 Ind. 2 Ep. 54, 126, 111 B. 20 Ep. 7 B. 11 Ep. 45. He desires the Reliques of other Saints, B. 2 Ind. 11 Ep. 9. He makes use of Reliques for consecrating of Churches, B. 5. Ep. 45, 50 B. 7 Ind. 2 Ep. 73, 74, 85 B. 9 Ep. 26. S. Gregory.

Of the Use of Images.

Serenus Bishop of Marseilles, having broken and thrown down the Images of his Church, because he observ'd that the People ador'd them, the Pope commends his Zeal that he had hindred them from worshipping them; but he does not take it well that he had broken them, because they serve for Books to those who cannot read, who learn by looking upon them with their Eyes, what they cannot discover by reading of Books. He thinks that he should have let them stand, and only have instructed the People that they should not worship them. B. 7 Ind. 2 Ep. 110.

Serenus receiving this Letter, doubted whether it was St. Gregory's or no. This Saint assures him that it was his, and speaks to him of this Action in these very Words: We praise you, says he to him, *for hindring the People from worshipping of Images, but we rebuke you for breaking of them: Tell me, my Brother, where is the Bishop that ever did the like? If nothing else could hinder you from doing it, yet ought you not to have refrain'd for the very Singularity of the thing? Should you not have been afraid to make People believe that you thought your self the only wise and prudent Person? There is a great deal of difference between worshipping an Image, and learning whom we ought worship, by the historical Representation of a Picture; for what the Scripture teaches those who can read, the Picture informs such as have Eyes to look upon it. The unlearned see in it what they ought to follow, it is a Book to them who know not a Letter; and therefore it is very useful for Barbarians, for whom you ought to have a particular regard who live amongst them, and not give them offence by an indiscreet Zeal. You ought not to break that which is plac'd in the Churches, not to be worshipped, but to give Instruction to the Ignorant. Ancient Custom permitted the Pictures of Sacred Histories to be set up in Churches, and your Zeal, if it had been attended with Discretion, would never have torn them, nor have occasion'd such a Scandal as has driven away a part of your People from your Communion. You ought therefore to call them back again, and declare unto them, that Images ought not to be worshipped, that you would not have broken them, but that you saw the People adore them, and that you will permit them to continue for the future, provided they be made use of only for * Instruction. Do not forbid Images, but hinder them from being worshipped in any manner whatsoever, and stir up your People to Compunction, and the Adoration of the Holy Trinity, by looking upon the Pictures of holy Histories.* B. 9 Ep. 9.

[* This is expresly contrary to the Council of Trent, Sess. 25. which declares that Images are to be plac'd in Churches, and to be worshipped there; and to the common Doctrine of Romish Writers now, who allow at least of Relative Worship to be given them.]

Of divers Ceremonies of the Church of Rome.

ST. Gregory having appointed certain new Rites in the Church of Rome, was reproved for it by some of his Friends, who were disgusted with him for following the Customs of the Church of Constantinople, which he design'd to humble in every thing. They blam'd him chiefly for four things: 1. For saying Hallelujah at Mess on other days besides Whitsunday. 2. That the Sub-deacons were not in their Habit when they perform'd their Office. 3. For singing Kyrie Eleison, Lord have mercy upon us. 4. For ordering the Lord's Prayer to be repeated, immediately after the Canon of the Mess. St. Gregory answers in general, that in none of these Heads he had followed the Custom of any other particular Church: That as to the Hallelujah, it came from the Church of Jerusalem, from which St. Jerome took it, and introduc'd it into the Church of Rome in the time of Pope Damasus: That in obliging the Sub-deacons to minister without their Habit, he had renewed an ancient Custom, that had been abrogated by a Pope, whose Name he knew not; That the Sub-deacons do only wear Linen Albes in the Church of Syracuse, which has receiv'd the Customs of the Roman Church its Mother, and not in the Greek Church; That formerly, Kyrie Eleison, was not wont to be said, and at present it is not said after the manner of the Greeks, who repeat it altogether, whereas at Rome the Clergy begin it, and the People respond to it, and as often as they do, Christe Eleison is said; which Practice is not us'd among the Greeks: That in the daily Messes something is omitted of what us'd to be said at Mess, but then Kyrie Eleison, and Christe Eleison, is sung for a much longer time. As to what concerns the Lord's Prayer, he adds, that it is us'd immediately after the Canon, (post Precem) because the Apostles had a Custom of consecrating the Sacrifice of Oblation with this Prayer only, (ad ipsam solummodo Orationem) and that it did not appear to him proper, to repeat over the Oblation, a Prayer which had been made by a Civil Lawyer, and not to repeat over the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, that Prayer which himself composed: And besides, that among the Greeks the Lord's Prayer is pronounc'd by all the People, but at Rome the Priest only says it, B. 7 Ind. 2 Ep. 64.

The Clergy of Rome would not have the Clergy-men of the Church of Ravenna to wear the Mappulæ: St. Gregory grants the Use of them to the Deacons only, while they are administring their Office. The Bishop of Ravenna maintains, that all the Clergy-men ought to wear them, B. 2 Ind. 11 Ep. 55.

A Song was sung in the Church of Ravenna on the Easter Wax-candle, B. 9 Ep. 28.

St. Gregory ordains Processions or Litanies in the time of War, B. 9 Ep. 45.

He permits Messes to be said in Houses, B. 5 Ep. 42 & 43. The Roman Church had not in his time any other History of the Martyrs but what is in Eusebius. She us'd only a Catalogue of the holy Martyrs for every day of the year, which noted barely the time and place of their Martyrdom, B. 7 Ind. 1. Ep. 3.

He forbids to travel on Sunday, but he does not think it unlawful to bathe on that day, when it is done for Health, and not for Pleasure, B. 11 Ep. 3.

Of the last Judgment.

WHensoever there happen'd any great Revolutions in the World, the Christians were easily persuaded, that the End of the World was approaching. Now St. Gregory had seen some very considerable in his time, and fore-seeing the Ruin of the Roman Empire to be very near at hand, which some thought should never be 'till the end of the World, he became of that Opinion, that the last Judgment was drawing near. This he affirms in many places of his Letters, and chiefly, B. 2 Ind 11 Ep. 62 B. 3 Ep. 44 B. 7 Ind. 2 Ep. 128, &c.

Jesus Christ preach'd only to those Souls departed who had believed in him, and led a good Life, B. 5 Ep. 15.

The Letters of St. Gregory against the Defenders of the three Chapters.

ALtho' the Church of Rome approv'd the Condemnation of the three Chapters, yet its Example was not follow'd by all the Bishops of Italy. Many did not only persist in their Resolution not to condemn them, but also separated from the Church of Rome and the other Bishops who had receiv'd this Condemnation, or who communicated with the Bishops that had sign'd it. St. Gregory being concern'd to see so many Bishops separate from the Church for a Question of so little Importance, us'd all his Endeavours to bring them back again by Ways of Meekness and Civility. For this end he invited at the beginning of his Pontificate, Severus Bishop of Aquileia, and the other Bishops of Istria who were more obstinate, to come to Rome, there to treat amicably of this Controversy, and promis'd to remove the Scruples they might have about it. But these Bishops refus'd to admit of this Accommodation, and maintain'd their Principle with so much Stiffness, that they attributed the Calamities wherewith Italy was then afflicted, to the Condemnation of the three Chapters. The City of Aquileia being afterwards taken by the Lombards, Severus was forc'd to retire to Gradus, from whence he was carried by the Emperor's Order to Ravenne, where he condemned the three Chapters: But finding a way to obtain Letters from the Emperor, which forbad to disturb those who defended the three Chapters in the West, he declar'd himself anew for the defence of them, and

S. Gregory. and so agreed the matter with the Lombards, that he was restor'd to Aquileia, where he died. After his Death, Agilulphus King of the Lombards, caused John to be chosen in his room, who was a Defender of the three Chapters; and the Pope being supported by the Exarch, sent Candidian to Gradus for opposing John.

Many other Bishops of Italy submitted to the Dominion of the Lombards, who would not approve the Condemnation of the three Chapters; nay, they had so great an Aversion to those who condemned them, that they separated from the Communion of Constantius Bishop of Milan, whom they suspected to have sign'd this Condemnation; and Theodolinda Queen of the Lombards follow'd their Example. St. Gregory advis'd this Bishop to hold his peace, and say nothing upon this Subject, and told him, that he ought not to affirm that he had not sign'd them. He wrote also to Theodolinda many Letters, to persuade her that those who condemned the three Chapters, receiv'd the Council of Chalcedon. He speaks every where as one that was not too much convinc'd, either of the Justice, or Necessity of condemning the three Chapters, but he would not have any to separate from their Communion who did condemn them. S. Gregory.

Against the Donatists.

ST. Gregory stood up against the Donatists of Africa with the same Boldness. He hindred a Donatist Bishop from being Primate of Numidia; and chose in his room one Columbus, whom he made his Delegate and Agent in Africa. He ordered him afterwards to hold an Assembly of the Bishops of Numidia, to judge a Bishop who was accused of taking Money to suffer a Donatist Bishop in his City; and desires that he may be depos'd if he was convicted of this Crime: For it is very just, says he, that one who hath sold Jesus Christ for Money to a Heretick, should henceforth be disabled to dispense the Holy Mysteries, B. 2. Ep. 33. On the other hand he exhorted Pantaleon, Governor of Africa to put a stop to the Progress of this Schism, B. 3. Ep. 32, 35. He made an Order, forbidding to admit the Donatists, who were converted, into the Clergy.

The Affair of Maximus of Salonæ.

NAtalis Bishop of Salonæ dying, who had led a very licentious Life, St. Gregory would have Honoratus chosen in his room, and excluded Maximus, B. 3. Ep. 15. Nevertheless, this last was chosen; and tho' the Emperor at first scrupled to consent to his Election, yet afterwards he approved it. Maximus having received Orders from Court, got himself ordain'd, and put in Possession of the See of Salonæ. St. Gregory understanding this, wrote to Maximus, forbidding him, and all those who had consecrated him, to perform any part of the sacerdotal Function, until he was inform'd of the Truth in this case, whether the Letters of the Emperor upon which he was ordain'd were true or forg'd. At the same time he cited him to Rome, to give an Account of his Ordination there. Maximus did not much value this Letter, but caus'd it to be torn in pieces; and asserted that there was nothing to be blam'd in his Ordination, and he ought to be judged upon the place: The Emperor also acquainted St. Gregory, that he would not have the Ordination of Maximus medled with. But this Order did not shake the Constancy of St. Gregory, who, as himself said upon this occasion, was resolved rather to die than suffer the Church of St. Peter to lose its Authority and Rights by his Negligence. Yet he declar'd that he would willingly sacrifice his own Interest, and admit the Ordination of Maximus, altho' it was done against his Will; But then he inform'd the Empress, that as to what concern'd the Simony, Sacrilege, and the other Crimes whereof Maximus was accused, he could not dispense with using all the Severity of the Laws against him, if he did not come to Rome in a short time to justifie himself. At last, seeing that Maximus continued to discharge the sacerdotal Function, and refus'd to come to Rome, he excommunicated him and all the Bishops who had ordained him, or those who were engaged on his side, and even those who should communicate with them for the future. The Emperor being desirous to put an end to this Contest, order'd Callinicus the Exarch to accommodate the Difference between Maximus and St. Gregory. By his Mediation it was agreed, that Maximus should transport himself to Ravenna, and there perform what the Archbishop Marinianus should enjoyn him. He did so, and having publickly asked Pardon for his Fault, and purg'd himself by Oath before the Sepulchre of St. Appollinaris, he received Absolution from Marinianus by the Order of St. Gregory, and in the Presence of Castorius his Envoy, who presented to Maximus a Letter from the Pope, wherein he receiv'd him into his Communion, and engaged to send him quickly the Pallium. See the following Letters, B. 2. Ind. 11. Ep. 20. B. 3. Ep. 15, 20, 25, 33. B. 4. Ep. 4, 20, 34. B. 5. Ep. 3, 4, 8. B. 6. Ep. 17. B. 7. Ind. 1. Ep. 1, 12. Ind. 2, 60, 81, 82. This Contest continued from the Year 592, to the Year 600.

The Mission of Austine the Monk and his Colleagues into England.

THe English having testified their desire to be instructed in the Christian Religion, and the ancient Inhabitants of that Country hating them with so violent a Hatred that they would have no Commerce with them, St. Gregory chose some Monks of his own Monastery to be sent into England under the Conduct of Austine their Abbot. These Monks having travelled into Provence, were at first so terrified with the Difficulties which they found in this Enterprize, that St. Austine took upon him to return to Rome, to represent them to St. Gregory. This Pope encouraged him, and sent him back with Letters of Recommendation address'd to Theodoricus King of Burgundy, Theodebert King of Austrasia, to Queen Brunehaud their Aunt, to Aurigius a Nobleman, and to the Bishops of Vienna, Arles, Aix, and Autun, in which he exhorted them to favour this laudable Undertaking, B. 5. Ep. 52, &c.

Austine being returned into France, was ordain'd by the Bishops of (a) France, and afterwards passed over into England with forty Missionaries, whereof some were French Priests as well as others Italian Monks. They made a stop at a little Isle, where King Ethelred came to meet them, and after some Conference with them, he permitted them to enter into his Kingdom and his Capital City. After they had learned the Language of the Country, they preached the Faith of Jesus Christ, and converted in a little time a very great number of these Infidels; insomuch that in one Day of Christmas they baptized more than one thousand Persons. St. Gregory having heard this News, communicated it to Eulogius Bishop of Alexandria by Letter 30, of Book 7. Ind. 2. And that these auspicious Beginnings might be attended also with happy Consequences, he recommended these Missionaries to the Bishops and Kings of France, by the Letters 48, 49, 51, 52, 53, 54, 56, 63. of B. 9. He informs St. Austine what he ought to do by Letter 58. He thanks the Queen of England, who was a Christian, and the Daughter of Charibert King of the French, for the Protection she had given to Austine, and exhorts her to finish this Work, B. 9. Ep. 5. * He wrote to the King to congratulate his Conversion, and exhorts him to destroy entirely the Remainders of Paganism in his Kingdom, B. 9. Ep. 59. And lastly, to give the greater Credit to Austine, he sent him the Pallium, B. 12. Ep. 15.

[* This shews that the first Conversion of England was not owing to Austine and the Monks sent by Pope Gregory, for many years before their Coming, this Queen called Bertha, was married to King Ethelbert upon Condition that he would suffer her to enjoy the Christian Religion, and to have a Bishop to attend her, whose Name was Luid-hardus, Bede Hist. Eccles. l. 1. c. 25. Malmsbur. de Gestis Reg. Angl. l. 1. c. 1.]

(a) ST. Gregory in Letter 30. of Book 7. Ind. 1 written to Eulogius, says, That he was ordain'd by the Bishops of Germany to whom he had given leave; Data à me licentiâ à Germaniarum Episcopis, Episcopus factus. Bede assures us that he was ordain'd by Ætherius Bp. of Arles; he should have said Virgilius, Bp. of Arles, or Ætherius Bp. of Lyons; for at this time the Bp. of Arles was called Virgilius, and of Lyons Ætherius. The Authority of Bede made Baronius believe, that there was a fault in the Letter of St. Gregory, and that it should be read Galliarum instead of Germaniarum; Others think that Bede was mistaken, and that according to St. Gregory, Austine was ordain'd by the Bishops of the Provinces of Germany upon the Rhine; But 'tis more probable that he intended the Provinces upon the Rean, to which the Name of Germany was sometimes given; because they were inhabited by the Burgundians, who were originally Germans. We have Examples of this in Sidonius Appollinaris, who calls the Kingdom of Chilperic, whereof the Capital City was Lyons, Lugdunensem Germaniam, B. 5. Ep. 7. And writing to Siagrius who dwelt at Lyons, he praises him for understanding the Language of the Germans, i. e. of the Burgundians, who remain'd at Lyons. St. Austine therefore being ordain'd by Ætherius Bishop of Lyons, St. Gregory might he say that he was ordain'd by the Bishops of Germany.

Of ſome Letters attributed to St. Gregory, which are either uncertain or ſuppoſititious.

S. Gregory. HAving made Extracts out of the Letters of St. Gregory, we muſt here make ſome remarks upon thoſe Letters which are either to be rejected as ſuppoſititious, or whereof there may be ſome cauſe to doubt.

The 54*th*. Letter of the ſecond Ind. of B. 7. addreſs'd to Secundinus a recluſe Monk, is either wholly forged, or very much corrupted, although Paul the Deacon has put it in the number of the 54 Letters of St. Gregory which he had collected. For 1. the Diſcipline which is eſtabliſh'd in that Letter concerning the Clergy who fell into Sins of Uncleanneſs, is perfectly oppoſite to that of St. Gregory. We have obſerved that St. Gregory did not leave them any hope of being reſtor'd, nor of diſcharging the Duties of their Office, and that he affirms it as a thing undoubted, that this was never permitted, and that he cannot allow it, and if he ſhould it would wholly ſubvert the order of Canonical Diſcipline. On the contrary, the Author of this Letter undertakes to prove that the Prieſts and Clergy-men, who were fall'n into theſe Sins, ought to be reſtored. 2. The Style of one part of this Letter is very different from that of St. Gregory. There it is ſaid that Secundinus asked him, De Sacerdotali Officio poſt lapſum authoritates reſurgendi.. And a little after, Dicit ſanctitas tua ſe diverſas ſententias inveniſſe, alias reſurgendi alias nequaquam poſſe, &c. Gregory never ſpoke after ſuch a barbarous manner. 3. There is no coherence nor connexion in the different parts of this Letter, contrary to the cuſtom of St. Gregory. 4. The Manuſcripts are very different; of thirty Manuſcripts there are but two in which that place is to be found which concerns the Reſtoration of Clergy-men fall'n into the Sins of Uncleanneſs; that which concerns Images, and is at the end of the ſame Letter, is in very few Manuſcripts; which proves that theſe two places at leaſt have been added, neither have they any connection with the other Parts of the Letter.

The Epiſtle 31. of Book 10. appears alſo to me to be very doubtful: It's not a Letter of St Gregory, but a Declaration of a Schiſmatical Biſhop, ſign'd by him and his Clergy, wherein he promiſes never to relapſe into his Schiſm, under the Pain of Deprivation and Excommunication. In the Title he ſpeaks of Hereſie, and in the body of the Writing he ſpeaks only of Schiſm. 2. 'Tis no where noted to whom this Declaration was made. 3. He promiſes to St. Peter the Prince of the Apoſtles, and his Vicar the Bleſſed Gregory; which Form does not appear to be ſo ancient. 4. He ſwears by the Holy Goſpels, and by the Genius of the Emperors. But the Chriſtians would never ſwear by the Genius of the Emperors under Pagan Emperors; how then ſhould this Form be authorized under a Chriſtian Emperor in an Oath made by a Biſhop for an Affair purely Eccleſiaſtical? 5. 'Tis ſaid in this Declaration, that it was made under the Conſuls; but there had not been any Conſuls for a long time before. 6. Laſtly, this Form is not found in many Manuſcripts.

The Memorial concerning the Proclamation of the Emperor Phocas, which is at the beginning of B. 11. is a very uncertain Piece, which ought not to be rank'd among the Letters of St. Gregory, no more than the following Sermon concerning the Proceſſions which St. Gregory caus'd to be made in the time of Mortality, which ought to be plac'd at the beginning of St. Gregory's Pontificate; 'tis found in ſome Manuſcripts before all the Letters.

The Privilege which is ſuppos'd to have been granted to an Hoſpital of the Church of Autun, founded by Queen Brunehauld, and by Siagrius Biſhop of that City, has been plac'd among the Letters of St. Gregory in B. 11. Num. 10. and it muſt be confeſt that 'tis found in all the Manuſcripts: Yet there are ſtrong Reaſons for rejecting it; for, 1. John the Deacon makes no mention of it in the Life of St. Gregory. 2. All the Clauſes of this pretended Privilege are ſo many Proofs of its Forgery. By the firſt it forbids Kings and Biſhops to touch the Goods given to this Monaſtery, or thoſe which ſhall be given to it for the future, and leaves the whole Adminiſtration of them to the Abbot. By the ſecond he gives the Nomination of the Abbot to the King, and leaves the Approbation of him only to the Monks. By the third he ordains that this Abbot ſhall not be depoſed but for a Crime; and if he is accuſed of it, the Biſhop of Autun cannot make Proceſs againſt him, but with ſix other Biſhops. By the fourth 'tis forbidden to make a Biſhop Abbot here. By the fifth the Biſhop of Autun is diſabled to draw out the Monks of this Hoſpital, and place them among his Clergy. All theſe Clauſes are exorbitant, contrary to common Right, and to the Diſcipline eſtabliſh'd by St. Gregory, who never granted the like Exemptions in the Privileges which he gave. 3. The Penalty to be inflicted on thoſe who ſhall violate ſome of the Articles of this Privilege, is contrary both to the Spirit of St. Gregory, and the Practice of his time. There it is declared, that if any King, Biſhop, Judge, or Secular Perſon violate the Rights of his Privilege, he ſhall be deprived and degraded from his Dignity, Power, and Honour. St. Gregory never us'd theſe Terms, and was more cautious than to do it, who did ſo much recommend Eccleſiaſtical Moderation, and ſhewed ſo great Veneration to Princes. 4. The Style of this Privilege is very different from that of St. Gregory's Letters. S. Gregory.

The two following Letters are Copies of the ſame Privilege which is ſuppoſed in the firſt to be granted to Thalaſſia, the Abbeſs of the Monaſtery of St. Mary in the City of Autun; and in the ſecond to Lupinus Prieſt of a Church of St. Martin in the Suburbs of Autun: which proves alſo the Forgery of this Action; for what probability is there that St. Gregory ſhould grant three Privileges ſo extraordinary to three different Communities of one and the ſame City.

There is in B. 12. N. 31. an Anſwer of St. Gregory to many Articles about which he had been conſulted by Auſtine the Monk. This Piece is not found in many Manuſcripts of the Regiſter of St. Gregory's Epiſtles, and in the Eighth Century it was not in the Archives of the Church of Rome, where Boniface, Arch-biſhop of Mayence, caus'd ſearch for it; which forc'd him to make an Addreſs to Nothelmus Arch-biſhop of Canterbury to get a Copy of it. This gave occaſion to ſome to think that this Piece is ſuppoſititious; and it muſt be confeſs'd, that ſome of the Anſwers are extraordinary enough. Nevertheleſs it ſeems that the Authority of Paterius, a Diſciple of St. Gregory, leaves no room to doubt whether this Writing be truly his, who relates two paſſages of it in the Extracts which he made out of the Works of St. Gregory: for it's no ways probable that he ſhould quote a forged Piece, who had been Secretary to St. Gregory. 'Tis no wonder that a Copy of it could not be found at Rome in the time of Boniface; for being written for the Engliſh, and ſent into England, the Copies of it ought rather to be found in that Kingdom than at Rome: and in effect, this Writing was there very common. Bede tranſcribes in his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of England, B. 1. c. 27. It's alſo cited by Egbert Biſhop of York, and by Halitgarius a Biſhop of Wales: Nither is it true that there was no Copy of it at Rome, ſince Pope Zachary quotes it in the Roman Council held in the Year 743, c. 15. Since the time of St. Anſelm Iſidore, Ivo of Chartres, Gratian and all the Compilers of Canons and Decretals, have inſerted theſe Anſwers of St. Gregory into their Collections. I do not believe that this Letter was written by St. Gregory in the Year 598, a little after Auſtine was ordain'd, but rather in the Year 601, when he ſent many Letters into England.

Here follows an Abridgment of the Queſtions of St. Auſtine, and the Anſwers of St. Gregory.

Queſtion 1. What uſe ſhould the Biſhops make of the Revenues of the Church?

Anſw. They ought to divide them into four parts. The firſt is for the Biſhop and his Family, that he may exerciſe Hoſpitality and entertain Strangers. The ſecond is for the Clergy. The third for the Poor; and the fourth for repairing Churches. He recommends it to St. Auſtine, to live in common with his Clergy.

Queſt. 2. Whether the Eccleſiaſticks who have not the Gift of Continence, may not marry, and if they do, whether they may return to Secular Affairs?

Anſw. They may marry if they be not engag'd in Holy Orders, and ſuch ought not to want ſubſiſtence; but they ſhall be obliged to lead a Life agreeable to the Eccleſiaſtical State, and to ſing the Pſalms.

Queſt. 3. Since there is but one and the ſame Faith, why have Churches different Cuſtoms? As for inſtance, why is Maſs celebrated after one manner in the French Church, and after another in the Church of Rome.

Anſw. Altho' St. Auſtine knows perfectly the Cuſtoms of the Church of Rome, yet he ſhall have liberty to chooſe in other Churches ſuch Practices as he ſhall think moſt pleaſing to God, that he may bring them into uſe in the Church of England.

Queſt. 4. What ſhould the puniſhment be of him who robs the Church?

Anſw. This ought to be regulated by the Quality of the Perſon who commits the Robbery, viz. Whether he has whereupon to ſubſiſt or whether he did it thro' neceſſity? Some ought to be puniſh'd by pecuniary Mulcts, by making them pay the Damage ſuſtain'd, and the Intereſt of it: Others ought to be puniſh'd in their Bodies; ſome ought to be puniſh'd more ſeverely, others more ſlightly. But the Church muſt always uſe Charity in puniſhing, and deſign nothing elſe but the Reformation of him whom it corrects. It ought not to be too rigorous in its Chaſtiſements, nor to make advantage by the Robbery, by exacting more than it has loſt.

Queſt.

S. Gregory.

Quest. 5. Can two Brothers, having the same Father and Mother, marry two Sisters which are a-kin to them in a very remote degree?

Answ. They may, since it is not forbidden in Scripture.

Quest. 6. To what degree may the Faithful marry together? May one marry his Step-mother, or the Widow of his Brother?

Answ. A Roman Law, viz. that of Arcadius and Honorius, Cod. B. 5. T. 4. Leg. 19. permitted Marriages between Cousin-Germans: But St. Gregory did not think these Marriages convenient for two Reasons; 1. Because experience shews, that no Children are born of them. 2. Because the Divine Law forbids them. But 'tis certain that those who are a-kin to the third or fourth Degree may marry together. 'Tis a great Crime for one to marry his Step-mother; neither is it lawful to marry his Sister-in-law.

Quest. 7. Must those be parted who have made an unlawful Marriage? Must they be deprived of the Communion?

Answ. Since there are many English who have contracted this kind of Marriages before their Conversion; therefore when they are converted you must make them understand that this is not lawful, and excite them by the fear of God's Judgment to refrain from it; but you must upon this account interdict them Communion. As to those who are already converted, they must be admonish'd not to engage in any of this kind of Marriages, and if they do, they must be excluded from the Communion.

Quest. 8. When there are no neighbouring Bishops who can assemble together, may one Bishop only ordain another?

Answ. Austine being at first the only Bishop in England, there was a great necessity that he alone should ordain Bishops. If any went over to him from Gaul, he was to take them for Witnesses of his Ordination; and when he had ordain'd many Bishops in England, he was to call three or four of them to be present at his Ordination.

Quest. 9. Of Austine. After what manner he should deal with the Bishops of the Gauls, and of the ancient Britains?

Answ. Of St. Gregory. He must know that he has no Authority over the Bishops of the Gauls, and the Bishop of Arles ought to enjoy the Privileges which he had received from his Predecessors; that he ought to confer with him if there be any Disorders to be reform'd; that he may also excite him to do his Duty, if he were negligent or inconstant, but that he cannot challenge to himself any Authority among the Gauls. As to the Bishops of Britany, he speaks at another rate: For St. Gregory gives him full Jurisdiction over them, to teach the Ignorant, confirm the Weak and correct the Disorderly*.

[*This was to give Austine what he had no power to grant, like some of his Successors in that See, who very liberally bestow'd the Kingdoms of England and Ireland upon the King of Spain, and therefore this pretended Jurisdiction of the Pope was vigorously oppos'd by the British Bishops and Monks in St. Austine's time, who refus'd to receive any Romish Customs different from those of their own Church, as appear'd by the famous controversie between them about the time of keeping Easter; and the right of imposing them has been sufficiently disprov'd by our Writers. Vide Dr. Basire of the Exemption of the British Patriarchate.]

There is also a request of Austine, wherein he desires the Reliques of St. Sixtus. The Pope tells him that he had sent them unto him, but he did not look upon them as certain. This Article is not found in the Copies of Bede, nor in many other Manuscripts, and probably it is suppositious.

Quest. 10. Contains many Heads: Whether a Woman big with Child may be baptized? How long it must be after her lying in, before she enter into the Church, and have Carnal dealing with her Husband? Whether it be lawful for a Woman, quæ tenetur menstrua consuetudine, to enter into the Church? Whether a married Man may enter into the Church, after the use of Marriage, without washing?

The Answers to these Heads of Questions are as follow. A Woman big with Child may be baptized. A Woman that has newly layn in, ought not to be deny'd entrance into the Church. A Woman who has newly layn in may be baptiz'd, and her Infant at the very moment of its birth, if there be danger of Death. A Husband ought not to come near his Wife after her lying in, until the Infant be wean'd; and if by an abuse, she do not suckle it her self, he must wait till the time of her Purgation be over. A Woman who has her ordinary Infirmities, ought not to be forbidden to enter into the Church, nor to receive the Communion; but it were better for her to abstain. A Man who has had Carnal Knowledge of his Wife, must wash himself before he enter into the Church, and communicate. S. Gregory.

Quest. 11. Whether it be lawful to receive the Communion the next Day after natural Pollutions.

Answ. When these Pollutions proceed from the Infirmity of Nature, there is no fear; but when they proceed from eating and drinking too much, they are not altogether Innocent; but this fault ought not to hinder any from receiving the Communion, nor from celebrating Mass, when it is a Festival at which they must communicate, or when there is no other Priest to celebrate. But if there be other Priests, he who is in this condition ought in Humility to abstain from celebrating, and especially if this Pollution was attended with unclean Imaginations. Other Pollutions which proceed from the Thoughts which a Man had while he was waking, are yet more Criminal, because these Thoughts are the cause of them; And in unchaste Thoughts we must distinguish three things, the Desire, the Pleasure, and the Consent. When there is only a Desire, there is not as yet any Sin, but when we take Pleasure in such Thoughts, then the Sin begins, and when we consent to them, then the Sin is finish'd.

The Letter which is attributed to Felix of Messina, is certainly a suppositious Piece. The Title does not well agree with the Custom of that time; Domino beatissimo, & honorabili Sancto Patri Gregorio Papæ, Felix vestræ salutis Amator. The Style of the Letter is affected, and has nothing natural in it. The Author affirms, that Marriages were always forbidden to any within the seventh Degree of Consanguinity, and that the Council of Nice ordain'd thus; which is manifestly false. Lastly he speaks of one Benedict Bishop of Syracuse; but he who was at that time in this See, was call'd John, and there never was a Bishop of Syracuse called Benedict.

The Authority of the Letter of St. Gregory to Felix, seems to be better founded. For, 1. John the Deacon recites a part of it in the Life of St. Gregory, B. 2. c. 37. Hincmarus, Regino, and the Canonists relate some passages of it, and it is found in many Manuscripts. Yet there is great probability that it is either altogether forged, or very much corrupted. For, 1. It is plac'd in Indiction the seventh; but Felix was not at that time Bishop of Messina, for Donus succeeded him in the year 598. 2. It is made up of Scraps taken out of several places of St. Gregory, and other Authors. The beginning of it is taken from Letter 111, B. 7. Ind. 2. There are also in it some passages taken out of the fifth Letter of the fourth Book, and out of the Letters 394. 114. 120. of the seventh Book. There is a passage in it copied out of the second Letter falsly attributed to Pope Cornelius, the fifth Canon of the eleventh Council of Toledo, the sixth of the Council of Agda, a passage of the fifth Council of Rome under Symmachus, one Sentence of Isidore of Sevil. The Letter concludes in the same words with Letter 50 of B. 4. So that this Letter must be look'd upon as a Rhapsody taken out of many Pieces.

Lastly, the pretended Privilege of St. Medardus of the Suessions, which is at the end of the Letter, has been so often overthrown, and by such convincing reasons, that I do not think any Man now dare maintain it. The chief Reasons which overthrow it, are these following; 1. It is not found in any Manuscripts of St. Gregory, except one of St. Victor, which is not above four hundred years old; and Cardinal Bona attests, that this Privilege is not found in the Archives of the Church of Rome. At first it was printed at the end of St. Gregory's Works, after that it was plac'd among his Letters in the Edition of Rome, and lastly, it was printed after the Letters. 2. The Style (a), of this Privilege smells of the Barbarism of Modern Writers, and the Impertinence of an Impostor.

The Clauses of this Privilege are not only exorbitant and extraordinary, but also indefensible (b).

It contains many things false and contrary to History (c).

The Subscriptions discover plainly the Forgery of it.

(a) The Style] The Inscription of it is harsh and unusual: It address'd pretiosissimis lapidibus merito renitentibus, omnibusque sanctæ Dei Ecclesiæ membris. Did ever one see the like address'd? There the Title of Servus Servorum Dei, is given to St. Gregory: but then the Addition to it is affected, Licet sanctæ Romanæ sedis Pontificio sublimetur. In the body of the Privilege, there is an infinite number of barbarous and new expressions, as Suessorum civitas, vita venerabilis Gairaldus, Dominus Papa Joannes, nostræ filiæ jugalis Dominus Medardus. Can there be any thing more impertinent than what they make St. Gregory there say? Consensu omnium Romanorum Pontificum, & voluntate totius Senatus Romani Determinamus. Is this capable of any good Sense? The Rents and Land of the Church are call'd there Mansi fisci regii. A Man must set down this whole Privilege, to make one well understand the Forgery of it; for as many words as there are in it, so many proofs there are of its being suppositious.

(b) Indefensible] There the Monks are empower'd to ordain their Abbot and the Abbot to consecrate the holy Chrism, the Chalices and the Altars: The Monastery is exempted from all Jurisdiction Secular and Ecclesiastical, except the King's Protection, and the Direction of the Holy See; and that it might more easily hold correspondence with Rome 'tis said that Queen Brunehauld gave the Monastery twenty Mannors, and as many Farms along the Alpes. 'Tis order'd that all those who shall come to dwell upon the Lands of St. Medardus, shall be delivered from all subjection, and become Slaves to the Virgin; that those who shall take sanctuary there, shall be reputed slaves of the Church. Lastly, exorbitant Privileges are given to the Abbot.

(c) Contrary to History] That the Church of St. Medardus, was call'd formerly the Church of the Virgin of St. Peter, and St. Stephen; that it was a Monastery in the time of St. Gregory.

There is found in it the Subſcription of King Theodoricus, who was not yet upon the Throne: The Biſhops of Carthage are made to ſign it, and even thoſe Biſhops that were dead. There are found in it two Biſhops of one and the ſame See at the ſame time; and the Names of Biſhops which are different from thoſe who are known to have been Biſhops of theſe Churches at that time. Laſtly, it is a thing unheard, that a Privilege ſhould be ſign'd by ſo great a number of Biſhops (d). S. Gregory.

In fine, the Year 594 is uſed for the Date of this Letter; but we do not ſee that St. Gregory ever uſed this Date; and that which renders it ſuſpicious is, that the Indiction which is ſubjoyn'd, anſwers to the Year 593, and not to 594. All theſe Reaſons prove invincibly the Forgery of this Inſtrument, which deſerved not to be plac'd among the Works of St. Gregory.

The Letter which is at the Beginning of St. Gregory's Morals on the Book of Job, informs us of his Deſign in compoſing this Work, of the Method in which he managed it, and how he put it in execution. It is addreſſed to St. Leander Biſhop of Sevil, with whom he had contracted a very cloſe Friendſhip at Conſtantinople, when he was there about the Affairs of the Holy See, and when St. Leander was ſent thither as Ambaſſador by the King of the Wiſigoths. St. Gregory puts ſuch Confidence in him, that he acquaints him with the Diſpoſition of his Heart, and the Troubles of Mind he had endured, and diſcovers to him, that tho' God had inſpired him with the deſire of Heaven, and he was perſuaded, that it was more advantageous to forſake the World, yet he had delayed his Converſion for many Years: That nevertheleſs, he was at laſt delivered from the Entanglements of the World, and retired into the happy Harbour of a Monaſtery; but he was quickly drawn from thence to enter into Orders, which engaged him anew in Secular Affairs, and obliged him to go to the Court of the Emperor at Conſtantinople: That nevertheleſs, he had the Comfort to be attended thither by many Monks, with whom he had daily many ſpiritual Conferences. Then it was that they urged him with much Importunity, and St. Leander did even force him to explain to them the Book of Job, after ſuch a manner as they deſired, i. e. by ſubjoyning to the Allegorical Explication of the Hiſtory a Morality ſupported by many other Teſtimonies of Holy Scripture. This was the Occaſion which mov'd St. Gregory to undertake this Work. He repeated the Beginning of it in the Preſence of his Monks, and dictated the reſt in divers Treatiſes. Afterwards having more Leiſure, he added to it many things, cut off ſome, reduc'd the whole Work into better Order, and made it uniform, by changing the Diſcourſes and Treatiſes to the ſame Style. He divided this Work into 35 Books, which were diſtributed into ſix Tomes. He confeſſes that he ſometimes neglected the Order and Coherence of the Expoſition which he undertook, and applyed himſelf wholly to Contemplation and Morality: But he excuſes himſelf by ſaying, that whoſoever ſpeaks of God, ought neceſſarily to enlarge upon that which is moſt inſtructive and edifying for the Lives of thoſe that hear him, and that he thought it the beſt Method he could obſerve in his Work, to make a Digreſſion ſometimes from its principal Subject, when an Occaſion preſented it ſelf of procuring the Welfare and Advantage of his Neighbour. He adds, that there are ſome things which he handles in a few Words according to the Truth of Hiſtory; other things whoſe allegorical and figurative Senſes he enquires after, and others from which he only draws Morality; and laſtly, others which he explains with great care in all theſe three Ways. He affirms alſo, that there are ſome places which cannot be explained literally, becauſe if they ſhould be taken preciſely according to the Senſe of the Words, inſtead of inſtructing thoſe who read them, they would miſlead them into Error, or confirm things that are contradictory. Laſtly, he excuſes the Defects of his Work from his continual Sickneſs, and declares that he did not hunt after the Ornaments of Rhetorick, to which the Interpreters of Scripture are never obliged. At the Concluſion of this Letter, he remarks, that he ordinarily follows the late Verſion of the Scripture; but yet he takes the Liberty, when he thinks it neceſſary to quote Paſſages, ſometimes according to the old, and ſometimes according to the new Verſion; and that ſince the Holy See, over which he preſided, us'd both the one and the other, he alſo employ'd them both indifferently, to authorize and confirm what he aſſerted in his Work. S. Gregory

In the Preface of this Work having ſaid that ſome thought Moſes to be the Author of the Book of Job, and others attributed it to the Prophets, he looks upon it as a thing very needleſs to enquire in what time Job lived, and who wrote his Hiſtory, ſince 'tis certain that the Holy Spirit dictated it, altho' 'tis very probable, that Job himſelf wrote it. After theſe few hiſtorical Remarks, he enters upon general Reflections of a moral Nature, about the Patience of Job, the Afflictions of the Righteous, the Pride of Job's Friends, the Conformity of Job to Jeſus Chriſt. This is what the Preface contains.

The Body of the Commentary is agreeable to the Idea which he gives of it, i. e. that he does not inſiſt upon the literal Expoſition, but upon the Allegories and Moralities which he applies to the Text of Job, whereof a great part may be applied to every other place of Holy Scripture. But he does not ſo much labour to explain the Book of Job, as to amaſs together in one Work an infinite number of moral Thoughts. And indeed it muſt be confeſs'd, that altho' theſe Books are not a very good Commentary upon the Book of Job, yet they are a great Magazine of Morality. 'Tis incredible, how many Principles, Rules and proper Inſtructions are to be found there for all ſorts of Perſons, Eccleſiaſtical as well as Secular; for thoſe who converſe with the World, as well as for thoſe who live in Retirement, for the Great and for the Small; in a word, for all ſorts of States, Ages and Conditions. We ſhall not here undertake to give a particular account of them, for if we ſhould make Extracts from ſuch kind of allegorical and moral Commentaries, our Work would grow infinitely big. This is written with much Simplicity and Clearneſs, but it is not ſo very briſk and ſublime: Yet it was very much eſteem'd in the Life-time of St. Gregory, and admir'd after his death. We learn from himſelf, that the Biſhops cauſed it to be read in the Church, or at their Table, altho' he would not ſuffer it to be done in Modeſty, and all thoſe who have ſpoken of it ſince his death, have commended it as a moſt excellent Work. There is a Relation which ſays, that ſometime after his death, the Original which he had given to St. Leander, being loſt in Spain, Tagion Biſhop of Saragoſa, was deputed in a Council held at Toledo under King Cyndeſides, to be ſent to Rome to enquire for a Copy of it: That this Biſhop being arrived there, and finding no Satisfaction from the Pope, who put him off from day to day, pretending it was very difficult to find theſe Books of St. Gregory, becauſe of the multitude of Volumes that were in the Archives of Rome; at laſt this good Biſhop went to Prayers in the Church of St. Peter, and there appeared unto him the Apoſtles St. Peter, St. Paul, and their Succeſſors, and among the reſt St. Gregory, who drew near to him, and ſhew'd him the Study where the Books were which he enquir'd after. This Relation which appear'd not 'till about 400 years ago, appears to me of little Credit (e).

The Paſtoral of St. Gregory, or his Book about the Care which Paſtors ought to take of their Flocks, was as well receiv'd as his Morals. It was no ſooner gone out of the Hands of St. Gregory, but it was ſought for and valued by all thoſe who had a love for Epiſcopacy. The great Reputation it had got, mov'd the Emperor Mauritius to deſire it of Anatolius a Deacon of the Church of Rome, who was

(d) By ſo great a number of Biſhops.] There St. Gregory ſigns firſt: But it was not the Cuſtom of Popes then to ſign their own Letters; neither is there any Example of it in St. Gregory. The ſecond is Eutherius of Arles: But there was never a Biſhop of Arles of that name, and Virgilius was then Biſhop: Æterius was Biſhop of Lyons: The third is, Gregory Biſhop of Portus: And there is another Biſhop of Portus, called Felix. The fourth is Andrew of Albanum; but in 595 it was Homobonus, who ſign'd in the Council of Rome held this Year: And there was one Andrew Biſhop of this place under Gregory the ſecond. The fifth is Auſtine Biſhop of Canterbury; but he was not yet Biſhop, for this Privilege is dated in the Year 594. Afterwards there is Sergius Biſhop of Praneſte; but at the Roman Council in 595, Proculus was Biſhop of this City. In the ſame Year the Biſhop of Anania was called Pelagius, and not Peter, as he is here called. Agnellus Biſhop of Sutrium govern'd this See under Gregory the ſecond. Melitus was not yet Biſhop of London, for he was not ordain'd till 604. The other Names are taken from the Titles of St. Gregory's Letters, or the Subſcriptions of the Roman Council held under Gregory the ſecond. Eulogius of Alexandria is among the Biſhops that ſign'd: But he never came to Rome, and 'tis no way probable that this Inſtrument ſhould be carried to him to ſign it, which no ways concern'd him, no more than it did Dominicus Biſhop of Carthage. Among the Biſhops of France there is found a Biſhop of Bourdeaux called Sutellius: But the Biſhop then was Gondegiſilas, as appears by St. Gregory of Tours: B. 8. Hiſt. 2. c. 22. The Archbiſhop of Rheimes was called Romulphus, and not Flavius, as he is here ſet down. The Biſhop of Soiſſons was called Drocteginſilas in 592. Greg. Tur. B. 9. c. 37. Anſericus was in the time of the Synod of Rheimes under Sonnatius in 630. Laſtly, King Theodoricus, whoſe Subſcription is here, was then but two Years old, and his Father Childebert was yet alive. There is one Peter who ſign'd and is ſaid to have ſeal'd this Inſtrument, whereas at that time no ſealing was in Uſe.

